GENEALOGY COLLECTION

ALLEN COUNTY PUBLIC LIBRARY
3 1833 01742 6864

GENEALOGY
929.102
F91FRI
1874-1875

Digitized by the Internet Archive in 2013

http://archive.org/details/friendreligiousl48smit

THE

FRIEND.

A

RELIGIOUS AND LITERARY JOURNAL.

VOLUME XLVIII.

PHILADELPHIA:

PRINTED BY WILLIAM H. PILE.

1875.

INDEX.

Acquiescence in the Divine will. Remarks of Pascal on, 227.
Address by Thomas Chalkley. A serious, 317.
Advice to young tradesmen, 172.
to sojourners, 204.
Affliction considered as a part of christian discipline, 97.
Affluence. Remarks on, as a trial of our fidelity, 6.
Africa. Notice of Col. Long's explorations near the source of the Nile in, 287.
Agassiz. A student's lesson in the laboratory with, 35.
Agriculture. Value of moles in, 6.
Successful experiments in preventing the potato rot, 6.
On the value of soap-suds in, 43.
Statistics of the amount of travelling on a farm, 84.
On the increased value given to farm land by tree-planting, 148.
On the necessity of pure water for domestic animals, 183.
Method of cultivating the teazel in New York, 222.
Observations on the value of fertilizers in, 223.
Notice of the adulteration of seeds, 274.
Remarks on sources of intellectual pleasure in the pursuit of, 301.
Alexander I. of Russia. Remarkable incidents in the life of, connected with the 91st psalm, 148.
Amazon. On some peculiarities of the black water tributaries of the, 323.
Amusements. Limits to our, are to be known by the reproofs of the spirit, 44.
Views of the Society of Friends in relation to music, and other, 113.
Comments on the enjoyment of fashionable, by professed Christians, 367.
Ancient doctrine of the Society of Friends. Remarks on, 206.
Andes. Observations on the effects of a rarefied atmosphere in crossing the, 278.
Anecdote of Adam Clark, 14.
Napoleon I., 23.
the power of meekness, 46.
of an honest blacksmith, 63.
Mary Wright, 100.
of Dr. Nelaton, 180.
of an early settler in New Jersey, 198 of Gibbon on his death-bed, 199.
of Hans Christian Andersen, 269. of Charles Tappan, 284.
of William Williams and the colored man, 388.
Animals. Social life among, 98.
that chew the cud. Remarks on, 180.
On the necessity of pure water for domestic, 183.
Ant. The agricultural, of Texas, 135.
Apparent inconsistency. Extract entitled, 247.
"Appeal for the Ancient Doctrines of the Society of Friends." Remarks on as correctly delineating the defections which have occurred since its publication, 78.
Apples. On the value of, as food, 46.
Aretic Explorations. Account of the German expedition of 1869-70, 177. 186. 193.
Advice of a whaling master in reference to, 191.
Method of building steamers designed for, 218.
Ardent spirits. On the waste resulting from the use of, 303.
Armies. Statistics of the size and cost of, 50.
Antiquities of Long Island, 331. 338.
Arsenic. Antidote for, 6.
Arizona. Reported remnant of a white race among the aborigines of, 353.
Ash Edward Remarks on the issuing of a testimony concerning, by London Yearly Meeting, 25.
Observations on a recent attack upon the character of George Fox, by, 78.
Remarks on the denial by, of the appearance of the Light of Christ in the heart, 95. 257.
Some strictures on the pamphlet by, concerning George Fox, 150. 154.
Ashantee. Account of the experiences and sufferings of two missionaries in, 379. 385. 397. 400. 411.
Assyrian tablets. Account of inscriptions on some recently discovered, 149.
account of the early history of man. Reported discovery of, 274.
libraries and languages. Notice of, 301.
Astronomy. The competitive efforts of France, Germany and Austria in, 130.
Australian gum-tree. On the properties and value of, 74.
Automaton spider. Notice of an, 268.
Autumnal coloring of foliage. On, 125.

Bache Humphrey. Account of the spiritual exercises and convincement of, 302.
Baker Richard. Brief account of the life and death of, 108.
Extract from, on loving one's enemies, 364.
Balloon ascension. Account of the death of two aeronauts during a, in France, 306.
Banana plantation in Florida. A visit to, 395.
Banks John. Healed by George Fox in a remarkable manner, 89.
Counsel of, to Friends, to keep to their religious meetings, 311.
Baptism. The views of the Society of Friends in relation to, 113.
Remarks of John Griffith in relation to, 185.
Remarks of a clergyman on the proper meaning of certain scriptures in reference to, 204.
Barclay David. Testimony of, on his death-bed, and comments, 415.
Barclay Robert, convinced of the principles of Friends, by the silent, secret influence of the life of Christ, 404.
Barclay's Apology. Notice of the instrumentality of in the convincement of Sophia Hume, 19.
Extract from, on the observance of the First-day of the week, 39.
Illustration of the doctrine of an universal saving light, as enforced by, 211.
Barclay John. Remark of, on the discipline of watchfulness, 13.
Observations of, on prayer, 21.
Remarks on the early character of, 41.
Remarks of John Finch Marsh on the death of, 115.
Letter of, on the necessity of faithfully maintaining every part of the testimony of Truth, 159.
Remark of, on valuing self, 290.
Observation of, upon "modified Quakerism," and comments, 293.
Remarks of, on unremittingly following the teachings of the Spirit of Christ, 338.
Battey Thomas C. Extracts from a Journal kept by, among the western Indians, 305. 315. 321. 329. 337. 345. 353. 362. 371. 377. 388. 394. 401. 410.
Be reverent, 162.
Bears. Adventures with polar, 195.
Bees. Remarks on a late exhibition of, in London, 83.
Experiments on protection against the sting of, by inoculation, 219.
Beggar. Touching appeal of a, 308.
Bell Ann Mercy. Account of a religious visit by, to London, 209. 218. 225. 236.
Bellows Hannah. Short account of, 44.
Benevolence. Anecdote of cheap, 31.
Benezet Anthony. Extracts from letters of, 221.
Remarks by, on his "Short account of the people called Quakers," &c., 222.
Remarks of, on the disposition and character of Indians, 234.
Bible. Remarks on the beauty of diction of the English, 182.
Bible Association of Friends of America. Circular of, 70.
Birds. Note on the food of the orchard oriole, 28.
Observations on, in the woods, 45.
Birds. Suggestion to train, to destroy insects in cultivated fields, 46.
On taming the humming, 94.
The colors of the feathers of, not due to p ments, 103.
of prey. The sense of sight rather than sm the guide of, 252.
Notice of an appeal to prevent the destruction humming, 288.
Notice of the importation of, in New Zealar 308.
Birthright membership in the Society of Friends. I marks on, 202.
Bison. Notice of the gradual decrease of the Europe 366.
Black Hills. Notice of the recent exploration of the,
Blessing of witnessing the daily renewals of Divine lo The, 301.
Blessings of disappointments, 228.
Blind men. Appeal on behalf of the Penna. Worki Home for, 77.
Boiled hammers. The use of, 20.
Bond Elizabeth. Example of, in the attendance of ligious meetings, 326.
Book notices, &c. "A reviewer reviewed," &c., 15
The Doctrines and Ministry of George Fox,
George Fox, his character, Doctrine and Wo 78. 92.
Journal of Thos. Scattergood (new edition), 1
Musings and Memories, 166.
The saint's travel to the land of Canaan, &c., R. Williamson, 229.
Friends in the Seventeenth Century, by Char Evans, M. D., 253.
Joseph Smith's "Catalogue of Friends' Book 281.
"Daily Remembrancer on Peace and War," 3.
Bowly Daniel, Jr. Account of, 3.
Boundaries between the respective meetings in Phi delphia, 359.
Bowne John. Letter of the Dutch West India Co. approving of the persecution of, 260.
Comments on the above, 270.
Boy. Touching incident in a street, 106.
Bridge. Description of the new, at St. Louis, 13.
Briggs Geo. N. Excellent example of, in political 227.
Brothers. Reconciliation of two, in a court of justice
Buffaloes of the western plains. Observations on the, 3
Bunhill Fields burying-ground. Notice of a propo to sell a part of, 397.
Business. A warning to young men in, 62.
The mechanic arts recommended to young choosing a, 182.
Observations of Thomas Shillitoe on giving under a Divine requiring, 287.
anxieties. Illustration of the folly of, in pers of affluence, 10.
habits useful to retired business men, 270.

California. A day at Point Loma, 276.
Camm John. The happy death-bed of, 188.
Canoe. Method of building a, in S. America, 204.
"Can't afford it." Remark to a collector for bene lent objects, 205.
Capital punishment. Testimony of Lactantius agai 65.
Capper Mary. Remarks of, on the necessity of tinual watchfulness over self, 239.
Memoranda of, and comments, 370. 378. 396. 402. 411.
Jasper. Sketch of the early exercises and vincement of, 371.
Observations of, on the religious assemblie Friends, 407.
Card-playing. Thomas Chalkley convicted of the of, and led to forsake, 259.
Carleton Thomas. A brief account of the convince of, in his own words, 66.
Carnivorous plants. Experiments with, 134.

X 706843

Carrying a ladder. Reflections on, 22.
Cat. Anecdote of intelligence in a, 202.
Cave of Cacahuamilpa. Account of the, 158.
Centennial tea parties. A dissuasive to the attendance of, 35.
Chalkley Thomas. Remarks on some religious exercises of, in early life, 259. 268. 299. 310. 316.
Chameleon. Notice of the curious characters of the, 118.
Changes in opinions. On, 309.
Character. Anecdote of the true plan of asserting, 63.
Illustrations of true strength of, 131.
A bad, a continual punishment, 324.
"Charge it." Remarks on going into debt, 116.
Charity. The proper exercise of, likely to draw down a blessing, 51.
Confidence of W. Wilberforce that happiness to his children would result from his exercise of, 228.
Cheyney Elipbaz D. Letter of, 126.
Chickens. Method of getting out of the shell, 358.
Children. A kind but determined opposition to the spirit of the world necessary in bringing up, 63.
Advice in reference to bringing up, 108.
On the benefit to, of a sound education and correct habits, 116.
On the danger of fostering selfishness in, by emulation at school, 128.
The responsibility of parents to bring up their, in religious retirement and reading the Holy Scriptures not to be transferred to the teachers of First-day schools, 130.
Account of the sufferings of, in Finland for religion, related by S. Grellet, 340.
Tender advice, caution and counsel, of John Griffith to, 355.
The indispensable duty of, to obey their parents in the Lord, 361. of Friends. Affectionate address of John Griffith to the, 361. 369.
of those who occupy conspicuous positions in the church. On the responsibility of, 383.
China. Account of a much persecuted religious sect in, 99.
Cholera. Remarks on the observed coincidence of the flight of birds with the appearance of, 91.
Christ. On the necessity of a patient waiting for, 52.
On the necessity of obedience to the light of, 66.
The doctrine of the light of, in the heart asserted, 95. 150. 154. 156.
The visitations and operations of, in the heart, 106.
Service is required of the follower of, 123.
The doctrine of the appearance of, in the heart asserted by Wm. Law, 166.
Wm. Dewsbury's testimony to the light of, in the heart, 198.
Testimony of Stephen Crisp on the appearance and operations of, in the heart, 206.
Caution lest the outward knowledge of, prove a hindrance to the spiritual knowledge of, 228.
Testimony of William Grover to the views of Friends respecting, 262.
Remarks of John Barclay on the importance of unremittingly following the teachings of the spirit of, in the heart, 338.
Christian confidence, 350.
converts in Turkey. Narrative of the sufferings of, 37.
experience. Anecdotes and remarks on the blessedness of, 219.
invitation. A, 91.
charity. Essay entitled, 17.
graces. On the, 349.
Christians. Observations on the diversities of gifts bestowed on, 123.
On time-serving, 309.
Christian's death-bed. A, 188.
Christianity. The injury done to, by professors who are ashamed of its doctrines, 128.
and infidelity exemplified at the close of life, 199.
Christmas. On the origin of the term, 151.
Church. Observations on the experience and history of the, 97.
Churchman John. Religious instruction imparted by, to a watchmaker, 379.
"Circumstances alter cases." Essay entitled, 117.
Comments on the above, 197.
Clothing. Observations on the relative warmth of different materials for, 93.
Coal. On the danger from ignition of, at sea, 356.
Coates Sidney. Advice of, to a caretaker at Westtown Boarding School, 406.
Collegians. Remarks on lazy, 90.
Collins Micajah. Prophetic testimony of, respecting Friends, 363.
Conscience. On the distinction between the, and the light of Christ in the, 267.
Correspondents in Philada. Yearly Meeting. List of, 261.
Conversation. Remark on what is called religious, 28.
Conversion a gradual, not an instantaneous work, 85.
Remarks on the popular doctrine of instantaneous, 154.
The doctrine of instantaneous, a delusion, 387. 393.
Copal trees. On African, 350.
Cougar. Account of a conflict with a, in New York State, 277.
Court of Justice. A strange scene in a, 4.
Courtesy. The importance of, 316.
Courtesies of life. Advice on showing the small, sweet, 239.
Crisp Stephen. Testimony borne by, to the appearance and operations of the spirit of Christ in the heart, 206.
Exhortation of, to diligence in the attendance of religious meetings, 220.
Crosses. On the blessings of faithfully bearing little, 231.
Czar and the psalm. Remarkable incidents in the life of Alexander I., 148.

Dancing. Observations on one of the evils of, 260.
Dartmouth college students engaged as hotel waiters in vacations, 71.
Deaf mutes. Account of the National College for the instruction of, 405.
Deaths.—Hannah W. Allmon, 408; Sarah Brown, 8; Caleb Brocken, 24; Elizabeth Briggs, 32; Macre Buckman, 72; William H. Burr, 80; Hannah Bacon, 96; Jonathan C. Baldwin, 112; Elizabeth Brown, 168; Margaret Bailey, 176; Benjamin S. Bellangee, 272; Elizabeth Bellangee, 272; Isaac Bellangee, 272; Emma L. Bockius, 272; Charles Burton, 288; John Benington, Jr., 304; Thomas Branson, 304; Sally Bundy, 312; Thomas S. Bacon, 392; Priscilla W. Coffee, 8; Lydia P. Chace, 24; Charity Cocks, 64; Martha Cook, 72; Samuel Carey, 104; Sidney Coates, 272; William Cowperthwaite, 296; Elizabeth Y. Cunningham, 344; Rebecca Conard, 344; Caleb Carter, 344; Isaac Coffee, 344; Elnathan E. Delano, 64; Patty C. Dorland, 86; Samuel H. Edwards, 8; Ann Edge, 32; Rachel L. Evans, 32; Joseph Engle, 192; Mary Embree, 336; James Embree, 336; Eliza W. Evans, 400; Grace Eastburn, 400; William L. Edwards, 416; Samuel J. Gummere, 86; Armelia Garretson, 200; Esther Gifford, 200; Josiah W. Henrie, 80; Mary Hollinshead, 104; Deborah Hall, 112; Rachel C. Huestis, 128; Benjamin C. Hornor, 224; Benjamin Hoyle, 264; Dorcas Haight, 328; Charity Kaighn, 304; Mary Kirkpatrick, 344; Elizabeth Lee, 48; Anna M. Lowry, 80; Samuel Large, 128; Enos Morris, 86; William Maule, 272; James McGrail, 296; Rebecca D. McGrew, 296; Frances G. Marsh, 352; Isaac H. Moore, 360; Levis P. Newlin, 80; Watson Newbold, 96; Laura H. Page, 48; Phebe W. Parker, 48; Abraham Pennell, 64; James Pennell, 64; Thomas Passmore, 86; Elizabeth W. Price, 112; Ellen C. Passmore, 184; Elizabeth Purinton, 296; Hannah S. Rhoads, 168; Joseph Raley, 232; Ann Rogan, 344; Mercy Stackhouse, 72; Lydia Starr, 168; John M. Sharpless, 176; Annie Snowdon, 176; Mary Stevens, 192; Mary S. Sharpless, 200; Elizabeth Sidwell, 208; Thomas Smedley, 280; Sarab Sprague, 296; Ann Sheppard, 344; Mary Smith, 344; Elizabeth C. Scattergood, 400; Thomas H. Trotter, 48; Henrietta Troth, 96; Phebe Thomas, 240; Richard J. Thatcher, 344; Mary S. Varney, 264; Anna Vail, 288; Sarah Valentine, 416; Jesse Williams, 8; Cyrus Whitson, 8; Mark Willits, 32; Thomas K. Wilbur, 136; William Henry Wilkins, 264; Charles A. Warner, 264; Hannah Wood, 376; Job Young, 376.
Decipbering burnt documents. Method recently adopten in Paris for, 131.
Dewsbury William. Testimony of, to the powerful appearance of the Truth in England at the risc of the Society of Friends, 89.
Testimony of, to the light of Christ in the heart, 198.
Dickinson James. Extract from an Epistle of, to Friends, 367.
Dillwyn George. Extracts from letters by Anthony Benezet to, 221.
Disappointments. Lessons and blessings from, 228.
Divine Interposition. Anecdotes of, and comments, 84. 89. 198.
Divine Revelation, the only source of soul-saving knowledge, 105. 228.
"Do your work well." Incident entitled, 130.
Dog. Anecdote of an intelligent sheep, 107.
Anecdote of apparent remorse in a, 341.
Dogs. A man rescued from death through tbe sagacity of, 183.
Statistics of the cost of, 238.
Dove. The, a christian symbol, 114.
Dream. A curious, 21.
A, circumvented, 308.
Dress. Remarks of John Fothergill upon bearing the cross of Christ, in wearing a plain, and comments, 5.
Experience of John Conran in adopting a plain, 92.
Remarks on the expression, There is no religion in dress, 111.
On the testimony of the Society of Friends in relation to plainness of, 121.
Is there no religion in? 159.
Prophetic testimony of Samuel Scott in reference to plainness of, 159.
Advice of London Yearly Meeting in 1747, to plainness of, 261.
Experience of a person not a Friend, in relation to, 275.
Remarks on "costly array," 308.
On the origin of tbe testimony of Friends to simplicity in, 351.
Efforts to promote economy in, among young women in Boston, 351.
A word of entreaty to follow the precepts of Christ in relation to, 398.
Drinking healths. Anecdote and observations of Thos. Chalkley relating to, 317.
Drudgery necessary to accomplish results, 359.
Ducks. Method of capturing wild, by Indians in Nevada, 142.
Dyer Mary. Account of the martyrdom of, in Boston, 109.

Earthquake of 1868. The destruction by, at Arica, 122.
of 5th mo. 18th, 1875. Account of the destruction caused by, at Cucuta, 373.
Earthworm. Explanation of habits of, in connection with its anatomy, 2.
Editorial.—Observations on commencing the Forty-eighth volume, 7; Remarks on the doctrines advocated by R. P. and H. W. Smith, and the reception given to them in England, 14; Notice of the finding of the bodies of D. O. Sharpless and others drowned at Atlantic City, 15; Notice of "A Reviewer reviewed," &c., 15; Notice of the results of a suit lately brought against Friends of Ohio Yearly Meeting, 23; On the lessons to be learned from wide-spread calamities permitted to befall us as a nation, 31; Remarks on a growing laxity in the proper observance of the First-day of tbe week in Philadelphia and elsewhere, 39; Remarks to a correspondent in reference to the matter composing this journal, 39; Remarks on Prof. Tyndall's recent address, and the answer which the true Christian has in his own experience to infidel suggestions, 47; Observations on, and advice to the young people of the Society, 55; On misconceptions in reference to Philadelphia Yearly Meeting, and tbe concern which exists in it, for the welfare of the body, 63; Notice of the proceedings of Ohio Yearly Meeting, 71; Notice of a pamphlet, "The Doctrines and Ministry of George Fox," 72; Remarks on the issuing of a Memorial by London Yearly Meeting concerning Edward Ash, 78; Minutes of Ohio Yearly Meeting, 86; Comments on the denial by Edward Ash of the appearance of tbe light of Christ in the heart, 92; Observations on the nccessity of frequent retirement of mind for an increase of spiritual strength, 111; Notice of a new edition of the Journal of Thomas Scattergood, 112; Observations on the recent delivery of an eulogium upon a military troop by a professed minister of Christ, 119; Notice of the proceedings of Indiana Yearly Meeting, 135; Observations on holding "General Meetings" among Friends, 143; Remarks on the observance of the day called Christmas, 151; Advice and caution to Friends in reference to the annual settlement of their outward affairs, 159; On the doctrines and testimonies of Friends as upheld at their rise, and the professed advance upon them, at the present time, 166; Remarks on resisting a wandering spirit in religious meetings, 175; On the necessity of the exercise of faith by the members of the militant church, 183; Encouragement to the true christian while contemplating the condition of the civil and religious world, 199; Remarks on the decision of the Judges in the suit for the possession of the Mt. Pleasant Boarding School, 207; Remarks on the annual inquiry into the spiritual condition of our members, through the Queries, 215; Comments on unsound doctrines inculcated by a recent extract from "The Higher Life, by J. B. Brown," 223; Observations on "Christian liberty," as a plea for disregarding the testimonies of the Society of Friends, 231; Experience of Wm. Edmundson of a superficial religion, and comments, 239; Remarks on the beneficial results of "local option" law, and its threatened repeal, 247; Objections of Friends to First-day schools, 255; Observations on the true remedy for the difficulties and confusion existing in the Society, 262; Notice of the "Seamen's Aid Society," 263; Remarks on our approaching Yearly Meeting, 279; Account of the proceedings of Philadelphia Yearly Meeting, 294; On the results in some neighborhoods of departures from the established practices of Friends, 304; Encouragement to Friends to maintain Select Schools for their children, 311; Advice of George Fox concerning Friends travelling in the ministry, and comments, 319; Remarks on the condition of the religious world and the "revivals" now taking place in Great Britain, 327; Remarks on the acceptance by Philadelphia Yearly Meeting of a bequest by H. H. Mosher, 335; Remarks in explanation of editorial comments concerning Geo. Fox's advice to Friends travelling in the ministry, 335; On the striking illustration of the futility of conquest by force of arms, afforded by the Franco-Prussian war, 343; Encouragement to laborers in the gospel, 351; Remarks on the declaration of the infallibility of the Pope, 359; Notice of the proceedings of London Yearly Meeting, 367; Notice of the proceedings of Canada Yearly Meeting, 375; On the responsibility of the children and families of those who occupy conspicuous positions in the church, 383; Notice of "The Daily Remembrancer on Peace and War," 384; Notice to subscribers, 384; Observations on the present condition of the Society of Friends, 391; Remarks on the recent death of valued members, 399; Observations on the counsel of George Fox to ministers to dwell in the life, 407; Remarks on the effective preaching of a godly life, 415.

Edmundson William. On the early concern of Friends to avoid the cares and riches of this world, 228.
Experience of, of a superficial religion, 239.

Egypt. Observations on the high state of the arts in ancient, 286.

Emlen Institution. Brief account of the origin and history of, 271.

Emlen James. Remark of, on desiring none of the novelties in religion of the present day, 326.

England. Notice of the expiration of a lease for 999 years in, 222.

Epistle of London Yearly of women Friends, 1775, to Philada. Yearly Meeting of women Friends, 134.
of Stephen Crisp, and comments, 220.
of Leinster Province Meeting. Postscript to an, 228.

Epitaph in an Italian grave-yard. An, 11.

Esquimaux. Notice of the skill of, in decoying seal, 191.

Eucalyptus plantation in Algeria. Description of a, 38.

Evans William. Extract from, on the observance of the 4th of Seventh mo., 35.
Caution of, in reference to seaside and other resorts, 358.
Remarks of, on the necessity of continued attention to the work of salvation, 366.
Observation of, on the sufferings of the church, 395.

Evil reports. Illustration of the spreading of, 23.

Example. The testimony of, 164.

Expediency. The danger of, as a guide of action, 71.

Eye. Account of Alfred Graefe, the famous operator on the, 43.
The disuse of rolling towels recommended to prevent the spread of a disease of the, 115.

Faith. The doctrine of the Society of Friends in relation to, 99.
Illustration of the danger of a false, in the death of W. E. Udderzook, 123.
Anecdote enforcing the necessity of, in the Divine government, 131.
On the necessity of the exercise of, in the militant church, 183.
The blessed reward of having kept the, 188.

Faithfulness. Encouragement to, 287. 300.

Fathers. Anecdote of the responsibility of, 178.

Favor. How to return a, 116.

Feeding the pigeons. Reflections upon, 114.

Fell Judith. The happy close of the life of, 203.

Ferns. Notes on collecting rare, near Mammoth cave, 237.

Files. On the manufacture of, 234.

Fish not sensitive to sound, 159.

Farming not a dull business, 301.

Flogging Judas. Late observance of the custom of, 366.

Footprints in solid rock, of artificial origin, 366.

Forests. On the pecuniary and other advantages of planting, 148.
Outlines of the area in the U. S. covered by, 198.

Fossil ivory. Notice of the collection and quality of, 300.

Fothergill John. Remarks of, on adopting a plain dress, about the year 1684, 5.
John, the physician. Remarks of, on reviewing his life, 175.
Samuel. Remark of, on the origin of the testimony of Friends against the language, customs and fashions of the world, 367.

Four years in Ashantee. Extracts from, 379. 385. 397. 403. 411.

Fox George. Divinely moved to recommend the establishment of meetings for discipline among women Friends, 10.
Exhortation of, to true brotherly love, 38.
Advice of, to Friends, 43.
Remarks on the recent attack upon the character and doctrines of, by E. Ash, 78. 92. 150. 154.
Remarks on the character of, and religious service of, 82.
Heals John Banks and Richard Myer in a miraculous manner, 89.
Healed of severe physical injuries by the immediate extension of Divine power, 89.
Testimony of Wm. Penn to the weightiness of, in prayer, 105.
Exhortations of, and others to obedience to the light of Christ in the heart, 156.
Advice of, to Friends upon judging in meetings for worship, 174.
Observations of, on understanding the scriptures, and comments, 347.
Counsel of, to ministers, to dwell in the life, and comments, 407.

France. Inscription plates from the royal tombs of, sold for old metal, 14.
A visit to the Landes in south-west, 313.
Address presented by Friends to the National Assembly of, in 1792, and answer, 373. 382.

Freedmen. Extracts from letters addressed to the Friends' Association for relief of, and appeal on behalf of, 197.

Friends. Religious communications addressed to, 38. 58. 66. 85. 156. 171. 206. 242. 243. 247. 258. 308. 326. 332.
Observations on the state of the Society of, 324. 330. 332. 364. 391.
Evidence that the early, were distinguished by a plain dress, 5.
Remarks on departures from the practices of, suggested in New York Yearly Meeting, 10.
Remarks in objection to reading the Scriptures by, in meetings for worship, 25. 105.
The views of, in regard to the observance of the First day of the week, 39.
Remark on the faithful administration of the discipline among, 44.
Extravagance in furniture and apparel among, not in accordance with Truth. Remarks of Joseph Pike on, 46.
Account of and remarks on the persecution of, in New England, 49. 73. 81. 92. 97. 109. 142. 161. 189.
Historical researches upon the first protest of, against slavery, 51. 57. 67. 203.
A short history of, in the Province of Ontario, 54.
Questions and answers relative to some of the doctrines and testimonies of, 82. 90. 99. 105. 113. 120. 130.
Accounts by George Fox and others of remarkable extensions of Divine power in the early rise of the Society of, 89.
Observations of John Conran on adopting the plain dress of, 92.
The doctrine of the light of Christ in the heart as an essential characteristic of, asserted, 95. 150. 154. 156. 206. 257.
Reasons why, meet in silence, without prearranged service, 107.
Remarks of M. A. Schimmelpenniek on attending the meetings of, 118.
Reasons for the objections of, to First-day schools, 130. 183. 255.
Remarks on discontinuing "General ings" among, in England in last century
Declarations of Samuel Scott in reference ultimate prevalence of the testimonies plainness of dress and address, 159.
Examination of the present professed ad upon the doctrines and testimonies o early, 166.
Observations on the inconsistencies of men among, 172. 223.
Experience of Dugan Clark on being diso from the Society of, 183.
Tender counsel of Isaac Penington to, to tinue to trust in the Lord's power, 184.
Advice that the management of the disciplin be not committed to hands unclean, 195.
On properly appreciating the value of birthri membership in the Society of, 202.
Testimony of Sarah Grubb to the present a future existence of faithful members amo 206.
Remarks of John Griffith on the sorrowful co sequences of an inordinate love of transito enjoyments among, 213.
Exhortation to diligence in the attendance meetings by, 220.
Remarks of Wm. Grover on nice distinction made among, to avoid suffering, 223.
Godly care of the early, against the encumbrance of this world, 228.
Remarks on the true ground of application to membership among, 237.
Remarks on the views of, in relation to the Holy Scriptures as distinguished from those of other religious professors, 243.
Degeneracy among, owing to a departure from the life of Christ in individual members, 251. 266.
Notice of the persecution of, by the Dutch in the early settlement of New York, 260. 270.
Observations on the true remedy for the difficulties existing in the Society of, 262.
Statement of the number of members in the Society of, in 1708, 282.
Remarks on the testimony of, against tithes, 285.
The descendants of, the true successors of, only as they are led by the spirit into the maintenance of the same doctrines and testimonies, 286.
Remarks on "modified Quakerism," 293.
Encouragement to maintain select schools for the children of, 311.
Observations of John Griffith upon the transaction of the discipline by, 315.
Remarks on the serious and weighty character of the early, 322. 341.
The mission of, to be ended only by the universal establishment of Christ's kingdom in the earth, 322.
Remarks on the condition of the Society of, in England, 324. 332. 347.
Plainness of speech, behavior and apparel an external bulwark of, 342.
On the origin of the simplicity in dress and manners of, 351.
Objections of, to calling a place of worship a "church," 356.
Caution to, in reference to places of summer resort, 358.
Advice of James Dickinson to maintain a holy striet discipline among, 367.
Notes on the settlement of, at Dunkirk, France 349. 357. 365. 373. 382. 390.
A word of entreaty to, to maintain their testimony against the world in dress, &c., 398.
Encouragement to, to maintain their grave-yards in neat order, 403.
Prophecy fulfilled in the display of the light and power of the gospel, attending the rise of, 409

"Friends in the Seventeenth Century." Notice of, 253.
Extract from, 302.

Frog. Observations on the crying of the, in fear, 130.

Fungus. Notice of the death of house-flies caused by a, 11.

Gas-wells. Notes on the history and uses of, 18. 26.

Geese in the west. Remarks on wild, 103.

Gentleman." On "A, 107.

Geology. Discovery of recently petrified wood, 187.

Germantown Friends. On the history of the first, 51. 57. 114. 203.

Germination of seeds. On the powerful effects of the blue ray in the, 221.

Giving in." Extract entitled, 195.
iving in secret. Remarks of Leighton upon, 127.
lass rendered hail-proof and fire-proof, 236.
Experiments with toughened, 348.
Going into mourning." On, 102.
ulf stream. Brief description of the, 346.
ranges. A farmer's opposition to, 62.
ratitude. Observations on the common absence of, for our highest blessings, 45.
rasshoppers in the northwest. Remarks on the ravages of the, in 1874, 30. 242.
Description of the, 141.
Area of the district ravaged by, in 1874, 211.
Account of the ravages by, in Kansas, in 1875, 370.
reece. Statistics of the progress of, 214.
rellet Stephen. Observation of, on the danger of persons of small religious experience, engaging in matters too high for them, 156.
Account by, of sufferings of children in Finland, for religion, 340.
riffith John. Extracts from the Journal of, and comments, 129. 139. 146. 157. 164. 169. 180. 185. 194. 201. 212. 217. 226. 233. 241. 251. 257. 265. 273. 285. 293. 297. 306. 314. 322. 330. 341. 347. 354. 361. 369. 381. 386. 393 404. 409.
Caution of, in reference to drowsiness in meetings for Divine worship, 187.
Testimony of, to immediate revelation in the soul, 257.
Testimony of, to the benefit of the watchful care of religious parents, 407.
rover Wm. Remarks of on nice distinctions made to avoid suffering, 223.
rubb Sarah [L.]. Observations of, on the condition of the Society of Friends in 1834, &c., 252.
uizot's will. Extract from, containing his religious sentiments, 127.
unpowder pile driver. Account of the, 71.

Hakayit Abdulla. Extracts from, 286. 292. 299. 307.
Hand that saves us." Anecdote entitled. "The, 101.
Happy close of life in the end of Judith Fell, 203.
Hawkins' Mary Anne. Extract from the biography of, 367.
Haydock Henry. Living testimony for the Lord, borne by, on his death-bed, 230.
He that ruleth his spirit is better than he that taketh a city. Essay entitled, 58.
Health. Observations on convulsions, 6.
The value of apples to persons of sedentary habits, 46.
The febrifuge properties of the Australian gum tree, 74.
On the sanitary condition of water, 103.
On the deleterious effects of tobacco upon the, 109.
The spread of a disease of the eyes in the U. S. attributed to the use of rolling towels, 115.
Sleeping with the mouth closed recommended, 231.
Observations on avoiding apoplexy in old age, 332.
Remark on the infectious character of scarlatina, 363.
On the injurious effects of hurry to, 406.
Higher Life," by J. B. Brown. Extracts from "The, 179.
Extract from, on reading the Psalms, 214.
Comments on the above, 223.
Hippopotamus hunters. Account of hereditary, 333.
Hireling ministry. Extracts from a tract against, by one not a Friend, 363.
Hockett Mahlon. Anecdote of, 53.
Holy Spirit. A manifestation of, given to all men, but those only who obey it, are righteous, 70.
Honesty tested. Anecdote of Adam Clark entitled, 14.
Holy Scriptures. Comfort derived from the, by a poor boot-black, 106.
Views of Juan de Valdez respecting the, similar to those of Friends, 162.
Comments on the above, and elucidation of a passage in the, 191.
The reading of the, made effectual by the operations of the Holy Spirit in the heart, 223.
Remarks on the views of Friends in relation to the, as distinguished from those of other religious professors, 243.
Remarks of George Fox upon understanding the, and comments, 347.
Holy Spirit. Observations on the direct influence of, in the heart of man, 155.
The operation of, in the heart condemns for evil and justifies for doing well, 229.
House-fly. Notes on the habits and anatomy of, 2. 11.
Horse-races. Those attending, are participators in the iniquity of, 244.
Hoskens Jane. Remarks of, on the powerful influence of a godly life, and comments, 415.
How to rise in the world. Anecdote entitled, 28.
Hume Sophia. Brief account of, 19.
Humphrey Old. Extracts from, 343.
Humility. Advice of R. Shackleton respecting, 279.
On true, 383.
Hurry. The injurious effects of, to health, 406.
Hydrophobia from the bite of the skunk. Observations on the, 12.

Ice in Melville Bay. Account of encounters with, 173.
Account of the German Arctic expedition of 1869–70, upon the, 177. 186. 193.
Experience of a whaling master with, 191.
Description of a steamer designed to cut through the, in Arctic regions, 218. formations at Niagara Falls. Notice of remarkable, 242. fields of the North Atlantic. On the extent and character of, 407.
I'll do it now, 20.
"I'll take what father takes," 178.
India Rubber. The sources and process of manufacturing, 175.
Process of manufacturing mats of, described, 271.
Indian funeral in the Yosemite. Account of, 181.
Indians. Notice of the present condition and history of the recent efforts of Friends among the western, (continued from vol. xlvii. p. 414), 5. 13. 29. 33. 42. 50. 58. 76.
Extracts from speeches of, showing their advancement in civilized life, 33. 50.
Brief notice of Black Beaver, 371.
Statistics of education among, in the Indian Territory, 68.
Remarks of Commissioner Smith on the true policy towards the, 117.
Anecdote showing a knowledge of, and confidence in God among, 222.
Observations of A. Benezet on the disposition and character of the, 234.
Remarks on the testimony of certain, against war, 234.
Preservation of Friends from injury by, in New England in 1704.
Account of a religious meeting held with, by Thomas Chalkley, 316.
Account of the Sand Creek massacre of, 321. children. Experiences of a school teacher with, 329. 337. 345. 353. 362. 371. 377. 388. 394. 401. 410.
Notice of the character of Kicking Bird, one of the Kiowa, 340. 401.
Account of the late captivity of children and others by Comanche and Kiowa, 388. 395.
Tradition of the Kiowa, concerning the creation of man, 410.
Account of a recent visit to the Modoc, 413.
Indian summer. The uncertain occurrence of, in late years, 125.
Infidel suggestions. Remarks on the answer to, which the christian has in his own experience, 47.
Infidelity. Modern skepticism a revival of ancient, 182.
Immigration to the United States. Statistics of the value of, 100.
India. Notice of the influence of railroads on the civilization of, 261.
Intemperance. On the beneficial results of the "local option" law in checking, 247.
International arbitration. Correspondence in reference to proposing the consideration of, to the governments of Great Britain and the United States, 141.
Inoculation with bee poison. Experiments showing the protection afforded by, 219.
"Is there no religion in dress." Essay entitled, 159.
Isinglass. Account of the preparation of Russian, 39.
Isle of man. Notice of the, 350.
Ivory. Statistics of the sources of and trade in, 300.

Jackson Andrew. Incident in the Presidency of, entitled, "How a war was prevented," 266.
Jordan Joseph. Brief notice of the life and religious labors of, 351.
Jordan Richard. Incident in the ministry of, 139.
Testimony to the gospel ministry of, 395.
Judging spirit. Remarks on avoiding a, 227.
Justification. Observations of the doctrine of Friends respecting, 90. 99.

Kansas. Description of a late journey through the unsettled parts of, 305. 315. 321.
Keep your promise. Extract entitled, 147.
Kicking Bird. Brief account of, 401.
Notice of the death and character of, 340.
Kindness in a railway station. A pleasing incident of, 118.
Kingdom of the Messiah opposed to war. The, 366
Krisheim, in Germany. An inquiry as to the site of, 114.

Labor. Remarks on unemployed, 139.
Lactantius. Short account of the life and character of, with extracts from his writings against war, 60. 65.
Lake Titicaca. Notes on, 4.
Lampblack. Notice of the manufacture of, at a gas-well, 26.
Landes in Frances. Description of a visit to, 313.
Language. On the testimony of the Society of Friends to plainness of, 121.
Trial of Thomas Chalkley, while a lad, in the use of the plain, 269.
Reasons of the testimony of Friends to plainness of, 356.
Law William. Brief account of the life and religious views of, 165. 190.
Leaf of penitentary life. A, 101.
Learning. The accumulation of, for selfish purposes only, miserly, 95.
Legacy of love. A, 363.
Leprosy in Canada. Notice of the, 390.
Letter of Eli Yarnall, 102.
Eliphaz D. Cheyney, 126.
John Barclay, 159.
of John Finch Marsh, 94. 98. 110. 115. 122. 131.
Anthony Benezet, 221. 234.
Jane Pearson to Martha Ecroyd, 292.
Ellen Evans, and comments, 333.
Betsey Purinton. Extract from, 363.
of H. Richards and W. Townsend on International Arbitration, 141.
in reference to suffering among members of Kansas Yearly Meeting, 213. of John Newton. Extract from, 372. of Jasper Capper, 378.
of John Woolman, 382.
of Mary Capper, 402.
of Sidney Coates. Extract from, 406.
Legal opinions in the Ohio case, and comments, 132. 137. 145. 153. 163. 170.
Comments on the above, 207.
Liberia. Notice of the present condition of, 387.
Libraries in ancient Assyria. Account of, 301.
Life among the Indians, being extracts from the Journal of Thomas C. Battey, 305. 315. 321. 329. 337. 345. 353. 362. 371. 377. 388. 394. 401. 410.
Light of Christ in the heart. The doctrine of the, asserted, 95. 150. 154. 156.
Observations of William Law in vindication of the doctrine of, 166.
Illustration of the universality of the, 221.
distinguished from the conscience, 267.
Light for the blind. Account of a famous oculist, 43.
The properties of the actinic rays of, 221.
Lightning. Notice of experiments to explain the effects of upon trees, 366.
Lighthouse. Effect of a hurricane on the Bishop's Rock, 71.
Account of the method of building a, on the coast of France, 100. 252.
Live stock and population. On the comparative numbers of, 134.
Livingstone Dr. The journal and correspondence of, to be edited by his son, 71.
Loe Thomas. Brief account of the character and death of, 179.
Lofty habitations in Melanesian Islands. Notice of, 380.
London. Statistics of the great size of, 127. 259. 343.
Remarkable religious visit of Ann Mercy Bell to, 209. 218. 225. 236.
Proposal to consolidate the government of the city of, 259.
First gas-light in, 415.
Long Island, N. Y. Account of curious ancient customs in, 331.
Notice of former changes of family names in, 338.
Love. Nothing too small to convey the spirit of, 135.
of money compared with the love of strong drink, 244.
Lukewarmness in Christian professors. Remarks on, 164.
Lumber trade. Statistics of the, 270.

Malay. Extracts from the auto-biography of a, 286. 292. 299. 307.
Marriage. On the importance of union of heart and mind to happiness in, 4.
Marriages.—Curtis L. Rockwell to Caroline S. Knowles, 48; Ezekiel C. Shoemaker to S. Rebecca Larkin, 152; William H. Moon to Ellen M. Taylor, 240; Alexis T. Cope to Elizabeth S. Cope, 344; Alfred Sharpless to Zillah M. Cope, 352; Joshua Sharpless to Mary Ellen Brown, 352; Samuel L. Moore to Ruth Anna Webster, 360; John Haines to Elizabeth W. Satterthwait, 391; Wilson Parry to Deborah B. Middleton, 400.
Marcoy's Journey across North America. Extracts from, 269. 278. 284. 290. 298. 309. 318. 323.
Marsh, John Finch. Remarks on the character, and extracts from a memoir of, 34. 41. 53. 59. 70. 76. 83. 94. 98. 110. 115. 122. 131.
Mats. Notice of the manufacture of bast, in Russia, 262.
Meekness. Anecdotes illustrating the power of, 46.
Melanesian islands. Notice of tree houses in the, 380.
Memorial of Hannah A. Warner, 1. 9.
Joseph Snowdon, 27.
Mennonites. Account of a recent visit to the Russian, settled in Dakota, 175.
Notice of the settlement of, in large numbers in Kansas, 188. 309.
Statistics of the immigration of, from Russia, 247.
Observations on the cause of the present exodus of from Russia, and their religious character, 282.
Milk. Observations on the communication of disease by diseased, 6.
Ministry. Observations of Hannah A. Warner on silent exercise of spirit in the work of the, 2. of the spirit. Remarks of I. Penington on the silent, 25.
The doctrine of Friends in relation to the, 100. 107. 113.
of Mary Wright. Incidents in the, 100.
of Richard Jordan. Incidents in the, 139. 395.
Observations of Thomas Story upon the hindrance to the, by lifeless preachers, 143.
Account by John Griffith of his call to, and the necessary preparation for the, 164. 169.
The Divine blessing upon the, necessary to produce fruit, 169.
Humility of John Griffith in the work of the, 181.
Observations upon the extension of a call to the, to those young in years, 194.
Ministers sometimes required to set an example of silent worship, 226. 265.
Observations on the blasting effects of a wordy, lifeless, 273.
Exercise of Thomas Chalkley upon entering into the, 299.
Weighty observations of John Griffith upon the, 306.
Advice of George Fox concerning Friends travelling in the, and comments, 319.
The evils of a hireling, stated by one not a Friend, 363.
Remarks of John Woolman on the blessing of the free exercise of a pure, 382.
Observations of John Woolman on the nature of true, 390.
Minks. Observations on, 172.
Mirage of the western plains. Observations on the, 377.
Misapplied scriptures in reference to baptism and the supper. Remarks by a clergyman on, 204.
Modern skepticism a new form of ancient unbelief, 182.
Moles. On the value of, in destroying insects, &c., 6.
Monkeys made to work, 350.
More Hannah. Extracts from, 351. 399.
Morris Sarah. Remarks of, on the blessing of witnessing the daily renewal of Divine love, 301.
Moths in clothing. Methods of preventing the ravages of, 340.
Mount Shasta in winter. Description of a view from, 227.
Mourning." Remarks on "Going into, 102.
Mushrooms. On the penetrating power of the spawn of, 6.
Music. Observations of the Musical Review on the sensual character of, and comments, 74.
On the demoralizing effects of the study of, 75.
"Musings and Memories." Notice of, 166.
"My Garden." Essay entitled, 364.

Names. Notice of curious changes in family, 338.
Nantucket. Historical notes in reference to Friends of, during the revolutionary war, 349. 357. 365.
Narrow way. Remarks on the, 275.
Nations. Remarks in reference to the teachings of the history of, 142.
Naturalist. A lesson by Agassiz to a, 35.
Natural History. The Earth-worm, 2; The House-fly, 2. 11; Press carrier pigeons, 4; Moles, 6; Skunk hydrophobia, 12; Observations on an animalcule found on city pavements, 28; Usefulness of tame crows, 46; Owls that nest in Connecticut, 52; Curious occurrence in hatching chickens, 52; The wild sheep of California, 63; Notice of an exhibition of bees, 83; The ruby-throated humming-bird, 94; Social life among animals, 98; Wild geese in the west, 103; The chameleon, 118; Night life in the tropics, 124; On spider-killers, 127; The frog, 130; The agricultural ant of Texas, 135; The grasshopper of the north-west, 141; Minks, 172; Notes on animals that chew the cud, 180; The sloth, 203; The sight of birds of prey, 251; Prairie-dogs, 315; American buffaloes, 316; Poison ray fish of S. America, 318; Lamantines, 318; The jaguar, 324; Hippopotamus, 333; The zebra, 367; The pinnated grouse, 367; Wolves and coyotes of the western plains, 378.
"Neglecting the occasion." Anecdote of Dr. Chalmers, 135.
"Never satisfied." Anecdote entitled, and comments, 238.
New birth. Observations on the nature and necessity of the, 381. 386. 393.
New England. Observations on the scenery and people of, 36.
Remarks on the early persecution of Friends in, 49. 73. 81. 92. 97. 109. 142. 161. 189.
Newton John. Extract from a letter of, 372.
New York. Account of the persecution of Friends in the early history of, 161.
New York city. The site of, sold for twenty-four dollars, 69.
Newspapers. The tendency of the constant reading of, against studious habits, 394.
Niagara. Description of remarkable ice formations at, 241.
Night life in the tropics, 124.
Nile. Explorations of Col. Long on the source of the, 287.
Nine. Curious properties of the figure, 61.
Nitro-glycerine. Properties and uses of, 226.
Novel reading. Thoughts on, 22.
A young criminal's evil career commenced by, 101.
Remark on the fallacy of considering, a relaxation to the mind, 363.

Oath. A cardinal's, 372.
Oaths. Interesting instances of refusal to take judicial, 403.
Obedience does not question, 202.
Observatory at Fairmount Park. Notice of a new, 406.
An incident in an, and reflections, 413.
"Ocean trout." Notice of the business of canning in the U. States, 66.
Oil-cloths. On the injurious effects of, in preventing evaporation of moisture, 262.
Old age. A happy, 44.
Old catholic synod, 1875. Notice of the, 375.
Old is better." Extract entitled "The, 406.
Old paths." Essay entitled, "The, 326.
Owls that nest in Connecticut. Notes on, 52.

Panther. Perilous encounter with a, in Pennsylvania, 34.
Papal infallibility. Observations on and extracts from W. E. Gladstone's tract respecting, 178. 186. 210.
Paraffine. The source and uses of, 155.
Parents. The want of godly care in, a cause of present weakness in the church, 354.
Tender advice, caution and counsel of John Griffith to, 355.
responsible for not restraining their children from evil, 361.
Pascal. Remarks of, on his religious faith, 149.
Observations on the Christian experience and character of, 219.
Remarks of, on acquiescence in the Divine will, 227.
Pastorius, Francis Daniel. Observations on, as an early opponent of slavery, 51. 57. 67. 203.
Patient waiting on the Lord. Encouragement to, 230.
Pearson Jane. Remarks of, on various suits of apparel, 94.
Letter of, to Martha Ecroyd, 292.
Penington Isaac. Definition of love, 17.
Penington Isaac. Remarks of, on the silent ministry of the Spirit, 25.
Remarks of, on the work of the ministry, 100.
Tender counsel of, and encouragement to Friend, 184.
Observations of, on the recovery of true unity, 325.
Advice of, to those under doubts and temptations, 399.
Counsel of, on the first steps in the work of religion, 406.
Penn William. Epistle of, to Elizabeth, Princess Palatine, and Anna Maria de Hornes, 61.
Observations of, on the distinguishing characteristic of the doctrines of Friends, 90.
Epistle of, to a persecuted countess in Germany, 106.
Earnest exhortation of, to Friends, to work for the despised Light and Truth of Jesus, 196.
Anecdote of, 334.
Remark of, on judging charitably, 405.
Pennsylvania Working Home for Blind Men. Appeal on behalf of, 77.
Perfection. Remarks on the doctrine of, 180.
Extract from Wm. Law on the doctrine of, 190.
Phillips Catharine. Observation of, on a preparation for eminent usefulness in the church, 45.
Phipps Joseph. Account of the convincement of, 282.
Phosphate of lime. Notice of a deposit of natural, 6.
Pigeons. On the regular employment of carrier, in England, for newspaper purposes, 4.
Pilgrims. The,—an allegory, and comments, 238. 244. 254.
Pike Joseph. Counsel of, to those under temptation, 60.
Pins. Account of the manufacture of, 182.
Pleasing incident. A, 118.
Plants. Note on the growth force of the roots of, 28.
Note on the supposed poisonous character of the flowers of a Wistaria, 28.
Observations of the rapidity of the growth of the Canada thistle, 28.
On the distribution of, by human agency, 192.
The cultivation of the teazel in New York, 222.
Plants. Mushrooms, 6; The Potato, 6; The snow plant of the California Sierras, 6; The Eucalyptus plantations in Algeria, 38; Value of the Eucalyptus, 74; Carnivorous plants, 134; Cow-tree of S. America, 318; African copal trees, 350; Banana culture in Florida, 395.
Plainness of speech and apparel. Encouragement to Friends to maintain, 261.
of Dress. Testimony of one not a Friend respecting, 275.
Poetry.—Original.—The primitive Friend, 324; No Cross no Crown, 356.
Selected.—The acorn, 37; Amelia Opie's Farewell to music, 124; After the storm, 164; Alone, 268; Axe of the settler, 308; "Blessed are they that mourn," 116; "Blind Spinner," 172; Beyond, 196; Better than gold, 348; The Brooklet, 405; Bright was the guiding star, &c., 397; The crooked-necked gourd, 4; The Child on the Judgment-seat, 12; City of God, 92; Could'st thou not watch one hour? 204; "Come unto me all ye that labor," &c., 236; Charity, 276; Echo, 60; To the fringed gentian, 84; From the "Arm chair," 132; Giving, 53; Growing up, 101; Guests of the heart, 132; "Going alone," 164; The Gifted, 363; Hast thou a care? 4; Hymn of praise, 60; Hills, 140; Hymn of the nativity, 149; Heart be still, 284; Hora novissima, 300; Hymn, 348; "He careth for you," 397; "Is it rainy," 37; "I will sing of the mercies," &c., 236; "Innocent child and snow-white flower," 284; "If God shall bless me so," 300; It is not death, &c., 340; John's wife, 53; Just as God leads, 172; The kite, 228; Low flying, 101; Leave me not, 124; Lines on the death of a child, 253; Look at home, 293; The lighthouse, 388; Losses, 413; My dream, 28; Mystery of Chastisement, 68; My minde to me a kingdom is, 253; "No room in the inn," 20; Not knowing, 180; "Our own," 188; Old words, 326; Peace in God, 188; Prayer for christian graces, 308; The Right way, 340; Rest when life is done, 363; Song of a nest, 45; The Search for happiness, 68; The sure refuge, 140; The seen and the unseen, 220; School life, 228; Submission, 261; "Suffer little children to come unto me," 356; Summer studies, 373; Safe home at last, 388; Trust in God, 20; Tears, 92; The tongue instructed, 116; To yonder side, 317; A teacher's reminiscence, 332; Thankful hearts, 380; Under the leaves, 324; The voice in the twilight, 180; Waiting, 84; The widow's thanksgiving, 156; The water-fowl, 196; Who giveth songs in the night, 212; Walking with the world, 244; "Work while it is to-day," 276; This dark world and that bright land, 380; "Ye did it unto me," 268.

Point Loma, Cal. Account of a day spent at, 276, Poison. Method of preparing, by the Yahua Indians, 323.
Poisons. List of antidotes for several, 6.
Political life. Excellent example of Gov. Briggs in, 227.
Pompeii. Records of the process of treating textile fabrics in, 235.
Potato-rot. Successful experiments in preventing the, 6.
Power of vegetation." Extract entitled, "The, 170.
Comments on the above, 197.
Prairie chicken. Notice of the introduction of, into Eastern States, 367.
Praise ye the Lord." Essay entitled, 38.
Prayer. Models of, 6. acceptable only from the operation of the Holy Spirit in the heart, 21.
Observations on, 54.
Views of the Society of Friends on, 105.
Observations of Robert Barclay on, 236.
Comments of a child on a, 358.
Preservation of a lad from death at sea, 103.
Pride a cruel beggar, 10.
"Probabilities" and maps of the weather in the U. S. On the, 250.
Profanity. Encouragement to faithfulness in reproving, 259.
politely rebuked, 359.
Procrastination in yielding obedience to the Heavenly Monitor. Remarks on, 139.
Prosperity. Remark on the danger of, 44.
Providential deliverances. Remarks on, and accounts of, 84. 89. 198.
Punctuality. A want of, injustice to others, 45.

Questions and answers relative to some of the doctrines and testimonies of the Society of Friends, 82. 90. 99. 105. 113. 121. 130.

Rabbit. Instrumentality of a, in saving a miner's life, 334.
Railroads. Notice of the influence of, on the civilization of India, 261.
Average speed on nine principal English, 402.
Ratan. On the uses and manufacture of, 102.
Rathbone Elizabeth. Brief account of the character and religious exercises of, 318.
Regeneration necessary, 246.
Observations of John Griffith on the nature and necessity of, and comments, 381.
Religion. On the character of true, 37.
of the heart. Letter written in the seventeenth century on the, 52.
On the danger of partial statements of the truths of, 117.
Remarks of Guizot upon explaining the truths of, by human wisdom, 127.
The fruits of, should be seen in our daily lives and in our business, 130.
Observations on and accounts of the deep spiritual exercises attendant upon the work of, 157.
Observations on the manifold substitutes for true, of man's forming, 229.
The necessity for constant watchfulness over self in the work of, 239.
Remarks of John Griffith on forward active self in the work of, 241.
Human reason not to be the leader in the work of, 246.
Remarks on hindering things in, 258.
Observations on several false rests in, 314.
The "Old paths" in, 326.
Remarks on so-called "revivals" in, 327.
Schemes of rapid money making destructive to, 332.
Submission of the heart to Christ the true beginning of, 341.
Continued attention to the work of, necessary, 366.
Remarks on declensions and revivals in, 380.
Advice of I. Penington on the first beginnings in the work of, 406.
Remarkable visit of Ann Mercy Bell to London, 209. 218. 225. 236.
Reminiscence of the past. Observations of S. [L.] Grubb, 252.
Removal to a new country. Remarks on the necessity of obtaining an evidence of the Divine approbation previous to, 207.
Repentance. On true, 258.
Observation on the necessity of, 44.
Report of the Board of Managers of the Tract Association, 27. 339.
Adelphi Schools, 346.
Friends' Free Reading Room and Library, Germantown. Extracts from, 363.
Response. A good, 303.
Rest for the righteous. Remark on enjoying the, even though surrounded by tumults, 326.
Revelation. Remarks on the doctrine of immediate, 217.
Immediate revelation to the soul of man, inseparable from vital religion, 257.
Revival converts. Spurgeon's advice to, 343.
Rhubarb. On medicinal, 35.
Rice culture in the U. States. Account of the origin of, 124.
Riches. Remarks on the deadening effect on the heart of the undue pursuit of, 69.
Observations on the proper use of, 254.
Richfield springs, N. Y. Account of a recent visit to, 19.
Robert College, Constantinople. History of a building occupied by, 140.
Robinson William. Account of the sufferings and martyrdom of, in Boston, 109.
Rogers Lydia S. Brief account of, and comments, 414.
Rome. Observations on the doctrine of infallibility proposed by the church of, 178. 186. 210. 359.
Rotch William. Extracts from an auto-biography of, 349. 357. 365. 373. 382. 390.
Routh Martha. Courageous action related by, 194.
"Rum and cheese." Anecdote entitled, 354.
Russia. Notes on winter in, 138.
Rutter Thomas. Brief account of, and observations upon his christian experiences, 195.

Salvation by Jesus Christ, 44.
Observations on the presumptuous assurance of the attainment of, 180. 387.
On the true work of, 386.
Satan a bad paymaster, 173.
Scarlatina. Remark on the infectious character of, 363.
Scarnell Henry. Short account of the life and death of, 262.
Scientific Notes, 6. 28. 71. 366.
School. Notice of the opening of the "William Penn charter," 174.
teachers. Statistics of the number of, in the U. States, 206.
Schools. Objection of Friends to First-day, 130. 183. 255.
Objections to First-day, as expressed by a member of the Presbyterian ministerial association, 183.
Encouragement to Friends to maintain select, for their children, 311.
for instruction in mechanical science. The establishment of, recommended by Governor Hartranft, 182.
School-books often poisoned by the praise of military heroes, 356.
Scott Job. Chief desire of, for his children, 350.
Scott Samuel. Testimony of, to plainness of dress, 159.
Sea. Danger from fire at, in vessels carrying coal, 356.
Seas. Observations on the fixed characters of the, 342. 346.
Secret a, William Wirt's advice to his daughter, entitled, a, 239.
Seeking after God sincerely, always rewarded, 151.
Selden John. Remarks of, on the inability of literary acquirements to supply spiritual consolation, 113.
Self. Anecdote on the denial of, 391.
Selfishness. On the danger of fostering, by emulation at school, 128.
Sepulchres of the Aymaras Indians in South America. Account of the curious, 279.
Serpents. Notice of the antipathy of, to geraniums, 311.
Settlement of Friends at Dunkirk in France. Account of the, 349. 357. 365. 373. 382. 390.
Shackleton Richard. Advice of, to his daughter, 279.
Remarks of, on individual faithfulness in our several lines of duty, 300.
On a halting course in the spiritual journey, 343.
On acquiescence with the Divine will, 346.
On the blessing of troubles, 382.
The desire of, for humility and wisdom, 408.
Sheep of California. Notes on the wild, 63.
Shillitoe Thomas. Observations of, on giving up business, under an apprehension of duty, 287.
Remark of, on enduring the buffetings of Satan, 300.
Observations on laboring with his hands, while engaged in a ministerial visit, 310.
Shipwreck. Remarkable deliverance of Thos. Chalkley from, 310.
Shoemaker Isaac. Some account of the dying expressions, and death of, 124.
Shoes. On the cheap manufacture of wooden soles for, 367.
Silence in religious meetings. Extract from the "National Baptist" on, 302.
Silent College" in Washington, D. C. Account of "The, 405.
Silver-producing country in Nevada. Area of, 6.
Skimming the Seine. Notice of, 43.
Sleeping in meetings for Divine worship. Remarks upon, 117. 187. 197.
Sloth. Observations on the, 203.
Snowdon Joseph. Memorial concerning, 27.
Soldier disarmed by a woman. Anecdote of a, 194.
Source of strength. The, 277.
Sowle Andrew. Brief account of the life and death of, 173.
Spavold Samuel. Remark of, upon silent worship, 105.
Spider killers. Notice of, 127.
St. Petersburg. Notes on the rag fair of, 147.
Straight gate and narrow way. An allegory, with comments. The, 267. 275. 283. 290.
Statistics of the size and cost of European armies, 50.
of education among Indians in the Indian Territory, 68.
of the value of immigrants to the U. States, 100.
of the size of London, 127.
of the live stock in comparison with the population of various countries, 134.
of the late ravages of grasshoppers in the West, 211.
Steamship. Notice of a, of great speed, 71.
Stevenson Marmaduke. Account of the martyrdom of, in Boston, 109.
Strong men. Illustrations of, 131.
Story Thomas. Extracts from, 44. 47.
Extract from, on the condition of younger members of the Society in 1736, and comments, 55.
Experience by, of extraordinary extensions of Divine power, and account of a remarkable deliverance from shipwreck, 84.
Remarks of, on a wandering spirit in religious meetings, 175.
Stewards. Remarks on the responsibility of individuals as, 332.
Story Christopher. Remarks of, on a proper exercise of mind in religious meetings, 176.
Suffering with joy of the Holy Ghost, and suffering without it. Remarks on, 179.
Sufferings. Remarks on the promotion of the Truth by patient, 274.
Summary of events, 7. 15. 23. 31. 40. 47. 56. 63. 72. 80. 88. 96. 104. 112. 120. 128. 136. 144. 152. 160. 168. 176. 184. 192. 200. 208. 216. 224. 232. 240. 248. 255. 263. 272. 279. 288. 295. 304. 312. 320. 328. 335. 344. 352. 360. 368. 376. 384. 392. 399. 408. 416.
Summer afternoon walk. A, 334.
Supper The. Views of the Society of Friends in relation to, 113.
Remarks of a clergyman on the proper meaning of certain scriptures in reference to, 204.
Swearing reproved. Anecdote of, 173.

Taylor Sarah. Weighty expressions of, during her last illness, 249.
"Tearing down a wall." Essay entitled, 29.
Temperance coffee houses. Proposal to establish, in Philadelphia, 27.
Temptation. Remarks on the danger of yielding to the first, 29.
On preservation in the hour of, 58.
Counsel of Joseph Pike to those under, 60.
Teachers. Statistics of the number of, in the United States, 206.
Teazel. Method of cultivating the, in New York, 222.
Telescopes. Description of the method of making the lenses for, 289.
That's How. Anecdote entitled, 101.
Theatre. Juvenile criminals first tempted to steal by a desire to visit the, 234.
"There is no religion in dress." Essay entitled, 111.
Thimbles. On the manufacture of, 22.
Thornton James. Experience by, of the satisfaction of attending religious meetings, 53.
Timber. Notice of valuable kinds of, at the Vienna Exhibition, 260.
Time. Eastern method of measuring, 98.
Observation on the mis-spending of, 82.
On redeeming the, 356.
Tithes. Remarks on the testimony of Friends against the payment of, 273.
Tobacco. Observations on the nature and deleterious effects of, 109.

Tobacco. On the waste resulting from the use of, 303.
Tools great men work with, 389.
Toughened glass. Experiments with, 348.
Tract "What is it." Notice of and extract from, 229.
Tract Association of Friends. Report of the Board of Managers of, 27.
Transit of Venus. Results of the American expedition to observe the, 245.
Trees. Notice of a collection of volumes formed of representative trees, 119.
On the autumnal coloring of, 125.
On the increased value given to property, by setting out, 148.
The growth of the bark of, lateral, not upward, 197.
Trouble. Patience fortifies the mind against, 259.
True Arabian night's tale. A, 140.
Truth. On the danger of partial statements of, 117.
The following of, into suffering the trial of our love, 215.
Illustration of, given by a dumb boy, 303.
Tunnel under the British Channel. Observations on the feasibility of the proposed, 198.
under Mount St. Gothard. Notice of the construction of a, 202.
Turkey. Narrative of the sufferings of Christian converts in, 37.

Udderzook, Wm. E. Observations on the state of mind of, in the prospect of death, and the danger of a mere nominal belief, 123.
Uncertainty as a part of our spiritual discipline. Remarks on, 326.
Unfaithfulness in matters comparatively small, intercepts the Divine favor, 284.
Unity. Observations of I. Penington on the recovery of religious, and comments, 325.
Unknown God. Historical notices of the Athenian altars inscribed to the, 62.

Valdéz Juan de. Similarity of the religious views of, to those of Friends, 162.
Venus. Results of the American expedition to observe the transit of, 245.
Village. Description of a model, by W. Hepworth Dixon, 212.

Waiting upon the Lord. Encouragement to, 84.
War. Remark on the deliberations in Europe upon carrying on, humanely, 23.
Remark of Napoleon I. on the soul of a soldier, 23.
The prospect of a French, for revenge, disclaimed, 38.
Remarks of Jefferson on the inefficiency of, to redress wrongs, 46.
Statistics of the size and cost of European armies. 50.
Testimony of Lactantius against, 60. 65.
Opinion of Madison upon, as the greatest enemy to public liberty, 63.
Observations on the great obstacle to the prevalance of a righteous testimony against, in the influence and example of professed ministers of Christ, 119.
On the possibility of the abolition of international, at the present age, 220.
Extract from the auto-biography of S. Wilder, entitled how a, was prevented, 266.
Observations of the Shah of Persia on inconsistencies observed in Europe in relation to, 271.
Preference of President Grant for arbitration of national disputes instead of, 284.
True religion the true strength of a nation, 284.
War. Testimony borne by Thomas Chalkley against, 299.
Desires that the American people may be the national pioneers in promoting the abolition of, 317.
On the abolition of, 333.
Illustration of the tendency of one, to beget another, 343.
Popular heresies in regard to, 356.
The kingdom of the Messiah entirely opposed to, 366.
Waring Jeremiah. Observations of, in his last illness, 36.
Warville, John Pierre Brissot de. Brief notice of, 373.
Warner Hannah A. Memorial of, 1. 9.
Warning to young men in business transactions. A, 62.
Water. On the method of detecting unwholesome, 103.
Water the roots. Extract entitled, 211.
Waterspout. Account of a, in S. Carolina, 59.
Wayside notes on the sufferings of Friends in New England, &c., 49. 73. 81. 92. 97. 109. 142. 161. 189.
Waste. On the avenues of, in the consumption of spirituous liquors and tobacco, 303.
Wealth. Illustrations of the danger of losing serenity of mind, in the pursuit of, 10.
Weather. On the daily maps and "probabilities" of the, in the United States, 250.
Well. Notice of a deep, in Prussia, 333.
West. Notice of the disappointed results of emigration to the far, 172.
Westtown Boarding School. Advice of Sidney Coates to a caretaker at, 406.
Whale. Notice of the capture of a young, in the Raritan River, N. J., 29. catching in Baffin's Bay. Description of, 157.
Account of the dangers of, 173.
"What is it." Incident entitled, and remarks on the operation of the Holy Spirit in the heart, 229.
Wheeler Daniel. Extracts from, 14.
Expressions of, on true worship, 407.
Where is Krisheim? Essay entitled, 114.
Whitehead George. Incident in the convineement of, 342.
Williams William and the colored man. Anecdote of, 388.
Williams Hannah. Remark of, upon the benefit of patience, 259.
Wind-mills in Holland. Notice of, 268.
Wind-storms on the plains. On the causes of, 196.
Wine. Method of manufacturing port, in Portugal, 188.
Winter in Russia. Notes on, 138.
Wood. Notice of the discovery of recently petrified, 187.
Notice of valuable kinds of, at the Vienna Exhibition, 260.
Woolman John. Letter of, 382.
Observations of, on true ministry, 390.
Worship. Remarks on true spiritual, 25. 330. 412.
Encouragement to the attendance of meeting for, in the middle of the week, 53.
The doctrine of the Society of Friends in relation to, 100. 105. 107.
Remarks on drowsiness in meetings for, 117.
Comments on the above, 197.
Remarks of M. A. Schimmelpenniek on attending Friends' meetings for, 118.
Observations on resisting a wandering spirit in meetings for, 175. 187.
Exhortation to diligence in the attendance of meetings for, 220.
Silent meetings for, often the most profitable, 226.
Worship. On the blessing attendant upon a wrestling, prayerful state in meetings for, 233.
Advice to gather the family at times for silent, 261.
Extract from the "National Baptist" on silence in meetings for, 302.
Example of Elizabeth Bond on the attendance of meetings for, 326.
Remarks of John Griffith on the nature of true, and comments, 404.
Expressions of Daniel Wheeler upon true, 407.
Wright Mary. Anecdote of, 100.

Yarnall Eli. Letter of, to Abraham Pennell, 102.
Yearly Meeting, Canada. A brief account of Friends of, 54.
1875. Notice of the proceedings of, 375.
Indiana, 1874. Notice of the proceedings of, 135.
Kansas. Appeal on behalf of suffering Friends in, 95. 198. 205.
Account of relief extended to, 149.
Letters in relation to the suffering among the members of, 212.
London, 1874. Thoughts on the, 25.
1859. Remarks on, 59.
1867. Remarks on, 70.
1874. Remarks on the issuing of a memorial concerning E. Ash, by, 78. 95.
1775, of women Friends. Epistle of to Philadelphia Yearly Meeting of women Friends, 134.
1747. Advice of, to keep to plainness of dress and apparel, 261.
1875. Observations on proposed changes in the Queries of, 324. 332.
1875. Notice of the proceedings of, 367.
Comments on the above, 391.
New York. Remarks on changes suggested in, 10.
Ohio. Notice of the result of a suit lately brought against Friends of, 23.
Legal decision in the suit brought against Friends of, and comments, 132. 137. 145. 153. 163. 170. 207.
1874. Notice of the proceedings of, 71.
1874. Extracts from the minutes of, 86.
Philadelphia. Remarks on the misconception under which Friends of, have suffered, and the concern existing in, for the welfare of the body, 63.
Extract from the advices of, in reference to plainness of dress, language and living, 122.
Observations on the discipline of, in reference to the appointment of Representatives to, 206.
List of correspondents in, 261.
1875. Remarks on the approach of, 278. 279.
1875. Account of the proceedings of, 294.
Youth. Remark of Rebecca Hubbs in reference to the, 37.
An exhortation to the, to be faithful to the Divine requiring, 38.
The treating of religion with levity by, an evidence of a shallow mind, 162.
Religious caretakers of, a great blessing to the, 332.
Advice of Ellen Evans to a, and comments, 333.
Affectionate address of John Griffith to the, 361. 369.

Zebra. Notice of the taming of the, 367.
Zoological garden, Philadelphia. Remarks on the wise conditions of a gift lately made to the, 126.

THE FRIEND.

A RELIGIOUS AND LITERARY JOURNAL.

VOL. XLVIII. SEVENTH-DAY, EIGHTH MONTH 22, 1874. NO. 1.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY.

Price Two Dollars per annum, if paid in advance. Two dollars and fifty cents, if not paid in advance.

Subscriptions and Payments received by

JOHN S. STOKES,

AT NO. 115 NORTH FOURTH STREET, UP STAIRS.

PHILADELPHIA.

Postage, when paid quarterly in advance, five cents.

Selected.

Memorial of Frankford Monthly Meeting of Friends, concerning HANNAH A. WARNER, deceased.

She was the daughter of Charles and Rebecca Allen, and was born in Philadelphia, on the 22d of 9th month, 1814. The early training and watchful, restraining care, and the consistent example of these pious parents, were doubtless largely instrumental in preparing her mind for so full an acceptance of pure gospel truth, as she was favored afterwards to experience, through the leadings and teachings of the Spirit of her dear Redeemer: and she retained a very lively and grateful remembrance of the labors of her parents to the close of life.

To an ardent and affectionate disposition there was joined in childhood a quickness of temper and a strong will; but she was early made sensible, as evinced in the following memorandum written in her fifteenth year, of her sinful condition, and the need of a change of heart. She thus writes: "I think I was about twelve years of age when my Heavenly Father condescended again to visit my soul. I became more attentive to religious things, and in the summer of my thirteenth year, I was so much aroused to see the situation of my wicked heart, that one night, I with many tears and under great agitation of mind, was enabled to make known to my dear mother, some sins I had committed when eight years of age, which hitherto she had not known. Oh! from what a burden is my heart released upon thinking that I was so helped, painful as it was, to make this known. From that time until this, I think I may say that the Lord has continued to visit and re-visit my soul. I have become more attached to religious instruction, to going to meeting, and to the endeavor of attaining my soul's salvation. My heart has frequently been baptized under a sense of my many sins and great weakness. I long to enjoy the true peace which is from above, and to become one of the pure in heart. My sorrows have been frequent and many, though mostly known only to Him who seeth in secret. I have continued in this way progressing gradually in my attachment to those things which are above. Oh! that I may become as a fruitful vine in the vineyard of my God."

Thus it was, waiting upon the Lord, watching and earnestly wrestling for the blessing, that her spiritual building was laid upon the sure foundation—even Christ Jesus the Rock of Ages—the Alpha and Omega of the Christian's faith; whereby the world was crucified unto her and she unto the world. Yielding her heart to the transforming, purifying influences of the Spirit of the great Master Workman, whose will is our sanctification, she became even in youth an example to all with whom she mingled, of simplicity, straightforwardness and faithfulness in the path of apprehended duty; characteristics which she retained in no common degree throughout her after life and to which were added as she grew in grace, the tenderness, humility and child-like nature of the mature christian.

She was much interested in the best welfare of the younger members of our religious Society; and from a sense of duty, entered upon the responsible position of teacher at Westtown, when she had just completed her seventeenth year. She continued in this interesting employment either at Westtown or in the Select School in Philadelphia, with but short intermissions, for nearly ten years. Her sense of the responsibilities resting upon her, and of the need of Divine help to perform her duties aright, is set forth in the following memorandum:

"Westtown, 8th mo. 11, 1833. Our school has been very large, and for the dear and precious children over whom we have the oversight, my heart is often deeply concerned. I believe there are amongst them precious plants, but there are others who often cause heartfelt mourning and sorrow. But I am renewedly convinced that all that we can do will prove of no avail, unless attended by the Divine blessing, and that we ought to be more and more concerned to act in an exemplary manner, and also to seek to be able to put up our petitions both for them and for ourselves." Again under date of 12th mo. 1837, she says: "It is a serious, and (may I not say) an awful thing to live and occupy the very responsible station I do—placed at the head of so many precious children, who are looking to me for example. I often say I know not what to call little things; every movement, word and action seems to me of importance. Truly vain is the help of man. May I be daily, hourly concerned to seek to the Lord alone for strength and wisdom to perform my duties. May his Spirit, which He hath promised should teach us all things, be my Guide and my Director."

On the 13th of 10th mo. 1841, she was united in marriage to our friend Yardley Warner, and became a member of Goshen Monthly and Whiteland Particular Meeting, Chester county, Pennsylvania.

Her home life was such, as might confidently be looked for from one dedicated to her Lord. She desired not great things for herself or hers, but with humility and Godly fear did she go in and out before her family and her neighbors. In all things whereunto she was called, she bore her Lord's yoke willingly, and it was made easy to her—she learned of Him and found rest in service.

As a mother, she was faithful, watchful and tender: keenly alive to her responsibilities, she discharged her duties with firmness and love, endeavoring not only to guide, but to guard her children, cultivating a freedom and intimacy with them, and tenderly devoting herself to their welfare.

It was her marked concern to cherish in them the earliest and faintest dawnings of a religious life, and she sought to bring them up in the Lord's fear, and consistently with our Christian profession; directing them to the Lord Jesus Christ as their Saviour, and to faithful obedience to the dictates of His blessed Spirit dwelling in them as their Guide and Comforter. Her counsel was early imparted to these to seek a reconciliation with their Heavenly Father for every deviation from His will, however small; thus impressing upon them both the beauty and necessity of a daily life of holiness before the Lord.

Enduring with quiet fortitude and cheerful resignation many close trials and provings of faith and patience, her daily life gave evidence that her affections were not placed upon the things of this world, but that whilst seeking first "the kingdom of God and His righteousness," she was permitted to cast all her cares and wants upon His watchful and sustaining power. This she expresses in the following memorandum: "Sometimes when I feel tried at this uncertainty, [in temporal matters] it seems as if the answer was, 'Have not I cared for thee hitherto, and I will still care for thee. Keep quiet and leave the future with me.' Oh for ability to more faithfully serve so good a Master."

Previous to her marriage, her mind had been exercised on account of an apprehension that she would at some time be called to the work of the ministry; and the following from her private memoranda, give evidence that many conflicts and provings were her portion; deep baptisms designed for her refinement and preparation for this solemn work. She says: "How earnestly do I frequently crave that His holy will may be done in me, and that He may be my leader and my feeder; and my staff to lean upon in the time of trial. And I am also often led to look forward to years to come, when it hath seemed to me I shall be called to labor and to perform a far more important work than any I have yet been engaged in; oh! that I may be found faithful to every manifestation of duty is what I earnestly crave." Of her first appearance in the ministry she writes: "7th mo. 16th, 1843. I have thought to-day that it would be right for me, to pen in this little book some of my feelings and provings during the past three months. On the 4th day of the week, in our little meeting at this place, I felt it required of me to say a few words; and towards the close of the meeting, believing that my peace consisted in obedience, I yielded and repeated the following text: "They that are after the flesh do mind the things of the flesh, but they that are after the Spirit the things of the Spirit. For to be carnally minded is death, but to be spiritually minded is life and peace." I cannot say as many others have, that when I sat down I felt my peace to flow as a river, but that fear and awfulness were my portion, lest I might have done wrong; but I was comforted in feeling that had I not yielded I should have left the meeting under sad feelings of condemnation. In the afternoon the enemy was permitted sorely to buffet me, and many were my doubts and reasonings; yea, so overwhelmed was I that I was almost ready to say, I will never speak again. But this storm and conflict soon passed over and I was favored for some days with very peaceful, quiet feelings."

Under date of 1st month 1st, 1846, she thus writes: "At our little meeting on First-day last, I was enabled, I humbly hope, under right authority, to relieve my mind amongst my friends of a burden that had long rested upon me, by exhorting to an increase of watchfulness, reviving the language of our Saviour, 'Watch ye, therefore, and pray always that ye may be accounted worthy to stand before the Son of man,' &c. My mouth hath been seldom opened of latter time, but I have, I believe I may say, often felt my mind brought under travail and exercise of spirit, and frequently matter has presented, which I have thought it might be right for me to spread before my friends; but as I have waited to feel the commission and authority to do so, it has gradually passed away, and I made to see that the time had not yet come for me to throw my burden upon them, but to bear it in secret before Him, who I trust had begotten it, and who alone in His own time, can open and none can shut. Oh! that we may all be preserved from taking the work into our own hands, but leave it with Him, who can cause the silent travail and exercise of spirit to avail as much, as the public declaration of it."

She was acknowledged a minister of Goshen Monthly Meeting in the 5th month of 1848, and became a member of this meeting in 1863.

During this interval important changes occurred in her place of residence. In the spring of 1858, she removed with her husband to Mount Pleasant, Ohio, where they were usefully engaged in conducting Friends' Boarding School, until the year 1861, when they returned to Pennsylvania, and settled within the compass of Uwchlan Monthly Meeting, thence removing to Germantown in the spring of 1863.

In the exercise of her gift Hannah A. Warner attended with minutes, the Yearly Meetings of Ohio and Indiana, likewise most of the Quarterly, and many of the Particular Meetings within the limits of Philadelphia Yearly Meeting. She was also repeatedly called into the weighty service of visiting families.

A sense of human incapacity for rightly addressing the Most High in prayer, and for preaching with that ability which alone can gather to the Lord Jesus Christ, was so impressed upon our beloved friend, as to work great watchfulness over her own spirit, that she should not venture upon the exercise of any privileges she might have as a minister of the Gospel, except under the immediate drawings, and renewed qualifying power of Him, who, reigning supreme over His own cause, has declared, "my glory will I not give to another." And yet so close and constant were her walk and communion with the Father of Spirits, that she was largely made use of to declare publicly "the way of life and salvation,"—laboring by precept and example, for the cause of righteousness, not as those who "have no ruler over them," but as "they that must give account." Her great carefulness not to go in advance of her Guide, was a marked feature of her religious character. "Most fully and cordially," she writes, "do I believe that a secret fervent travail and exercise of spirit, for the best welfare of the flock, will avail more than many words, much reading and teaching, even of a religious nature, unless such is strictly under the authority, and constraining and restricting influence of the unerring Spirit of Truth. I hope I am a full believer in the all powerful and convicting influence of the Grace of God; and therefore I believe it is right for us, when we feel the inward travail of soul for others, to be willing to bear it silently, until He who knows best what His children stand in need of, sees fit to unseal the stopped lips, and to bid those who have been as it were dumb, to speak."

Her attachment to all the doctrines and testimonies of the Society of Friends was deep and ardent; she held to these from a real experience of their value to the Christian pilgrim, and not from tradition; and because she saw in them a conformity with the records of the Holy Scripture,—believing that what we are called upon as a people to uphold and maintain, is not a new doctrine or revelation, but primitive Christianity, and a return to the apostolic faith and practice.

(To be concluded.)

The Fly and the Earthworm.

The next time you go out on your morning or evening ramble, if you chance to see a worm in your path, do not kick it aside, nor step over it; but take it from the ground, and lay it on the palm of your hand; and as it tries to crawl away you will experience a slight sensation of roughness on your skin. If you take a pocket-lens, and examine carefully the under side of the worm's body, you will perceive several rows of fine sharp hooks, extending from one end to the other, each annulated division (for the worm's body is, as you doubtless know, composed of rings) being furnished with four pairs of these hooks, which are situated upon small protuberances on the creature's skin. These minute hooks cause the rough sensation alluded to; and that portion of the body on which they are placed corresponds to the abdomen of the higher animals, the hooks themselves being nothing more nor less than rudimentary feet to aid the worm in its progress.

It has perhaps never occurred to you to inquire how it is, when you endeavor to draw a worm forth from the earth, that it can offer such resistance to your efforts, as almost to necessitate your tearing it in two before you can extract it, and why, as soon as you relax your hold, it disappears with such rapidity under the soil. These hooks are the cause; they are retractile at the will of the animal, and operate so as not to impede its onward progress: but when a portion of its body is once extended, and has penetrated into the soil, they keep it firmly fixed, whilst the remaining part is drawn after it by muscular contraction.

Now, is not this a simple but interesting feature in the anatomy of the worm, that should be known to every one?—yet how few, even of the best educated, are aware of its existence! How many anglers, do you think, are there, who handle their poor victim as frequently as we do our pen, and are yet unacquainted with this fact!

And as regards the Fly: you need not even quit your study or parlor to have an opportunity of witnessing a strange, and, to the masses, inexplicable phenomenon connected with the insect, namely the mode in which it walks upon the ceiling with its feet upwards, or progresses upon the smooth vertical pane of glass in your parlor window, setting at defiance a well-known law of gravitation. If you are not able to solve this mystery, ask some friend who possesses a microscope to show you the foot of a fly under the instrument, and you will find, that at its extremity it is furnished with a pair of membranous discs, on which there are disposed countless minute suckers, that operate upon the inverted ceiling, or smooth glazed surface over which the fly is marching, in the same manner as did the leather sucker with which, as a schoolboy, you were wont to amuse yourself in lifting heavy stones: this is the simple, but effective apparatus which enables the little creature to maintain its hold with security in any position.

Nay, you may even, whilst lounging lazily upon your sofa, watch some little fly that has settled upon your coat, and is busily engaged in removing the dust from its wings: you will notice with what facility it crosses its hinder legs over the wings, or raises the latter gently from beneath; and after having effected this cleansing operation, then rubs one leg against the other, to remove any particles of dust from these members also. But are you aware that for this purpose its diminutive limbs are covered with numberless hairs, by means of which the insect is enabled as efficiently to remove the dust from its wings or body, as you are from your treasured volumes or pictures with your artificial brush of similar materials?

These are two of the numerous evidences revealed to us when we examine the Fly's structure, of the care with which the insect has been endowed with organs that conform perfectly to its mode of existence; showing, that however useless and unimportant it may appear to us, and although we may regard it as a plague in our dwellings, yet every provision has been made for its comfort and safety.

Let us adduce one still more remarkable and interesting example:—

Whilst we possess only two eyes, beautiful and perfect, no doubt, in their construction, the humble Fly is furnished with about 4000 simple, but perfect organs of vision; and even this number falls far short of that in other insects. Many have been the conjectures why the insect races are thus liberally, indeed to all appearance lavishly, supplied with visual organs. We shall detail their nature and probable operation further on; but may here observe, that, so far as we are able to judge, they are the best adapted to the habits of the insect; and that the end required, namely the conveyance to the brain of a distinct image of surrounding objects, could not have been so effectually attained by any other contrivance.—The Earthworm and Housefly.

For "The Friend."

Daniel Bowly, Junr.

In "Piety Promoted" there is an interesting account of Daniel Bowly, Jun., who died in his 26th year, at Cirencester, Gloucestershire, the Ninth mo. 1793. It is stated that he possessed a good understanding and an amiable disposition; the pliability of which, together with an employment which frequently exposed him to temptation, promoted, though it did not sanction, a wide deviation in conduct from those religious principles in which he had been educated. Of this deviation he became fully sensible in the course of a long illness; which he often acknowledged to be a mercy from that divine Providence whose fatherly care had many times preserved him from sudden death when unprepared.

In the commencement of the disease, which proved to be consumption, his mind appeared to be deeply affected with the danger of his situation, though he then expressed but little of his feelings. As his weakness increased, he remarked how exceedingly awful the prospect of the final change appeared; and he earnestly desired that he might know a fitness for eternity, and that when the time came, the Divine Presence might be near. His past conduct, he said, had been very erroneous; but that his supplication for forgiveness had, in his illness, been attended with such sweet refreshment, that he hoped it might be according to his desires. At other times, his sins appeared so great that he could hardly entertain a hope it would be well with him. "What can be expected," said he, "from a death bed repentance? That is a time when all would gladly be saved. There will not probably be an opportunity given me of proving my sincerity, by an amendment of life; so that men may doubt it, but the Omniscient Being knoweth how far I am sincere, and I hope, if it is really so, I will be accepted by Him; yet there is nothing equal to a proper dedication of time in health."

Another time, he said, "I hope the Almighty will forgive my sins. It is mercy alone that can save me, who have devoted so much of my life to business, and the amusements of this world; pleasure as it is generally called; but it is a strange sort of pleasure. It is pain, I feel it pain."

One time, speaking of trade, and his gladness that he was done with it, he said, "I hope I am not hardened or insensible of my state. I have earnestly supplicated for repentance, and have experienced something like touching the hem of the garment; but not quite so neither, as that was fully efficacious; but this lasted only for a time, and I seemed again left. In the forepart of my illness, a few times I asked for recovery, if consistent with the divine will; with desires to be strengthened to lead a different life from my past; and to serve that good Master whose doctrines I have, as it were, trampled under foot; but I have since seen the favor it may be to me to be taken from such a trial."

He said also, "What a favor it is to be members of our Society! Its rules forbid nothing that is good for us. How earnestly do I wish my near connections, in particular, may keep to the Truth. Though the path may appear hard at first, yet as they follow their Leader with a single eye, it will become easy. There may be times of withdrawing of the divine presence, and then the enemy will seek to enter; but by earnest supplication, preservation will be granted, and at times a comforting foretaste of future happiness; and the prospect of getting every day nearer to such an incomprehensible reward, is a favor beyond expression." He observed how he had been struck when at places of vain amusement with a conviction that he was far more blamable than his companions, who had not so guarded an education; that however innocently some of them attended, it was not so with him.

Embracing one of his brothers with great tenderness, he desired him to attend to what he had said, which was not in his own will; but, he believed, through the Spirit of Christ, who in his unspeakable mercy had made of him such an example. He exhorted his brother and sister to endeavor to train up their children in the right way; as it is from the rising generation an advancement in Society is to be expected. He reminded them of the memorable instances in "Piety Promoted" of children from nine years old to fifteen and twenty, appearing in public testimony in meetings; and he said, he thought the care of children a great trust; but that the reward would be answerable, if rightly discharged. He recommended beginning with them as soon as their minds opened; and not plunging them into business at too early an age, remarking the preference due to religion before earthly substance.

Several friends being in his chamber, one evening, he spoke of that wonderful gift dispensed to all, even that Holy Spirit which manifests our duty; and he recommended an immediate compliance with its discoveries; "For since," said he, "these illuminations are not at our command, it is very unsafe to trifle with them by giving way to the suggestions of the enemy; but rather resign whatever may be called for: cannot we return a part to Him who gave the whole? What if it deprive us of a few luxuries? We can have but food and raiment; which only differ a little in kind between rich and poor.

He recommended that after being at meeting, and having been favored there with tender impressions of good, as he sometimes had been, great care should be taken not to lose them, by too soon entering into conversation, concerns of business, or attention to any thing of a contrary nature, whereby the mind might be deprived of the benefit intended.

"Our profession," said he, "is a very exalted one; and if we keep to it, would make us as lights in the world. Our religion teaches us to believe in immediate communication with God, through his beloved Son; which is an unspeakable privilege to all who attend to it: and wonderful condescension! that he who is Lord of all, should thus notice poor man; and time after time, be visiting with the offers of his mercy to insure our happiness; visitations we should be very careful not to reject as being a common favor, and think we will accept them at some future time. For, though the Almighty is long-forbearing and delighteth in mercy, we know not when may be the last offer of his grace to assist us in the work of salvation. What a dreadful thing would it be to withstand the last!"

Speaking of the evidence he had of his future peace, he said, "I have a clear view that I shall be received into the kingdom of rest and peace. I see the gates of heaven standing open to receive me, and thousands of the just waiting to embrace me. I desire but just to get within the p les of safety, to be in the presence of the Lord, and to behold his glorious countenance. 'O! death, where is thy sting? O! grave, where is thy victory?' Christ taketh away the sting of death. My dear Saviour is reconciled to me. I know he is. His mercy is very great, I cannot speak enough of his mercy."

Some of his relations standing by his bed side one evening, he remarked how contemptible the world appeared; and speaking of its wickedness, he said, "I would not be understood to despise the world itself. No; it is the creation of God; and we are placed there to enjoy all things with temperance. If it were as it ought to be, it would be a sort of paradise; it would be a happy pilgrimage to eternity; it is the depravity of man that makes it so detestable."

He cautioned some of his friends to beware of the fatigues and incumbrances of business, saying, "It will not do for those who have been all the week in the hurry of business to go to meetings and appear before the Lord in form only. A man whose time is wholly engrossed in business, if he goes to meetings pretty constantly and sits there two hours, yet it is to be feared his thoughts will be engaged on that which takes up the greater part of his time; and if it be so, it is great mockery of God. Neither will it do to go on in an outward show of dress or address, if not true worshippers of the Lord, in spirit and in truth. They must daily give up their minds to him, daily retire to worship him. I know a man ought to provide for his family, and carry on a proper business, which I believe to be right; but it should by no means be the first object, for riches will be nothing in the end. * * * I am now upon the brink of death to the body, but opening into the life of the spirit. I am going to live forever, and I am certain nothing will do but giving up every earthly obstruction for the cause of God. Make him a sacrifice; offer up all you have; offer up your lives to him as Christ did his for your sakes and mine."

He was naturally of a compassionate disposition; and during his illness, often spoke feelingly of the poor, recommending liberality to them; which, he said, he had seen to be a Christian duty; and how much greater satisfaction would result from relieving their wants, than from unnecessarily accumulating wealth.

On the first of Ninth month he said, "The state that I expect to enter is that of calmness, and peace; divine peace, the purest spirituality. When I have spoken of gates or doors, I wished to imply an entrance into this state; for I believe my ideas of future happiness are not gross. I hope to live in the presence of God, and to feel constant support from him; and I do not wish to know more.

As the solemn close drew nigh he was preserved in a patient, resigned, waiting state, and expressed but little for several days, but his company was truly pleasant, and his deportment evinced where his mind was centred. The last day of his life his voice became so weak as to be nearly inaudible, and but little that he attempted to express could be understood; but he continued in a heavenly frame of mind, full of love. The last connected sentence which was distinctly heard was this: "I have the satisfaction to say, I have been washed in Jordan." Not long after this, he appeared to be retiring to sleep; but in reality he was quietly departing, without even a sigh.

A Strange Scene in a Court of Justice.—Many of us remember the story told by Prof. Wilson, in his own tender and vivid way, of the two hostile Highland brothers, William and Stephen, reconciled at their father's grave. In a city no further from home than Bridgeport, Conn., a recent trial for assault and battery was made memorable by an incident almost equally worthy of Wilson's pen, and we wish we could see it described as he would describe it. Two brothers named Adams, residents of Westport, who had lived on bad terms with each other several years, finally came to blows. Both made complaint before a trial justice, and both were convicted of breach of the peace. Dissatisfied with this, they appealed, and at the next session of the Supreme Court the jury failed to agree in the case of one, but found the other guilty. Judge Foster, grieved as a man at the spectacle of two warring brothers, and humanely anxious to stop further litigation in the future between them, called the men before him and talked to them in a strain of serious but kind reproof. He briefly reviewed their difficulty, and showed the absurdity of their quarrel, and then appealed to their self-respect, their relationship, and their sense of moral responsibility, to let this unnatural enmity go on no longer.

"M., you claim you have always used your brother well?" questioned the judge.

"Yes, sir."

"And he has always abused you?"

"Yes, sir."

"B., you claim that you have always used your brother well?"

"Yes, sir."

"And he has always abused you?"

"Yes, sir."

"See," continued the judge, "you are both to blame, and no jury can decide which of you is the worse."

Then he warned them solemnly, and even tenderly, of the folly of doing as they had done, and charged them by all they held sacred never to go to law on any difference again. He painted to them the beauty of harmony and peace, and urged them then and there to pledge friendship and brotherly kindness for all coming time.

Gravely, as if reading a printed covenant, he pronounced the words, "You, M. Adams, do promise on your part that you will be friends in future with your brother?"

"I will," said M., earnestly.

"You, B. Adams, do promise on your part, that you will be friends in future with your brother?"

"I will," said B., with equal earnestness. "Then shake hands!" said the judge; and as the softened brothers grasped each other's hand, the spectators and members of the bar, already thrilled by the words they had heard, felt their eyes moisten and their hearts swell.

Judge Foster himself was deeply affected when the offenders both audibly invoked God's blessing on their reconciliation, and his voice trembled as he said to the convicted one, "Then I impose on you the lightest sentence of the law, a fine of one dollar, and I discharge your bond."

Is it too much to say that of all present at that remarkable scene none went away who were not better for having witnessed it?—Watchman and Reflector.

Selected.

HAST THOU A CARE?

Hast thou a care whose pressure dread
Expels sweet slumber from thy bed?
To thy Redeemer take that care,
And change anxiety to prayer.

Hast thou a hope from which thy heart
Would feel it almost death to part?
Entreat the Lord that hope to crown,
Or give thee strength to lay it down.

Hast thou a friend whose image dear
May prove an idol worshipped here?
Implore the Lord that naught may be
A shadow between Heaven and thee.

Whate'er the care that breaks thy rest,
Whate'er the wish that swells thy breast,
Spread before God that wish, that care,
And change anxiety to prayer.

Selected.

THE CROOKED-NECKED GOURD.

BY SIDNEY DYER.

The rich and the noble may spurn aught but gold,
And drink, for their pleasure, the choicest of wine;
Or else, for a goblet their dainties to hold,
May seek for the ore of Potosi's rich mine;
But ne'er to my lips will aught taste half so sweet,
From golden or silver or crystal, when poured,
As the cool, sparkling drops which my thirsty lips meet
Just dipped from the spring with the crooked-necked gourd.

The banqueting-hall may its riches display,
And thousands attract to its pleasures again;
Its visions of lightness will soon pass away,
And naught but a sense of deception remain;
But the innocent joys which the heart often felt,
With memory's bright pictures are carefully stored;
And oft we revert to the time when we knelt,
And dipped the cool draught with the crooked-necked gourd.

The silver and gold may be pure to the lips,
No taint to the bright, flowing liquid impart;
While the emblem of truth from the beaker one sips,
A stain of pollution is left on the heart;
But hung by a string to the moss-covered wall,
A truth and a pleasure 'twill always afford;
Be humble, be useful, to one and to all,
Is the lesson we learn from the crooked-necked gourd.

Lake Titicaca—This is the most singular and interesting lake in the world. Situated on the crest of the Andes, it is the highest large body of fresh water; and as concurrent traditions point to it as the spot where Manco Capac, the first Inca, appeared and woke the aboriginal tribes from their long sleep of barbarism and ignorance, it is the historic centre of South America. Humboldt called it the theatre of the earliest American civilization. On an island within it are the imposing ruins of the temple of the sun, and all around it are monuments which attest the skill and magnificence of the Incas. There are also, as at Tiahuanaco and Salustani, the remains of burial towers and palaces, which date back further than the days of the Incas. Lake Titicaca is about the size of our Ontario, shallow to the west and north, deep toward the east and south. The eastern or Bolivian shore being backed by the lofty range of Sorata, is very high and precipitous. The lake never freezes over, although the temperature of Puno is often 18 deg. at sunrise. Two little steamers of 100 tons each do a trifling business. Steam is generated by llama dung, the only fuel of the country; for there are no trees within 150 miles. The steamers actually cost their weight in silver; for their transportation (in pieces) from the coast cost as much as the original price. A steamboat company has just asked from Bolivia the exclusive privilege of navigating Titicaca and the Rio Desaguadero to Logo Pampa, with a guarantee of six per cent. cost on the capital and a share in all new mines discovered. Professor Orton, the latest traveller in that region, calls attention to the fact that Lake Titicaca is not so high as usually given in geographical works by about 300 feet. Its true altitude is 12,493 feet, and in the dry season it is four feet less. This fact has been revealed by the consecutive levellings made in building the Arequipa Railway, just finished, which reaches from the Pacific to Lake Titicaca.—Sci. American.

Selected.

It appears to me a matter of essential importance, that in connexions of marriage there should be similarity of view and union of heart and of mind, on the lesser, as well as on the greater points of christian faith and practice. To walk in the same path, to partake of the same refreshment, to be united in the same objects, to have one mind with regard to their families and households, to be enabled to strengthen one another's hands in their daily walk in life,—must greatly tend to their domestic happiness and good. This complete union, therefore, should be earnestly desired in this most close and near connexion, and it must be considered a great risk and very imprudent, to enter upon it without this accordance.

Press Carrier Pigeons.—One of the most curious incidents connected with modern journalism is the regular employment of Carrier Pigeons in collecting intelligence for the daily and weekly newspapers. In the competitive exertions to procure the "Latest Intelligence," it has been found that for short distances newspaper reports can be sent readier, cheaper and quicker by Press Carrier Pigeons, flying a mile per minute, than by the Postal Telegraph. These aërial postmen are intrusted to resident correspondents in various places, ready to be despatched at any moment, whilst others are sent out by reporters to places where important events are transpiring. It is now no uncommon thing to see reporters at police-courts, inquests, public meetings, &c., despatch folio after folio of "copy" by Press Carrier Pigeons tossed through the nearest window, or thrown out of a train or steamer going at full speed. The attachment of these birds to the place of their birth, and their ability to find their homes from marvellous distances, are, of course, their distinguishing characteristics. A "columbier," or home, is established at the various newspaper offices, and whenever a bird arrives with a message, the act of the pigeon entering its cot sets a call-bell ringing in the editor's room, the bell machinery continuing in motion until attended to. Being expressly bred for Press purposes —conveying news to our great cities—they are not the pure Carrier Pigeon (which is larger, heavier, and slower on the wing, and not so well adapted for Press purposes;) but are of a special pedigree, bred by Hartley & Sons, of the Woolwich Gazette, Woolwich, from prize birds imported from the best lofts of ntwerp. Brussels, and Liege. Press Carrier geons, though as a rule only used for short stances, in competition with the electric tele- aph. can be specially trained to distances of 0 miles, and frequently fly to England from ublin, Brussels, Paris, Lisbon, and even ome.—English Paper.

For "The Friend."

Indian Affairs.

(Continued from page 414, vol. xlvii.)

"The efforts which were made by the Peace ommissioners in 1867 to conclude treaties ith the Indian tribes of the Western plains ere resumed and continued through the ring and summer of 1868. The three trea- s made in 1867 with the Arrapahoes, Chey- nes, Kiowas, Camanches, and Apaches, at edicine Lodge, were formally ratified and roclaimed on the part of the Government of he United States; and those made with the ottowattomies, Sacs, Foxes, and other tribes Kansas, with the view of removing them the reservations south of that State, have nce been finally acted on by the Senate. A reaty was concluded on the 2nd of March, at ashington, by Commissioner Taylor and he Governor of Colorado, with the several nds of the Ute Indians, the object of which as the removal of those savages from the ttled portions of New Mexico and Colorado a large reservation in the latter Territory, nd the establishment of two agencies among em on that reservation. In May, treaties ere concluded by the Peace Commissioner ith the Brulé, Sioux, Crows, northern Arra- ahoes, and Cheyennes, and the Ogallalla ioux. These were followed by similar com- acts in the month of June with the Osages, hippewas, and Navajoes; so that nearly all he tribes had, before midsummer, signed writ- en agreements which bound them to keep eace with the subjects and authorities of the nited States.

The principal object of these treaties with he Indians has been to induce them to for- ear from all attacks upon the persons and roperty of the whites, and to suffer them- elves to be removed to reservations of land ecured to their exclusive use and occupation y the Government of the United States. he Government stipulates to bear the ex- ense of their removal and to furnish them ith the means of education and civilization, roviding for their subsistence until they shall e able by their own industry to provide for hemselves. Agricultural implements, seed, attle, mechanical tools, &c., are among the rticles to be supplied them through the agents f the Government, the hope of the Govern- ent being to reduce them in time to the con- lition of farmers, and herdsmen, and mechan- cs, in which they may be able to maintain hemselves in the pursuits of peace. The two rincipal reservations upon which it is pro- osed to gather them are, the region north of he State of Nebraska, and west of the Mis- souri River, and a wide tract west of the State f Arkansas, and south of Kansas. The Osages, by their treaty of May 27th, agreed o sell 8,000,000 acres of land in the State of Kansas for $1,600,000 to the Leavenworth, Lawrence, and Galveston Railroad Company, nd promised to remove to the Indian country south of Kansas.

One cause of complaint with the Northern Indians, in 1867, had been the establishment f the river route to Montana through the best hunting-grounds of the Sioux, in viola- tion of an old treaty, which they claimed had guaranteed that region to them forever. As the construction of the Union Pacific Rail- road to the west of the Black Hills opened a better line of travel to Montana on that side of the mountains, the wishes of the Indians were complied with, and, on the 2d of March, General Grant gave orders for breaking up the military posts of Forts Reno, Philip Kear- ney, and C. F. Smith, and the withdrawal of all troops and stores from that region.

The military Division of the Missouri re- mained unchanged, under the command of General Sherman. It embraced substantially the country west of the Mississippi River to the Rocky Mountains, and was divided into the three Departments of Missouri, Platte, and Dacotah, commanded respectively by Generals P. H. Sheridan, C. C. Auger, and A. H. Terry. The duty of conducting the Indians to their reservations and disbursing the funds appropriated for the purpose of es- tablishing them in their new life devolved on General Sherman and his subordinates. The order of General Sherman directing the mode of accomplishing this object contains so much information regarding the disposal to be made of the various tribes, that it is given here.

General Order, No. 34.

Headq'rs Military Division of the Missouri,
St. Louis, Mo., August 18, 1868.

Certain duties connected with Indian dis- bursements having been devolved upon the Lieutenant-General commanding, by law, in connection with his military command, and in order that the same may be conducted in full harmony with the military interests of the frontier, the following orders are made:

1. Commanders of departments, districts and posts, charged with the peace and police of the frontier, will construe themselves so far the agents of the "Plains Indians" as to af- ford them temporary support to conduct them to their reservations, hereinafter named, and to report to their immediate superiors all matters requiring their notice. No supplies or presents of any sort will be made by mili- tary commanders to Indians outside of their reservations, except for special services ren- dered, unless the Indians be actually in dis- tress, and en route to their proper homes.

When Indians are on reservations with civil- ian agents actually present with them, no interferences will be made, but military com- manders may note any neglects or irregulari- ties on the part of said Indians or their agents, and will report the same for the information of the Government.

2. The following district of country is set aside for the exclusive use of the Sioux nation of Indians, viz: Bounded east by the Missouri River, south by the State of Nebraska, west by the one hundred and fourth meridian of longitude west from Greenwich, and north by the forty-sixth parallel of latitude, and will constitute a military district under the com- mand of Brevet Major-General W. S. Harney, United States Army, who will have the super- vision and control of the Sioux, and of all issues and disbursements to them, subject only to the authority of the Lieutenant-Gene- ral commanding; but, in matters affecting the United States troops stationed in said district, he will be subject to the department comman- der, Brevet Major-General A. H. Terry.

3. In like manner the country bounded east by the State of Arkansas, south by Texas, north by Kansas, and west by the one hun- dredth meridian of longitude, west from Green- wich, is set apart for the exclusive use of the Cheyennes, Arrapahoes, Kiowas, and Caman- ches, and such other bands as are now or may hereafter be therein located by proper au- thority, and will constitute a military district, under command of Brevet Major-General W. B. Hazen, United States Army, who will have the supervision and control of all issues and disbursements to said Indians, subject only to the authority of the Lieutenant-General com- manding, but, in matters affecting the troops stationed in said district, subject to Depart- ment Commander Major-General P. H. Sheri- dan."

(To be continued.)

For "The Friend."

The following extract from John Fother- gill's Journal may not only serve to show that early Friends avoided the changeable fashions in dress by wearing a style peculiar to themselves, but that the youth had their temptations to shun the cross in those times as well as at present; also that the faithful believed they were directed in this, as in all their christian practices by the unerring spirit of Truth. That our young men might yield their hearts to the teaching, baptizing and crucifying power of this same blessed spirit of the Lord Jesus Christ is no doubt the desire of many in our Society. Then would you be as plants grown up in your youth. But if you turn away from the reproofs of instruc- tion which are the way of life, the time may come when you will not endure sound doc- trine, and your minds be turned to fables which cannot establish you in grace. Thus the Divine will concerning you will be frus- trated, both as to your own welfare and the increase of the Lord's kingdom in the earth, through your working together with Him.

J. Fothergill was born in the year 1676. He says: "When I was about twelve or thir- teen years of age, which was after my moth- er's decease, a strong inclination took place in me to have a coat made with some more resemblance of the mode or fashion of the time, than in the plain manner which I had, with other Friends used, and I prevailed upon my father to grant it; but I was made uneasy with it, almost at the first wearing it, and the more so in using it, feeling the certain re- proofs of the Spirit of Truth, for leaning to and joining with the vain and restless flesh- pleasing spirit of the world, and turning from the steady plainness of the unchangeable Truth. I was indisputably satisfied that the enemy of all good worked in the earthly af- fections of those wherein he could get place, to draw out the mind at times, of the youth especially, after the unsteady corruptions of the depraved world in its changeable and vain fashions in dress and clothing, in order to lead into the broad way, and by degrees into the wide world, one step making way for another. On the other hand I was in measure then, and have been since, more immovably assured that the light of the gospel-day, the Spirit of Truth, doth appear against and reprove the very conception of such vain desires and in- clinations, and would lead and preserve out of them, if people did but attend thereto, and labor honestly to bear the cross of Christ in this respect. This, as it has done before our age, hath also in our time, blessed be the name of the Lord therefor, saith my soul, crucified many to the world's spirit and ways, in these enticing and adulterating fashions as well as to others of its evils. Oh! well would it be, (and for this end hath it been with me to mention it,) if the youth would duly consider these things, and learn to bear the yoke of Christ in their tender age, while they are teachable and innocent; before many wrong liberties harden the mind and darken the understanding, and embolden in a disregard to that one ever-blessed spirit in the heart which only doth and ever must lead man to God and true godliness."

For "The Friend."

Scientific Notes.

Nevada has been for the last ten years the richest silver-producing country in the world. The mines are in a small strip of land 660 yards broad, and about three miles long.

Mushrooms.—A correspondent of the Gardener's Chronicle, gives a curious instance of the penetrating power of the mushroom. "I observed," he says, "a few days ago, in our mushroom-house, with considerable interest, and I may say with surprise, the penetrating power of mushroom spawn. One side of the bed is of brick, 4½ inches thick, firmly set in hard lime, so close in the texture that it is impossible to introduce the point of a nail without considerable force. Nevertheless, the mycelium [the thread-like spawn] found admission, and produced mushrooms of a considerable size on the outer side. The wall in several places contains porous bricks, and there, too, the mycelium found its way right through."

Phosphate of Lime.—An enormous deposit of this valuable mineral has been discovered near Caen, in France.

Antidotes for Poisons.—For Alkaloids, such as morphine, quinine, &c.—emetics and the stomach pump. Astringent liquids, such as tannic acid, may be administered.

For Antimony (tartar emetic, &c.:) Any form of tannic acid (infusion of tea, nut galls, oak bark, &c.) The stomach pump must be applied.

For Arsenic: A mixture of per-chloride of iron with carbonate of soda. Emetics and the stomach pump.

For Copper: Iron-filings. The white of eggs.

For Prussic Acid, Cyanide of Potassium, &c.: A mixture of copperas, per-chloride of iron, and magnesia or carbonate of soda.

For Lead: A solution of epsom salts or alum, and induce vomiting.

For Mercury (Corosive Sublimate, &c.:) The whites of eggs.

For Oxalic Acid: Chalk and water, and emetics.

For Zinc: Carbonate of Soda in solution, followed by whites of eggs.

Moles.—Flourens, and other French naturalists, have experimented with moles to ascertain their true habits. It has been found that they will starve to death in presence of abundant vegetable food, refusing to touch it, but that they will speedily devour cut worms, earth worms, mice, and even small birds, when nearly starving in an enclosed jar. Of the birds they only devoured the inside, but they devoured indiscriminately their own weight each day of snails, insects, larvæ, crysalides, caterpillars, worms, &c. Carl Vogt relates an instance of a land proprietor in France who destroyed every mole upon his property. The next season his fields were ravaged with cut worms, and his crops totally destroyed. He then purchased moles of his neighbors and stocked his fields, and afterwards carefully preserved them as his best friends.

Diseased Milk.—Chauveau, a French investigator, recently made some experiments by feeding healthy calves with milk from cows suffering with tubercular disease. After sixty days feeding the calves were slaughtered. They were found to have become seriously diseased, numerous tubercles were detected throughout the lymphatic system, and the lungs contained caseous deposits. Similar investigations made by Dr. Klebs, a German physician, have led to the same results. He concludes that the infection first attacks the intestines, then the liver and spleen, and finally the lungs. Vigorous animals may resist the infection or overcome its effect, but the virus is contained in the milk of diseased cows in proportion to their condition. Scrofula is thus communicated to a healthy animal by a diseased nurse. The virus is contained in the serum of the milk, and is not destroyed by boiling.

Potato-rot.—The injury to the potato crop in England from the disease which latterly infested it, has been so great that agriculturists there have been devising means of protection for this valuable tuber. Shirby Hibberd, who has been a successful cultivator, has suggested more thorough drainage and increased warmth. These results he has endeavored to obtain by laying on the hard ground a flat tile, on this he places the potato sets, and heaps the earth over them. He thus secures a stratum of air underneath the potato plant; the results of his experiments have been favorable to his theory. He considers the climate of England to be much cooler and damper than the original home of the potato-plant. The warmer and drier seasons in the British Isles are those best adapted for its successful cultivation. In Peru, the native place of the potato, the mean annual temperature is 72°, with but a comparatively small difference between the highest heat and the greatest cold. At Chiswick, in England, the mean temperature of the five growing months for the last fifty years, was a little over 59°. In 1860, when the potato crop was nearly destroyed, the mean temperature was only 55.63°, and the amount of rain was unusually large.

In illustrating the effects of nervous irritation upon the brain, Dr. Brown Sequard mentions the case of a boy in London, who, in getting out of bed in the morning, was seized with violent convulsions, and an acute attack of mania. On putting him to bed again the morbid symptoms disappeared. Three times this phenomenon was observed, and when the surgeon examined him, the boy told him while fishing, a piece of glass had penetrated beneath the nail of his great toe. By pressing on the skin near the nail, the boy had a recurrence of the symptoms, but after the surgeon had cut away a piece of the flesh, the convulsions ceased.

Affluence appears to me a trial, as well as discouraging outward prospects; but a trial of a different nature, that is, of our fidelity as stewards of the mercies of God, to whom we are all to be accountable for the discharge of the trust he hath invested us with, that we consume them not upon our lusts, as if that was our own, which is given us to do good with, and be helpful to others who may stand in need. As the sunshine of prosperity is apt to lift men up too high into a state of inconsiderateness and dissipation, I have thought it a trial, whereby we are under greater danger and temptation; and have a greater cross to take up to be what we ought to be, than in humbler stations.—Memoirs of James Gough.

A Curious Product of the Sierras.—One of the grandest objects, says the San Francisco Bulletin, which meets the eye of the traveller in our mountains is the exquisite plant, the snow plant of the Sierras—the Sarcodes Sanguinea of John Torrey, the botanist. It is an inhabitant only of the higher Sierras, being rarely found below an altitude of 4,000 feet. Its glorious crimson spike of flowers may be seen early in May forcing itself through the snows which at that period cling about the sides of our pine forests. The portion of the plant which is visible above the soil is a bright rosy crimson in color, and presents the very strongest contrast to the dark green of the pines and the shimmer of the snow. Its root is succulent, thick, and abundantly free of moisture, attaching itself to the roots of other plants, principally to the species of the pine family. Hence it is among those curious members of the vegetable world which are known to botanists as parasites, and is consequently entirely incapable of cultivation. The deer are extremely fond of it, and it is not an uncommon circumstance to find a number of the plants uprooted and robbed of the fleshy part of their underground growth by these animals. It belongs to the natural order Orobanchacea, and is met with through the whole of the Sierra region, becoming rarer as we approach the south.

Models of Prayer.—We have been interested in looking through the Scriptures for the purpose of comparing the prayers therein recorded with those which we hear from time to time in public, and we are astonished to see how they differ in point, expression, directness, and, above all, in length, from those heard in these days in the christian pulpit. It is not exaggeration to say that we have listened to a single prayer longer than the whole ten that we find in the bible put together. The first is in Genesis xxiv, 12-14, and contains one hundred and ten words, and it is not more than one minute in length. The next is Exodus xxxiii, 12-15, and contains one hundred and eleven words, and is not over a minute longer. The third is in Joshua vii, 7-9, and contains ninety words. The fourth is in 2 Kings, xix, 15 16, the prayer of Hezekiah; it is composed of one hundred and thirty-four words, and two minutes would be ample time to repeat it. Another is found in Nehemiah i, 5-11, and is about two minutes in length; another is in Ezra ix, 6-15, and is about three minutes long; another is in 1 Kings viii, 23-61, an important dedicatory prayer, offered by Solomon himself at the dedication of the temple, and it did not occupy more than six minutes; while that of Daniel ix, 11-19, was probably four minutes long. In the New Testament, the prayer of our Saviour (John xvii,) is well known; it is contained in twenty-six verses, and is five minutes long, while the model prayer—the Lord's Prayer—is far briefer still. Now here are ten prayers, from those who certainly knew how to pray, and they are all less than thirty-five minutes long, or an average of three minutes each; and yet we sometimes hear men pray thirty and forty minutes, and after wandering all over the moral universe, and wearying their fellow worshippers with vain repetitions, utterly fail of the prime object of all public prayer—to lift up the hearts of men to commune with heaven.—Gospel Banner.

THE FRIEND.

EIGHTH MONTH 22, 1874.

With this number the 48th volume of "The Friend" commences. Nearly forty-seven years have completed their course since this Journal was established. Many who are now actively engaged on the stage of life, and are even conscious of having passed its meridian, were unborn, or in their cradles when the first number was issued. Great have been the changes and improvements which have taken place in the material world around us during the period which has thus elapsed, as is evidenced by the number of important inventions and appliances in the sciences and arts, tending to the comfort and convenience of mankind. One paragraph in the first number, dated 10th mo. 13th, 1827, alludes to the beginning of the Pennsylvania canal system by the opening of work on the Delaware River branch, at Bristol. Railroads and locomotives were then unknown, and letter postage was so expensive as to debar frequent epistolary intercourse. Mineral coal for fuel, gas-lights, electric telegraphs, fast-printing presses, friction-matches, and a vast number of minor inventions which enter so largely into our daily comfort and convenience were yet to be discovered or utilized, so that the following language contained in the prospectus of this Journal, can now be adopted as even more truly descriptive of the present times: "At no former period has the human intellect been so intensely and variously occupied. We can scarcely turn our eyes to a corner of nature, respecting which during the last thirty years, there has not been some important discovery."

Among other things set forth in the prospectus, is the desire that the paper may become a fire side companion for Friends throughout the country, free from the impure literature which abounds in many periodicals. This has been a leading concern, we believe, to the present time, with those who have had charge of its management. How many boys and girls have found the old volumes an ever ready and delightful resource on long winter evenings, and a pure means of instruction on First-day afternoons. Whilst thousands have welcomed the weekly visitor as a link that connected them with our beloved community, and stimulated good resolutions.

Perhaps the primary object, however, in the institution of "The Friend," was that of affording a medium for the advocacy of the Christian views held by our religious Society, and resisting the encroachments of unsound doctrines or laxity in practice among its members. The secession of 1827 had been preceded for years by heterodox teachings on the part of some prominent members of the Society; and these had produced their usual fruit of disunity and division. The columns of "The Friend" for several years after its origin, were much occupied with the exhibition of the truth respecting the separation which was developed by the sentiments of Elias Hicks; and the Contributors have felt it to be their duty in later years, to combat errors of different forms as they have appeared in our beloved Society. This conscientious concern has doubtless given the periodical a controversial tone, which some readers may look upon as unnecessary or excessive. We think, however, that a careful observer of religious bodies and associations of men, will discover, that there is a constant tendency in most of them to a lapse from the strictness of first principles and to worldly compliance. This requires on the part of faithful and clear-sighted members, a jealous care lest these principles should be modified or lost sight of. They feel the necessity of often bringing them to view, and of inciting their fellow-members to a manner of life consistent therewith. In the primitive Christian Church, the apostle foreshadowed this tendency, in his memorable exhortation to the Ephesian elders, when about to depart from Miletus for Jerusalem. "For I know this, that after my departing shall grievous wolves enter in among you, not sparing the flock. Also of your ownselves shall men arise, speaking perverse things to draw away disciples after them. Therefore watch and remember, that by the space of three years, I ceased not to warn every one, night and day, with tears."

The very birth of the Society of Friends was the result of a remarkable extension of Divine love, bringing back to pristine purity and primitive Christianity, such as Paul practised and taught; and it was to be anticipated that the same liability to swerve from this high standard, as existed in his days, would manifest itself in our borders. Nothing but watchfulness and vigilance against the wiles of an unwearied adversary, and being clad at all times in the Christian's armor, can preserve us as individuals, or in a corporate capacity. Therefore it is, that those who heretofore have conducted "The Friend," have felt it a duty from which they could not shrink, to warn their readers against both right and left hand errors. Whatever weakness and imperfection may have been shown in the discharge of this important service, we ask that their efforts be viewed in the light of the motive which has influenced them—that of preserving intact the faith and practices of our forefathers in the Truth.

We commence the new volume with a renewed desire that best Wisdom may be vouchsafed to guide aright in the important trust, and that neither party-spirit nor self-righteousness may be exalted, but the Truth as it is in Jesus: and that clothed with that charity which suffereth long, and is kind, we might be instrumental in building again the waste places in our Zion, and restoring the ancient paths.

The literary contributions of concerned Friends are a valuable aid, and we would invite our readers to furnish us with original articles freely. There has been for several years, a steady increase in the number of subscribers to this Journal, which is a source of encouragement to those on whom devolves the labor of its weekly preparation. "The Friend" is no source of pecuniary profit to any one connected with its editorship; and the small sum of $2 per annum, charged for it, barely covers the cost of publication. This gives us freedom to urge upon Friends who believe it to be useful, to use efforts to extend its circulation into new channels in our Society, as opportunity may offer for it. The influence on the mind of a periodical of this kind, coming weekly into the family, is very considerable. Religious truths are presented to view in various aspects, as they arrest the attention of minds whose mental constitution is different. Thus there is a probability that all the members of a household may find food adapted to their condition. And outside of our own Yearly Meeting, we believe its tendency will be to remove those prejudices which spring from want of knowledge, to bind the honest-hearted lovers of ancient Quakerism, wherever located, more closely together, and to encourage them in their efforts to uphold those principles and practices which our early Friends maintained to be but "Primitive Christianity revived."

SUMMARY OF EVENTS.

FOREIGN.—Marshal Bazaine has escaped from his imprisonment on the island of St. Marguerite, on the south coast of France. He left, it is stated, in the following manner. The apartments occupied by Bazaine opened on a terrace which was built on a lofty and precipitous cliff overhanging the sea. A sentry was posted on the terrace, with orders to watch the prisoner's every movement.

On the evening of the 9th inst. he walked upon the terrace with Col. Villette, the aid-de-camp. At 10 o'clock he retired as usual, apparently to sleep, but before daybreak he had effected his escape. He must have crossed the terrace in the dead of night, and eluding the sentinel, gained the edge of the precipice, and thence by means of a knotted rope descended to the sea. He evidently slipped during the descent, and tore his hands, as the rope was found stained with blood in several places.

Under the cliff, in a hired boat, were Bazaine's wife and one other person. They received him as he reached the water; and his wife, taking the oars herself, rowed directly to a strange steamer which had been lying off the island since the previous evening. They reached the steamer in safety, were taken on board, and the vessel put to sea. The steamer proceeded in the direction of Genoa, and the fugitive was probably landed there. On the 15th Bazaine was at Cologne, where he intended to remain a few days awaiting the arrival of his children. He declares that only his wife and brother-in-law assisted him to escape.

An election to fill a vacancy in the French Assembly was held in the department of Calvados, the 16th inst. The Bonapartist candidate for the Assembly was elected. More votes were given for him than for the Republican and Legitimist united.

Count Jarnac has been appointed Minister of France to England. The Prefect of Florence has issued a decree dissolving thirty-six Republican and International Societies in that city.

A Madrid dispatch says, that the Spanish government has thanked Germany for taking the initiative in the movement for recognition.

The Spanish Republic has been formally acknowledged as one of the established governments of Europe, by France, Great Britain, Italy, Austria, Germany, Belgium, Holland, and other powers. The Pall Mall Gazette says that Russia hesitates to recognize Spain, because such action will strengthen the cause of republicanism in Europe.

The recent military operations against the Carlists have been more successful. Vittoria, which was besieged by them, has been relieved, and the garrison reinforced and provisioned. General Blanco captured 20 cannon from the Carlists, who retired to Estella. The Spanish forces returned to Miranda after relieving Vittoria, in order to check a threatened movement of the Carlists in another direction. They made an attempt to cross the Elro, which was foiled by the vigilance of the government forces.

General Moriones reports to Madrid that the Carlists lost seven hundred men in an engagement at Oteiza, in Navarre.

The Spanish representative at Paris has applied to Madrid for full credentials as Minister, France having recognized the Spanish republic.

France will send an ambassador to Spain as soon as the Spanish representative in Paris receives his credentials as Minister.

A ministerial decree, embodying regulations for the execution of the decree for the abolition of slavery in Porto Rico, was published in Madrid the 14th inst.

Heavy rains have fallen in England recently. The Mark Lane Express, in its review of the breadstuffs market, has the following in regard to the wheat crop: "We are now at the middle of the harvest, and the new wheat shows nothing to indicate more than the average quality and growth, although some of it shows more than the average ripeness. Some of our cotemporaries say that the crop will be two-thirds above the average, others one-third, and others about the average; while some think that it will be below the average. An immense amount of wheat is yet unharvested, and an increase of rain would be serious. There is great diversity of opinion about the crops in France and Belgium." In closing its review the Express says: "We do not see how the price of wheat can be much depressed."

The total number of accidents on English railways for the year 1873, was 247. The whole number of persons killed was 1372, and injured 3110.

The total number of emigrants from Ireland in the first six months of the present year was 45,781, of whom 25,163 were males and 20,617 females. As compared with the corresponding period of 1873, there was a decrease of 14,359. The returns just compiled by the emigration officials at Liverpool show that the emigration from that port during the year ending 6th mo. 30th last, was 49,357 less than in the previous year.

London, 8th mo. 17th.—U. States 5 per cent bonds, 103¾. The rate of discount on commercial bills in the open market is 3⅝ per cent, which is ⅜ below the Bank of England rate.

Liverpool.—Uplands cotton, 8¼ a 8⅜*d.*; Orleans, 8¾ a 8⅞*d.*

United States.—There were 722 deaths in New York city last week.

In Philadelphia the interments numbered 361, including 165 children under two years. There were 50 deaths by cholera infantum.

There are at present about 40 establishments in the United States in which india rubber fabrics are made. They give employment to nearly 12,000 men, women and children, and represent a capital of about $13,000,000.

Commenting on the proposed reciprocity treaty with Canada, the Pall Mall Gazette says that "it may fairly be argued that the United States give up too little and demand too much; and the point for England, or rather for Canada, to settle is simply whether the gain by way of free trade is great enough to outweigh the loss in the abandonment of monopolies in fishing rights and canal navigation."

Another of those frightful railroad accidents which arise from carelessness and forgetfulness, occurred the 15th inst., near Cornwall's Station, Pa., to an excursion train from Norristown, bound for New York Bay. A misplaced switch brought the excursion train in collision with a long coal train, and two of the cars of the excursionists were, with the locomotive, demolished. Four persons were killed and about twenty injured. The excursion party of 565 persons came down the Reading Railroad, changed to the connecting railroad, and by that was to have gone to New York Bay on the Philadelphia and Trenton line.

Francis A. Walker, recently United States Commissioner of Indian Affairs, estimates the total number of Indians remaining in the United States at 300,000, excluding those in Alaska, of whom 32,500 are east of the Mississippi; 70,500 in Nebraska, Kansas and the Indian Territory; 65,000 in Dakota, Montana, Wyoming and Idaho; 84,000 in New Mexico, Utah and Arizona, and 48,000 on the Pacific slope. About 130,000 support themselves on their reservations, with some interest or annuities from the United States, and 115,000 are wholly or partially supported by the government; 55,000 by begging, stealing, hunting and fishing; 150,000 remain on their reservations; 95,000 roam. Again, 180,000 have treaties with the government; 40,000 have none but have reservations; 25,000 receive aid, but have no reservations, and 50,000 of all are wild. Walker classes 97,000 as civilized; 120,000 semi-civilized, and 78,000 as barbarous.

It is stated in the Engineer that in the space of thirty three years since the steamship President left New York, in the Third mo. 1841, never again to be heard of, and leaving no trace of her fate, no fewer than fifty-five steamers, including West India mail ships while on their passage across the Atlantic, have been utterly destroyed.

The Markets, &c.—The following were the quotations on the 17th inst. New York.—American gold, 109½. U. S. sixes, 1881, registered, 117¼; do. coupons, 118¼; do. 1868, registered, 116; do. coupon, 117⅛; do 10-40 5 per cents, registered, 110⅜; do. coupons, 113¾. Superfine flour, $4.90 a $5.20; State extra, $5.50 a $6; finer brands, $6.50 a $10.75. No. 1 Chicago spring wheat, $1.31; No. 2 do., $1.24; white Michigan, $1.43 a $1.45; white Genesee, $1.40. New Ohio mixed oats, 45 a 47 cts.; white, 50 a 54 cts. Rye, 93 cts. Yellow corn, 82 cts.; white, 95 cts. Philadelphia.—Middling cotton, 17⅛ a 17⅜ cts. Superfine flour, (of spring wheat) $3.62; extras, $4.50 a $5.25; finer brands, $6 a $8.50. Amber wheat, $1.35; red, $1.25 a $1.33. Rye, 88 cts. Yellow corn, 83 a 84 cts. Oats, 50 a 54 cts. Clover-seed, 10 a 11½ cts. The receipts of beef cattle reached 3800 head, and sales were made between the range of 3¾ cts. per lb. gross, and 7⅞ cts. Sheep sold at 4½ a 5¾ cts. per lb. gross. Receipts, 17,000 head. Corn fed hogs, $11.50 a $12.75 per 100 lbs. net. Receipts 4500 head. Chicago.—No. 1 spring wheat, $1.07½; No. 2 do., $1.02½; No. 3 do., 98 cts. No. 2 corn, 65 cts. No. 2 oats, 37½ cts. No. 2 spring barley, 93 a 95 cts. Lard, 14½ cts. Baltimore.—Amber wheat, $1.42 a $1.45; good to prime red, $1.35 a $1.40; western red, $1.28 a $1.30. Southern white corn, 92 a 93 cts.; yellow, 81 a 82 cts. Oats, 47 a 52 cts. Sugar cured hams, 16½ a 17½ cts. Lard, 14¾ a 15 cts.

WESTTOWN BOARDING SCHOOL.

A Stated Meeting of the Committee on Instruction, is to be held on Seventh-day morning, the 22nd inst., at 10 o'clock, at the usual place.

Charles J. Allen,
Philada. 8th mo. 18th, 1874. Clerk.

RASPBERRY ST. SCHOOLS FOR COLORED ADULTS.

Teachers will be wanted for these schools, to be opened 10th mo. 5th. Applications may be made to

Thomas Elkinton, 118 Pine St.
Elton B. Gifford, 719 Market St.
James Bromley, 641 Franklin St.
George J. Scattergood, 413 Spruce St.

HADDONFIELD BOARDING & DAY SCHOOL.

Under the care of Haddonfield Monthly Meeting, and taught by Rebecca Allen, will open 8th mo. 31st.

Children of both sexes will be taken to board in the family on moderate terms. Apply to Rebecca Allen, Haddonfield, N. J.

WANTED.

A suitable Friend to take the position of Writing Teacher and Assistant Governor at Westtown Boarding School—for next Session. Apply to

Charles Evans, 702 Race street, Philadelphia,
Clarkson Sheppard, Greenwich, New Jersey,
Joseph Walton, Moorestown, New Jersey.

SHELTER FOR COLORED ORPHANS.

Wanted, by the 1st of 10th mo. next, a suitable Friend for Matron for the above institution.

Application may be made to

Hannah R. Newbold, 643 Franklin St.
Mary Wood, 524 South Second St.
Mary Randolph, 247 North Twelfth St.
Anna W. Lippincott, 460 North Seventh St.

WANTED.

An unmarried Friend to take the position of Governor at Westtown Boarding School, on or before the close of the present session, in the 10th month next.

Apply to

Clarkson Sheppard, Greenwich, New Jersey,
Joseph Walton, Moorestown, "
Charles Evans, 702 Race street, Philadelphia.

HAVERFORD COLLEGE.

The next Term will commence on Fourth-day, 9th mo. 2nd, 1874. Applications for admissions should be addressed to Samuel J. Gummere, President,
Haverford College, Montgomery Co., Pa.

FRIENDS' ASYLUM FOR THE INSANE.

Near Frankford, (Twenty-third Ward,) Philadelphia.

Physician and Superintendent—Joshua H. Worthington, M. D.

Applications for the Admission of Patients may be made to the Superintendent, or to any of the Board of Managers.

RECEIPTS.

Received from Henry Knowles, Agent, N. Y., for Henry A. Knowles, Io., Martha M. Knowles, Mich., and Daniel Peckham, David Naramore, and Lorenzo Rockwell, N. Y., $2 each, vol. 48; from Benjamin Gilbert, Agent, Pa., $2, vol. 48, and for James Mains, Isaac Price, Joshua Cope, and Stephen M. Brinton, $2 each, vol. 48; from Sarah Ann Cooper, City, $2, vol. 48; from Stephen Hobson, Agent, O., $2, vol. 48, and for Caleb Engle, Edwin Hollingsworth, James Bowman and Elwood Dean, $2 each, vol. 48; from Uriah Borton, N. J., $2, vol. 48; from William Blackburn, O., $2, vol. 48, and for George Blackburn, Nathan M. Blackburn, and Joseph Taylor, $2 each, vol. 48; from Samuel P. Leeds, N. J., $2, vol. 48; from Alfred King, Agent, N. Y., $2, vol. 48, and for Susan King, Gilbert Weaver, Mary Ann Simkin, Earl Hallock, and Abiel Gardner, $2 each, vol. 48; from Samuel F. Troth, City, $2, vol. 48; from Carlton P. Stokes, N. J., $2, vol. 48, and for Mary Ann Paul, $2, vol. 48; from James Hilyard, N. J., $2, vol. 48; from Sarah C. Paul, N. J., $2, vol. 48; from Lydia Ann Hendrickson, N. J., $2, vol. 48; from Deborah Satterthwaite, N. J., $2, vol. 48; from Thomas Woolman, City, $2, vol. 48, and for Samuel Woolman, Del., $2, vol. 48, and Eliza W. Reeves, City, $2, to No. 10, vol. 49; from Naomi Gibbons, Pa., $2, vol. 48; from George Brinton, Pa., $2, vol. 48; from Annie King, N. J., per Joseph King, $2, vol. 48; from Stogdell Stokes, Pa., $2, vol. 48; from Amos E. Whitson, Pa., $2, vol. 48; from Charles Bell, N. J., $2, vol. 48; from Mary Moore, N. J., $2, vol. 48; from Abram P. Rudolph, N. J., $2, vol. 48, and for Hannah G. Leeds, and Eunice Mickle, $2, vol. 48; from Ann Kaighn, N. J., $2, vol. 48; from Thomas H. Whitson, Pa., $2, vol. 48; from Phebe J. Walter, N. J., $2, vol. 48; from Martha Sankey, Pa., $2, vol. 48; from Sarah Haines, N. J., per Joseph Walton, $2, vol. 48; from Isaac P. Wilbur, Mass., $2, vol. 48; from Dr. Samuel Whitall, New York City, $2, vol. 48; from Levi I. Hoopes, Pa., $2, vol. 48; from Phebe Jacobs, Pa., per Samuel Jacobs, $2, vol. 48; from Joseph Scattergood, Jr., Agent, Pa., $2, vol. 48, and for Elizabeth S. Thomas, Jane B. Davis, Enos Smedley, Mary Ann Newlin, Philena S. Yarnall, Phineas Pratt, Abraham Pennell, Jacob Smedley, Charles W. Roberts, James C. Roberts, S. Emlen Sharpless, Susan L. Temple, Charles L. Warner, Enos E. Thatcher, Richard J. Thatcher, Ann Sheppard, Jane Gibbons, Ann Harry, Anne Pim, Mary Ann Taylor, E. Malin Hoopes, Ruth Anna Hoopes, and Ralston R. Hoopes, $2 each, vol. 48, for Susan S. Thomas, $2, to No. 31, vol. 49; and from Thomas Y. French, O., $2, for vol. 48.

Remittances received after Fourth-day morning will not appear in the Receipts until the following week.

Died, on the 13th of Fifth month, 1874, Sarah Brown, in the 81st year of her age, a member of Woodbury Monthly Meeting of Friends, N. J.

——, at his residence in this city, on the 30th of 6th mo. 1874, Jesse Williams, an esteemed member of the Monthly Meeting of Friends of Philadelphia, for the Northern District, in the 61st year of his age. He was, in early life, brought under the restraining power of the cross, and was preserved thereby in a good degree of innocency. His dealings and intercourse amongst men were marked by integrity and uprightness. He was a very diligent attender of religious meetings, many times under the pressure of bodily afflictions; his attachment to the doctrines and principles of Friends being great. He passed through a lingering and very painful indisposition, which he endured with becoming resignation; and gave satisfactory evidence that the work of preparation for his last great change was going forward. A few days prior to the close, he said, "I humbly believe a place of rest is prepared for me, but it is not from any merit of mine; all of mercy,—I am a poor creature."

——, on 8th mo. 8th, 1874, at the residence of his brother, Amos E. Whitson, in New London, Pa., Cyrus Whitson, a member of the Monthly Meeting of Friends of Philadelphia, in the 61st year of his age.

——, at his residence in this city, on the 17th ultimo, Samuel H. Edwards, aged 66 years, a member of the Monthly Meeting of Friends of Philadelphia.

——, at her residence, near Salem, Ohio, on First-day morning, the 9th inst., Priscilla W., relict of the late Jonathan W. Coffee, M. D., in the 54th year of her age, a member of Salem Monthly Meeting of Friends. "Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God."

WILLIAM H. PILE, PRINTER,
No. 422 Walnut Street.

THE FRIEND.

A RELIGIOUS AND LITERARY JOURNAL.

VOL. XLVIII. SEVENTH-DAY, EIGHTH MONTH 29, 1874. NO. 2.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY.

Price Two Dollars per annum, if paid in advance. Two dollars and fifty cents, if not paid in advance.

Subscriptions and Payments received by

JOHN S. STOKES,

AT NO. 115 NORTH FOURTH STREET, UP STAIRS.

PHILADELPHIA.

Postage, when paid quarterly in advance, five cents.

Selected.

Memorial of Frankford Monthly Meeting of Friends, concerning HANNAH A. WARNER, deceased.

(Concluded from page 2)

The following memoranda from her diary and some of her letters, will best discover the earnestness and depth of her concern on some matters of vital importance:

Mount Pleasant, Ohio, 1859. "I want not to be an idler either in body or mind, but to be found at all times 'not slothful in business,' either temporal or spiritual, but 'fervent in spirit, serving the Lord.' Ah! there is no joy like that which results from faithfully and fully serving our dear Lord and Master."

1st mo. 2d, 1870. Upon returning from meeting, she thus wrote: "Oh! how desirable is it that we should, in our gathered assemblies, know more of that deep indwelling of spirit, that fervent travail and exercise for the arising of the pure seed of life into dominion in our midst, which would keep down this creaturely activity, and beget that alone which is of His begetting."

2d mo., 1870. "This is indeed a day of great liberty in many ways, and we have much to feel on behalf of our dear young people, who are tempted and tried, I believe, oftentimes more than some of us know. May we, who are placed as watchmen and watchwomen on the walls, be renewedly qualified to watch over these, for good, and to lend a helping hand in the right way."

3d mo. 17th, 1870. "It seems to be a day wherein the seed, the pure living seed, is in suffering; pressed down as a cart with sheaves; and I believe the members of the true church are called to go down into suffering with it, and to be willing so to abide and endure, as long as the dear Master may see meet, remembering the language of the dear Redeemer, 'In your patience possess ye your souls.' Ah! this patient indwelling of spirit, this willingness to suffer and to wait His time, being very watchful lest, like poor Uzzah, we put forth a hand unbidden to stay the ark,—this is, it seems to me, what is called for at our hands."

3d mo. 15th, 1872. "The trials of the present day are so peculiar, and so few of the faithful fathers and mothers left to aid in bearing the burdens, that we are ready to exclaim, 'Who is sufficient for these things?' Well, if our sufficiency was of ourselves, we might indeed cast away the shield; but this is not so; He worketh by few, or by those who have no power, and He hath promised that if we ask we shall receive. Oh! then, let none of the Lord's faithful servants give back in the day of battle, but casting away all confidence in their own strength and wisdom, seek earnestly to be clothed upon with that strength and that wisdom which is from above; that thus nothing of the creature may be exalted, but all be done to the glory and honor of Him who was never foiled in battle, and whose eye of tender compassion is upon His faithful little ones; 'To them that have no might He increaseth strength.'"

3d mo. 31st, 1872. "'When He giveth quietness, who then can make trouble?' I feel thankful, I trust, for a little feeling of quietness mercifully vouchsafed this day. Ah! this must be waited for; we cannot command it; neither can we in our own natural wisdom understand the precious truths of the gospel. It is only as they are revealed to us by that Holy Light, which if followed, and implicitly obeyed, will open to us in His own time and way, one after another of these solemn truths. 'I thank thee O Father, Lord of Heaven and earth, that thou hast hid these things from the wise and prudent, and hast revealed them unto babes.' Oh! may my precious children, my dear husband and myself, become as babes in Christ! fed, taught and led by Him alone."

To one naturally so active, the weakness and suffering attending declining health, and the privations connected therewith, were no small trial of faith and patience; and it was instructive to witness during the closing years of the life of our beloved friend, as her strength failed, the exercise of her spirit that she might be enabled to endure all with cheerfulness and resignation. It was also a season of close self-examination, wherein she was earnestly engaged to know a preparation for the solemn change that she felt might not be far distant. Under date of 11th mo. 24th, 1867, she writes: "The pins of the poor tabernacle I feel are beginning to give way, and I desire that as this is the case, I may know more and more of having a 'building of God, an house not made with hands, eternal in the Heavens.' Ah! true it is that the great aim of our life should be to know our day's work to be keeping pace with the day, that thus in the end the answer of 'Well done' may be ours, and we be permitted to 'rest from our labors' and to know through adorable mercy an entrance granted into the abodes of everlasting rest and peace."

In the 12th mo. 1871, she became increasingly indisposed, and though the acuteness of the attack passed off, she continued from that time in a precarious and feeble state of health, occasionally rallying a little, but was only able after this to attend meeting a few times. Her feelings during this period may be gathered from letters written at intervals:

1st mo. 19th, 1872. "For a few days last week, I felt myself drawing nearer to the borders of the grave, a very solemn and awful feeling, and one calculated to produce close examination and bring us to the dear Saviour's feet, on whose mercy we can alone depend."

5th mo. 7th, 1872. "I desire to leave the future with Him who doth all things right, and by watchfulness unto prayer, have a humble hope, that through adorable mercy, unmerited mercy, I shall be permitted in the end to enter into that rest prepared for the redeemed. For those near and dear to me left behind, my heart feels deeply; but I can do no other than commit them to the keeping of Him, who can care for them beyond all human care."

On the 30th of 6th month she attended meeting for the last time, and was engaged in fervent supplication, it is believed to the tendering of many hearts, craving the salvation of every precious immortal soul present.

Her weakness and sufferings increased, and from the 5th of the 9th month she was confined up stairs. She was enabled to bear her sufferings with patience and resignation. When able, she enjoyed seeing her relatives and friends, to most of whom she imparted suitable counsel, in much tenderness and love. She was often brought low under a sense of the purity needed, and from a feeling of her own unworthiness. At one time, the fourteenth chapter of John having been read to her, she wept and expressed her fervent desire for an admittance into one of those mansions of which our Saviour spoke. Being encouraged to believe that there was one awaiting her, she said, "It would be all in mercy," and added, "Oh! that He would lift up the light of His countenance upon me." Her travail of spirit was mercifully regarded by Him, whom she had long loved and sought to serve, and every cloud, we believe, was dispelled, and she enabled to rest in a humble hope of acceptance through Christ Jesus her Saviour. Once when very weak she said, "I cannot have a doubt that through the mercy of my Heavenly Father I shall be accepted."

On the 19th of 9th month she had a sinking spell, when it seemed uncertain what might be the issue, but during its continuance she was preserved in much calmness, remarking, "The angel of the Lord encampeth round about them that fear Him. I do fear Him, and I believe He will deliver and sustain me."

On First-day afternoon, the 22d of 9th month, she requested that the family should meet in her room for the usual reading of the Scriptures. After the reading a solemn silence ensued, when she was engaged in fervent supplication for herself and for each one present. In the evening she said, "This has been a precious day." The following two days her weakness increased. At one time she remarked, she found it necessary still to keep on the watch, adding, "we should all of us endeavor to maintain the watch." After taking leave on Third-day evening of a near relative to whom she had imparted counsel, she said, "I seem to have had little services of this kind to do towards my relatives and friends, but I believe this is the last; I have done all now." The following morning she was much weaker. She requested the family collected, and after addressing them, called each one separately to her side, and calmly and with much tenderness bade them farewell. She also sent parting messages to some absent relatives and friends. Soon after this she was engaged in solemn, heart tendering prayer. She continued remarkably quiet and composed, expressing, "The everlasting arms are underneath." "I have trusted in my Saviour and he don't forsake me now." "The world is receding.—receding, I think—but I see my Heavenly Father, my Saviour, He will lead me through the river of Jordan to the promised land;" and again, "I see the arms of my Saviour open to receive me." Her husband remarking to her that we now saw what it was to have the work done in the day time, she replied, "Yes," and emphatically added, "but it had to be done," and looking at her children said, "Dear children, remember that it had to be done, and begin in youth." At one time she remarked, "The world is a hard master, but our Heavenly Father is a good Master."

Her petitions during this time were earnest and frequent for a speedy dismissal, but always offered in submission to the Divine will. "Be pleased to take me to Thyself if consistent with Thy holy will." "Take me—take me now." "Be pleased to cut short the work in righteousness." As the end approached there was for a short period an increase of suffering, which drew from her the request, "Dear sister, pray for me that I may have strength to bear it." These were almost her last words. Very soon her ransomed and purified spirit was released from its frail tabernacle, to receive, we reverently believe, the welcome, "Well done, good and faithful servant, enter thou into the joy of thy Lord." She ceased to breathe about ten o'clock on Fourth-day morning, the twenty-fifth of Ninth month, 1872; aged fifty-eight years.

For "The Friend."

The following sensible article is taken from the money column of the Public Record of the 12th inst., and commends itself to the serious consideration of all who are occupied "with the passion of acquisition." In confirmation of which a sad case recently occurred in our borough: an aged man, who had spent his life principally in the accumulation of money, met with a small reverse in the panic of last autumn, which so unsettled his mind as to drive him to seek relief in self-destruction, which, after repeated attempts, he finally accomplished a short time since, leaving an estate of about $1·40,000, with neither wife nor child to inherit it.

West Chester, Pa.

"A short time ago a well-known money stock operator and capitalist of San Francisco committed suicide, for no other reason, the local journals say, than 'that he was nervous and forgetful with reference to stock matters.' His fortune was not less than two millions of dollars. His residence is described as one of the most elegant and luxurious in California. Yet, in the midst of princely surroundings, 'he got to thinking of his various investments and became nervous at the thought of losing largely in consequence of them.' He was not unhappy in his domestic relations. Had it been otherwise, an intelligible explanation of his constant worry about business and money, when there was no necessity for it, would have been prevented. He had a loving and lovable family, and, as the world goes, everything to make him happy and contented, instead of being, as he was, supremely miserable. What a lesson this man's tragic death teaches to all those engaged and unduly absorbed in the bustling and heart-wearing activities of the day! When wealth or business anxieties bring a man to that pitiable condition, the poorest beggar at the street crossings or the hardest toiler in the work-shop has a more enviable lot. It has been said that one of the worst things that can befal a man in business life is more wealth than he knows what to do with. It is one of the perplexities of the man himself that he is unable to discover just when he has enough; the passion for acquisition, like others, 'grows by what it feeds on;' and so men go on, insensible of all moral surroundings, until encompassed by the various perils of which too much money, by some mysterious law of their moral nature, is invariably productive. We suppose that is the reason why we so seldom hear of rich people retiring from business, and why persons who have accumulated wealth far beyond their ability to use by any ordinary process during the period allotted to life, continue to mingle in the excitements and to participate in the anxieties of business, long after the necessity or obligation for doing so has passed. It is an unfortunate thing that it is so, but there would seem to be no cure for it short of a wider recognition of the fact that there is some point in the life of every successful business man at which he really has enough, and beyond which he cannot pass, with his active habits, without incurring the risk of spending the remainder of his days with little or none of that serene self-contentment which no wealth can purchase, and without which happiness in any of the walks of life is impossible. It is not our province to deal in moral essays, but there is so much in the life and experience, as well as in the sad end of the California money king, akin to the 'morose and fidgety' feeling that takes possession of men engaged in similar pursuits elsewhere, that it is a legitimate function of journalism to present the whole story as an admonition to all that class of men who take upon themselves more care than should be their portion. Neither mind nor body can stand it."

For "The Friend."

Amongst the changes which have been suggested in New York Yearly Meeting, are the abolishing of womens' meetings, and directing the women to sit in the mens' meetings instead. It is also proposed that they may be appointed members of the meeting for sufferings, or representative meeting. In George Fox's Journal, page 467, he says: "I was moved of the Lord to recommend for the benefit of the Church of Christ, that faithful women, called to the belief of the Truth, made partakers of the same precious faith, and heirs of the same everlasting gospel of life and salvation as the men are, might in like manner come into the possession and practice of the gospel order, and therein be mecthelps unto the men in the restoration, in the service of truth, in the affairs of the church, as they are outwardly in civil or temporal things. That so all the family of God, women as well as men, might know, possess, perform, and discharge their offices and services in the Church of God, whereby the poor might be the better taken care of; the younger sort instructed, informed and taught in the way of God; the loose and disorderly reproved and admonished in the fear of the Lord; the clearness of persons proposing marriage, more closely and strictly inquired into in the wisdom of God; and all the members of the spiritual body the church might watch over and be helpful to each other in love." * * * To those who opposed the establishment of womens' meetings, Geo. Fox says, (Journal, page 495,) "I say to all you, who say you see no service for the womens' meeting, and oppose them: you are therein out of the power of God, and his Spirit you live not in."

I believe it would be well for us all often to ponder, that the faith and practices of Friends were commenced and continued under the Divine anointing, and that every departure therefrom is an indication of weakness. Instead of the uncovering of the head, and arising from our seats when one appears in supplication before the Most High, to uncover the head immediately at the entrance of the meeting, and keep the sitting posture during prayer, certainly shows a change tending to irreverence. It is recorded of John Perrott, who wished to institute a change by keeping on the hat in time of prayer, that he afterwards departed so far as to become a magistrate, and fine Friends for not swearing; so that by following another spirit he became a perseeutor. Oh! how important that we keep the footmark of the flock, who have gone before. The enemy generally works by leading to the belief that such and such things are small matters, and of indifference, until the heart is hardened, and the tender, sweet, and childlike state is no longer sought after. Such innovators require all to bow to the imagined fuller light which they think they have attained unto. One deviation leads to another, until all our testimonies are violated. Oh! that the Lord may awaken and arouse from the earth such as may be settled on their lees, and that many may be anointed and made strong to stand for the Lord, and his truth: worthy sons and daughters of the Lord, however weak or feeble they may feel themselves to be. The strength is not in us, but in Christ; the blowing of rams' horns was the only outward means for the falling of the walls of Jericho. The "unlearned and ignorant" were made the ministers of Truth and righteousness, not indeed in "man's wisdom," but the "wisdom (even the hidden wisdom) which cometh from above," and is not of the world. This only will make the walls of mystery Babylon to fall, and the power of Jesus to be exalted over all. S. C.

New York.

Dr. Franklin says, "Pride is as cruel a beggar as want, and a great deal more saucy. When you have bought one fine thing, you must buy ten more, that your appearance may be all of apiece. It is easier to suppress the first desire than to satisfy all that follow it."

The Housefly.

Keller, the naturalist, who studied the history of the Fly with considerable attention, tells us that the female deposits her eggs in such decaying substances as her instinct denotes to be suitable for the nourishment of her larvæ, as, for example, the heaps of vegetables and other substances that are found in the neighborhood of our dwellings.

"If," says Keller, "the Fly be enabled to choose the place which suits her best for the deposition of her eggs (as for instance, in my sugar-basin, in which I placed a quantity of decaying wheat), she takes a correct survey of every part, and selects that in which she believes her ova will be the best preserved, and her young ones well cared for. If there were too much moisture, the maggots would be drowned; if too little, the first drought would cause eggs and larvæ to become desiccated. Having chosen a suitable locality, one neither too wet nor too dry, she protrudes her little ovipositor, and therewith lays her eggs, by the side of, and upon one another, with the same precision as the cleverest hands would arrange larger objects; she then sits perfectly still, without moving a single member of her body excepting her ovipositor; indeed it would appear as though she were not quite conscious whilst this operation is being performed, for so long as she is not absolutely touched, one may approach her as nearly as one likes, without causing her to exhibit the least symptom of alarm. During this operation, which lasts half a quarter of an hour (a few minutes more or less), she lays 70, 80, or 90 eggs." Generally speaking, the greater number of insects die as soon as they have deposited their eggs; but Keller's observations led him to believe that this is not the case with the Fly, for he retained several alive in a glass for some days after oviposition was completed, and he, as well as other naturalists, believe that the insect deposits her eggs three or four times during her life, the duration of which is a few weeks or months.

Assuming that the Fly deposits 80 ova at a sitting, and that she performs this operation four times during her life, Keller has drawn up a curious table, from which it would appear that a single female might in one season be the progenitrix of upwards of two million flies.

Although this calculation is quite sufficient to account for the immense swarms of flies that make their appearance during the summer and autumn months, yet these would be considerably increased were it not that, from various causes, (such as drought, flood, &c., and the rapacity of birds and other animals that prey upon them), a considerable number of the eggs thus deposited are never hatched; or if hatched, the larvæ are, from similar causes, destroyed in that stage, and do not attain the imago form. The eggs are hatched a few days after they are deposited; and if you wish to obtain a tolerably accurate idea of the appearance of the larva that proceeds from them, you have but to examine with a pocket-lens one of the well-known long white maggots, commonly termed "jumpers," which are found in decaying cheese, and afterwards become converted into a small black fly (Piophila) belonging to a kindred group; or one of the ordinary maggots found in ham when in a state of decay.

Whilst in this state, the larva is constantly devouring the substances in which it was hatched, and increases rapidly in size; and in a few days assumes the pupa-form. This change is effected by the hardening of the outer skin, which becomes brown and tough, inclosing the larva in a little bright barrel-shaped case, divided into rings or segments, and it is then to all appearance lifeless.

Whilst the insect is in this its second or pupal condition, that remarkable metamorphosis is taking place in its internal as well as external structure, which raises it from the type of a worm to that of a highly-organized insect.

The simple jaws of the larva are replaced by the complicated proboscis that is so necessary for the sustenance of the fly; the compound eyes by which we have found the insect races to be characterized now make their appearance, as also the delicately-constructed feet and wings, and the mysterious antennæ. Simultaneously with the division, or rather the concentration, of the cylindrical body into head, thorax, and abdomen, a change also takes place in the internal anatomy; for whilst this, in the larva, resembled that of the worm, it now becomes changed to the more perfect structure of the fly. In a few days, when all these transformations are complete, the insect forces it way out of its prison-house in the following manner:—After it has, by a series of muscular efforts, detached itself from the pupal covering, it strikes its head forcibly against one end of the case time after time, until it bursts open, as it were, upon a hinge, like the lid of a cylindrical snuff-box.

When the fly first makes its escape, it presents anything but a graceful appearance; for, whilst it was in the pupa-case, its members were folded against the body more with a view to economy of space, than to display their elegance; and the wings are necessarily crumpled and insignificant in appearance. As mentioned in the previous letter, these members are supplied internally with a great number of tracheæ, or air-tubes; and one of the first operations of the insect is to inflate these by a trembling motion, and by the expansions and contractions of the abdomen: in thus dilating the tracheæ, the inseet gives to the wings their necessary expansion and support.

The Housefly is subject to a curious disease to which numbers fall victims towards the close of autumn. As this disease has been very graphically described in a recent number of the "Microscopic Journal," we cannot do better than transcribe a short extract:—

"The subject of this paper is the well-known curious disease which prevails among common Houseflies at the period when the departing warmth of autumn induces them to seek shelter within doors.

"At this time innumerable dead bodies of flies may be been adhering to the windows, walls, shutters, &c., in all parts of the room: the dead insect, although dry, and so friable as to crumble into dust upon the slightest touch, retains so far the attitude of life, that it is difficult, without touching, to believe that it is not a living fly on the point of taking flight. Insects in dying usually draw up the legs, and cross them beneath the body; but in the case of the disease now under consideration, the dead body is supported upon the outstretched legs, whose feet retain their adhesive property, and by the protruded proboscis, with which the fly would seem to be sucking; and by which, even when the feet may happen to be detached, the body is still retained in situ. The dead flies in this condition are always surrounded with a halo, about an inch in diameter, composed of a whitish dust, which upon examination is found to consist of the spores [seeds] of a fungus. The abdomen is much distended, and the rings composing it are separated from each other, the intervals being occupied by white prominent zones, constituted of a fungoid growth proceeding from the interior of the body. Further examination will show that the whole of the contents of the body of the fly have been consumed by the parasitic growth, and that nothing remains but an empty shell, lined with a thin felt-like layer, composed of the slender myeelia of the innumerable fungi."

With this extract we shall close the life-history of the Fly, and shall now consider for a moment the uses for which it was created, and the lessons we may learn from its existence.

If you asked a sceptic, who doubted that every species of animal is created for an end, and has its place and object assigned by the Creator, to name some of those that he regarded as useless, it is not at all improbable that he would select the Worm and the Fly. Of the Worm's value as a fertilizing agent we have already spoken, and shall now find that the humble Fly, in its lowest stage, performs an office of still greater importance,—nay, that it is indispensable to the existence of some, and to the health and comfort of the whole human race. Reader! this is no exaggeration: go into the fields or lanes, and seek the body of some recently-killed animal; or, if you reside near the sea, look at the carcase of one of the many creatures that are cast up by the waves; and if your olfactory organs be not too easily offended, turn the body over, and examine it for yourself. See what myriads of maggots are writhing throughout its frame! A few hundreds of these may be the larvæ of the Carrion Beetle, or of the Devil's Coachman (Staphylinidæ); but thousands upon thousands are the maggots of flies, and, if you return a few days after your first inspection, you will find that they have devoured the whole carcase, save a little skin, and the indigestible bones. The elements of the tissues, instead of decomposing into poisonous and ill-savored compounds, and filling the air with miasma pregnant with pestilential disease and death, at once spring phœnix-like into life again, and in a few days there appears the animated form of the fly, which only an Omnipotent hand could have moulded with such rapidity and accurate design. That which was left of the carcase, the bones, form one of the most valuable manures that we possess; and whilst the elements of the flesh and tissues rise, to form a living creature of the air, the bones descend into the earth, and there enter into the constitution of plants, and provide nourishment for other animated beings. The Fly in its turn falls a victim to birds, frogs, or rapacious insects, and these in like manner become the prey of man and the lower animals, or are converted into the constituents of the soil; and thus it is that the current of life flows on in constant and ever-varying circles.—The Earthworm and Housefly.

An inscription, it is said, may be found in an Italian graveyard:—"Here lies Etella, who transported a large fortune to heaven, in acts of charity, and has gone thither to enjoy it."

Selected.

THE CHILD ON THE JUDGMENT-SEAT.

Where hast thou been toiling all day, sweet-heart,
That thy brow is hurdened and sad?
The Master's work may make weary feet,
But it leaves the spirit glad.

Was thy garden nipped with the midnight frost,
Or scorched with the mid-day glare?
Were thy vines laid low, or thy lilies crushed,
That thy face is so full of care?

"No pleasant garden-toils were mine!
I have sate on the judgment-seat,
Where the Master sits at eve and calls
The children around His feet."

How camest thou on the judgment-seat,
Sweet-heart? Who set thee there?
'Tis a lonely and lofty seat for thee,
And well might fill thee with care.

"I climbed on the judgment-seat myself,
I have sate there alone all day,
For it grieved me to see the children around
Idling their life away.

"They wasted the Master's precious seed,
They wasted the precious hours;
They trained not the vines, nor gathered the fruits,
And they trampled the sweet, meek flowers."

And what hast thou done on the judgment-seat,
Sweet-heart? What didst thou there?
Would the idlers heed thy childish voice,
Did the garden mend by thy care?

"Nay, that grieved me more! I called and I cried,
But they left me there forlorn;
My voice was weak, and they heeded not,
Or they laughed my words to scorn."

Ah, the judgment-seat was not for thee!
The servants were not thine!
And the eyes which adjudge the praise and the blame,
See further than thine or mine.

The Voice that shall sound there at eve, sweet-heart,
Will not raise its tones to be heard,
It will hush the earth, and hush the hearts,
And none will resist its word.

"Should I see the Master's treasures lost—
The stores that should feed His poor,
And not lift my voice, be it weak as it may,
And not be grieved sore?"

Wait till the evening falls, sweet-heart,
Wait till the evening falls;
The Master is near and knoweth all,
Wait till the Master calls.

But how fared thy garden-plot, sweet-heart,
Whilst thou sat'st on the judgment-seat;
Who watered thy roses and trained thy vines,
And kept them from careless feet?

"Nay, that is saddest of all to me!
That is saddest of all!
My vines are trailing, my roses are parched,
My lilies droop and fall."

Go back to thy garden-plot, sweet-heart!
Go back till the evening falls!
And bind thy lilies, and train thy vines,
Till for thee the Master calls.

Go make thy garden fair as thou canst,
Thou workest never alone,
Perchance he whose plot is next to thine
Will see it, and mend his own.

And the next may copy his, sweet-heart,
Till all grows fair and sweet,
And when the Master comes at eve.
Happy faces His coming will greet.

Then shall thy joy be full, sweet-heart,
In the garden so fair to see,
In the Master's words of praise for all,
In a look of His own for thee!

"It is melancholy to reflect," says the Saturday Review, "how much even educated women still cling to the beads and feathers of the primitive savage."

Rabies Mephitica—Skunk Hydrophobia.

A peculiar poison is sometimes contained in the saliva of animals belonging to the canine and feline families, the production of which, it has been generally supposed, is limited to them. Other animals, of the same, or of different species, may be inoculated with this virus; the result being a mysterious malady, which men have observed from the days of Homer and Aristotle, but which has never been cured or understood. This frightful disease has been called, from its origin, Rabies canina, and from one of its symptoms, hydrophobia. Probably it is not communicable by any species but those with which it originates. A few instances have been recorded to the contrary; but they were so imperfectly observed as merely to stimulate us to further investigation.

The facts now collated will show, it is thought, one of two things, either that the hydrophobic virus is both generated and communicated by some of the Mustelidæ as well as the Felidæ and Canidæ; or else that a new disease has been discovered, which generically resembles Rabies canina, while differing from it specifically. My judgment favors the latter opinion, decidedly, for reasons to be adduced; and accordingly I may name this new malady, from the animal in whose saliva it is generated.

An adventure, while on a summer tour amid the Rocky Mountains, first called my attention to the novel class of facts about to be presented. Our camp was invaded by a nocturnal prowler, which proved to be a large coal-black skunk. Anxious to secure his fine silky fur uninjured, I attempted to kill him with small shot, and failed. He made characteristic retaliation; and then, rushing at me with great ferocity, he seized the muzzle of my gun between his teeth! Of course the penalty was instant death. An experienced hunter then startled us by saying that the bite of this animal is invariably fatal, and that when in perfect apparent health it is always rabid. He resented our incredulity, and confirmed his statement by several instances of dogs and men dying in convulsions shortly after being thus bitten.

On mentioning this adventure to H. R. Payne, M. D., who had been camping with miners near Cañon City, Col., he said that at night skunks would come into their tent, making a peculiar crying noise, and threatening to attack them. His companions, from Texas and elsewhere, had accounts to give of fatal results following the bite of this animal.

Since returning to Kansas City, I have had extensive correspondence with hunters, taxidermists, surgeons and others, by which means the particulars have been obtained of forty-one cases of Rabies mephitica, occurring in Virginia, Michigan, Illinois, Kansas, Missouri, Colorado, and Texas. All were fatal except one; that was the case of a farmer, named Fletcher, living near Gainesville, Texas, who was twice bitten by M. macroura, yet recovered, and is living still. On further inquiry it was found that he was aware of his danger, and used prompt preventive treatment.

A veteran hunter, Nathaniel Douglas, was hunting buffalo, in June, 1872, fourteen miles north of Park's Fort. While asleep he was bitten on the thumb by a skunk. Fourteen days afterward singular sensations caused him to seek medical advice. But it was too late, and after convulsions lasting for ten hours he died. This case is reported by an eye-witness, Mr. E. S. Love, of Wyandotte, Kansas, who also gives several similar accounts.

In October, 1871, a hunter on Walnut Creek, Kansas, was awakened by having his left ear bitten by some animal. Seizing it with his hand, he found it to be a skunk, which after a struggle he killed, but not until his hand was painfully punctured and lacerated. He presented himself for treatment to Dr. J. H. Janeway, army surgeon at Fort Hayes, from whom I have the facts. The wounds in the hands were cauterized, much to the man's disgust, who thought simple dressing sufficient. He refused to have the wound in the ear touched, and went to Fort Harker to consult Dr. R. C. Brewer. Twelve days afterward the latter reported that his patient had died with hydrophobic symptoms.

I give but one more of the cases reported to me by Dr. Janeway. In October, 1871, he was called to see a young man living in a "dug-out," a few miles from the fort. He had been bitten by a skunk, seventeen days previous, in the little finger of the left hand. His face was flushed, and he complained that his throat seemed to be turning into bone. On hearing the sound of water poured from a pail into a tin cup, he went into convulsions, that followed each other with rapidity and violence for sixteen hours, terminating in death. This man's dog had also been bitten, and it was suggested that he had better be shut up. He chanced at the time to be in the hog-pen, and he was confined in that enclosure. Ere long he began to gnaw furiously at the rails and posts of the pen, and to bite the hogs, until the bystanders, convinced that he was mad, ended the scene by shooting all the animals in the pen.

I am favored by Dr. M. Shearer, surgeon in the 6th U. S. Cavalry, with notes from his case-book, of four cases in which persons have died from the bite of the skunk; and he also mentions additional instances reported to him by other observers. He thinks there is a marked difference between the symptom of their malady and those of hydrophobia.

The only peculiarity noticeable in these biting skunks is the arrest of their effluvium. They approach stealthily, while their victims are asleep, and inflict the deadly wound on some minor member—the thumb, the little finger, the lobe of the ear, one of the alæ of the nose. How different from the fierce assault of a mad dog.

The resulting disease resembles hydrophobia more than it does the effects of ophidian venom. But here, as observed at the outset, the likeness is only generic, while specifically there are marked differences.

1. The period of incubation is alike in Rabies canina and Rabies mephitica. That is, it is indefinite, ranging from ten days to twelve months, with no opportunity meanwhile for subsequent inoculation. But during the incubative period of R. mephitica, no perceptible changes take place in the constitution as in hydrophobia.

2. Characteristic pustules form, in hydrophobia, beneath the tongue and near the orifices of the submaxillary glands. (See Aitken, Sci. and Pract. Med., vol. i. p. 653.) These were not reported in a single case of R. mephitica. Dr. Shearer looked for them carefully in all his cases, but did not find them.

3. The specific action of hydrophobic virus affects the eighth pair of cranial nerves and their branches, especially the œsophageal branch, the result being great difficulty in swallowing; and the motor nerve of the larynx, causing sighing, catching of the breath, and difficulty in expelling the frothy mucus accumulated in the throat. These invariable accompaniments of R. canina are usually wanting in R. mephitica.

4. In hydrophobia the perceptions are intensified, so that even the deaf are said to have their hearing restored; the pupils are strongly dilated, imparting to the eyes a wild, glaring expression; the spasms are tonic, i. e., steady and continuous; the pulse is feeble; and delirium is occasionally relieved by lucid intervals. But the symptoms are wholly different in R. mephitica.—Amer. Jour. of Science and Arts.

For "The Friend."

Indian Affairs.

(Continued from page 5.)

The following narrative of the work of Friends among the western tribes, is chiefly extracted from the First Annual Report of the Associated Executive Committee for the years 1869-70.

"In the early part of the year 1869, a few weeks prior to the inauguration of General Grant as President of the United States, letters were addressed, by his direction, to one or more Friends, inviting the co-operation of members of our Society in the administration of the Indian affairs of the Government. He also at the same time expressed his desire to exercise his influence and authority as Chief Executive officer of the nation, for the furtherance of such plans as Friends might devise for the civilization and christianization of the Indian natives."

The following is one of these letters.

Sir,—General Grant, the President elect, desirous of inaugurating some policy to protect the Indians in their just rights, and enforce integrity in the administration of their affairs, as well as to improve their general condition, and appreciating fully the friendship and interest which your Society has ever maintained in their behalf, directs me to request that you will send to him a list of names, members of your Society, whom your Society will endorse as suitable persons for Indian Agents. Also to assure you that any attempt which may or can be made by your Society for the improvement, education and christianization of the Indians under such agencies, will receive from him as President, all the encouragement and protection which the laws of the United States will warrant him in giving.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

E. S. Parker,

Brevet Brig.-General U. S. A. and A. D. C.

Washington, Feb. 15th, 1869.

"In the first annual message of President Grant to Congress, he announced the inauguration of what is now generally known throughout the country as the 'Quaker Indian policy,' in these words:

"'I have attempted a new policy towards these wards of the nation (they cannot be regarded in any other light than as wards) with fair results, so far as tried, and which I hope will be attended ultimately with great success. The Society of Friends is well known as having succeeded in living in peace with the Indians in the early settlement of Pennsylvania, while their white neighbors of other sects, in other sections, were constantly embroiled. They were also known for their opposition to all strife, violence, and war. . . . These considerations induced me to give the management of a few reservations of Indians to them, and to throw the burden of the selection of agents upon the Society itself.'

"The purpose of this movement was further explained in a letter of J. D. Cox, Secretary of the Interior, written in the Fifth month last: 'It was designed to proclaim to those who are interested in the welfare of the Indians that we wished our agents to be co-workers with the missionaries, and to assist their work instead of thwarting it. The Government has thus held out its hand to the moral and religious people of the country, and invited closer co-operation, and a more intimate mutual understanding in the efforts to save from destruction, both physical and moral, the remnants of the original inhabitants of the land.'

"The reservations selected by the President for the experiment of peaceful treatment of these 'wards of the nation,' and their instruction in literature and domestic arts, are those composing the Northern and Central Superintendencies. Those within the Central were assigned to our religious Society, and are situated in the eastern part of the State of Kansas and the western part of the Indian Territory south of Kansas.

"'The burden of the selection of agents' being thrown 'upon the Society itself,' harmony of action between all parts of the Society within the United States was essential to success. Efficient and systematic organization was also necessary for the judicious selection of agents, the nomination thereof to the government, supervision of their labor, for which the Society at large is and will be held responsible, and an intelligent co-operation with them in their extra-official labors for the elevation of the Indian.

"This was effected through the appointment of the 'Associated Executive Committee of Friends on Indian Affairs,' composed of two members of each of nine Yearly Meetings within the United States.*

"This Associated Committee has met at intervals of three to four months, according to the demands of the service, and has carefully reviewed the qualifications of all Friends proposed for appointment as United States Indian agents, who had previously received the approval of the members of the Committee of the Yearly Meetings of which the Friend proposed was a member. There being many instruments of civilization authorized by law, subordinate to the 'agents,' such as teachers, farmers, physicians, &c., the nomination of teachers was intrusted to one sub-committee, and that of other employees to another, whose labors have been diligently prosecuted during the intervals between the meetings of the Associated Executive Committee. Still another, called 'The Washington Committee,' has maintained our intercourse with the government, frequently visiting the Capital, and has with some success urged upon Congress the claims of the civilizing policy for liberal legislation.

"It has also been found desirable to appoint a general agent, at the expense of the Committee, whose time and talents will be devoted to acquiring accurate information for our guidance, suggesting and advocating such legislation as will benefit the Indian, and counselling and otherwise aiding Friends laboring upon the reservations. Dr. William Nicholson, of North Carolina, was selected for this service."

(To be continued.)

* Ohio Yearly Meeting has not appointed any Committee on Indian affairs. Those who separated from that Yearly Meeting in 1854, have done so. Philadelphia Yearly Meeting has not officially taken any action in this work, but an association of Friends within its limits are co-operating with other Yearly Meetings.

Selected.

Though I wish to be the last to find fault with the innocent and natural sprightliness and liveliness of youth, yet I cannot but excuse myself from joining in with what is commonly so termed, having often felt thereby unsettled in mind, and indisposed to reflection. I have found that by occasionally relaxing in the discipline of watchfulness, the inclination to laughter, more particularly, gained much ground upon me; and there has been no small difficulty in restraining this habit, when much indulged; so that it strikes me to be a snare. Though religion does not make a man gloomy, yet it never allows him to be off his guard: No! he must "watch and pray lest he enter into temptation," taking up his daily cross to all frivolous and foolish talking and jesting, besides more evident and open evils.—John Barclay.

The Great St. Louis Bridge.—It is a significant fact that the National Anniversary which has just passed witnessed, in different parts of the country, the completion of two great achievements in bridge building. Our own Girard Avenue Bridge, the broadest structure of the kind in the world, has been unexcelled anywhere in rapidity of construction. The other structure which has just been opened across the Mississippi, at St. Louis, is, probably, the costliest and most elaborate bridge now in existence. Both are triumphs of American skill, and both were built by Pennsylvanians. With the Girard Avenue Bridge our readers are already familiar, but the massive viaduct across the Mississippi deserves a more extended notice than the telegram which yesterday announced its opening. The remarkable points about this bridge are the depth of foundation, the width of the arches, and the novelty of construction. The foundations of the piers rest upon the bed rock beneath the bottom of the Mississippi, 97 feet below high water mark, and 120 feet below the level of St. Louis at the river bank. When the piers were constructed and raised to a height which gave sufficient elevation to clear the smoke stacks and masts of the largest river craft at the highest stage of water, the construction of the arches began. The lowest parts of these arches are 50 feet above high water. The spans are of unusual width, the centre arch being 520 feet wide, and those on each side being 515 feet wide, making the bridge 1550 feet long exclusive of the approaches. They were built without the ordinary scaffolding or supports beneath, but in such a way that the extending arches balanced one another, being gradually extended out from the opposite piers until they met in the centre of the span. This system was a novel one and attracted scientific attention everywhere. Over the bridge there are two roadways, the total width of the superstructure being 50 feet. On the top there is a carriage way 34 feet wide wide, and two foot walks each eight feet wide. Beneath this is the railway, there being two tracks passing through openings 13½ feet wide by 18 feet high. On either bank of the river the railway is carried over the levee or wharves upon five stone arches, each twenty feet wide, elevated above which upon an arcade of twenty arches is the carriage way. On the St. Louis bank brick arches join these stone arches and carry the railway into a tunnel at Third street, and thence to the "Union Depot." The carriage road ends also at Third street. On the Illinois side, at the end of the stone arches, the railway divides, curving to the north and south, and gradually descending upon trestle-work approaches, some three thousand feet long, until the level is reached, the gradient being about one foot in one hundred. The carriage road descends between these trestles, upon an incline of five feet in one hundred. This massive structure has been five years in building, and cost about nine millions of dollars.—From the Public Ledger of 7th mo. 7th, 1874.

Honesty Tested.—There was a lad, in Ireland, who was put to work in a linen factory, and while he was at work there a piece of cloth was wanted to be sent out which was short of the length that it ought to have been; but the master thought it might be made longer by a little stretching. He thereupon unrolled the cloth, taking hold of one end of it himself and the boy the other. He then said "Pull, Adam, pull!" but the boy stood still. The master again said, "Pull, Adam, pull!" The boy said, "I can't." "Why not?" said the master. "Because it is wrong," said Adam, and he refused to pull. Upon this the master said he would not do for a linen manufacturer. But that boy became Dr. Adam Clark, and the strict principle of honesty of his youthful age laid the foundation of his future greatness.

I am persuaded the anguish we feel, in the removal of those we love, arises from a mistaken view of this state of existence; could we always realize the idea of its being merely a pilgrimage, we should rather rejoice than weep, when those to whom we are fondly attached, obtain a mansion in that Heavenly country where all tears will be wiped away. Jesus wept at the grave of Lazarus! divine, compassionate Redeemer.—Daniel Wheeler.

There have recently been placed in the Museum of Cluny, in Paris, three worn plates of copper, from the royal tombs of St. Denis. The first bears the inscription:—

"Here rests the body of Louise Elizabeth, of France, daughter of Louis XV."

The second:

"Here lies the body of Mary Adelaide, of Savoy, wife of Louis, Dauphin of France . . . and mother of Louis XV."

The third:

"Here lies the body of Louis XIV, by the Grace of God King of France and Navarre, who died in his palace in Versailles, the first of September, 1715."

These three plates, says the Gaulois, were found among a coppersmith's old metal, and bear the marks of the rivets with which they were fastened together to form a saucepan.—Late Paper.

THE FRIEND.

EIGHTH MONTH 29, 1874.

By various accounts which have been received from Great Britain, we have been informed that Robert P. and Hannah W. Smith have been paying a visit in that country, and in the course of it, have been permitted to hold a number of meetings in Meeting-houses belonging to the Society of Friends. These meetings have been largely attended by Friends, as well as others, and thus the way has been opened for our members to receive and embrace their religious opinions, under circumstances which seem to give them in some measure the sanction of the Society. The two persons referred to were originally members of the Society of Friends; but left its fold, because they differed from it in some points of religious doctrine. This they had an undoubted right to do; for the query of Holy Scripture is still applicable, "Can two walk together except they be agreed?" We wish to say nothing unkind respecting them, as we believe them to be sincere and estimable people; but having gone out from us, because they were not of us—not one in religious belief—it may well be a matter of surprise, that those claiming the name of Friends elsewhere should receive them so cordially as teachers of the truths of Christianity. The question may be asked, whether their views have so changed, that they now preach in England a form of doctrine, which leading Friends there are willing their members should receive, as being in accordance with our principles. The reply to this question can be found in the London Friend of last month, in which it is stated that, "A farewell meeting of Friends with Robert P. and Hannah W. Smith, previous to their return to America, was held at Devonshire House, on Second-day, Sixth month 1st, 1874. The old meeting-house was crowded."

From the report of the address, delivered on this occasion by H. W. Smith, the following extracts are made. She speaks of the necessity of putting off the old man which is corrupt according to the deceitful lusts; and of putting on the new man, which after God is created in righteousness and true holiness; and after telling her audience that this is to be done by faith, she thus proceeds:

"When Christ died, our old man—I mean the thing that was put in us at the fall—was crucified with Him, and that He put him out of the way. * * * If Jesus did it at the cross, 1800 years ago, if He accomplished the whole work, so far as His part of it was concerned, then we too must do our part. * * * What is there then for us to do? Just to say, 'Yes, Lord, I believe thou didst die, and I take thee to be mine;' * * * and so by faith we put off the old man. We are told that Jesus put him away for us; we believe it, and by faith we put the old man off. I do exceedingly desire that this should be very practical, for every soul can now step right into the possession of it."

Having given this short and easy formula for ridding ourselves of that body of sin—the corrupt tendencies of the heart,—from which the primitive Christians, and every generation of their successors to the present day, have groaned to be delivered, and have felt the necessity of working out their salvation with fear and trembling; she thus proceeds with her subject:

"Now how are we to put on the new man? Why, certainly, only by faith. But how can we, who are utterly powerless, create life? how can we get life? * * * God creates it, and we just put it on. * * * How many people make this fatal mistake? They do get this glorious life, and give themselves to the Lord, but then they just fail in the last point in regard to the getting this life, as I will explain. It is the spirit of our God according to our faith done unto us; and that real and glorious gift may be lying unused, though really belonging to us, because we have not the faith, or we do not have the knowledge to appropriate it and reckon it is ours."

She adds these, among other exhortations: "Just begin from now and say, 'Lord, I believe that this is what the Lord Jesus Christ died for, and that I can get rid of the old man, and put on the new.' * * * With many in this room, it is quite true, that they do know that their sins are forgiven, and they only want now to know how to live the right sort of life; and the only way to live it is to get the right sort of faith, and you wont have any trouble in living it at all. * * * Let those who have not taken this step, say, 'Lord Jesus, I will really consent that Thou shalt be my life: I will cease to live myself; I will take thee for my indwelling—my life,' and reckon that you have to do it. Reckon that He is abiding in you. Reckon that He has come in and taken His seat upon the throne of your existence. Reckon, dear friends, that you are dead to sin, and alive to God in Jesus Christ, and then go on reckoning, and I know how it will be. I know you will find it to your surprise."

H. W. S., in these extracts, places the whole work that now remains to be done to effect our salvation in our own hands. She practically ignores the transforming power of the Spirit of Christ in the heart, in the accomplishment of this, by whose effectual visitations alone we are enabled even to think a good thought, much less to experience such a marvellous change as the putting off the old man, and putting on the new man; which our Saviour in other language describes as being born again. This Holy Spirit, which bloweth where it listeth, and whose manifestations are utterly beyond our control, she puts into our power, saying, we make "a fatal mistake" in not appropriating it and reckoning it as our own.

This form of speech conveys to our mind a different impression than that which we receive from the statement of the scriptural doctrine held by our early Friends of the Light of Christ; which shines in the hearts of all, as a reprover for sin, and a guide to everlasting happiness to all those who receive and follow it. As we come under its influence, and submit to its operations, enduring the baptism of repentance for our past sins, as they are brought into remembrance and under condemnation, we experience in due time a sense of forgiveness, and ability to walk in the strait and narrow way, with a degree of steady faithfulness. An unbroken series of worthy men and women in our Society, from George Fox down to the present time, have borne testimony to the importance of that 'patient continuance in well-doing," to which, "eternal life" is promised in the Scriptures—even that holy walking in the Light of Christ, by and through which they have experieneed redemption from the power of sin, and true faith in the Saviour of the world—the same Saviour who offered himself on the cross a sacrifice for their sins, and who now appears in the heart, there to crucify the old man with his deeds, and to enable His obedient disciples to follow Him in the regeneration.

H. W. S. discourages this slow method of obtaining salvation, and as a substitute for this safe and sure pathway, marked by the footsteps of the flock of Christ's companions, we are directed to a faith which we can exercise at our pleasure, "Just begin from now and say, 'Lord, I believe that this is what the Lord Jesus Christ died for, and that I can get rid of the old man and put on the new.'" Such a faith is but the working of our own nature, and not that Divine gift, which alone is effectual.

Imagination takes the place of experience. "*Reckon, dear friends, that you are dead to sin and alive to God in Christ Jesus, and then go on reckoning. * * * I know you will find it to your surprise.*"

There is but one way in which we can obtain saving faith, be redeemed from the power of sin, and know our past transgressions forgiven for the sake of Christ, and thus find our salvation secured; and that is by being brought into union with His Light or Spirit inwardly revealed. This union, with all its glorious and saving results, is the experience of those who humbly, submissively and reverently walk in the Light of Christ. And so long as any continue in this state they are safe, but in wandering from it they are exposed to danger. This is the path, which the vulture's eye hath not seen, nor the lion's whelp trodden, but the wayfaring man, though a fool, shall not err therein.

The theory of a "higher life," as advocates of which, R. P. and H. W. Smith have obtained considerable notice, is founded on the erroneous idea, that we can obtain forgiveness of sins, through an exercise of faith in Christ, without having experienced the sanctifying work of the Spirit. Hence they desire (and the feeling is a laudable one in those holding such views) to impress upon nominal Christians, the importance of obtaining practical holiness, which they term the "higher life." But the true Christian doctrine, and that ever held by the Society of Friends, is, that true faith in Christ, and the forgiveness of sins, are inseparably connected with the sanctifying work of the Spirit, and cannot be known without it; and that all other faith is a dead faith, and all other hope of salvation a delusion. Thus George Fox says, "So far as a man is sanctified, so far is he justified, and no further."

It is a mournful thought, that many well-meaning persons are in danger of being drawn aside by such views as are contained in the address above referred to, and thus led to seek an easier path to the kingdom, than that of the daily cross, or else to have their judgment confused on important points of Christian practice. And it is especially to be regretted that Friends in England should have practically promoted the spread of such sentiments among their own members, by the encouragement they have given to those who advocated them. This willingness on the part of some of them to bring persons holding and propagating such views as are here pointed out, into contact with their members, was strikingly manifested by having a day set apart during the late Quarterly Meeting at York, for this especial object; information being given by an advertisement, to which were attached the names of nine or ten members,—of whom, several were in the station of ministers in the Society, and one had lately visited this country with certificates. It is also further indicated by the fact, that during the Conference of the First day School Association of Friends at Darlington, three meetings were arranged to be held, called "Devotional Meetings," to which it was understood these persons were to be received; and this with the sanction, it is fair to presume, of the Clerk of the Yearly Meeting, whose name is appended to the announcement of the meetings to be held there.

It seems to us beyond controversy, that such sentiments can never be owned as the doctrines of Friends; but that those who hold them and adhere to them, must finally leave the Society, or it will be broken up.

We truly desire that Friends everywhere may be awakened to a sense of the responsibility that rests upon them, to maintain those doctrines and testimonies committed to us by the Head of the church; while at the same time they are preserved in that feeling of love to the whole human family, which will keep out an uncharitable and judging spirit. In this course, we are persuaded, they will more efficiently promote the spread of the Redeemer's kingdom in the earth, than by joining with any movements or doctrines that are not in strict accordance therewith.

In the 48th number of "The Friend," it is stated that on the 10th ult. five persons were drowned by the overturning of a boat in which they were sailing in an excursion on the ocean. The company consisted of D. Offley Sharpless, Esther his wife, their daughter Caroline, and son Alfred Sharpless, Anna W. Roberts, daughter of Elisha and Elizabeth Roberts, proprietors of Chalfonte House, Atlantic City, and three other persons, including the owner of the boat. Those whose names are given were all lost. The bodies of the drowned have subsequently, at different periods, been recovered, and interred at the burial places of the respective families. The bodies of D. O. Sharpless and A. W. Roberts, the last recovered, were seen to arise about midway of the "Inlet" at Atlantic City, on the 9th inst., thirty days after the accident occurred, and by prompt attention of kind friends restored to their families. Their interment took place on the following day. At that of A. W. Roberts at Moorestown, a meeting was held, which was attended by a large number of sympathising friends and connexions.

We have received a copy of a pamphlet entitled, "A Reviewer Reviewed. The Quaker Doctrine of the Inward Light Vindicated," &c., and the Friend who, we suppose, sent it, puts the query whether we unite with a letter contained in said pamphlet, signed Joseph Potts? It seems hardly necessary to say we do not, but we do not see any sufficient cause for us to notice it further.

SUMMARY OF EVENTS.

FOREIGN.—The amount of specie in the Bank of England having recently largely increased, the Directors of the Bank on the 20th inst., reduced the rate of interest on loans from 4 per cent to 3½ per cent.

The Mark Lane Express, in its weekly review of the breadstuffs market, says of wheat: There is little difference in prices since the last report, although the tendency is downward. France is sending back here cargoes shipped hence. The crops here and in France are mostly secured, and dependence of both countries on foreigners is materially lessened. The latest estimates place our crop at seven per cent. below the average.

The shore end of the United States direct cable has been laid at Caherciveen, near Valentia, Ireland. The steamship Faraday, which is to lay the deep sea section, was expected at Caherciveen the 22d inst.

The jute imported into Great Britain in 1873, is returned at 4,643,438 cwt., of the value of £3,634,577. The import of last year is nearly three times greater than that of 1866.

London, 8th mo. 24th.—Consols, 92½. U. S. sixes, 108⅞; 5 per cents 104⅝.

Liverpool.—Uplands cotton, 8⅛*d.*; Orleans, 8¼ a 8⅜*d.*

According to the Registrar General's quarterly returns just published, the births registered during the three months ending June 30th throughout the United Kingdom, amounted to 288,476, the deaths to 167,444, showing a consequent increase in the population of 120,732.

A London dispatch of the 22d says: The Russian government has refused to recognize the Spanish Republic, and it is in consequence of this that other Powers delay the complete recognition; but it is reported that the governments of Austria and Germany have sent credentials to their representatives at Madrid.

A Madrid dispatch of the 21st announces that Serrano has signed full credentials for the representatives of Spain at European capitals.

The Carlist General Tristany has captured Seo de Urgel, 67 miles north-east of Lerida. The losses heavy on both sides. A large quantity of military stores and thirty-two cannon fell into the hands of the Carlists. A Madrid dispatch attributes the surrender of the citadel to treachery. The entire garrison, 485 men, were taken prisoners. The Carlists are besieging other places in the north of Spain. A second engagement is reported at Oteiza between General Moriones and the Carlists, in which the former was defeated and driven back to Larraga.

In consequence of the confiscation of the property of the Carlists by the Spanish government, Prince Alfonso has issued an order to the troops under his command announcing that retaliatory measures will be taken.

The Carlists have extinguished the lights on the Spanish coast between San Salvador and Bilboa.

The German ships of war Nautilus and Albatross, have arrived at Santander, where they were well received.

Legal proceedings have been instituted against several French newspapers because of the publication in those journals of Bazaine's letter in relation to his escape. The proceedings are based upon the law prohibiting the printing of articles signed by persons deprived of civil and political rights.

President MacMahon is making a provincial tour through the Republic, and is generally well received. At Morlain he met with a strong Republican demonstration. A Paris dispatch of the 21st says: The French government reminds the newspapers in an official note that the publication of articles signed by those deprived of civil and political rights, is prohibited by law.

President MacMahon had a grand reception at Brest to-day, and reviewed the troops. There was a display of fireworks, and the city was illuminated.

Marshal Bazaine expected to be in England in a few days. He has written a letter to the Minister of the Interior in which he says that neither Colvetti nor any other prisoner now in custody is responsible for his escape. He declares that he had no accomplices in the fort or elsewhere except his wife and nephew. He describes how he eluded the surveillance of his jailors; and in conclusion says: "Resenting the humiliating prison regulations, I felt justified in attempting to recover my liberty. As I was not tried by my peers my sentence was illegal."

A Geneva dispatch states that leaders of the ultramontane party are coming to Geneva from France, Belgium, Austria and Germany for conference.

The Brussels Congress has adjourned. The delegates have transmitted for ratification to their respective governments the resolutions which were adopted, and which merely enlarge the humane provisions of the General Convention.

The King of Denmark has returned to Copenhagen from his visit to Iceland. He was accompanied from England by his daughter the Princess of Wales.

A Hong Kong dispatch says: The Chinese government has given Japan ninety days to withdraw its troops from the island of Formosa. In the meantime China is making extensive preparations for war with Japan, which it is generally believed will ensue.

There was a very severe typhoon at Nagasaki, Japan, on the 20th inst. Great damage was done to property on shore and shipping in the harbor, and a considerable number of persons lost their lives.

The plans of the railway which is to ascend Mount Vesuvius are now complete. The route will be 16.1 miles in length. The grades are 20 and 35 feet in the hundred, and the road terminates at a few feet from the crater. There will be one station, protected by a sort of break-lava, which will divert the flow, in case of eruption, from the building and rails. The road is so laid out as to be naturally sheltered at every point, except for a distance of about sixty feet.

In the ten days ending the 20th ult., thirty-one ships passed through the Suez Canal, paying $120,400 transit dues.

UNITED STATES.—There were 682 deaths in New York last week.

The interments in Philadelphia numbered 355, including 181 children under two years.

General Custer, with a scientific corps and a military force of one thousand men, cavalry and infantry, was recently sent by the government to explore a region in the southwestern part of Dakota and eastern border of Wyoming, known as the Black Hills. They cover a district of country supposed to be about one hundred miles in diameter, nearly encircled by two large rivers, branches of the Cheyenne, whose tributaries take their rise in these hills. The centre of the region is nearly in lat. 44 deg. and long. 104 deg. west. Gen. Custer in his official report declares that for richness and beauty the country is unsurpassed by any which he has ever seen. The main portion of it consists of beautiful parks or valleys, near or through each of which flows a stream of pure, clear, cold water, while bounding these valleys are invariably found unlimited supplies of timber. He says: "In no portion of the United States, not excepting the famous blue grass region of Kentucky, have I ever seen grazing superior to that found growing wild in this hitherto unknown region. I know of no portion of our country where nature has done so much to prepare homes for husbandmen and left so little for the latter to do as here. The open and timbered spaces are so divided that a partly prepared farm of almost any dimensions, from an acre upwards, can be found here. Not only is the land cleared, and timbered, both for fuel and building, conveniently located, with a stream of fine water flowing through its length and breadth, but nature ofttimes seems to have gone further and placed beautiful shrubbery and evergreens in the most desirable location for building sites." Moisture is evidently abundant within the space enclosed by the Black Hills, and the soil is that of a rich garden, and composed of a fine grained dark mould. Black and red raspberries, strawberries and other fruits of delicious flavor, were found in abundance. Large game, such as elk, deer and bears, of course, were found in great numbers. But little search was made for gold, but wherever the earth was examined it was found in greater or less quantity.

The steamship Colima arrived at Yokohama, Japan, on the 2nd inst., in seventeen days and thirteen hours from San Francisco, being the quickest passage ever made between the two ports.

The Markets, &c.—The following were the quotations on the 24th inst. New York.—American gold, 109¾. U. S. sixes, 1881, registered, 117⅞; do. coupons, 118⅜; do. 1868, registered, 116¾; coupons, 117¾; new five per cents, 112⅝. Superfine flour, $5 a $5.10; State extra, $5.10 a $5.30; finer brands, $5.50 a $10.65. No. 2 Chicago spring wheat, $1.19; amber western, $1.24; white Kentucky, $1.38. Rye, 90 a 92 cts. Yellow corn, 83 cts. Oats, 50 a 55 cts. Philadelphia.—Middlings cotton, 16¾ a 17¼ cts. for uplands and New Orleans. Superfine flour, $3.50 a $4; extras, $4 a $5.25; finer brands, $5 a $8.75. Red wheat, $1.25 a $1.26; amber, $1 29 a $1.35; white, $1.25 a $1.35. Yellow and mixed corn, 86 a 87 cts. Oats, 55 a 56 cts. Lard, 15 cts. About 3500 beef cattle sold at 7 a 7½ cts. per lb. gross for extra, 5½ a 6¾ cts. for fair to good, and 3 a 5 cts. for common. Of sheep 15,000 were sold at 4 a 6 cts. per lb. gross, and 4500 hogs at $11 a $12 per 100 lbs. net. Baltimore.—Choice white wheat, $1.37 a $1.38; fair to prime do., $1.15 a $1.30; choice amber, $1.35; good to prime red, $1.20 a $1.30. Yellow corn, 80 a 82 cts.; southern white, 92 a 93 cts. Oats, 49 a 51 cts. Chicago.—No. 1 spring wheat, 99 cts.; No. 2 do., 89½ cts. No. 2 corn, 65 cts. No. 2 oats, 42 cts. Rye, 74 cts. Spring barley, 90 cts. Lard, 15 cts. St. Louis.—No. 2 winter red wheat, $1.15; No. 3 do., $1.05 a $1.07. No. 2 corn, 69½ cts. Oats, 45 cts. Rye, 85 a 90 cts. Lard, 15¼ cts.

RECEIPTS.

Received from Clarkson Moore, Pa., $2, vol. 48; from Jeremiah Foster, R. I., $2, vol. 48; from Sarah Greene, R. I., $2, vol. 48, and for Eliza G. Sheffield, Conn., $2, vol. 48; from Daniel Satterthwaite, N. J., $2, vol. 48, and for Samuel Satterthwaite and William Satterthwaite, Mich., Reuben Satterthwaite, Del., and Daniel Satterthwaite, N. Y., $2 each, vol. 48; from Joshua Embree, Pa., $2, vol. 48; from Mary Thistlethwaite, N. Y., $2, vol. 48; from Joel Wilson, Agent, N. J., $2, vol. 48, and for Walker Moore, Samuel Alsop, Jr., and Isaac C. Stokes, $2 each, vol. 48; from Deborah D. Horney, Ind., per Samuel Allen, $2, vol. 48; from Hannah W. Williams for Aaron K. Williams, Io., $2, vol. 48; from William Berry, Gtn., City, $2, vol. 48; from Susan J. Yerkes, Fkd., City, $2, vol. 48; for Amos Lee, Pa., $2, vol. 48; from David F. Knowles, Vt., per Robert Knowles, $2, to No. 42, vol. 48; from Isaac Cowgill, O., $2, vol. 48, and for Joseph Cowgill, $2, vol. 48; from William J. Evans, N. J., $2, vol. 48, and for Amos Evens, $2, vol. 48, for Joseph Evans, $2, vol. 48, and for Samuel Cooper, $2, vol. 48; from Rachel Cope, O., $2, vol. 48; from Dr. Joseph Warrington, N. J., $2, vol. 48; from Henry Knowles, Agent, N. Y., for David Peckham, Benjamin Boss, Robert Knowles, John J. Peckham, John P. Carpenter, Margaret P. Knowles, Chester A. Weaver, and Alonzo Knowles, $2 each, vol. 48; from Stacy Cook, O., per William Cook, $2, vol. 48; from Morris Cope, Pa., $2, vol. 48; from N. Newlin Stokes, M. D., N. J., $2, vol. 48; from Joseph S. Moore, City, $2, vol. 48, and for Walker Moore and William Wickersham, Pa., $2 each, vol. 48; from Charles Stokes, Agent, N. J., for Rachel E. Haines and Levi Troth, $2 each, vol. 48; from Edward G. Smedley, Pa., $2, vol. 48; from Nathan Cook, N. Y., $2, vol. 48; from William H. Blackburn, O., for Israel Cope, James Heald, Wilson Hall, Nathan H. Armstrong, and Meader Allman, $2 each, vol. 48; from John A. Potter, Agent, N. Y., $2, vol. 48, and for Freelove Owen, $2, vol. 48; from Lewis Passmore, Pa., per William Kite, $2, vol. 48; from William C. Stokes, N. J., $2, vol. 48; from Hannah Stevenson, Ill., $2, vol. 48; from Benjamin D. Stratton, Agent, O., $2, vol. 48, and for Samuel Barber, Edward Y. Cope, Hannah Gilbert, Christiana Kirk, Uriah Price, and Joseph Winder, $2 each, vol. 48, and for Charles W. Satterthwaite, $2, to No. 19, vol. 49; from Benjamin Sharpless, Pa., $2, vol. 48; from Ann H. Bacon, N. J., $2, vol. 48; from Charles T. Westcombe, Mo., per John Bell, Agent, $2, vol. 48; from Isaac Roberts, Pa., $2, vol. 48; from Samuel Shaw, O., $2, vol. 48, and for Levi Boulton, Linton Hall, Benjamin Harrison, Jonathan Blackburn, Phebe Ellyson, Thomas Blackburn, Daniel Blackburn, Jehu Allman, Job Huestis, and Barak Ashton, $2 each, vol. 48, and for Francis Bartley, Mich., $2, to No. 22, vol. 49; from E. W. South, M. D., N. J., $2, vol. 48; from E. J. Richards, City, $2, vol. 48; from Henry R. Post, L. I., $2, vol. 48; from Stephen H. Foster, Ill., $2, vol. 48; from Rebecca S. Conard, Sen., Pa., $2, vol. 48, and for G. T. Satterthwaite, $2, vol. 48; from Charles DeCou, N. J, $2, vol. 48; from Harriet J. Smedley, City, $2, vol. 48; from Hannah Kite, Pa., $2, vol. 48; from John Woolman, City, $2, vol. 48; from Samuel T. Balderston, City, $2, vol. 48; from Mary Ann Chambers, Pa., $2, vol. 48; from Richard C. Shoemaker, Pa., $2, vol. 48; from Sarah Hoopes, Pa., $2, vol. 48; from Micajah M. Morlan, Agent, O., for Daniel Boulton, Rachel S. French, William Darlington, Samuel Street, Theophilus Morlan, Mordecai Morlan, Sarah Ann Cope, Josiah Fawcett, Anna Macy, Elizabeth Hunt, and Richard B. Fawcett, $2 each, vol. 48; from William Smedley, Pa., $2, vol. 48; from Martha T. Cox, Gtn., City, $2 vol. 48; from Stephen Hobson, Agent, O., for Rachel Arnold, Thomas Bundy, John Naylor, Thomas Hobson, and John S. Fowler, $2 each, vol. 48; for Asenath A. Cooper, Pa., $2, vol. 48; from Elizabeth D. Meredith, Pa., $2, vol. 48; from Elisha Brackin, O., $2, vol. 48, and for Lindley M. Brackin, $2, vol. 48; from Nancy B. Buffinton, Mass., $2, vol. 48; from Joseph Scattergood, Jr., Agent, Pa., for Edward H. Hall, Amy C. Hoopes, George B. Mellor, Mary E. Pim, Isaac Hayes, Gilbert Cope, Lucy Cope, Rebecca Conard and Esther Jackson, Aaron Sharpless, Sydney Sharpless, William P. Townsend and Thomas Thorp, $2 each, vol. 48, and for John Scarlet, $4 50, vols. 47 and 48; from Charles L. Willits, N. J., $2, vol. 48; from James Harkness, Io., $2, vol. 48, and for Russell Taber and Nathaniel McDonald, $2 each, vol. 48; from Martha Taylor, N. J., $2, to No. 44, vol. 48; from Penelope Smith, N. J., $2, vol. 48.

Remittances received after Fourth-day morning will not appear in the Receipts until the following week.

RASPBERRY ST. SCHOOLS FOR COLORED ADULTS.

Teachers will he wanted for these schools, to be opened 10th mo. 5th. Applications may be made to
Thomas Elkinton, 118 Pine St.
Elton B. Gifford, 719 Market St.
James Bromley, 641 Franklin St.
George J. Scattergood, 413 Spruce St.

HADDONFIELD BOARDING & DAY SCHOOL.

Under the care of Haddonfield Monthly Meeting, and taught by REBECCA ALLEN, will open 8th mo. 31st.

Children of both sexes will be taken to board in the family on moderate terms. Apply to REBECCA ALLEN, Haddonfield, N. J.

WANTED.

A suitable Friend to take the position of Writing Teacher and Assistant Governor at Westtown Boarding School—for next Session. Apply to
Charles Evans, 702 Race street, Philadelphia,
Clarkson Sheppard, Greenwich, New Jersey,
Joseph Walton, Moorestown, New Jersey.

SHELTER FOR COLORED ORPHANS.

Wanted, a Teacher for this Institution, to enter upon her duties 1st of 10th mo. Apply to Hannah R. Newbold, 643 Franklin St.
Mary Wood, 524 South Second St.
Mary Randolph, 247 North Twelfth St.
Sarah Richie, 444 North Fifth St.

FRIENDS' SELECT SCHOOLS.

These schools, under the care of the three Monthly Meetings of Friends in this city, will re-open on Second-day, Ninth mo. 7th, 1874. The Boys' School, on Cherry St., above Eighth St., is under the care of Zebedee Haines, as Principal. The Girls' School, on Seventh St., below Race St., is under the care of Margaret Lightfoot. There are also two Primary Schools for the instruction of those children who are too young to attend the higher schools; one of which is held in the Meeting-house at the corner of Sixth and Noble streets, taught by Deborah Brooks, the other in the Boys' School building on Cherry street, under the care of Susanna House.

The attention of Friends residing in this city and its neighborhood is particularly invited to these schools. The terms are moderate, and by provisions recently made for that purpose, Friends belonging to Philadelphia Yearly Meeting, sending children to these schools, (also members) who may find the charges burdensome, can be fully relieved. In the principal schools opportunities are afforded of obtaining a liberal education in useful branches of Study, and in the Latin and Greek languages. Facilities for illustration are afforded by a valuable collection of philosophical apparatus, minerals, and Anzoux's models of parts of the human system, &c. French is also taught in the Girls' school. In the primary schools the children are well grounded in studies of a more elementary character.

It is desirable that applications for admission of children should be made early, and that parents returning children to the schools should send them at the beginning of the term.

Further information may be obtained upon application to the Treasurer of the Committee,
JAMES SMEDLEY, No. 415 Market street.

HAVERFORD COLLEGE.

The next Term will commence on Fourth-day, 9th mo. 2nd, 1874. Applications for admissions should be addressed to SAMUEL J. GUMMERE, President,
Haverford College, Montgomery Co., Pa.

FRIENDS' ASYLUM FOR THE INSANE.

Near Frankford, (Twenty-third Ward,) Philadelphia.

Physician and Superintendent—JOSHUA H. WORTHINGTON, M. D.

Applications for the Admission of Patients may be made to the Superintendent, or to any of the Board of Managers.

WILLIAM H. PILE, PRINTER,
No. 422 Walnut Street.

THE FRIEND.

A RELIGIOUS AND LITERARY JOURNAL.

VOL. XLVIII. SEVENTH-DAY, NINTH MONTH 5, 1874. NO. 3.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY.

Price Two Dollars per annum, if paid in advance. Two dollars and fifty cents, if not paid in advance.

Subscriptions and Payments received by

JOHN S. STOKES,

AT NO. 115 NORTH FOURTH STREET, UP STAIRS.

PHILADELPHIA.

Postage, when paid quarterly in advance, five cents.

For "The Friend."

Christian Charity.

"And now abideth faith, hope, charity; these three; but the greatest of these is charity." 1 Cor. xiii. 13.

The pre-eminence given by the apostle to charity as one of the Christian virtues, over both faith and hope, is a fact that may perhaps deserve more consideration than we usually accord to it; and some thoughts in this connection have suggested themselves, which are subjoined.

Charity, as spoken of in this place, is evidently not what we usually understand by that term when applied to mere almsgiving, as the apostle in the same chapter declares that one may bestow all his goods to feed the poor; and yet not exercise charity. His definition of the term may be best found in his own statement of its attributes. First, he tells us that "charity suffereth long and is kind." How different from the feeling that usually actuates even highly professing christians when sustaining some injury from a fellow being? A jealous competition in business unjustly insinuates that our mode of dealing is not what it appears to be on the surface, or that we give short weight or measure. A fellow-passenger on a railroad train, during our brief absence from the car, appropriates a seat that we had previously occupied and are entitled rightfully again to resume. The first impulse is to assert our rights, or vindicate our innocence of the charges preferred, and that perhaps in the heat of wounded feelings. We do not suffer long and bear the injustice kindly, as taught by Paul; are not in that state of mind alluded to by Christ: "But I say unto you resist not evil; and if any man will sue thee at the law and take away thy coat, let him have thy cloak also." Nay, it would rather be esteemed a proof of cowardly want of spirit to act thus by most. The injunction of our holy Pattern in such cases is, that we should "be not overcome with evil, but overcome evil with good." Did we live and act thoroughly up to this spirit, let us examine for a moment what effect such an example of christian conduct might produce. Would not the wrong-doer have brought home to him a clearer proof of unselfish motive to serve our Redeemer, than any mere profession could indicate? How convincing to the worldling would this be of the reality of Divine grace as a rule of action! How brightly the light would glow from such a candlestick!

Again, "charity thinketh no evil." Ah! whose thoughts are thus practically brought into captivity unto the obedience of Christ! No unnecessary suspicions entertained or expressed concerning the secret motives of a fellow professor whose sentiments may not run in our particular groove. No insinuations that one of our acquaintances is no better than he or she ought to be. No secret satisfaction in finding that some one who had stood high in public estimation had descended to an unworthy action, or was guilty of crime. I think Machiavelli asserts that "there is something in the misfortunes of our best friends that does not displease us." This remark opens a crevice through which we may glance at a very dark phase of human nature unrenewed by grace, but it is only a step lower than other forms of selfishness which do not shock us so abruptly.

"Charity envieth not." How difficult is it to repress the secret risings of envy, when success or promotion attends the lives of our cotemporaries, whilst we labor under failure and disappointment. The apostle tells us that in the church when one member suffers, his fellow members suffer with him; if one is honored, all the others should rejoice. That every one should strive, not to please himself, but to please his neighbor to edification. Surely most Christians may find room to grow deeper in this root of grace and Divine love. "Laying aside all guile, and all malice, and hypocrisies, and envies, and evil speakings, as new born babes desire the sincere milk of the word, that ye may grow thereby."

"Charity vaunteth not itself, is not puffed up." Bunyan gives the following account of the meeting of Christian and Faithful, in Pilgrim's Progress: "Now as Christian went on his way he came to a little ascent, which was cast up on purpose that pilgrims might see before them: up there, therefore, Christian went, and looking forward, he saw Faithful before him on his journey. Then said Christian aloud, Ho, ho! so ho! stay, and I will be your companion. At that Faithful looked behind him; to whom Christian cried again, Stay, stay till I come up to you. But Faithful answered, No, I am upon my life, and the avenger of blood is behind me. At this Christian was somewhat moved, and putting to all his strength, he quickly got up with Faithful, and did also overrun him, so the last was first. Then did Christian vaingloriously smile, because he had gotten the start of his brother; but not taking good heed to his feet, he suddenly stumbled and fell, and could not rise again until Faithful came up to help him."

Here is an apt illustration of vaunting oneself—Christian had overcome some temptation, we may suppose, which still beset Faithful, and the "vainglorious smile" with which he looked back on his fellow-traveller, the high opinion of his own spiritual attainments, with which he became "puffed up," rendered him oblivious to another snare, and hence his fall.

Charity "beareth all things, believeth all things, hopeth all things, endureth all things. Charity never faileth." This is, then, none other than a picture of that heavenly love which drew the only begotten Son from the Divine bosom to share the sorrows and bear the pains due to His rebellious sons, that they might not perish but have everlasting life. It is an emotion unknown to heathen philosophy, and foreign to the first and unrenewed nature. The beloved disciple was imbued with its spirit when he writes to the new converts in this strain: "Hereby perceive we the love of God, because He laid down his life for us: and we ought to lay down our lives for the brethren." It is portrayed in the example and injunction left on record by its Divine Author on the occasion of the last supper, in those memorable words: "If I then, your Lord and Master, have washed your feet, ye also ought to wash one another's feet;" and again, "this is my commandment, that ye love one another, as I have loved you." John Woolman had drank deeply at this exhaustless fount; and Isaac Penington fetched his inspiration from a kindred source when he wrote these strains of sweetness:

"What is love?

"Answer. What shall I say of it, or how shall I in words express its nature! It is the sweetness of life; it is the sweet, tender, melting nature of God, flowing up through his seed of life into the creature, and of all things making the creature most like unto himself, both in nature and operation. It fulfils the law, it fulfils the gospel; it wraps up all in one, and brings forth all in the oneness. It excludes all evil out of the heart, it perfects all good in the heart. A touch of love doth this in measure; perfect love doth this in fulness. But how can I proceed to speak of it! Oh! that the souls of all that fear and wait on the Lord might feel its nature fully; and then would they not fail of its sweet overcoming operations, both towards one another, and towards enemies. The great healing, the great conquest, the great salvation is reserved for the full manifestation of the love of God. His judgments, his cuttings, his hewings by the word of his mouth, are but to prepare for, but not to do, the great work of raising up the sweet building of his life, which is to be done in love, and in peace, and by the power thereof.

"Oh! how sweet is love! how pleasant is its nature! how takingly doth it behave itself in every condition, upon every occasion, to every person, and about every thing! How tenderly, how readily, doth it help and serve the meanest! How patiently, how meekly, doth it bear all things, either from God or man, how unexpectedly soever they come, or how hard soever they seem! How doth it believe, how doth it hope, how doth it excuse, how doth it cover even that which seemeth not to be excusable, and not fit to be covered! How kind is it even in its interpretations and charges concerning miscarriages! It never overchargeth, it never grates upon the spirit of him whom it reprehends; it never hardens, it never provokes; but carrieth a meltingness and power of conviction with it. This is the nature of God; this, in the vessels capacitated to receive and bring it forth in its glory, the power of enmity is not able to stand against, but falls before, and is overcome by."

Gas Wells.

Their Situation and Characteristics in Europe, Asia and America.

The chief component of natural gas is carburetted hydrogen, and its source may be traced to beds of bituminous material. The close resemblance of the flame of carburetted hydrogen gas to that of coal gas has led many to the conclusion that its origin is in the decomposition of coal. Noted geologists, however, hold that gas does not necessarily depend upon the presence of beds of coal, but is probably formed by the action of heat on the bituminous matter diffused through the strata of sandstone, slate, &c. This theory is supported by numerous gas springs and wells which are situated hundreds of miles from any coal deposit. In the autumn of 1870, while workmen were boring a well on the plantation of General Wade Hampton, gas was discovered at a depth of forty feet. The discovery caused considerable surprise, as there are no coal deposits in the neighborhood; and, furthermore, the well was sunk in "made" land, or, as it is sometimes called, "bottom" land, which at one time was the channel of the Mississippi river. The gas originated, in all probability, from a submerged forest, which in process of decomposition evolved the carburetted hydrogen gas.

Natural gas is usually without the disagreeable odor which accompanies that which is manufactured, and possesses a much greater heating power. For illuminating purposes on the average it does not equal the coal gas, although in many instances it is notably better, giving a most brilliant light. How long the flow of gas at any particular place will continue is a question which no one can answer with certainty. In some spots gas has issued incessantly for centuries, while in others the flow has ceased a day or two after the gas has been struck by boring. Borings that strike the fissures in the strata are the most promising.

Gas wells have been known for many centuries. Alexander the Great, according to Plutarch, found in Medea "a gulf of fire which streamed continuously as from an inexhaustible force." There are many of these wells in China known as "fire wells," and the gas which issues from them has been employed for hundreds of years for illumination, and also for evaporating salt.

The most remarkable gas well in the world is called the "Atashghah," or "Place of Fire," about two miles from the Russian town of Baku, on the west coast of the Caspian Sea. This "everlasting fire" has for many centuries been considered sacred, and is an object of reverence to pilgrims from Persia, India, and other countries. It is recorded that early in the tenth century a temple was raised there to which thousands of pilgrims flocked. A temple still stands on the spot, but it is not known whether or not it is the original one. Four low walls enclosed the hallowed grounds. A square tower resting on four columns stands in the centre, enclosing a small cavity in the ground into which the gas is conveyed by a pipe. Recesses or cells in the surrounding walls serve as lodging-rooms for the pilgrims. Each one has a gas jet which furnishes light and heat to the inmates, while a rug serves them as a covering. The central structure is appropriated to religious uses; the flame is constantly burning in it, the worshippers being persuaded that it has always done so, and that it will continue so to do to the end of the world. In that region gas issues from the ground whenever a hole is made in the surface. This being lighted, the fire becomes not only an object of adoration, but an assistance to the worshippers in their culinary operations, and also supplies heat during the winter season.

A burning well at Aucliff, near Wigan, in Lancashire, England, in 1660, attracted considerable attention, the general opinion being that the waters were inflammable, like oil. Thomas Shirley, in an account published in 1667, held that the flame was caused by the combustion of bituminous fumes issuing from the water, and these arose from the coal bed which underlies all that part of the country. Dr. Clayton experimented with this gas. He distilled it, filled bladders with it, and exhibited it to his friends, the gas burning like a candle; yet no practical good resulted from his experiments, as it was nearly a century later when coal gas was used for illuminating purposes.

In 1711, in the same country, a spring was discovered at Brosely, in Shropshire, near the river Severn, which burned with great violence. A candle attached to a stick would ignite the gas when held at a distance of two feet from the water, and the flames would flash and flicker with great vigor. The owner of the land made considerable money by exhibiting the spring to visitors.

Springs of gas have been found in the volcanic regions of the Apennines, in Italy, Hungary, Greece, Germany and other countries of Europe; but very little is known about them.

In the United States there are numerous gas wells and springs, particularly in the States of Ohio, Pennsylvania and New York. The gas has issued from the ground for years, but it has rarely been made useful until within the past few years. In boring for oil great quantities of gas have been liberated, and, indeed, the "oil fever" may be credited with furnishing a vastly enlarged knowledge of its many admirable qualities to mankind.

The town of Fredonia, in western New York, twelve miles from Dunkirk, and about three miles south of Lake Erie, has been lighted for about fifty years by natural gas. The flow from the gas springs in that neighborhood has been continuous for more than forty years, with scarcely any perceptible diminution. The gas was discovered in 1827, while some persons were taking down an old mill which stood on the edge of a small stream called the Canadaway, running through the town. Bubbles were first noticed rising to the surface of the water, and a light being applied they were found to be inflammable. Sometime afterwards, a company being formed, a bore with a diameter of an inch and a half was made through the soft limestone rock. A gasometer was then constructed in a small wooden building, and to this the gas was conveyed through a tube. This reservoir was filled in about fifteen hours. It had a capacity of two hundred and twenty cubic feet, and furnished a good supply for seventy or eighty lights, the gas being distributed through pipes. When the Lake Erie lighthouse was erected pipes were laid to it from Fredonia, but as the site of the building was much lower than Fredonia, the gas would not descend, and the project was abandoned.

At Bloomfield, in Ontario county, there has been a gas well for many years. A company of capitalists lately purchased the ground in which the well is situated, with the object of supplying the city of Rochester, some twenty-six miles distant, with gas for illuminating purposes. A bore was made to the depth of five hundred feet, and the gas conveyed in wooden pipes to Rochester, where it was introduced a few months ago. The flow of gas at the well was estimated at 800,000 cubic feet a day; but it has been found that only 25,000 cubic feet reached Rochester each day, a large proportion escaping through the leakage of the pipes.

To determine exactly the flow of gas at the well a novel experiment was tried, under the direction of Samuel A. King, the well-known Boston æronaut. With two balloons—one of a capacity of 20,000 cubic feet and the other of 13,000 cubic feet—the dimensions being accurately computed by expert mathematicians, he took the flow of gas from the well for a certain period of time, and the result showed that the flow was about 4,000 cubic feet per hour. It is thought that the orifice at the bottom of the bore-hole where the gas first made its escape is very narrow, and obstructed by stones, and it is the intention of the company to complete the hole, and also to drill a new hole as near the present well as practicable. In 1871 the Buffalo Gaslight Company bored a well for gas, six hundred and twenty feet deep, with great success.

Numerous springs of inflammable gas have been found at various places near the shores of Lake Erie, in this State, the most remarkable being situated at Fredonia, Van Beuren Harbor, Sheridan and Westfield. At Portland Harbor the gas is employed to illuminate the lighthouse, situated seventy-five feet above the level of the lake. Gasport, near Lockport, in Niagara county, received its name from the gas springs in the neighborhood. The story goes that a party of Rensselaer students, accompanied by Professor Eaton, while on a geological tour passed through the village when it was building, and suggested the name of Gasport to the inhabitants. On their return they found that the name had been placed on the tavern signboard. Near Riga, in Monroe county, there are springs which evolve gas in such quantities as to supply a constant flame. About forty years ago a farmer near Canandaigua conveyed through bored logs the gas which issued from crevices in the ground to his house, where it was used for both illuminating and culinary purposes.

(To be concluded.)

Never let us sit in judgment upon the ways of God; repine against His providences; nor find fault with His arrangements.

For "The Friend."

Sophia Hume.

The 3d volume of "Piety Promoted," contains a short account of this Friend, from which it appears she was born in South Carolina, about the year 1701. Her grand parents were valuable Friends and able ministers of our religious Society, but Sophia's mother, though she continued in profession with Friends, married out of the Society. Her daughter was consequently educated agreeably to her father's mind; and in her younger years took great delight in the pleasures and delusive amusements of this world. About the thirty-eighth year of her age, her judgment was opened to see the vanity and folly of these practices; and she in measure forsook them, but it was not until the year 1741 that she was fully convinced of the truth of Friends' principles, and became a steady exemplary member of the Society. The perusal of Barclay's Apology appears to have been the means, in the divine hand, of bringing about this important change.

She afterwards removed from South Carolina to reside in London, and about the year 1747 a concern came upon her to visit the inhabitants of her native country, to which she returned. While living there she sent the following account in a letter to a friend:

"A concern I had often felt for the happiness and eternal welfare of the people of my native country revived in my breast; when I was to return and abase myself, by telling what God had done for my soul, and to call them from those things, in which I had often run to an excess of riot with them; and from which I had been, by the great love and powerful hand of God, brought and redeemed. When I arrived in Carolina, I found it my place and duty to keep meetings, with those few that professed with me; and though at first the meetings were sometimes interrupted by the rude and uncivil treatment of many, we met pretty quietly, and some of the inhabitants would now and then come and sit with us, to whom my mouth was open at times in rehearsing what God had done for my soul."

During her continuance there, she wrote a short account of the dealings of the Lord with her, which was soon after published. From thence she went by land to Philadelphia, a difficult journey of between eight and nine hundred miles. After her return to England she labored, both by word and writing, to bring the people to believe and live under the blessed influence and preserving power of the Spirit of Truth, which she had found, by happy experience, to be as a fountain of life.

In her private station she adorned the gospel by a life of humility and self-denial, and was zealous against superfluity, both in dress and furniture. Thus preserved through a course of many years, she manifested remarkable tenderness towards the close, and as if sensible that her dissolution was approaching, gave directions respecting her burial with much composure.

She died from apoplexy after a short illness, on the 26th of First mo. 1774. She was nearly seventy-three years of age, and had been a minister about twenty-five years.

"The trivial round, the common task,
Will furnish all we ought to ask,
Room to deny ourselves, a road
To bring us daily nearer God."

For "The Friend."

Richfield Springs.

Following up the headwaters of the Susquehanna into the eastern-central portion of the State of New York, we find, where the streams seem to hesitate between flowing into the Susquehanna on the west, or the Hudson on the east, nestled among the hills, the town of Richfield Springs. It is a small town, which, save in the season, has many of those old time attractions which still linger around it, quite pleasantly, in the primitive habits of the inhabitants of it and its surrounding neighborhood.

The town owes its name, and its celebrity as one of our Spas, to the presence in its midst, of one of the strongest sulphur springs in the country. Early in this century Dr. Manly settled where the town now stands, and was attracted by the water of the spring still known by his name. On trying it in his practice he found it very efficacious in skin diseases, as well as rheumatic and neuralgic affections, and the town gained an early celebrity, under him, for the use of these waters. As a proof of the primitiveness of that day, we may mention that patients were boarded at $1.25 a week, in the only tavern in the place. A marked change is noticable in this respect as well as some others. The doctor, now over eighty years of age, still walks the streets of the town which has grown up around him, with the firm step of a hale old man. The large hotels and the usual bustle connected with such health-restoring places, while they give the invalid visitors a cheering hope of benefit to their maladies, must contrast strangely in that old man's memory with the time when the primeval forest of white pine occupied the place of the fine buildings, well-kept turnpikes, and grass covered fields which now confront him at every turn.

First, as to the medical virtues of the spring. Here is an analysis of a gallon of its water:

	Grains per gallon.
Bi-carbonate magnesia,	20
Bi-carbonate lime,	10
Chloride sodium and magnesia,	15
Sulphate magnesia,	30
Hydro-sulphate magnesia and lime,	2
Sulphate of lime,	20
Solid matter,	152.5
Sulphuretted hydrogen gas	20.6 inches

These waters boil up in a spring, now covered with a suitable building, in great profusion, furnishing many hundred barrels a day. Curiously, this spring comes to the surface on a knoll of many feet elevation, apparently formed by its own deposits and incrustations. The water is very cold and furnished to every one who enters the enclosure by a lad who charges nothing for his attendance, though a notice on a box to please remember the dipper boy, is indicative of a willingness to receive a gratuity. The water is conveyed to large buildings where it is heated, and in which are situated bathing arrangements. Here the visitors—invalids of course—bathe; the water being raised to a temperature of from 90° to 110° according to the advice of competent medical authority. The usual time of bathing being about fifteen minutes: some taking a bath each day, others less frequently, as their cases may seem to demand. After the first feeling—shall we say of disgust?—at the scent arising from the steaming fluid has passed away, the sensation of lying quietly in it is very luxurious, and you forget all unpleasant associations after one or two visits to the bath rooms. But after all, the water is sulphur water, and, after many trials, we must confess to a distaste for, at least, drinking it. As we ride through the town, the proximity of the spring is indicated by a consciousness of an odor that makes the water so unpleasant to drink: sulphurous, faintly suggestive of stale eggs!—but still so cold as to be refreshing.

The routine of the day is about this: one tumbler—we never could avoid wasting a part of ours—before breakfast, a hearty meal—a bath at 11 o'clock—another glass of water—rest—dinner—a drink half an hour before tea—early tea and early retiring. Of course, according to your strength, rambling between times among the hills. The use of these waters must conform to the advice of your medical attendant: we merely sketch a routine which is quite common.

Bunyan, in his inimitable Pilgrim's Progress, gives us a character on crutches under the name of Ready-to-Halt; and the name of his invalid was often present to our mind as, in our daily walks through the town, we noticed the frequent halt in the gait of those we met, evincing, what we believe to be the case, that the healing virtues of these waters are among the chief attractions to the place. Health is a boon of so much value to us that a reasonable effort to attain it is obligatory on us, and hence a resort to such places in search of it is advisable—ever keeping in mind our duty to our fellow-men, as well as to our Divine Master, so to walk as to adorn our christian profession with all due fidelity.

Richfield Springs stands in a vale some 1000 feet above tide water, surrounded by hills rising many hundred feet higher. Of course the climate partakes of the character of this elevation. Our party, in the beginning of this month—the Eighth—being glad to sit by a fire oftentimes, and found a light waterproof or overcoat quite desirable in the early morning ramble. The crops also conform to the climate. We noticed little wheat, it not being often sown; a few fields of rye—buckwheat taking the place of these grains: and very pleasant was the odor wafted to us across these buckwheat fields—suggestive of honey, by a natural association of taste and smell. Corn, diminutive in height, but productive in yield, and peculiarly rich as a food, is freely grown. One of the crops was new to us and looked strange—hops. To see what we were accustomed to find in one corner of a garden on one or two poles, growing by the acre, was a curiosity to us, and we would have been willing to have been there when they gathered them. Strange looking buildings with conical, half steeple like projections on the roof, indicated the necessity of artificial drying in the curing of this crop, but except these we saw nothing as to the preparation for market. Oats grow finely there, and we saw these occasionally sown with peas for a winter crop.

But this is preëminently a grass country. The hills are often very steep and difficult to cultivate, while the rich soil produces luxuriant crops of native grasses. Farming being principally confined to the leveller portions of the fields, while cattle and sheep—mostly the former—range the more elevated parts, the result is naturally shown in the market produce of the surrounding country. Already, ere we left, had we noticed team after team pass by toward the railroad depot loaded with those round boxes we have grown familiar with as containing New York cheese. So rich are these that they have a high value, even in England, supplanting the cheese-maker of the old country in his home market.

But there was one production of these fields that we always looked upon with sorrow, beautiful in its fine foliage and delicate pink flowers though it is, and that was the Canada thistle. Over all these hills we found this noxious weed spread—to our eyes a sad blot on the landscape.

Health permitting, the rambles over the hills surrounding this pleasant spot are peculiarly interesting. These rise around you without any regularity, often steep enough to try both your strength and your lungs, yet presenting at every turn such new and beautiful varieties of landscape that we never tired in beholding them, or ceased enjoying them. Situated near the head of a lake, Canadarago, five miles in length, almost every hill we climbed presented a view of that sheet of water, while other lakes are to be seen in a near circuit of the town. One hill we mounted gave us a view of the Adirondacks on the one hand and the Catskills on the other, while the valleys which lay at our feet were pictures fit for a poet's eye. Indeed we found a rich charm to our rambles in the ever recurring views of farm houses nestling below us, mostly painted white, and surrounded by orchard or other trees, half hidden by the summer foliage, and all the more suggestive of comfort from their privacy. Among the native trees of this region we never tired of admiring the beautiful elms of these hills. Graceful in their tall stems and weeping branches, they always adorned the landscape, and being new to us were the more attractive.

This section of New York abounds in fossiliferous limestone, and many pleasant recollections cluster around the memory, of rambles with a dear young friend in search of these evidences of by-gone ages. On one of the highest peaks, Round Top, there has been erected an observatory 70 feet high, the top of which commands a most extended and interesting view over many miles of varied and broken landscape, one of the most attractive features of which was the numerous lakes seen glittering in the sun. The climb to the top of this building was fatiguing, but well repaid the toil of the ascent.

Our visit to Richfield Springs will long be pleasantly remembered by us.

W.

Eighth mo. 1874.

Boiled Hammers.—Old Dr. Twitchell, of Keene, once wanted to blister some one in a farm-house, far from home. He had nothing with him to do it with. He asked his wife to find him a hammer. The article was brought out, put in a tea-kettle over the fire, and after the water steamed and bubbled well, he lifted it out and gently touched it to his patient in a half dozen spots, over the seat of pain, with very positive effect. Boiled hammers were, for many years, used in that neighborhood for pleurisy; and every old lady knew nothing was equal to a hammer, and there was a long dispute whether it should be a claw-hammer or not. The yeas finally conquered.—Sanitarian.

There were two boys in a school I used to go to when I was young, which was about forty years ago. One was remarkable for doing with promptness and perseverance whatever he undertook. The other had the habit of putting off everything he could. "I'll do it to-morrow," was his motto. "I'll do it now," was the motto of the other boy. The boy who loved to put things off had by far the best natural talent; but he was outstripped in the race of life by his neighbor, whose motto was, "I'll do it now." Let that be your motto. Never put off till to-morrow what you can do to-day.

Selected.

"NO ROOM IN THE INN."

A gentle girl one summer day,
At her pleasant work was sitting,
Weaving a web of changing thought,
With the mesh of her mazy knitting.

Her careless heart was open wide,
With never a watch a-near it;
An angel whispered a warning low,
But the maiden did not hear it.

To and fro, as her fingers sped,
The changing thoughts were speeding,
Filling her breast with unseemly quests
While she was never heeding.

Fancy had come with his dainty hues,
And a bright-winged Hope was there;
And together they fashioned a phantom life,
That had never a touch of care.

And fitful Purpose came flitting in,
And claimed him a lordly seat,
Though a face of shame, like a shadow came,
And lingered about his feet.

Ambition too, in a graceful garb,
Came in at the open door,
And a host of others found welcome there,
Where they oft had come before.

So the place was full with its noisy guests,
Like that Inn in the Eastern land;
And the maiden marked not a Silent One
Awhile at the threshold stand.

That morning alone in her quiet room,
She had asked, as His children may,
That he would come to her lowly heart,
And abide with her alway.

He heard, and answered—who ne'er forgot—
He came, but she did not know;
He could not 'bide with the restless tribe
That were surging to and fro.

He turned Him aside to a lowly heart,
The dwelling of sordid Care,
And the voice of sorrow was stilled within
By His peaceful presence there.

That night the maiden sought in vain
For the face of her wondrous guest;
The bitter song of the mocking throng
Echoed her eager quest.

Then she read again from the Holy Book,
How "there was no room in the Inn,"
For Him who came to free the world
From its weary load of sin.

And she wept to think how her crowded heart
Had no place for Him who died—
That she had not heeded the still small voice,
The voice of the Crucified!

—Presbyterian.

Selected.

TRUST IN GOD.

The child leans on its parent's breast,
Leaves there its cares and is at rest;
The bird sits singing by his nest,
And tells aloud
His trust in God, and so is blest
'Neath every cloud.

He has no store, he sows no seed;
Yet sings aloud, and doth not heed;
By flowing streams or grassy mead,
He sings to shame
Men who forget in fear of need,
A Father's name.

The Black Hills Discoveries.

Custer's expedition to the "Black Hills" country is interesting for two reasons: It gives official information concerning a tract of territory of which but little has hitherto been known; and it threatens to implicate the Government in some rather questionable business. As to the first point, let us describe where the Black Hills tract is, and then recite briefly the account which General Custer gives of a portion of it. There are several groups of "hills" in the Rocky Mountain region called "Black Hills." The particular group visited by Custer, it situated partly in Dakota and partly in Wyoming Territories. The north and south boundary line between the two territories, which is the one hundred and fourth meridian of west longitude, intersects these mountains, leaving about two-thirds of their surface on the east in Dakota, and about one-third, on the west, in Wyoming. The forty-fourth parallel of north latitude passes through the Black Hills about midway in the group; so that the situation may be described as at the intersection of the 44th parallel of latitude with longitude 104 west. The length of the tract of country thus situated is about one hundred and fifty miles north and south, and its breadth about seventy-five miles east and west. It is embraced within the two main forks of the Cheyenne River (one of the affluents of the Missouri,) and all of the water courses flowing out of the Black Hills drain into the Cheyenne through a rather bad lot of "bad lands." The high peaks in the Black Hills rise to elevations of from eight thousand to eleven thousand feet above the sea level. The valleys and "parks" described by General Custer are probably at elevations of from five thousand to seven thousand feet. We go into these particulars because very few people have anything more than a vague impression as to where these "Black Hills" are.

In his report of August 15th, General Custer gives a very favorable description of a portion of this "Black Hills" country, for it is to be borne in mind that he saw but a portion of it, and that the tract is quite limited, as already described. He found it to be a rugged country on its outside boundaries—hard to penetrate so as to get into the interior, but when once within the rugged walls he found grassy, well-watered valleys and "parks" (that is, fertile mountain plateaus,) with some timber, well sheltered against northern storms. These places were green, fresh and beautiful when the surrounding plains beyond the mountains were dry and parched. They are said to furnish "rich pasturage," and to be capable of growing all the grain crops excepting Indian corn. This in substance presents the agricultural advantages of the newly-explored country. All that is necessary to complete the description is to advise readers in the Eastern country that what is considered "rich pasturage" in the Rocky Mountain region would be considered sparse and poor in Pennsylvania, Jersey, Delaware and Maryland, or in any pasture country east of the Alleghenies. The only way in which it can be made to support numerous cattle is to allow to each "head of cattle" five to ten times as much land to roam and graze over as could possibly be afforded in our part of the country. The whole of the language of the report must be interpreted by comparison of the country of the Black Hills with the surrounding barren plains and untillable rocks.

Eastern people are surprised by the meagre and scattered herbage which, on these Rocky Mountain grass lands, is styled "the finest pasture in the world." It is only the great expanse of those lands in proportion to the number of cattle grazed on them that fits them for pasturage at all.

But, in addition to the agricultural advantages of the laps and valleys in the Black Hills country, General Custer reports that his party found iron and plumbago, and also gold. He does not proclaim this discovery of gold in as strong terms as those used by some of the correspondents who accompanied the expedition, but simply says that in "some" of the water courses "almost" every panful of earth produced gold in "small" but "paying quantities." The same thing can be said, with truth, of many farms in California, the proprietors of which, instead of trying to wash the gold out of the earth of their farms, have turned their attention to planting barley, oats and wheat in the aforesaid earth, the fruits of which they reap in more "paying quantities" than they ever got out of the gold. Gold is known to exist in hundred of places in the United States, where not a man is engaged in mining or digging for it. The mere fact of its existence in any place is, therefore, of itself no reason why anybody should emigrate to that place to dig for it. The real point is, can a man dig and wash out as much gold in any place in a day as will pay for his day's subsistence at that place. To a Chinaman, who can subsist for a day on the rice and fish that he can buy for fifty cents, one dollar's worth of gold a day would be a "paying quantity," while a white man would not count anything less than five to ten dollars' worth a "paying quantity." In the early days of a new gold country it sometimes requires from ten to twenty dollars a day to pay for the day's subsistence.

Such are some of the contingencies to be considered by those who read the current accounts of the discoveries in the Black Hills, and who may feel tempted to try their fortunes there either in gold or agriculture. We are already told by some of the correspondents, that so strong is the thickening tide of emigration to this new land of promise, that it will require a considerable force of Government troops to regulate matters, and to prevent collisions between the emigrants and the Indians, who have a title to the land. This is possible, and yet we suspect that such givings out are made for the very purpose of inducing emigrants to go there, by the enterprising "civilian employes" of the Expedition, who, we are told by the same correspondents, have already taken advantage of their employment by the Government, to "stake out claims" and "organize companies." Emigration thither and a strong military force to occupy the territory, would be grand things for the "stakers" of those "claims" and the "organizers" of the "companies." They would make business brisk for all but the possible victims. These words in the letters from the "Black Hills," are significant, and should cause every one contemplating emigration to "be sure he is right" before he "goes ahead." Meanwhile the Government at Washington, should see to it that no one of its civilian employes should be permitted to take advantage of a Government Exploring Expedition to seize upon lands which the Government has dedicated to the Indians, by solemn treaty. Toleration of such business will not look very creditable either in the United States or elsewhere, nor will it pay in view of the expensive character of Indian wars, brought about by similar means. The fact that a portion of the country dedicated to the Sioux by the treaty of 1868 is good country furnishes no good reason why that good country should be wrested from them, however indirectly, through the agency of a Government Exploring Expedition.—From the Public Ledger of 8th mo. 28th, 1874.

For "The Friend."

Prayer.

The following instructive remarks of the late John Barclay, on the subject of prayer and a right preparation therefor, are commended to the attention of all, but more especially of those who, it is feared, not unfrequently address the Almighty without having that sense of their own wants, or the wants of others, which is only given by close attention to the operations of the Holy Spirit.

"The Lord ever hears and answers the prayers which he hath put into the hearts of those that desire to fear Him. As far as I can recollect, those daily formal repetitions of words, in the practice of which I was brought up, were but seldom accompanied with that which is the essence of true prayer, viz: a reverential breathing unto the Lord, and a longing of the soul after those things that we need. There were times too, in which my soul did ardently crave the attainment of best things; but then my prayers being confined to certain times and certain words, and I being taught this restricted notion of the act, it did not allow of the springing forth of those secret desires which the Lord raised in my heart, so that those seasons wherein true prayer was begotten by Him, who teaches when and how to pray, were not rightly availed of or profited by.

I remember that after I refrained from repeating these forms of prayer, which were taught me in my childhood, I was much in the habit of kneeling down and repeating extempore prayers by dint of my natural abilities. This I did for some little time with great fervor of youth and eloquence, even sometimes aloud, both morning and evening; until the Lord opened my eyes in this respect, and gave me clearly to see that these attempts in my own will, way and time, were but sparks kindled about me, and which availed nothing with Him whose own sacrifices (of his own preparing and kindling) were alone acceptable. Thus in obedience, I was made willing to be silent and seek the Lord, who is nigh at hand, and dwells in the hearts of his people, and is not far from any of us, if we look for and unto Him. This silence of all the creaturely reasoning powers was very hard to something in me, which would be judging and questioning; very unmeaning did it appear; yet durst I not forbear to meet with my Lord and Master, or to strive to meet with him, day by day, and oftener than the day; and frequently crying in the depth and sincerity of my heart unto Him, that he would be pleased to show me the way to call upon him aright, and what to pray for. I was often in tears, and lay down my head in grief upon my pillow, fearing I should never be made sensible of true prayer, and partake of the privilege of "praying always." The Lord did not long leave me without His blessing, His blessed countenance and presence and comfort; no, He showered at times of His merciful goodness unto my poor heart, and kindled such love towards Himself, such earnest breathings after the further arising, the glorious spreading and increasing exaltation of His name, and power, and truth, as enabled me to praise and bless His holy name; engaged me still more to cleave unto, obey, and follow Him in whatsoever He might require. My soul was also filled with living warmth of love and charity towards His creature man, whom He created in His image; with great pity also towards such as had deviated from the path in which He would have had them to go, and who had thus turned away from the Lord their leader: an unspeakably sweet feeling of fellowship and sympathy arose in me towards those in whom the Lord had excited a love or desire of Himself. Thus was true prayer in and by the true spirit, in measure raised in my heart, not according to the way or time which man's wisdom or inclination would lead and teach, but the very contrary, for even to this time, I am often so situated as not to have any words for long seasons together to utter, either audibly or in my heart; and still more often am in dryness, distress, and apparent desolation; yet through all I can praise the Lord."

A Curious Dream.

Fancy highly excited, or reason deeply absorbed in its labors, will not always sink to repose with the body of its owner. Rousing up again in dreams, it will continue the lines of thought which it had been pursuing during the day, but always with more or less of waywardness.

Perhaps the most curious specimen of this class of dreams that ever came under our notice was this one. The subject was a boy of thirteen, busily employed during the day and devoting his evenings to the class-room. To allow time for study he arose early and retired late, never wasted a moment, denied himself everything in the shape of recreation, and, with the exception of his walks between the school-room and his place of business, took no exercise. The classes he attended were formed in great part of adults, all of whom had much more leisure than himself, and most of whom were merely renewing their acquaintance with former reading; yet the boy managed to keep abreast of the very best of his classmates. Of course such exertions could not be made by a mere child with impunity. After six or seven months of them, he became subject to a singular malady. He never left his books so long as his eyes would keep open. When they refused to labor longer he retired—to fall at once into a heavy sleep. From this, however, he was sure to start, in half-an-hour or thereabouts, under the influence of night-mare, which compelled him to recite aloud every word of the lessons of the day. The thing was most painful, but there was no escape from it. Once in the grip of the tormenting fiend, he was constrained to go on repeating declensions, conjugations, trigonometric formulæ, and so on, to the very last syllable. Then the fit left him to a disturbed and unrefreshing slumber.

There was no remedy for the disease save discontinuance of study, and to this the boy would not consent—even though this most repulsive night-mare was, visibly and rapidly, sapping his constitution. At length he was favored with a strange dream. A face seemed to bend over him—one that he had never seen before, but whose features remained ever afterward fixed in his memory. This face, which he describes as beautiful, spoke in tones delightfully sweet, to this effect—"If somebody will watch by your bed and when the nightmare seizes you recite a certain passage" (which we shall specify presently) "you will be set free to sleep in peace." It was not until the dream recurred more than once that the dreamer ventured to mention it. It was laughed at by all, save an elder sister, who made up her mind to give a fair trial to the remedy so curiously suggested. She did so when her brother was next undergoing his torture. Hardly had she begun to speak than he ceased to go over his lessons, and taking up the passage after her, he went through it to the end—quite involuntarily as before, but very differently, with an ease and comfort perfectly indescribable. When the recitation was over he sunk into a calm and refreshing sleep. The experiment was repeated night after night, and always with still more satisfactory results than before. By degrees the pest relaxed its grasp, and in nine or ten days vanished for ever. The passage employed was "the Lord's Prayer."

The dreamer used to explain the matter thus: Once when thinking of his strange affliction, as he often did, and casting about for an antidote, there occurred to his memory a piece of old reading, in which it was stated that the wounds made one day by the application of heated irons might be cured on the next by a similar application. While turning the story over in his mind, a conception of the remedy which, in the end, proved beneficial, glanced before him, but so vaguely and for so short a period that he could not grasp it. To this passing idea, and to his efforts to arrest it, he attributed—rightly as we think—the material portion of the vision. The passage recommended for recitation he accounted for by the fact that he had been piously trained. But his later opinion was that a paragraph from a profane author would have served just as well.—Cornhill Magazine.

Carrying a Ladder.—Did you ever see a person carry a ladder? He puts it on his shoulder, or it may be he puts his head between the rounds and has one of the sides resting on each shoulder, and having it nicely balanced walks along. A man with a ladder is an interesting object in a crowded street. He looks at the end before him, but the end behind him he cannot see. If he moves the front end to get out of the way of a person, away goes the rear end just as far in the opposite direction, and the slightest turn of his body, only a few inches, will give the ends a sweep of several feet, and those in the way may look for bruised hats and bumped heads, while the window glass along the street is in constant danger from the unseen rear end of the ladder. When a small boy I was carrying a not very large ladder, when there was a crash. An unlucky movement had brought the rear end of my ladder against a window. Instead of scolding me, my father made me stop and said very quietly, "Look here, my son: there is one thing I wish you always to remember; that is, every ladder has two ends." I never have forgotten that, though many, many years have gone, and I never see a man carrying a ladder or other long thing but what I remember the two ends. Don't we carry things besides ladders that have two ends? When I see a young man getting "fast" habits I think he only sees one end of that ladder, and that he does not know that the other end is wounding his parents' hearts. Many a young girl carries a ladder in the shape of a love for dress and finery; she only sees that gratification of a foolish pride at the forward end of that ladder, while the end that she does not see is crushing true modesty and pure friendship as she goes along thoughtlessly among the crowd. Ah! yes, every ladder has two ends, and it is a thing to be remembered in more ways than one.—The Moravian.

Thoughts on Novel Reading.

Reading is like the sowing time of the soul. The laborer goes round his field, his hand full of seed, which he scatters in every direction; but the harvest greatly depends on the quality of the seed.

The mind is like a field prepared for the sower, and without great care every individual, every book, becomes like a laborer scattering good or bad seed upon it; every syllable one hears, every impression one receives, may become to us a seed, a germ of good or evil.

Choose your studies, therefore, in a serious and Christian spirit. If they are bad, it is clear that they will poison your mind; if they are even dangerous they will lower your constitution, like unwholesome food. Reading is, we repeat, the sowing time of the mind, and if we find many minds bearing the harvest of weariness, insipidity, and disgust with life, we shall more often than not find the cause in the choice of injurious books.

"Very well," says every intelligent person: "then we must only read good books. Ah! but what is a good book?" We reply, "That which will prove useful both to the heart and intellect, and which cannot do harm either to the religious or the moral qualities of him who reads it." "The only book which is really good," says Madame de Swetchine, "is the one which suits, which interests, and which touches our hearts."

You would be careful not to set fire to a train of gunpowder, you would not dare to touch a venomous serpent; yet you think you can read foolish and even sinful novels, and fancy they can do you no harm. Still you know, you have a heart, a head, an imagination, which can all take fire, and that lucifer matches scattered amongst inflammable matter are, to say the least, highly unsafe.

Don't tell me that such and such books are well written. Perhaps you would like to take poison because that which holds it is made of gold. Are there not plenty of other authors whose style is as pure, as attractive, and as noble as these? But, however, I quite understand you. Pure style and innocent authors are like good advisers, who are pleasant to admire at a distance, but wearisome to follow after. You think me too severe, perhaps, but tell me truly, what has been the result of reading a bad or even dangerous novel, upon yourself?

Do you remember a certain hour which you passed in reading a book which some of your friends have spoken of as bad? Did you not afterwards dislike the practical duties which called you away from its cruelly fascinating pages? Were you tempted to forget your duty as daughter, wife, mother, and christian? Did wrong seem right, and was right half covered with ridicule? Did you brain seem dizzy, and your heart feel sick within you?

You say all this is too strong. Yet tell me, if it is so, from whence arose your utter distaste for everything around you? your languor of mind? your flight from home duties?

Don't hunt up other causes; you have read what was not good for you to read, and its poison has entered into your veins. From this arises your craving after the excitement which you do not find in your round of commonplace events, and from this rubbishy reading arises your distaste for that which might raise your mind. A bad thought cast into your soul serves Satan's interests better than any amount of bad actions. A bad action often passes and is done with, but a bad thought grows so quickly that one never knows where it will end. As Madame de Stael said, "I will not disguise from you the fact that novels, even the best, do harm. You can scarcely do anything afterwards without remembering that you have read about it, and all the vails of the heart have been torn asunder."

The grand motives, the ideal feelings, the generous impulses, the strange adventures which your heroine passes through, are not in the least like those which happen every day of our lives. Imagine a poor girl, dreaming of the marvelous yet tender things which have charmed her in her reading, how astonished she will be at finding no real person in the least like her heroes! She wants to live as her imaginary princesses live in her novels, or like the sweet and charming women who are always beloved, always overcoming every petty care if they ever have any, who are, in fact, heroines; not poor, every day kind of girls like herself; and of course she is disgusted with her descent from hero worship to the details of her home life.

Souls like hers would create a new order of existence to satisfy the caprices of her heroes; but, unfortunately, hard necessity will not listen to their doleful fancies, and the old-fashioned order of events goes on with its heavy, monotonous footfall. Seen in this light, novels have done a great deal of harm to the life of women. They have, as it were, divided their existence, and the two halves struggle like the two ends of a serpent which has been cut in two, and which try violently though uselessly to be re-united.

Not that I do not love the Ideal; I love it, and I shall ever love it; and it is this love of the ideal lying at the bottom of every human heart of which the Genius of Error takes advantage by giving you a taste for novels.

Religion has her ideal regions also; but they are not like those of novels. Religion raises us upward, toward all that is great and noble, and prepares us for the sorrowful realities of life. But her ideas are Divine, pure, and fruitful; above all, they are accompanied by common sense, they exact from us nothing that is impossible, they teach us to wait and to endure; to wait and to endure, perhaps, until the eternal day.—The Church of England Magazine.

Thimble Making. — The manufacture of thimbles is very simple, but singularly interesting. Coin silver is mostly used, and is obtained by purchasing coin dollars. Hence it happens that the profits of the business is affected instantaneously by all the variations in the nation's greenback promises to pay. The first operation is nothing else than putting a lot of bright silver dollars, fresh from the mint, into dirty crucibles, and melting them up into solid ingots. These are rolled out to the required thickness, and cut by a stamp into circular pieces of any required size. A solid metal bar of the size of the inside of the intended thimble, moved by powerful machinery up and down in a bottomless mould of the outside of the same thimble, bends the circular disks into the thimble shape as fast as they can be placed under the descending bar. Once in shape, the work of brightening, polishing and decorating is done upon a lathe. First, the blank form is fitted upon a rapidly-revolving rod. A slight touch of a sharp chisel takes a thin shaving from the end, another does the same on the side, and the third rounds off the rim. A round steel rod, dipped in oil and pressed upon the surface, gives it a lustrous polish. Then a little, revolving steel wheel, whose edge is a raised ornament, held against the revolving blank, prints that ornament just outside the rim. A second wheel prints a different ornament around the centre, while a third wheel with sharp points makes the indentations on the lower half and end of the thimble. The inside is brightened and polished in a similar way, the thimble being held in a revolving mould. All that remains to be done is to boil the completed thimbles in soapsuds, to remove the oil, brush them up and pack them for the trade.—Late Paper.

The story is told of a woman who freely used her tongue to the scandal of others, and made a confession to a priest of what she had done. He gave her a ripe thistle top, and told her to go out in various directions and scatter the seeds one by one. Wondering at the penance, she obeyed, and then returned and told her confessor. To her amazement, he bade her go back and gather the scattered seeds; and when she objected, that it would be impossible, he replied that it would be still more difficult to gather up and destroy all the evil reports which she had circulated about others. Any thoughtless, careless child, can scatter a handful of thistle seed before the wind in a moment, but the strongest and wisest man cannot gather them again.—Late Paper.

How to carry on war humanely is exercising several of the nations of Europe, just now. Russia takes the initiative, and the subject was before the British parliament. But why not go a little further back, and, instead of considering the means of preventing the barbarities of war, take up the question put before them since the success of the Geneva arbitration, and try to get rid of war itself, the prolific cause of those barbarities, or at least to lessen the number of them, according to the example set by the United States and Great Britain? The absurdity involved in this whole business is enormous. Nations vie with each other in seeking to invent the most destructive weapons—those which will kill and wound most and farthest off—and then vie with each other in seeking humane devices to ameliorate the sufferings of the wounded and to pay respect to the dead! The vital principle of war is to inflict the greatest possible amount of injury, destruction and death upon "the enemy"—and the problem now before these European nations is how to inflict this injury death and destruction in the most humane manner!

It would be quite as easy to enforce the principle of peaceful arbitration as to enforce a code to humanize slaughter and destruction. Either will have to rest on the honor of nations.—Ledger.

The Soul of a Soldier.—Prince Metternich said to the Emperor Napoleon, "Sire, I have just passed through your regiments. Your soldiers are children. You have made levies by anticipation, and summoned into the field a scarcely formed generation. When this generation is destroyed by the war now pending, will you anticipate anew? Will you call one younger still?"

Napoleon became furious, dashed his hat on the ground, and exclaimed, "You are not a soldier! You have not the soul of one, like me! You have not learned to despise the lives of others and your own! What are two hundred thousand men to me?"

In the balance of the sanctuary a grain of Grace is heavier than pounds of gold.

THE FRIEND.

NINTH MONTH 5, 1874.

In the editorial columns of this Journal, under date of 10th mo. 24th, 1868, notice is given that a suit had recently been brought against Friends of Ohio Yearly Meeting, by those who separated from that body in 1854; the object of which was to obtain possession of the Boarding School property situated at Mount Pleasant, Ohio.

After the evidence on both sides had been presented to the court before which suit was brought against Friends, the judges proposed that the case be referred to the Supreme Court of the State for decision. This being agreed to by the parties, it was accordingly done. Of the five judges before whom the case was thus brought, the term of service of one or more expired after the hearing, and before a decision was arrived at. We are informed that one person elected to fill a vacancy thus created, and who did not hear the pleadings, with two others have, after a delay of many months, united in giving the property in question to the plaintiffs, representing what is called the Binn's body; the other two judges were in favor of its being left in the hands of those who for many years have been in possession of it. The decree of the court was dated 6th mo. 20th, 1874, and in accordance therewith, the premises were delivered up to the claimants about the 1st of 8th month.

We believe the opinions of the judges have not yet been filed, and we cannot therefore now ascertain on what grounds they arrived at a concluson so subversive of equity and justice. Had the case remained in the hands of those to whom the evidence and the pleadings were originally addressed, the result might have been different.

We sincerely sympathize with our brethren of Ohio, in the trial of their faith which has been thus occasioned; knowing that many of them will greatly miss the assistance which this school has rendered them in the satisfactory education of their children. We hope they will be encouraged promptly to take the requisite steps for re-organizing such an institution in some convenient and accessible situation. They have had sufficient experience of its usefulness in past years to stimulate them to provide such a means for the guarded education of their children, in a central school, where can be accumulated more of the aids and appliances requisite, than can reasonably be expected in the different neighborhood schools scattered over the country. In addition to this primary motive—the right training of the young,—we believe such a school is of great value, as being a common object of interest, and thus a bond of union, between all parts of that Yearly Meeting—whose members are scattered over a wide extent of country from Western Pennsylvania to Central Iowa. The children from the most distant parts meeting at such a central point, form life-long friendships, to the great increase of that kindly feeling and interest, which it is desirable to cultivate between remotely situated branches of the same religious body.

The Boarding School at Mt. Pleasant has been much used during the fall vacation as a place of entertainment for Friends attending Ohio Yearly Meeting. As the house is now closed, a committee of the Meeting for Sufferings has been appointed to make arrangements for the proper accommodation of those who wish to be present on that occasion. Any such, who may desire to have homes provided, may send the information in due season to Israel Steer, Colerain P. O., Belmont Co., Ohio. The Yearly Meeting commences on the last First-day in the Ninth month.

SUMMARY OF EVENTS.

FOREIGN.—A London dispatch of the 31st ult. says: "Quarantine regulations have been put in force at Queenstown, which cause great hindrance to commerce. All persons are prohibited from leaving or embarking on vessels from ports in America, West Indies, the Mediterranean and the Black Sea, until it is ascertained that such vessels have clean bills of health."

The Mark Lane Express says: "The bulk of the wheat crop is now safe. Another week of fine weather and the fields will be clear. The damp state of some samples shows that we had a narrow escape. Prices are now receding in consequence of the belief that the crop is fully up to the average. Prices are very low in France, and English wheat is still being reshipped from there."

A strike of the Belfast operatives resulted in the workmen, about 10,000 in number, resuming work in the factories at reduced wages.

The Bank of England has reduced its rate of discount from 3½ to 3 per cent. The rate for money at the Stock Exchange on government securities is only 2 per cent.

The steamship Great Eastern, up to the 30th ult. at noon, had paid out 647 nautical miles of the Anglo-American Company's new cable, and all was going on well.

The Liverpool market for cotton and breadstuffs was dull. Middling cotton 8 1-16*d.* a 8⅛*d.* for Orleans.

The Italian Bible Society has recently printed a translation of the Bible upon its own press and put it into circulation, with notice to the Protestant pastors of Italy that this publication "upon the shores of the Tiber and before the doors of the Vatican," is an event to be commemorated.

The Carlists have made great efforts to take Puycerda, a fortified town at the base of the Pyrenees, but have failed in all their attempts. On the 26th they endeavored to carry it by assault. Three columns attacked the city at different points, but were all driven back with heavy losses.

The French authorities have disarmed a Carlist battalion which was operating against Puycerda, for entering French territory. The French are keeping a close watch on the frontier, and the Carlists are consequently straitened for provisions.

The conscription for the Spanish army is being carried on throughout the country without opposition.

The German government has formally notified the Powers that it will not interfere in the internal affairs of Spain.

Russia has again informed Germany that she sees no cause to modify her attitude on the Spanish question.

The Provinzial Correspondenz of Berlin declares the friendship and good understanding of the three emperors are unexampled.

A Berlin dispatch says: The Spanish representative in this city has received full credentials as Minister, and has asked for an audience with the Emperor.

The Vienna New Free Press publishes the text of a circular note from the Russian government, declining to recognize Spain. The note says, Russia cannot recognize a government which is unrecognized in its own country. She has no wish to interfere with the internal affairs of Spain and favors no party there. She will officially communicate with any government which possesses legal authority and promises to be permanent. Germany and Austria are free to act in this matter in accordance with their own interests.

A dispatch from Brussels to the Pall Mall Gazette, says that the International Conference, at a full sitting, rejected four introductory general principles proposed by Russia, and all proposals concerning reprisals. The course of the deliberations has been peaceful, and there has been no recrimination between the German and French delegates. All the members signed the protocol except the delegates from Great Britain and Turkey, who postponed attaching their signatures.

President MacMahon has signed a decree ordering elections to be held in seven of the departments of France on Tenth mo. 4th, to fill vacancies in the National Assembly.

The sale of the London Hour in France has been prohibited in consequence of the publication of letters written by Bazaine.

A Madrid dispatch of the 31st ult. says: The Carlists made two determined assaults on Puyeerda to-day, but without effect. Both attacks were defeated, and the beseigers in their rage set fire to and destroyed houses outside the walls.

Mount Etna is now in a state of eruption. Streams of lava are pouring from three craters.

Several regiments of soldiers have been sent to Sicily on account of the increase of brigandage and general lawlessness.

UNITED STATES.—The Commission of Engineers, to report on an improved plan of an outlet at the mouth of the Mississippi, have left for Europe, and will visit the Po, Danube and Rhine, in order to personally inspect those rivers, and to obtain such information as may be applicable to the Mississippi.

During the year ending 6th mo. 30th last, the net receipts of the United States Treasury were $289,478,756. Of this sum $163,103,834 were from duties on imports; $102,409,785 internal revenue; $5,037,665 premium on sales of coin, and $8,927,472 sales of public lands, and government property, and miscellaneous.

The total net expenditures during the same period were $285,752,530. The interest on the public debt was $107,119,815, the expenses of the military establishment $42,313,927, of the navy $30,932.587, for pensions $29,038,414, for the Indians $6,692,462, civil and miscellaneous $69,655,325.

Official returns made to the Bureau of Statistics show that during the six months ending 12th mo. 31st, 1873, the number of immigrants landed in this country was 173,198, and during the six months ending 6th mo. 30th last, it was 139,708, making a total of 312,906 for the year. Of that number 194,144 landed at the port of New York.

Information has been received at Washington that another delegation of Chinese students, thirty in number, will arrive early next month. They will be distributed among several educational institutions in New England. After a short time the Chinese government will send another delegation of youths to this country to receive instruction. This is in accordance with the plan resolved upon by that government some years since.

The interments in New York last week numbered 660, and in Philadelphia 288, including 147 children under two years.

A call has been issued for an extra session of the Kansas Legislature, to devise means for the relief of the settlers whose crops have been destroyed by the grasshoppers.

The United States steamer Tuscarora, Commander Belknap, has for some time past been engaged in making soundings in the Pacific Ocean, to ascertain the practicability of laying a submarine cable between China and Japan and the coast of the United States. On the 29th of 7th month commander Belknap sent the following dispatch to the Secretary of the Navy, from Ounalaska: "We arrived here to-day. A shore line is practicable. The greatest depth found is 4037 fathoms, eighty miles from Aggalton; and the next greatest 3754 fathoms, one hundred and twenty miles east of Kuriles Straits. There is a ridge between Kuriles and the Aleutian Islands, the least water on which is 1777 fathoms. There is a fine harbor and beach at Tenaga."

The Markets, &c.—The following were the quotations on the 31st ult. New York. — American gold, 109¾. U. S. sixes, 1881, registered, 117⅜; do. coupons, 118½; do. 1868, registered, 116¾; coupons, 117⅜; do. five per cents, 112½. Superfine flour, $4.80 a $5; State extra, $5 a $5.50; finer brands, $6 a $10. No. 1 Chicago spring wheat, $1.22; No. 2 do. $1.15 a $1.18; No. 3 do. $1.10 a $1.14; white Kentucky, $1.40 a $1.43; white Michigan, $1.40 a $1.45; red western, $1.24 a $1.26. Oats, 50 a 56 cts. Yellow corn, 84 a 85 cts.; white, 92 a 95 cts. Philadelphia.—Uplands and New Orleans cotton, 17 a 17½ cts. Superfine flour, $3.50 a $4; extras, $4.25 a $5.25; finer brands, $5.50 a $8.75. White wheat, $1.30 a $1.35; amber, $1.23 a $1.28; red $1.22. Rye, 86 a 88 cts. Yellow and mixed corn, 85 a 87 cts. Oats, 51 a 55 cts. Smoked hams, 15 a 16 cts. Lard, 14½ a 15 cts. The receipts of beef cattle reached 4100 head. Market dull and prices lower. Common sold at 3½ a 4¾ cts. per lb. gross, and fair to choice 5 a 7½ cts. Sheep sold at 4 a 6 cts. per lb. gross. Receipts 19,000 bead. Hogs $10 a $12 per 100 lbs. net. Receipts 5000 head. Baltimore.—Amber wheat, $1.33 a $1.38; white, $1.20 a $1.30; No. 1 western red, $1.20 a $1.23. Yellow corn, 83 a 84 cts.; white, 94 a 97 cts. Oats, 50 a 55 cts. Rye, 85 a 90 cts. Chicago.—No. 1 spring wheat, 98 ets. a $1; No. 2 do., 93 cts. No. 2 mixed corn, 67 cts. Oats, 39½ cts. Rye, 75 cts. No. 2 spring barley, 93 cts. Lard, 15 a 15¼ cts. St. Louis.—No. 3 fall red wheat, $1.05; No. 2 winter red, $1.14. No. 2 mixed eorn, 68 a 69 cts. No. 2 oats, 42½ cts. Cincinnati.—Corn, 69 a 72 ets. Oats, 43 a 47 cts. Rye, 83 a 85 cts. Spring barley, $1.02.

RECEIPTS.

Received from Ellen Waln, City, $2, vol. 48; for Ann Sharpless, Pa., $2, vol. 48; from Elwood Thomas, Pa., $2, to No. 14, vol. 49; from George B. Allen, Pa., $2, vol. 48, and for Deborah L. Walton, $2, vol. 48; from Israel Steer, O., $2, vol. 48, and for E. B. Steer, $2, vol. 48; from Ephraim Smith, City, $2, vol. 48, and for Abiah Cope, Morris S. Cope, and Elizabeth Hughes, Pa., $2 each, vol. 48; from Elizabeth M. Cope, Pa., $2, vol. 48; from Ann D. Sinnickson, N. J., $2, vol. 48; from Jacob Parvin, Pa., $2, to No. 8, vol. 49; from Martha R. Comfort, N. J., $2, vol. 48; from Juliana N. Powell, N. J., $2, vol. 48; from Miller Chace, Mass., $2, vol. 48; from Ann M. Wetherill, Pa., $2, vol. 48; from William Bettles, Ill., $2, vol. 48, from Jordan Ballard, O., $2, vol. 48, and for Elijah Haworth, John A. Oren, John Carey, and Lewis Johnson, $2 each, vol. 48; from Charles Lippincott, N. J., $2, vol. 48; from Enos P. Eldridge, Pa., $2, vol. 48; from Susannah Marriott and Phebe Bowerman, N. Y., $2 each, vol. 48; from Pelatiah Gove, Vt., $2, vol. 48, and for Daniel Gove, $2, vol. 48; from George Haines, N. J., $2, vol. 48; from Eliza L. Thomas, Pa., $2, vol. 48, and for Celina T. Pratt, $2, vol. 48; from Isaac Hall, Pa. $2, vol. 48, and for Jacob Roberts and Thomas W. Smedley, $2 each, vol. 48; from William Marshall and William H. Walter, Pa., $2 each, vol. 48; from Joshua Haight, Agent, N. Y., $2, vol. 48, and for William Breckon, Hibbard Fuller, H. S. Haight, and Levi H. Atwater, $2 each, vol. 48, and for David Haight, $2, to No. 8, vol. 49; from Eunice B. Carr, R. I., $2, vol. 48; from Joseph W. Hibbs, Pa., $2, vol. 48; from Samuel Betts, N. J., $2, vol. 48; from Mifflin Cadwalader O., $2, vol. 48, and for Esther Cadwalader, $2, vol. 48; from David Darnell, N. J., $2, vol. 48; from Sarah B. DeCou, N. J., $2, vol. 48; from Richard P. Gibbons, Del., $2, vol. 48; from John R. Tatum, Del., $2, vol. 48; from Alexander C. Wood, N. J., $2, vol. 48, and for Sarah C. Gaskell and Nathaniel N. Stokes, $2 each, vol. 48; from Finley Hutton, City, $2, vol. 48; from George Reid, City, $2, vol. 48; from Ruth P. Johnson, Pa., $2, vol. 48; from Elizabeth T. Yarnall, Pa., $2, vol. 48; from Dorcas B. Robinson, R. I., $2, vol. 48; from Benjamin Philips, City, $2, vol. 48; from Joseph Scattergood, Jr., Agent, Pa., for David J. Scott, Ann Scott, Eusebius H. Townsend, Margaret W. Pyle, Hannah Taylor, Jesse P. Thatcher, and Thomas Warrington, $2 each, vol. 48; from Micajah M. Morlan, Agent, O., for Edward Stratton, Mark Bonsall, Benjamin Antrim, Robert Miller, and Mary S. Barber, $2 each, vol. 48; from Robert Parker, City, $2, vol. 48; from Henry W. Wills, N. J., $2, vol. 48, and for Joshua S. Wills, $2, vol. 48; from Elizabeth S. Field, City, $2, to No. 9, vol. 49; from Stephen M. Trimble, Pa., $2, vol. 48, and for Rebecca Trimble, $2, vol. 48; from William Carpenter, Agent, N. J., $2, vol. 48, and for Rebecca Wistar, Josiah Wistar, Letitia Reeve, Achsah Reeve, Samuel P. Carpenter, William C. Sheppard, and Joseph T. Warren, $2 each, vol. 48; from Edward Thorn, N. J., $2, vol. 48, and for Barton F. Thorn and Joseph S. Middleton, $2 each, vol. 48; from Anna R. Fiske, Mass., $2, vol. 48; from James Embree, Pa., $2, vol. 48; from David J. Brown, City, $2, vol. 48; from Joseph Pusey, Pa., $2, vol. 48; from Seneca Lincoln, Mass., $2, vol. 48; from Andrew Moore, Pa., $2, vol. 48; from Parker Hall, Agent, O., $2, vol. 48, and for William Hall, William Hall, Jr., John W. Smith, Robert Smith, Lewis Taber, Josiah Hall, Jonathan Binns, and David Binns, $2 each, vol. 48, for David Thomas, $3, to No. 52, vol. 48, and for Joseph Russell and Mary Bracken, $2 each, to No. 20, vol. 48; from Elwood E. Haines, N. J., $2 vol. 48; from Joseph W. Lippincott, City, $2, vol. 48; from Truman Forsythe, Pa., $2, vol. 48; from Jane Ann Passmore, Pa., $2, vol. 48; from William R. Taber, N. C., $2, vol. 48; from Townsend Hoopes, Pa., per Susan T. Hoopes, $2, vol. 48; from Jacob Edge, Pa., $2, vol. 48, and for Joseph R. Downing, $2, vol. 48; from Valentine Meader, Mass., $2, vol. 48. and for William Hill and Pelatiah Hussey, Me., $2 each, vol. 48; from Sarah Ann Leeds, N. J., $2, vol. 48.

Remittances received after Fourth-day morning will not appear in the Receipts until the following week.

RASPBERRY ST. SCHOOLS FOR COLORED ADULTS.

Teachers will be wanted for these schools, to be opened 10th mo. 5th. Applications may be made to

Thomas Elkinton, 118 Pine St.
Elton B. Gifford, 719 Market St.
James Bromley, 641 Franklin St.
George J. Scattergood, 413 Spruce St.

WANTED.

A suitable Friend to take the position of Writing Teacher and Assistant Governor at Westtown Boarding School—for next Session. Apply to

Charles Evans, 702 Race street, Philadelphia,
Clarkson Sheppard, Greenwich, New Jersey,
Joseph Walton, Moorestown, New Jersey.

SHELTER FOR COLORED ORPHANS.

Wanted, a Teacher for this Institution, to enter upon her duties 1st of 10th mo. Apply to

Hannah R. Newbold, 643 Franklin St.
Mary Wood, 524 South Second St.
Mary Randolph, 247 North Twelfth St.
Sarah Richie, 444 North Fifth St.

FRIENDS' ASYLUM FOR THE INSANE.

Near Frankford, (Twenty-third Ward,) Philadelphia.

Physician and Superintendent—JOSHUA H. WORTHINGTON, M. D.

Applications for the Admission of Patients may be made to the Superintendent, or to any of the Board of Managers.

DIED, on the 7th of Seventh month, 1874, at Concord, Belmont Co., Ohio, in the seventy-first year of his age, CALEB BRACKEN, a member of Short Creek Monthly Meeting.

——, in Norton, Mass., on the 10th of the Eighth month, 1874, LYDIA P. CHACE, widow of the late Palmer Chace, of Fall River, Mass., a member of Providence Monthly Meeting. It had not been her privilege of late years to meet often for Divine worship with those whose prineiples she best loved, yet her zeal was not weakened, nor her faith shaken. The well-worn pages of her bible—her beloved companion in retirement—unmistakably attest the employment of her solitary hours. She performed her life service faithfully and well. Self-sacrifice and sympathy were marked features in her character. On the morning of the day of her decease, our friend arose apparently in her usual health. But a few moments elapsed ere she was seized with an attack of apoplexy, which in five hours completed its work, and the purified spirit was gathered to receive the reward of the just made perfect. "Be ye also ready, for in such an hour as ye think not the Son of man cometh."

WILLIAM H. PILE, PRINTER,
No. 422 Walnut Street.

THE FRIEND.

A RELIGIOUS AND LITERARY JOURNAL.

VOL. XLVIII. SEVENTH-DAY, NINTH MONTH 12, 1874. NO. 4.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY.

Price Two Dollars per annum, if paid in advance. Two dollars and fifty cents, if not paid in advance.

Subscriptions and Payments received by

JOHN S. STOKES,

AT NO. 115 NORTH FOURTH STREET, UP STAIRS.

PHILADELPHIA.

Postage, when paid quarterly in advance, five cents.

For "The Friend."

Thoughts on the late Yearly Meeting of London.

The number of the British Friend, dated 8th mo. 1st, has a communication from one of its correspondents, which contains some thoughtful and valuable reflections on the proceedings of the last London Yearly Meeting. It is as follows:

"Dear Friend,—These reflections are suggested by a perusal of the narrative of the Yearly Meeting's proceedings, furnished by the British Friend, for I was only able to attend one of the business sittings of the meeting.

"They refer to a few out of the many subjects which engaged the attention of that assembly, but they involve points of great moment to the well-being of our religious Society, of which we need to be again and again reminded in these perilous times.

"Reading the Bible in our Meetings for Worship.—It was said there was nothing in the writings of the early Friends to prohibit the Bible in our meetings; nor, it may be replied, to sanction it. And, from the following passage in W. Shewen's Meditations, it would appear that no such innovation as an adventitious aid to divine worship was ever contemplated as contributing to the glory of true spiritual worship.

"'Blessed are all those that know themselves members of the true Church, which is built of living stones, elect and precious, and are made an habitation of God in the Spirit and in the Truth; who meet together, and wait upon the Lord in silence, and worship in spirit and in truth, without a book, or dependence on a man minister.' And this from I. Penington:—'God is to be worshipped in spirit, in his own power and life, and this at his own disposal. His Church is a gathering in the Spirit. If any man speak there, he must speak as the oracle of God, as the vessel out of which God speaks, as the trumpet out of which He gives the sound. Therefore, there is to be a waiting in silence till the Spirit of the Lord move to speak, and also to give words to speak. For a man is not to speak his own words, or in his own wisdom and time, but the Spirit's words, in the Spirit's wisdom and time, which is when he moves and gives to speak. And seeing the Spirit inwardly nourisheth, when He giveth not to speak words, the inward sense and nourishment is to be waited for, and received as it was given when there are no words. Yea, the ministry of the Spirit and life is more close and immediate when without words than when with words, as has been often felt, and is faithfully testified by many witnesses. Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither hath entered into the heart of man, how and what things God reveals to His children by His Spirit, when they wait upon Him in His pure fear, and worship and converse with Him in spirit; for there the fountain of the great deep is unsealed, and the everlasting springs surely give up the pure and living water.'

"With regard to the attendance of our First-day Evening Meetings, a Friend in the Women's Meeting thought the record of exception should not be accepted as altogether deficiency, for in many cases the circumstances gave explanation; some of the young people were engaged in efforts for the good of those around them. Other Friends spoke on the same point, and said they thought there should not be feelings of much discouragement in hearing these answers, for that in many meetings there were precious tokens of revived life amongst the young people, and there was great hope to be cherished in regard to the future prosperity of our Society. I have heard this excuse for the non-attendance of our Evening Meetings pleaded before, but I cannot see that neglect in the one case can be compensated by activity in another. It looks like compounding for things we are not inclined to, by doing those we have a mind to. And seeing that many of those who are not conspicuous for their support of our ancient doctrines and testimonies, or in their attendance of our meetings for discipline, are largely engaged in what has been termed 'Christian Work,' I do not think this plea for non-attendance of our meetings a valid one. Then, as to the precious tokens of revived life amongst the young people—if it be so, by all means let it be cherished and encouraged; but let us be assured that it is a healthy spiritual life and growth begotten from the alone pure source of life and light, for then it will bear fruit, and be visible to all around, 'as a city set upon a hill that cannot be hid,' fruitful in good works, to the praise and glory of the Great Head of the Church, and affording a solid foundation for the great 'hope to be cherished in regard to the future prosperity of our Society.'

"The Queries.—These important constituents in our code of Discipline seem fast drifting away, or becoming absorbed in the formal character of a mere declaration of general principles, as embodied in the unanswered queries. The various reasons assigned for their diminution, or abolition, will not bear examination. We are told, 'They used to have great influence on our families and individuals; the feeling had much ceased to exist, and consequently it was less important to retain them." The same reasoning might be applied to the extinction of the Society itself—Quakerism used to have great influence on our families and individuals; the fecling had very much ceased to exist, and consequently it was less important to retain our distinctive character as a Christian Church. The reply to this assertion was, 'That the answers were low; that there was a difficulty in answering them fully was not a reason for abandoning them, but for answering them more fully.' To such of our members, conscious of not living up fully to the requirements of the Queries, these periodical reminders of their deficiencies, involving the painful mental operation of self-examination in the light that makes manifest, would be likely to be regarded as inquisitorial, and hence their abolition would be a short and easy method of removing the difficulty. But this condition of things does not absolve the Yearly Meeting from the heavy responsibility of removing the ancient landmarks which our fathers have set, and which they considered essential to the maintenance of good order and discipline in the Church; and we, as their legitimate successors, are bound to maintain them inviolate.

"Dr. Ash, and the testimony concerning him.—In the discussion upon this subject great stress was laid upon the character of the deceased as a good man, and a true minister of Christ; but this was not the question before the meeting, and hence the attention of Friends was very properly recalled to the point, and a very important one, from which they were receding. The question was asked, 'Has the Yearly Meeting taken the responsibility of what it issues? We authorise the publication of a document, and by so much we become responsible for it. Friends spoke of liberty of conscience! It is for that we desire to suffer, but it is a liberty in accordance with the ancient principles of the Society. We were sitting within these walls to uphold the profession of truth made by this body, not a profession which has been made by any other body. It was to support these views that we met, not to circulate testimonies concerning a man, as a Christian minister, but as a minister holding the principles of our Society.'

"The Yearly Meeting, as a reflex of the Society at large, was composed of Friends holding diverse views on many subjects; and to give a clearer view of the different ideas prevalent in that body the following brief analysis is offered, with the view of considering whether there is any prospect of arresting the progress of innovation, and of forming a compact body for the restoration of the Society to a nearer approximation of primitive Quakerism than we now witness. The division, then, will consist of two classes:—

"Firstly, we have those whose principles are identical with the views of the early Friends, and therefore have a claim to be regarded as their legitimate successors and representatives. The individuals forming this class were engaged, as occasions arose, in the exposition and vindication of our original doctrines and practices; ever watchful to discover, in any propositions submitted to the attention of the meeting, whether such propositions were in harmony with the true principles of the Society, or, on the contrary, tended to undermine or invalidate our ancient doctrines, testimonies, and usages. Conscious of the solemn trust and responsibility devolved upon them, with unshaken confidence in the efficacy and all-sufficiency of the great principles given them to defend, their faith failed not amidst the unrest and unsettlement around them. These are the real pillars of the Church. The existence of the Society, as a distinct religious body, in the ordering of the Great Head of the Church, depends upon the fidelity of these his instruments, who, in the obedience of faith, and animated with the zeal and spirit of their forefathers in the unchangeable truth, are prepared, if it be His will, through conflict and suffering, to uphold and defend, in their day and generation, the cause of truth and righteousness in the earth.

"The second and more numerous class, professing the same principles as the preceding, evinced less firmness in defending them. They appeared unable, satisfactorily to themselves, to draw the line, and inclined more readily, for the sake of peace, to some sort of compromise. Wearied with contention, even in a good cause, the pleading seemed to be, 'Let us have peace in our day! Cannot we find a middle path, where we may all meet and compare our differences, or agree to differ?' With this section of the Church, intellect predominated over feeling or conviction in the various discussions, to the disadvantage of the latter, for feeling or conviction has no adequate language in which to express itself. Argument cannot convey to another mind the strength of deep-rooted spiritual impressions, and hence the emotional has little power to convince the intellectual—a difficulty the early Friends experienced in their controversies with their opponents. But when the conscience is touched with power from on high, when like begets like, then farther argumentation is needless, for conviction is accomplished. This may account in some measure for the tenacity with which those who know and believe, from indisputable authority, that their cause is just, their leader infallible, adhere to the views which they entertain respecting the work, purpose, and mission of the Society—'to be witnesses for God, and to propagate His life in the world; to be instruments in His hand, and bring others out of death and captivity into true life and liberty." Hence, there can be no amalgamation of the two classes spoken of without a surrender of principle to expediency, or yielding for the sake of peace. This can never be assented to by men who believe it is their mission to proclaim the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, as they have received it from the hands of its Divine Author. For as one of old testified, 'This is that which keeps us a living, virtuous people, even as we abide in Him, increase and grow in Him who at first appeared unto us, and unto whom our minds were at first directed. Herein we shall be preachers of righteousness, lights of the world, and as the salt of the earth indeed.'

Thy Friend, X."

Gas Wells.

Their Situation and Characteristics in Europe, Asia and America.

(Concluded from page 18.)

Gas wells and gas springs are frequently met with in many parts of northern Ohio. At Painesville several successful wells have been bored. The most noted is situated on the farm of C. C. Jennings, about a mile to the east of the village. This well was constructed under the direction of General Casement, the son-in-law of C. C. Jennings, who began operations in the fall of 1870, but was forced, for several reasons, to discontinue the work until the spring, when the drilling was resumed. Gas was found at three hundred and fifty feet below the surface, sufficient in quantity to run the engine, and when a depth of five hundred and fifty feet had been reached, a large vein was struck of such power as to temporarily stop the work. The boring was continued, however, to a depth of seven hundred feet, at which an abundant supply of gas was found. The gas is conveyed through a three-inch pipe to the dwelling two hundred feet distant, where it is used not only for illuminating purposes, but also for heating and cooking. During the two years that it has been in use its qualities have been fully tested. Every fire in the house is fed by the gas, which leaves no ashes, dust or smoke, and can be lighted at any moment by simply turning a stop-cock and applying a lighted match. In the kitchen the gas is introduced into a large range; this is heated by a number of burners arranged in six parallel lines about an inch apart, and covering nearly the whole of the fire-plate. The volume of the flame, and consequently the degree of heat, is regulated by a simple tap at the side of the hearth which can be turned in an instant.

The old-fashioned open fireplace in the sitting-room or library is made cheerful by the brilliant blaze of the gas as it escapes through the fissures in the perfectly imitated logs of terra cotta, which rest on the ancient and-irons.

Two wells have been finished during the past year at the seminary in Painesville, affording a supply of gas sufficient to illuminate and heat the building. At Conneaut and other places in the neighborhood many gas wells have been bored, the majority of which have been successful. A number of wells have also been bored at Cleveland, but they were not so fruitful as those further east. The well bored by Captain Spaulding, who lives about three miles from Cleveland, furnishes a supply of gas sufficient to light and heat his own house and those of his neighbors. Generally speaking, the wells in this district of country do not give a sufficient quantity of gas to warrant the expense of boring, which ranges from $500 to $5,000 according to the depth and the difficulties encountered.

There are about twenty-five gas wells in profitable operation at Erie, Pennsylvania. Some of them were bored for oil, but in place of that article such an abundant supply of gas was obtained that the actual results proved almost as profitable. They range from five hundred to twelve hundred feet in depth, and the gas is used not only for illumination, but also for heating and cooking purposes. It is used in many of the factories and breweries, and lately has been introduced into dwelling-houses, affording an abundant supply for all household uses. The water-works which furnish the city with water are driven by two large steam engines which are worked by the gas flowing from a well sunk on the premises.

About five miles from Titusville, on the Nelson farm, is the great Newton gas well. The boring is lined with a three and-a-quarter inch casing, and the flow of gas is estimated at more than 500,000 cubic feet a day. A week after the completion of the boring one of the men employed at the well fired the gas, producing a great concussion, which shook the ground for many miles around. The flames rose to the height of more than thirty feet, and it was some twenty-four hours before they were extinguished. The gas from this well is now conveyed to Titusville through two pipes, which distribute it to many of the refineries, and likewise to a few private houses. Since the well was opened the pressure has gradually increased so that several outlets are now needed in order to relieve the pipe from undue pressure. The supply of gas seems to be inexhaustible.

Near Oil City there are several gas wells. One was bored in 1866 to a depth of eight hundred and fifty feet, and another two years later to a depth of nine hundred and sixty feet. The gas is used for heating, and as fuel for the steam engines which pump oil from the oil wells near by.

In the Kanawha Valley, where it intersects the mountains of West Virginia, the gas which issues from the salt wells has been used for upwards of twenty-five years as fuel in the evaporation of the brine. That gas existed in this region was known to the early settlers, who found it escaping through crevices in the ground, and from the surface of springs of water. Its discovery was purely accidental, and occurred during an encampment of a band of these explorers on the banks of the river. One of the number, who had occasion to go to the spring near the encampment on a dark night, took a torch to light his path. On reaching the spring, to his great surprise, it took fire, the gas burning with great brilliancy on the surface of the water. He called his companions to witness this unusual sight, and they called the spot the "Burning Spring," a name which it has borne ever since, although now it is a mere puddle. While drilling for brine springs in 1847, a mixture of gas and water was struck at a depth of one thousand feet. This mixture gushed upward with great violence to the height of forty feet, and upon the application of a lighted candle became a sheet of flame. The flame was extinguished, but the gas and brine continued to spout upward. The gas was collected in tanks or gasometers, and furnished an excellent fuel for the salt furnaces at a very small cost. Later borings for gas were equally successful, and the quantity discharged daily was enormous.

The gas which issues from a deep boring near Cumberland, Maryland, has lately been turned to a novel use in the manufacture of carbon and lampblack. The gas was discovered in boring for oil, and being accidentally lighted the flow was so great that it continued to burn incessantly for many months.

About a year ago the well was purchased by a company who had secured a patent for the manufacture of carbon. The gas is burned against soapstone plates, depositing on them carbon in very fine particles, like soot. By a simple process scrapers are passed along the plates at intervals of about twenty minutes, by which the carbon is detached, and falls into long tin boxes, which are filled at every fourth passage of the scrapers. The number of burners in use formerly was six hundred and sixty, consuming five thousand cubic feet of gas an hour, or about one-twelfth of the volume that issues from the well; but recently a larger building has been erected, containing one thousand three hundred and twenty-eight burners, and these consume three times the quantity of gas previously used. If the company had to pay for the gas used at the rate charged in this city for manufactured gas, it would cost them at least $1,000 per day.—N. Y. Evening Post.

Selected.

A Testimony of Haddonfield Monthly Meeting, concerning Joseph Snowdon, deceased.

We deem it to be our duty to issue a brief testimony concerning our late beloved Friend Joseph Snowdon, to record our sense of the loss we have sustained by his removal, the esteem and regard we have for his memory, and his religious exercises and care amongst us; also to exalt the power and efficacy of Divine Grace, by submission to which he was made a living member of the Church of Christ, and prepared for service therein; filling the important station of an elder in our religious Society for over thirty years.

He was deeply concerned for the preservation of a rightly authorized ministry amongst us, and as a faithful watchman, was often engaged to caution and guard the flock against the introduction through this door, of unsound doctrine, and crude, speculative, religious sentiments, with other innovations, tending to undermine the faith of the Society, and to lay its original testimony waste.

He was also as a tender, nursing father in the Church to many, taking them by the hand, and helping the rightly concerned forward in the right way; thus evincing that he was an elder indeed, worthy of double honor, laboring and travailing for Zion's welfare, both in word and doctrine. He was one who lived in the sense, feeling, and enjoyment of that he made profession of, and was qualified not only to travail and suffer with the Seed, but also at times, from a living sense of the arising of the Word of life, the true spring of all right ministry, to declare from his own experience, "the Lord reigneth!" Of this our beloved Friend and worthy Elder, we believe it may be said, as he lived, so he died, "in the Lord;" and the concern is felt that his example may animate us, who are still left behind, to walk by the same rule, and to mind the same thing, following him, as he followed Christ.

A few nights previous to his decease he remarked to one of his children, that eighty years seemed a long time to live, but nothing in comparison to eternity. That he believed there was nothing in his way, but he felt that he had been an unprofitable servant, and that not by any works of righteousness that he had done, but in great poverty of spirit, he believed, through the mercy of God in Christ Jesus, he would be saved. On the afternoon of his death, just before the close, he was heard to say in a faint voice, "Where is thy sting?" We reverently believe that the language has been found applicable to this dear Friend, "Well done, good and faithful servant, thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things: Enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."

He died on the 15th of the 8th month, 1873, being in the 83d year of his age; and his remains were interred in Friends' burying-ground at Haddonfield, on the 19th of the same month.

For "The Friend."

Temperance Coffee-Houses.

Among the Temperance movements of the day, one that bids fair to be useful, if rightly managed, is the establishment of comfortable and attractive places of resort, where suitable refreshments can be obtained by the working classes at very moderate rates; and, at the same time, books and papers of an interesting and instructive character, and the usual conveniences of a reading room are supplied to the customers. It is believed that such restaurants and reading rooms combined, conducted on a liberal scale, might prevent many from partaking of the intoxicating drinks which are kept for sale in most of the houses to which such persons resort.

In 1860, Thomas Corbett, an opulent merchant of Glasgow, opened such an establishment in that city—a city which is noted for the immoral and intemperate character of many of its inhabitants. Cooked food was there supplied at cheaper rates than the workingmen had been paying. The house became very popular, and branch after branch was added to it. It became a self-supporting institution, and yielded in profit a moderate interest on the capital invested. Similar results have been obtained in other cities. The Seamen's and Landsmen's Aid Society of Philadelphia, are making an effort to open one or more such houses in parts of this city where there seems especial need for them.

Selected.

Report of the Proceedings of the Tract Association of Friends, for the year 1874.

The Managers Report:—That there have been printed during the year ending Second month 28th, 1874, 84,173 Tracts; 6,004 Almanacs for the year 1874; 3,000 Proverbs of Solomon; 4,800 Sermon on the Mount; and 500 Biographical Sketches and Anecdotes of Friends.

There have been taken from the Depository during this period, 26 copies of Brief Account of the Life and Religious Labors of Sarah [Lynes] Grubb; 20 Divine Protection through Extraordinary Dangers, &c.; 13 Spiritual Progress of M. R.; 24 Memoir of Mary Dudley and Daughters; 65 Select Extracts; 184 Short Account of Ann Reeve; 149 Memoir of Rachel C. Bartram; 338 Biographical Sketches; 2,570 Sermon on the Mount; 1,796 Proverbs of Solomon; 73 Select Readers; 709 Juvenile Books; 4,760 Almanacs, and 60,456 Tracts.

The stock of Tracts on hand Third month 1st, 1873, was 156,866. There have since been printed as above, 84,173 Tracts. There have been sold and taken for distribution, 60,456 Tracts, leaving on hand in the Depository, Second month 28th, 1874, 180,583 Tracts.

There has also been printed for distribution throughout the City by an association which has for one of its objects the circulation of matter of this kind, 78,000 copies of the four page Tract, entitled, "Honest Jane Bawden," 13,000 of which were in German; 100,000 copies have also been printed of a leaflet, entitled, "Is Temperate Drinking Safe?" which has been circulated largely in this City, chiefly through the medium of the same distributing society. The agents of this society scatter these leaflets freely among that portion of our population to whom it seems especially needful to bring to view the blighting effects of an indulgence in the use of spirituous liquors, and we can not but hope that some of its readers may thereby have been induced to pause and consider, before passing the deceptive limit of temperate drinking, and that others may be deterred from commencing the dangerous practice, through its perusal. 60,456 Tracts, and 12,950 of the leaflet mentioned, taken from the Depository in the usual way, have been intended for distribution as follows:

In Prisons, among the poor, on steamboats and elsewhere in this city,	8,760
In other parts of Pennsylvania,	4,156
" Massachusetts,	646
" Rhode Island,	360
" New York,	1,533
" New Jersey,	5,615
" Delaware,	248
" Maryland,	341
" Washington, D. C.,	4,308
" Virginia,	420
" North Carolina,	460
" Florida,	896
" Ohio,	4,646
" Michigan,	240
" Iowa,	6,314
" Missouri,	200
Chiefly within the limits of Kansas Yearly Meeting,	9,940
In the Western States generally,	1,532
" Utah,	100
" California,	445
" Ireland,	232
" The Argentine Confederation,	200
" Places not particularly designated,	11,325
Making a total of,	62,917
There have been sold,	10,489
Making the total number taken from Depository,	73,406

The total number of Tracts and Leaflets disposed of during the year, has been 235,956.

The reading matter for the Moral Almanac for the year 1875, has been mostly selected and placed in the hands of the printing committee for publication.

A new tract has been added to our series, since the last report, numbered 117. It is entitled, "What is it?" and is designed to call attention to that inward Monitor, whose gentle intimations are to be known in the secret of the soul, condemning for doing evil and justifying for doing well.

Encouraged by the favorable reception of the "Biographical Sketches," it is proposed to issue in the course of the present year, a book with the title of "Musings and Memories," giving authentic and striking instances of Providential Interpositions, &c., in many cases accompanied with instructive comments. It is believed that such a work will be of interest to many outside of our Society, and we trust it will prove an acceptable and valuable addition to our publications.

The collection of tracts now kept in store for distribution form an interesting and instructive miscellany, each pointing more or less directly to the necessity of experiencing the operations of the Holy Spirit in the heart, and the blessed effects which follow obedience to its dictates. Accounts of this character, whether in the form of biographical notices of religious men and women, striking narratives of particular events, or the exposition of subjects of a doctrinal nature, contain matter which must always be of deep interest to the newly awakened mind, and often afford food for serious reflection to others of greater experience. We continue to be cheered at times by information that they have been made the instruments for good to individuals in different localities, into whose hands they have fallen, and it is our desire that all suitable opportunities for the presentation of these treatises to serious enquirers, may be improved, and the judicious general circulation of them and the other publications of the Association encouraged.

On behalf of the Board,

RICHARD J. ALLEN, Clerk.

Philadelphia, Third month 19, 1874.

OFFICERS OF THE ASSOCIATION.

The following Friends were appointed to fill the respective offices of the Association for the ensuing year.

Clerk,—Edward Maris, M. D.

Treasurer,—Elton B. Gifford.

Managers,—John C. Allen, Jacob W. Fry, Edward Richie, John S. Stokes, Horatio C. Wood, Richard J. Allen, William Kinsey, John W. Biddle, Samuel Allen, Ephraim Smith, Mark Balderston, James G. M'Collin, George J. Scattergood, Joseph W. Lippincott, William Kite.

The Annual Meeting is held in the Arch Street Meeting-house, on the last Fourth-day in the Third month, at eight o'clock in the evening.

How to Rise in the World.—In 1855 a young gentleman registered his name in the largest hotel in the city of Louisville, Ky. He had a pretty good wardrobe, such as young men usually have, including a gold watch and chain. He was in search of occupation. At the expiration of two weeks he took an inventory of his personal effects: "Out of money and no business." He had a brief interview with the proprietor of the hotel. His trunk of clothing was left as security for his board bill; he hypothecated his watch for the loan of ten dollars, and "went diving for the bottom." He found "bottom" on Water St., where a steamer was being discharged of cotton. Having purchased a heavy pair of boots, a blue shirt and overalls, he commenced rolling and piling cotton at the rate of five cents per bale. In three weeks he was promoted to the position of "marker" with a salary of forty-five dollars per month, and at the expiration of nine months he was in receipt of a salary of $125 per month. To-day this gentleman is one of the largest business operators in Bay street. No moral need be given. The story speaks its own.—Late Paper.

I have never, I think, been accused of enthusiasm, the faith which I have possessed I have kept pretty much to myself before God. At any rate, I have made no proud boasting of it—believing what is called religious conversation, where it is not the offspring, is too often the parent of vanity. I have thought it best to leave my actions to speak for me—they are the fruits which both man and God will judge us by.—Samuel Roberts.

Selected.

MY DREAM.

BY J. G. WHITTIER.

In my dream, methought I trod,
Yesternight, a mountain road;
Narrow as Al Sirat's span,
High as eagle's flight it ran.

Overhead, a roof of cloud
With its weight of thunder bowed;
Underneath, to left and right,
Blackness and abysmal night.

Here and there a wild flower blushed,
Now and then a bird-song gushed;
Now and then, through rifts of shade,
Stars shone out, and sunbeams played.

But the goodly company,
Walking in that path with me,
One by one the brink o'erslid,
One by one the darkness hid.

Some with wailing and lament,
Some with cheerful courage went;
But, of all who smiled or mourned,
Never one to us returned.

Anxiously, with eye and ear,
Questioning that shadow drear,
Never hand in token stirred,
Never answering voice I heard!

Steeper, darker! lo! I felt
From my feet the pathway melt.
Swallowed by the black despair,
And the hungry jaws of air,

Past the stony-throated caves,
Strangled by the wash of waves,
Past the splintered crags, I sank
On a green and flowery bank,—

Soft as fall of thistle-down,
Lightly as a cloud is blown,
Soothingly as childhood pressed
To the bosom of its rest.

Of the sharp-horned rocks instead,
Green the grassy meadows spread,
Bright with waters singing by Trees that propped a golden sky.

Painless, trustful, sorrow-free,
Old lost faces welcomed me,
With whose sweetness of content
Still expectant hope was blent.

Waking while the dawning gray
Slowly brightened into day,
Pondering that vision fled,
Thus unto myself I said:—

"Steep, and hung with clouds of strife,
Is our narrow path of life;
And our death the dreaded fall
Through the dark awaiting all.

"So, with painful steps we climb
Up the dizzy ways of time,
Ever in the shadow shed
By the forecast of our dread.

"Dread of mystery solved alone,
Of the untried and unknown;
Yet the end thereof may seem Like the falling of my dream.

"And this heart-consuming care,
All our fears of here or there,
Change and absence, loss and death,
Prove but simple lack of faith."

Thou, O Most Compassionate!
Who didst stoop to our estate,
Drinking of the cup we drain,
Treading in our path of pain,—

Through the doubt and mystery,
Grant to us Thy steps to see,
And the grace to draw from thence Larger hope and confidence.

Show thy vacant tomb, and let,
As of old, the angels sit,
Whispering, by its open door:
"Fear not! He hath gone before!"

The highest act of charity in the world is to bear with the unreasonableness of mankind.—A. Benezet.

For "The Friend."

From the proceedings of the Academy of Natural Sciences of Philadelphia, the following notes are taken:—

"5th mo. 19th.—Direct Growth Force.—Thomas Meehan referred to some potatoes exhibited by him to the Academy a few years ago, in which the stolons of a grass had penetrated through from one side to the other, preferring, as it would seem, to go through such an obstruction to turning aside to avoid it. A potatoe was a rather rough surfaced body. He now exhibited a similar case, only the obstruction was the round smooth root of an herbaceous peony. Though not more than one-third of an inch thick and round, a stolon of Triticum repens, the common couch grass, had pushed itself through.

6th mo. 2d.—Habits of the Orchard Oriole.—Thomas Meehan stated that he was not familiar with the latest knowledge in ornithology, that not being a special study with him; but if Wilson's Ornithology contained all that was known of the habits of the orchard oriole—Oriolus mutatus—he might say that the bird did not confine itself solely to insect food. He had on his grounds a large specimen of the Staphylea trifolia, which, when in bloom, was a favorite resort with humblebees and humming-birds, and the oriole took its share of honey from the flowers as well. It did not rest on the wing as the humming-bird did, but sought a lower branch from which it could leisurely extract the sweets from the flowers above. He had thought it possible that the bird was in search of insects among the flowers, but a careful examination proved otherwise.

Poisonous character of the Flowers of Wistaria Sinensis.—T. Meehan remarked that there was a popular belief that the flowers of the Wistaria sinensis were destructive to bees. He had himself seen hundreds of dead bees under large flowering plants. He was struck with the fact this season, that none were dead under similar circumstances. The flowers were continually visited by the honey bee, and others, without, so far as he could see, any fatal results following. It was clear, therefore, that, whatever might be the cause of the death of these insects under some circumstances, it could not be from the honey alone.

Growth of the Cuicus arvensis, Hoff.—In regard to the rapidity with which plants sometimes grew, Thomas Meehan observed that, though it was well known that the Canada thistle spread surprisingly, there had been no figures, giving its exact growth, placed on record. In the first week in May, 1873, he sowed a few seeds. By the first week in June the plants were well above the ground, and about to push out their stolons. They continued to radiate from this centre in every direction till the first week in September, when they had reached a distance of six feet, covering a circle of twelve feet in diameter, the space being profusely filled with plants thrown up from the creeping stolons. This gave an average of about three-fourths of an inch of growth per day; equal to maize or other rapid-growing vegetation above ground."

6th mo. 16th.—Prof. Leidy described some curious animalculæ found in the neighborhood of Philadelphia. He says: "In the earth about the roots of mosses growing in the crevices of the bricks of our city pavements, in damp places, besides finding several species of Amœba, together with abundance of the common wheel-animalcule, Rotifer vulgaris, I had the good fortune to discover a species of Gromia. I say good fortune, for it is with the utmost pleasure I have watched this curious creature for hours together. The genus was discovered and well described by Dujardin, from two species, one of which, G. oviformis, was found in the seas of France; the other, the G. fluviatilis, in the River Seine.

Imagine an animal, like one of our autumnal spiders stationed at the centre of its well-spread net; imagine every thread of this net to be a living extension of the animal, elongating, branching, and becoming confluent so as to form a most intricate net; and imagine every thread to exhibit actively moving currents of a viscid liquid both outward and inward, carrying along particles of food and dirt, and you have some idea of the general character of a Gromia.

The Gromia of our pavements is a spherical cream-colored body, about the $\frac{1}{16}$th of a line in diameter. When detached from its position and placed in water, in a few minutes it projects in all directions a most wonderful and intricate net. Along the threads of this net float minute naviculæ from the neighborhood, like boats in the current of a stream, until reaching the central mass they are there swallowed. Particles of dirt are also collected from all directions and are accumulated around the animal, and when the accumulation is sufficient to protect it, the web is withdrawn and nothing apparently will again induce the animal to produce it.

From these observations we may suppose that the Gromia terricola, as I propose to name the species, during dry weather remains quiescent and concealed among accumulated dirt in the crevices of our pavements, but that in rains or wet weather the little creature puts forth its living net which becomes so many avenues along which food is conveyed to the body. As the neighborhood becomes dry, the net is withdrawn to await another rain. The animal with its extended net can cover an area of nearly half a line in diameter. The threads of the net are less than the $\frac{1}{30000}$th of an inch in diameter."

"Professor Cope mentioned the capture of a young whale, Balæna cisarctica, of forty-eight feet in length, in the Raritan River, near South Amboy, on May 30th. The skeleton was buried and would be preserved in some museum. He examined the whalebone, of which there are 245 laminæ on each side of the mouth. The color is black and the hair is fine, long, and has a brownish tinge; length of longest plate with hair, 48 inches. The gum is 116 inches long and 11 inches deep. He was informed that the whale was entirely black, and the dorsal line without irregularities."

For "The Friend."

Tearing Down a Wall.

Having recently had occasion to cut a doorway through a stone wall, from one cellar to another, I watched with some interest the proceedings of the workman, who was engaged in the operation. He had been for many years employed as a tender to masons and bricklayers, and had learned by experience how to effect his object. I observed that when he had by blows of his pick on the softer mortar effected a slight entrance, so as to obtain a foothold for his instrument, he endeavored to pry out one of the stones, using all the force his instrument would bear. But his effort was unsuccessful; the stone was too massive and too firmly fixed into its place to be moved. Finding this to be the case, he soon desisted from the attempt, and proceeded to pick at the mortar, gradually detaching pieces of it, and loosening and removing the smaller pieces of stone that had been wedged in the crevices between the larger ones. In this way, he soon removed the supports from the large stone, so that it readily yielded to the blows and prying of the pick, and fell to the ground. An opening having once been made in the wall, the work of destruction proceeded more rapidly. The other stones thus left with only a partial support were easily displaced, and the whole process was soon accomplished.

As I stood, a quiet spectator of the scene, the thought flashed across the mind, how apt an emblem is this workman with his pick, to Satan assaulting with his temptations those whom he is seeking to delude and destroy. He does not begin by persuading his intended victim to do some gross or outrageous action, the mere mention of which would alarm and put him on his guard. He attacks the weak points and attempts to get a foothold there first. Are we naturally persons of strong appetites? he leads us to an undue indulgence of these, an indulgence which leads us beyond the limits which a proper attention to the checks and restraints of the Spirit of Christ in the heart would impose. The advantage he thus gains over us, he follows up by stimulating us to take greater liberties, and indulge in more lavish expenditures in gratifying the corrupted wishes of the heart The further steps by which he leads us to ruin, may accord with our physical and mental constitution, and on the outward position in which we are placed. Many a young man, who has thus entered on the downward course, has been led to appropriate to his own use the funds of others without their knowledge and consent. The principles of his education, and the convictions of Grace, show him the wickedness of dishonesty; and at first he attempts to quiet the pleadings of these, by resolving to return the money to its rightful owner at a convenient time. But that convenient time never comes; the devil, to whose service he is submitting, leads him on from one step to another, until disgrace and ruin are his portion.

Some who have thus entered the broad way that leads to destruction, have been aroused to a sense of their lapsed condition, and of the danger that overhung them, by the renewed and merciful visitations of the Spirit of Christ; and by submitting their hearts to its awakening call, and suffering the Divine judgments to have their full effect, have been brought into true repentance, and enabled with the poor publican of old to cry out from the bottom of their hearts, "Lord, be merciful to me a sinner." Such have been so humbled, that they have felt that they could not obtain that peace of mind they longed for, without making confession of their guilt to those they had wronged. When the poor sinner has been brought to the situation, in which he makes no reserves, but is willing in all things to obey the Divine requiring, if he may but know the return of peace to his soul; surely, then is verified the language of our Saviour, "There is more joy in heaven over one sinner that repenteth, than over ninety and nine just persons that need no repentance."

For "The Friend."

The following letter to a Friend of this city, has been kindly placed at our disposal for publication.

Wichita Agency, Ind. Ter.,
Eighth mo. 25th, 1874.

The last few days have been eventful ones at this Agency. On the morning of the 22d inst., being the day for the issue of rations, and hence many of the Indians of this Agency present, Gen. Davidson appeared upon the scene with four companies of troops.

His object, as stated, was to take to Fort Sill some Quahada Comanches who belonged to that reservation, and who refused to go in and be enrolled in accordance with the instructions of the Department. They had encamped a few days before near the Penetheka Comanches of this Agency, and near the commissary where our Indians were congregated for their weekly supplies. The General made known his object to the chief of the Quahadas, Red Food, and demanded that their arms should be given up, and that they should accompany him to their reservation. To this Red Food agreed; but while the officers were still conversing in reference to terms of capitulation, Red Food made a dash for his horse, mounted and escaped, a company of troops firing upon him as he ran. The Kiowas, a number of whom were present, together with the Comanches, then fired upon the troops, and thus the battle began.

The chiefs of the friendly Indians did all in their power to separate their people from those whom the troops were firing upon, for, being issue day, they were all together a promiscuous company of men, women and children.

A bullet passed so near to Asa Truit, a good Comanche, as to take off a large piece from his hat rim.

The troops were ordered to burn the camps of the Quahadas, and they were consumed with their stores and munitions—about eighty lodges. The reports of exploding gunpowder in their lodges, showed that they were not lacking in munitions of war.

Our Indians scattered to their various villages. The enraged Comanches and Kiowas scoured the country in parties, killing all the white men found from their homes, and burning and destroying property. About ten are thus far reported to have been sacrificed to their barbarity. Five bodies have been found and buried. One was brought to the Agency, Osborne, a son-in-law of Black Beaver, chief of the Delawares. He was fearfully mutilated, but not scalped. Three others of the men killed were in Beaver's employ. I hardly every witnessed a more distressed countenance than Beaver presented when the news of the outrages reached him. A party of the Indians entered the store which the traders had deserted at the commencement of the fight, and destroyed the greater part of the goods, estimated at from eight to ten thousand dollars in value.

On the morning of the 23d inst., about daylight, the wild Indians of the tribes before mentioned, estimated at 250 in number, collected on the heights overlooking the Agency.

A skirmish line of troops were occupying some of the higher points, and between these and the Indians a brisk firing began. Col. Carpenter with fifty dismounted cavalrymen, hastened to the scene, regained the height, and dispersed the Indians. Meanwhile, the Indians had attempted to retake the store, which is located on a point on the same height, for the occupancy of which the troops were contesting.

The few troops stationed in the store kept up so brisk a fire upon the Indians that they fell back and abandoned the enterprise. Finding they were foiled in all points in their attempts, they set fire to the prairies back of the Agency. The wind drove the flames toward the Agency buildings, forcing many of the troops in, and it was only by the greatest exertions that the mill and other property escaped the conflagration. I should have remarked that Lone Wolf set fire to the commissary building, in which were the stores for the Indians, on the attack of the 22d inst. at that place; but it was seen and extinguished by the troops before it had gained any considerable headway. It must be remembered that it is very dry here, the grass and vegetation is as dead as in mid-winter, and fires once started are not easily extinguished.

During the day (23d) the Wichita schoolhouse No. 1, situated five miles from the Agency, was burned by the Indians, and several of the houses constructed by the Agent for the Indians were consumed, among them a good two-story frame building, the home of Delaware Possum, the house of J. Davis and the homes of some of the Caddos. The houses and lodges of most of the Indians were robbed and plundered of all their goods. What could not be taken, in many instances, was destroyed. Many of them had collected quantities of winter supplies, blankets and clothing, so that much suffering must ensue from their destruction. Ponies were taken from them, and cattle and other stock killed.

But four soldiers were wounded during the skirmishing; none killed. It is thought about eleven Indians were killed. And, as before stated, ten whites who were found making hay, herding, &c., out from the Agency, were killed. On the 24th many of our chiefs came into the Agency and wanted to know what all the disturbance meant; some were under the impression that the slaughter was intended to be indiscriminate, and that they were among the proscribed. (A Comanche woman who had taken refuge at the Agency had been sent out the day before to invite the friendly Indians to a council.) As they were among those fired upon at the commissary affair it is not to be wondered at that they should be in doubt as to their own safety. Gen. Davidson explained the case to them, and they seemed to feel easier about it. It is a wonder none of them were killed.

Dispatches were sent on the night of the 22d to Fort Sill for more troops. About two o'clock on the morning of the 24th, two companies of infantry joined the forces here, making in all seven companies now here, four of cavalry and three of infantry. Some of the friendly Kiowa and Comanche chiefs came in yesterday, among whom were Kicking Bird, Iron Mountain, Cheevers, Horse-Back, Sun Boy, Pacer of the Apaches, and others.

They report the forces of the raiders led by Lone Wolf, as having separated from those who are willing to go to their Agency. The troops are expected soon to go out in search of them. The Indians already out will, no doubt, fight with desperation, knowing that to surrender means imprisonment and humiliation. The number on the war path is not definitely known. The Indians report to-day that all the Kiowa raiders were in this conflict except Big Bow, who was on a raiding expedition elsewhere.

None of the Cheyennes were here. All is quiet at present, but I think it is the intention of the military to follow and punish (if they find) those who have refused to go to their Agency.

* * * * We hope the difficulty may soon be at an end. The damage already done here is considerable, besides the demoralizing effect upon our Indians. I think, however, school will open with fair numbers; some of the chiefs are in to-day; said they had rather have their children here in school than in camp.

Agent Richards started to Caddo in company with Cyrus Beede on the morning of the 22d, little thinking that the afternoon would witness a battle at his own Agency. I think our Indians will pull together, and some good may yet be accomplished among them. I do not think we ought to abandon the field, however much the military would like to occupy it. Now is the time we are needed.

F. Grinnell, M. D.

For "The Friend."

The Grasshoppers in the North-west.

Those of us who live in this section of our widely extended country, can probably form but little idea of the desolating effects of the invasions of the grasshoppers, such as frequently occur, and are now taking place in many parts of some of the North-western States. One of the subscribers to "The Friend," writing from Polk County, Nebraska, under date of Eighth month 24th, says in reference to them:

"I will just to give thee an idea of their numbers, state that on the 23d of last month, when they first appeared in sight, they looked like a cloud of smoke, extending from west to east for at least twenty miles, and flying as closely together as swarms of bees. They arrived here about four o'clock P. M., and though enough lit down to cover corn and every thing else (together with the ground) thickly over, yet the main swarm passed on, and was just one hour and twenty minutes passing a given point.

We had 20 acres corn, [a neighbor] 25, which was completely stripped, as well as all in the county; our vegetables, such as potatoes, beans, squashes, onions, cucumbers, melons, &c., all gone. They (the hoppers) are still flying over, high in the air, by millions, every few days."

A correspondent of the Country Gentleman, from the same State says:

"They have taken about all the corn, almost all garden stuff, have stripped the apple trees of leaves and tender twigs, leaving the apples almost untouched, having stripped crab apple and pear trees bare; and are eating the peaches, leaving the trees without much harm. Of the deciduous forest trees, they have stripped willows, cottonwoods, except a tuft at top, ashes, ailanthus, bois d'arc (single specimens), Lombardy poplars, balm of Gilead, black walnut, black locust and hackberry. The honey locust, ash-leaved maple or box elder, Morello and early Richmond cherry, oak, white maple and wild plum trees are all right. Plum trees are about half stripped. Bois d'arc in hedge, are partly stripped, but not seriously damaged. Evergreens are stripped. Currant bushes are all bare. Raspberry bushes and apricots are all right. Rose bushes and most shrubs are stripped. The locusts do not seem to have worked much upon the grass, and the sorgho is untouched.

The course of the locusts seems to be about southeast, and their rate of travel from two to five miles a day. They will continue in one place about three days, when the main body leaves in search of new fields to conquer, leaving a rear guard as gleaners. Those now here are about half grown, they seem to increase in size, until about September, when, usually they pair and deposit their eggs, to be hatched out the next spring. If not checked or the course changed, they may be expected as far east as eastern Iowa or Missouri, or possibly they may reach western Illinois or Kentucky. On reaching a corn field they do not spread all over it at once, but, as if under orders, or by concerted plan, advancing in ranks a million deep, they clean off the first five or six rows, and thence advance to a new parallel.

The loss here is immense. The loss of the corn crop means no beef, no pork, no poultry, no eggs. It means poor teams and poor farming. It means dead horses, poor wool and dead sheep. It means the discouragement of many, and a partial depopulation. It means no money and hard times. This attack of the locusts fills the bucket of misery full to overflowing for many. But yet we have had a fair wheat harvest, so there will not be actual starvation. There is a fair cut of grass, so cattle can live, and it is not yet too late, if we have rain, to raise a crop of turnips and and some other vegetables. If our fruit trees are killed, the loss cannot be estimated."

In Kansas their numbers are no less alarming. A writer in Nemaha County, in the north-eastern part of Kansas, says:

"The sun is quite hidden by the clouds of grasshoppers flying all around and alighting on everything. They are pelting against my doors and windows as fast as hailstones ever came.

I can scarcely see through my screen door for them, and to look out as far as eye can see, it looks like a snow storm—as they fly their wings look white like flakes of snow in the air. They destroy everything they alight on. They have destroyed acres and acres of corn, and now they are going into our cornfield by clouds, and will destroy it all in a day.

Instead of rain we are having showers of grasshoppers. Our six windows are completely covered with them, and as I write, they are pouring down the chimney and coming down the stovepipe."

Naturalists who have traced the flight of these insects on previous similar invasions, inform us that the native home of these grasshoppers is in the canons of the Rocky Mountains. Within the last fifty years, at least eight of these incursions have been noted, occurring generally from the 27th of Eighth month to the 1st of Tenth month; and they also record the striking fact, that though hardy and vigorous themselves, their progeny hatched in the warmer lowland country over which their swarms have passed, appear weak and diseased, so that the race soon dies out. This species of grasshopper, therefore, is not likely to become a permanent denizen of the region thus visited.

The distance which these insects, aided by the wind, can traverse in a few weeks, is very surprising. They have been seen at the distance of three hundred and fifty miles from their original starting point, though this seems to be about the limit of their journeyings. In no case have the parent swarms been observed, in any considerable numbers, east of the Mississippi.

Dr. Guthrie, in his autobiography, describes an odd character among his Scotch country parishioners, at Arbirlot, "who died as he lived, a curious mixture of benevolence and folly." The lawyer who drew his will, after writing down several legacies of five hundred pounds to one person, a thousand to another, and so on, at last said, "But, ——, I don't believe you have all that money to leave." "O," was the reply, "I ken that as well as you, but I just want to show them my good will!" An equally cheap benevolence is often exhibited by people who have nothing of their own to give, but who are profuse in promises and slow in performances.

THE FRIEND.

NINTH MONTH 12, 1874.

Many parts of our country have, within the past few years, received abundant evidences, that unless the blessing of Heaven smile on our efforts, we may plant and water in vain, the looked for increase will not be given. The All-wise Ruler of the world can accomplish his purposes, either by the immediate manifestation of his power, or through the agency of those laws which he has impressed on his intellectual and material creation. If He sees the population of a great city, too much absorbed in the pursuit of wealth, or filled with pride at the rapid growth in size and riches of the place of their abode; it is easy for Him to permit the carelessness of even one of its inhabitants, to kindle a great conflagration, which may sweep over a large part of its area, with uncontrollable violence, and reduce thousands of its costly edifices to a mass of smoking ruins. By such a severe lesson, many may be made to realize their dependence on His favor; and their minds in measure may be turned from a too ardent pursuit of the things pertaining to this world; and led to seek more earnestly for that treasure which fadeth not away, but is safely stored in Heaven.

The withholding of the rain in some sections has, in several recent seasons, greatly disappointed the hopes of the husbandman; rendering almost fruitless the labor expended in preparing the ground, and planting and tending the crop. While in other neighborhoods the fall of the water has been so unusually heavy, that life and property have been destroyed by the swollen streams.

The recent pouring forth of an overwhelming flood of grasshoppers, which has eaten up nearly every green thing in many parts of the more remote Western States of the Union, has been an occurrence which could not have been foreseen, nor its evil effects prevented. In another portion of our columns will be found some interesting particulars concerning it.

There are persons and neighborhoods, which for many years have been exempt from any serious loss or trial, such as has fallen to the lot of many others. The tendency of this immunity is to make them feel that their mountain stands strong. They listen to the report of the affliction that has overtaken others, but it does not occur to them that this may one day be their own experience. They do not realize the truth of the Scripture declaration, It is of the Lord's mercies we are not consumed; nor of that other passage, applicable to our temporal as well as spiritual condition, Let him that thinketh he standeth take heed lest he fall. We have none of us any security, save the Divine protection, against the convulsions of the elements, before which we are powerless, or the terrible visitations of pestilences, which have at many times been sent forth with a "warrant to destroy," and may again be so commissioned.

Sudden and wide-spread calamities are calculated to appeal to the sympathies of the benevolent. It is no doubt a part of the moral discipline prescribed for man in this state of existence, to be continually called upon to extend a helping hand to his brethren in their time of need; and it is pleasant to observe how liberally this call is often responded to. The rapid extension of information and intercourse by telegraph, railroad and steam vessels, tends to bind the whole human race into one family; so that if one member suffer, all the members suffer with it. Much more freely than formerly we now extend our thoughts, and contribute of our means to alleviate the distresses of even distant nations. We believe it is the design of our common Father, that this fraternal feeling should increase; and that laying aside the exclusive robe of selfishness, we should every man look, not on our own things only, but also on the things of others. In prophetic vision, the seers of old have seen the coming of that day, when "the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord, as the waters cover the seas," and "the kingdoms of this world shall become the kingdom of our Lord and of His Christ." This divine and blessed government is already begun in the hearts of many; and those who are fully subject to it, will learn to regard themselves, not as owners, but merely as stewards of the worldly possessions placed in their charge. They will feel that they must account to their Heavenly Master for the right use of the means placed at their disposal; and their great concern will be so to fulfil the trust confided to them, that at the end of time they may hear the blessed language, "Well done, good and faithful servant, enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."

SUMMARY OF EVENTS.

FOREIGN.—At noon the 5th inst., the Great Eastern had paid out 1696 nautical miles of the Anglo-American cable. She was then in lat. 51 deg. 30 min. North; long. 47 deg. 35 minutes, West. A dispatch of the 6th at 5 A. M., says: We are close to Skelligs, and we are going to buoy and hope to make the final splice to-day. The cable is in perfect condition.

The representatives of the Atlantic steamship lines have held a conference at Liverpool, and agreed on measures to end the competition between them. They fixed the rate of steerage passage at five guineas on fast and £5 on slow lines, and agreed to carry freight at the minimum rates, which are much below those of the old arrangement.

The Marquis of Ripon has resigned the position of Grand Master of the Order of Free Masons, and has joined the Roman Catholic Church.

At a meeting of cotton spinners, held in Manchester the 4th inst., it was decided that a circular should be sent to the Lancashire mills advising that work be limited to four days a week.

The expedition from the United States to observe the transit of Venus, arrived at Cape Town on the 5th of Eighth month.

The members of the Austrian Polar expedition for whose fate grave fears were felt, have at last been heard from. They were shipwrecked and took to sleighs, in which they succeeded after a long journey in reaching the Norwegian island of Wardoe. After abandoning their ship the party travelled for seven months on sledges, and two months were passed on the ice. A large track of land was discovered to the northwest of Nova Zembla. The highest point reached was in lat. 83 deg. Only one death occurred during the entire voyage. The expedition arrived at Wardoe on a Russian boat.

A Berlin dispatch of the 7th says: There has been a very destructive fire in the town of Meiningen. Half of the place was burned. The loss on buildings alone is estimated at 3,000,000 thalers. Upward of 700 families have been made homeless, and there is great distress among the people.

London, 9th mo. 7th. The rate of discount in the open market for three months bills is 2½ per cent., which is ¼ below the Bank of England rate.

The Liverpool cotton market steady at 8*d.* for uplands and 8¼*d.* Orleans. Breadstuffs firm. California white wheat 10*s.* a 10*s.* 3*d.* per cental.

The official report of the Commissioners appointed to investigate the circumstances of the escape of Bazaine, implicates the jailers, and states that they were instigated by Colonel Villette, Bazaine's aid-de-camp, to facilitate the flight, but acquits the garrison of the fort of complicity in the affair. Bazaine has gone to England.

At a recent meeting of the Permanent Committee of the French National Assembly, several members of the extreme Right uttered their protests against the recognition of Serrano's government in Spain, because it was opposed to the interests of France.

Chaband Latour replied that France had acted in harmony with the other Powers. He added that large bodies of troops had been dispatched to the frontier to preserve a strict neutrality.

There were serious disturbances at Meze, in the Department of the Herault, on the anniversary of the establishment of the Republic. The gensd'armes fired on the rioters, of whom one was killed and nineteen wounded. Reinforcements of infantry and cavalry were immediately ordered to Meze, and entered the town. No further trouble is apprehended. Slight disturbances are reported in other places on the 4th inst., and at Lyons several arrests were made.

It is stated that the French wheat harvest will be unusually abundant. Instead of having, as last year, to import wheat and flour to the value of £12,000,000, France will be able to export from £3,000,000 to £4,000,000 worth of grain.

The sale of ten Bonapartist journals, all published in the provinces, has been prohibited by orders from the Minister of the Interior.

On the 5th inst. the eruption of Mount Etna had ceased. The inhabitants of the villages near the foot of the mountain were greatly alarmed, but happily for them the lava stream did not flow towards the cultivated parts of the mountain.

The Carlist forces on successive days renewed their attacks upon Puycerda, but were each time repulsed. When retreating from the siege of the place the Carlists were attacked and defeated by the Republican forces, and lost seven hundred men killed and wounded. The attacking force also suffered severely.

The Carlists are intrenching themselves around Bilboa, and continue military operations elsewhere in the north of Spain. Russia has sent special agents to the Republican and Carlist generals' headquarters to report the military positions of the contending parties. The Carlist generals Tristany and Mora were defeated by the Republicans, near Seode Urgel, a few days since. There has been some rioting in the province of Barcelona, caused by opposition to conscription. In some instances the boxes containing the names of those liable to draft were stolen and burned.

The 2d inst. was observed throughout Germany as a holiday, being the anniversary of the surrender of Sedan. The day was celebrated with great enthusiasm everywhere.

A dispatch from Shanghai reports that the difficulty between China and Japan, in regard to Formosa, has been settled. Favorable rains have fallen in India during the past week, and the crop prospects are fair or excellent everywhere except in the Hoogly district. The government is in hopes of being able to close its relief operations in fifteen districts by Tenth mo. next, but ten districts will still require help for an indefinite period.

The canton of Schwytz, in Switzerland, is said to have adopted the principles of female suffrage to the fullest extent, women being eligible not only as electors, but also as candidates for public offices.

The Bishop of Yucatan, Mexico, has issued an order excommunicating all Catholics who contract civil marriages.

The Portuguese Minister of the Interior has issued a notice that Arabian ports on the Red Sea are infected with the plague.

UNITED STATES.—There were 604 deaths in New York city last week, and 293 in Philadelphia, of which 118 were adults and 175 minors.

	1873.	1874.
Mean Temperature of Eighth month, per Pennsylvania Hospital, ...	75.95 degs.	74.73 degs.
Highest point attained during do., do., . . .	93.00 "	93.50 "
Lowest point reached during do., do., . . .	61.00 "	58.00 "
Rain during the month, do.	12.28 inch.	6.53 inch.

Average of the mean temperature of Eighth month for the past eighty-five years, 73.38 deg. Highest mean of temperature during that entire period, 1872, 81.64 deg. Lowest mean of temperature during that entire period, 1816, 66.00 deg. Mean temperature of the three summer months of 1873, 76.50 deg. Mean temperature of the three summer months of 1874, 76.24 deg. Average of the summer temperatures for the past eighty-five years, 73.73 deg Highest summer mean occurring during that entire period, 1872, 80.09 deg. Lowest summer mean occurring during that entire period, 1816, 66 deg. The rainfall of the first seven months of this year has been 30.75 inches, against 41.56 inches in the corresponding portion of 1873.

The Public Debt of the United States, less cash in the Treasury, amounted on the first inst. to $2,140,178,614, having been reduced $1,626,761 during the Eighth month. Of this debt $515,705,573 bears no interest.

The prospects of the cotton crop for this year are still doubtful, but the National Cotton Exchange at New Orleans in its last report does not consider them highly promising. It says: "In Mississippi, Louisiana, Arkansas and Tennessee, crops are generally suffering from drought, the prospects are less favorable than at the same time last year, and though a month ago crops were generally later, picking will begin quite as early as last year, the drought causing premature opening. In Alabama, Virginia, North Carolina and South Carolina, the condition is about as good as at the same time last year. In Georgia and Florida the crops are injured by drought, the condition being now less favorable than last year."

The Markets, &c.—The following were the quotations on the 7th inst. New York.—American gold, 109¾. U. S. sixes, 1881, registered, 117⅞; do. coupons, 118⅞; do. 5-20, 1868, registered, 116½; coupons, 117⅝; do. 5 per cents, 112½. Superfine flour, $4.75 a $5; State extra, $5 a $5.50; finer brands, $6 a $10. White Michigan wheat, $1.40; amber western, $1.25; No. 2 Chicago spring, $1.16; No. 3 do. $1.13; No. 2 Milwaukie spring, $1.23. Canada barley, $1.25 a $1.40; western, $1 a $1.20. Oats, 60 a 64 cts. Rye, 88 a 90 cts. White corn, 95 a 97 cts.; yellow, 92½ cts.; western mixed, 90 a 91 cts. Philadelphia.—Uplands and New Orleans cotton, 17 a 17½ cts. for middlings. Superfine flour, $3.50 a $4; extras, $4 a $5.25; finer brands, $5.50 a $8.75. White wheat, $1.38 a $1.40; amber, $1.25 a $1.30; red $1.20 a $1.24. Rye, 95 cts. Yellow corn, 88 a 89 cts. Oats, 54 a 58 cts. Lard, 14½ a 15 cts. The receipts at the beef cattle market reached 3500 head. The lowest sales per lb. gross, were at 3½ cts., and the highest 7¾ cts.; good and choice from 6¼ to 7½ cts per lb. gross. About 16,000 sheep sold at 4½ a 6 cts. per lb. gross, and 5500 hogs at $11.50 a $12 per 100 lbs. net for corn fed. Baltimore.—Family flour, $7 a $7.75; superfine, $4 a $4.75; extra, $5 a $5.50. No. 1 western red wheat, $1.22 a $1.23; No. 2 do. $1.20 a $1.22; Maryland red, $1.25 a $1.32; amber, $1.35 a $1.38. Southern white corn, 95 a 97 cts.; yellow, 85 cts. Oats, 54 a 60 cts. Cincinnati.—White wheat, $1.10 a $1.15; red, $1.05 a $1.08. Corn, 76 a 78 cts. Oats, 46 a 52 cts. Chicago.—Spring extra flour, $4.60 a $5.12. No. 1 spring wheat, $1; No. 2 do., 94 cts.; No. 3 do. 91 cts. No. 2 mixed corn, 72½ cts. No. 2 oats, 44 cts. Rye, 81 cts. St. Louis.—No. 2 winter red wheat, $1.15; No. 3 do., $1.06. No. 2 mixed corn, 72 cts. No. 2 oats, 47½ cts. Refined lard, 15¾ cts.

RECEIPTS.

Received through Jacob Smedley, Jr., for William Webster, Pa., $2, to No. 11, vol. 49, and from Owen T. Webster, Pa., $2, vol. 48; from Richard W. Bacon. City, $2, vol. 48; from Daniel Maule, Gtn., City, $2 vol. 48, and for Joseph Matlack, Pa., $2, vol. 48; from William Evans, City, $2, vol. 48; from Benjamin W. Passmore, Pa., $2, vol. 48, and for Amanda Gallimore, O., $2, vol. 48; from Jane S. Comfort, Gtn. City, $2, vol. 48, and for Charles Jones, Gtn., City, $2, vol. 48, and Mary J. French and Abigail Ware, O., $2 each, vol. 48; from C. I. Hayes, O., $2, vol. 48; from Elijah Kester, Md., $2, vol. 48; for Morton Neill, O., $2, vol. 48; from John H. Ballinger, N. J., $2, vol. 48; for James Kitely, Canada, $2.50, to No. 27, vol. 49, and Postage; from William C. Ivins, N. J., $2, vol. 48; from Joseph B. Taylor, Pa., $2, vol. 48; from Samuel Walton, O., $2, vol. 48; from Joseph E. Troth, N. J., $2, vol. 48; from Hannah H. Dilks, Ind., $2, vol. 48; from Joseph E. Mickle, Pa., $2, vol. 48; from Thomas Evans, Pa., $2, vol. 48; from Lydia T. King, Pa., $2, vol. 48; from John Carter, City, $2, vol. 48, and for Charles S. Carter and Milton Conard, Pa., Benjamin K. Hiatt, Ind., and Shelter for Colored Orphans, and Elizabeth Thornton, City, $2 each, vol. 48, and for Lydia Yearsley, Pa., $2, to No. 40, vol. 48; from Mary B. Buffinton, Mass., $2, vol. 48; from John M. Smith, Agent, O., $2, vol. 48, and for Rachel Barber, Eliza Wilson, Henry Briggs and Morris C. Smith, $2 each, vol. 48; from J. B. Jones, N. J., $2, vol. 48; from Joseph Pennell, Pa., $2.62, to No. 52, vol. 48; from Henrietta W. G. Heath, Pa., $2, vol. 48; from Joseph Bailey and Joseph L. Bailey, Pa., $2 each, vol. 48; from Charles A. Clement, N. J., $2, vol. 48; from Ruth Foster, R. I., $2, vol. 48; from Lydia G. Allen, Pa., $2, vol. 48, and for Nathan Garrett, $2, vol. 48; from Philip P. Dunn, N. J., $2, vol. 48, and for Thomas A. Bell, Pa., $2, vol. 48; from Ezra Engle, N. J., $2, vol. 48; from Jane Thomas, City, $2, to No. 42, vol. 48; from Thomas Satterthwaite and Sarah Satterthwaite, Pa., $2 each, vol. 48; from Howard Yarnall, City, $2, vol. 48; from Mary H. Pennell, City, $2, vol. 48; from Henry Clark, O., $2, vol. 48; from Caleb E. Thomas, Harvey Thomas, Nathan Pennell, John Hill, Rebecca Larkin, and Caleb Webster, Pa., $2 each, vol. 48; from Joseph B. Cooper, N. J., $2, vol. 48; from George L. Smedley, Pa., $2, vol. 48; from Nathaniel Barton, N. J., $2, vol. 48; from George Sharpless, Pa., $2, vol. 48, and for Lewis Sharpless, Io., $2, vol. 48; from George W. Thorp, Frankfd., City, $2, vol. 48; from Deborah Hopkins, City, $2.20, vol. 48 and Postage; from John Bishop, N. J., $2, vol. 48; from George M. Eddy, Mass., $2, vol. 48; from Benjamin D. Stratton, Agent, O., for Joshua Coppock, Nathan Whinery, Josiah Cameron, Barton Dean, Lindley Shaw, Ann Stanley, Cyrus Brantingham, Joshua Gilbert, and Barclay Stratton, $2 each, vol. 48; from James W. McGrew, Agent, O., $2, vol. 48, and for Sarah Willits, John Hoyle, Amasa Negus, James A. McGrew, and James Edgerton, $2 each, vol. 48; from Mary R. Ely, N. J., $2, vol. 48; from Nathan Warrington, Agent, Io., $2, vol. 48, and for Jonathan Briggs, Jesse Garwood, George W. Mott, Lindley B. Steer, John Hoge, and Homer Gibbons, $2 each, vol. 48, and for John N. Miller, $3, to No. 52, vol. 48; from Thomas Perry, R. I., for Elizabeth Perry, George Foster, George C. Foster, and J. B. Foster, $2 each, vol. 48, and for Charles Perry, $2, to No. 11, vol. 49; from Martha Mickle and James J. Lord, N. J., per Carlton P. Stokes, $2 each, vol. 48; from Thomas Twining, N. Y., $2, vol. 48; from John E. Sheppard, N. J., $2, vol. 48; from Benj. Penn Elliott, City, $2, vol. 48; from Edward Sharpless, N. J., $2, vol. 48; for Charles Burton, Pa., $2, vol. 48; from Richard M. Acton, N. J., $2, vol. 48, and for William C. Reeve, $2, to No. 14, vol. 49; from James F. Reid, Pa., $2, vol. 48; from Isaac S. Heston, Pa., $2, to No. 14, vol. 49; from John Forsythe, Pa., $2, vol. 48; from Josiah L. Haines, City, $2, vol. 48, and for Amy Middleton, N. J., $2, vol. 48; from Benjamin B. Leeds, N. J., $2, to No. 17, vol. 49; from John Brantingham, O., $2, vol. 48, and for Isaac Cope, $2, vol. 48; from Horatio G. Cooper, Pa., $2, vol. 48; from Parvin Smith, Pa., $2, vol. 48; from Royal Woodward, N. Y., $2, vol. 48; from Nathan Hilles, Frkfd., City, $2, vol. 48; from Esther H. Griffen and William D. Griffen, N. Y., $2 each, vol. 48; from Sarah C. Winner, Pa., $2, vol. 48; from Jonathan Chace, R. I., $2, vol. 48, and for Harvey Chace and John T. Kenyon, $2 each, vol. 48; from Daniel Nichols, N. Y., $2, to No. 18, vol. 48; from Ellis Winner, O., $2, vol. 48; from Isaiah Kirk and Samuel R. Kirk, Pa., $2 each, vol. 48; from Caleb Hoopes, Pa., $2, vol. 48; from Joseph Scattergood, Jr., Agent, Pa., for Lewis Embree, Jacob Parker, Thomas C. Hogue, and Mary H. Parke, $2 each, vol. 48; from Jehu L. Kite, Agent, O., $2, vol. 48, and for Joseph Lynch, Joseph Painter, Rebecca Carr, Edwin Holloway, Edwin Fogg, Mary Warrington, Lindsey Cobb, Robert Ellyson, John H. Stanley, Eliza Ann Fogg, Thomas B. Woolman, Abner Woolman, David Ellyson, Mary Crew, Jane Woolman, and James H. Crew, $2 each, vol. 48, for Ann Raley, $2, to No. 4, vol. 49, and for Lydia Warrington, $2, to No. 18, vol. 49; from Benjamin D. Stratton, Agent, O., for Lewis B. Walker and Joseph Stratton, $2 each, vol. 48; from Joseph Stanton, O., $2, vol. 48, and for Walter Moore, Ind., $2, vol. 48.

Remittances received after Fourth-day morning will not appear in the Receipts until the following week.

RASPBERRY ST. SCHOOLS FOR COLORED ADULTS.

Teachers will be wanted for these schools, to be opened 10th mo. 5th. Applications may be made to

Thomas Elkinton, 118 Pine St.
Elton B. Gifford, 719 Market St.
James Bromley, 641 Franklin St.
George J. Scattergood, 413 Spruce St.

WANTED.

A suitable Friend to take the position of Writing Teacher and Assistant Governor at Westtown Boarding School—for next Session. Apply to

Charles Evans, 702 Race street, Philadelphia,
Clarkson Sheppard, Greenwich, New Jersey,
Joseph Walton, Moorestown, New Jersey.

SHELTER FOR COLORED ORPHANS.

Wanted, a Teacher for this Institution, to enter upon her duties 1st of 10th mo. Apply to

Hannah R. Newbold, 643 Franklin St.
Mary Wood, 524 South Second St.
Mary Raudolph, 247 North Twelfth St.
Sarah Richie, 444 North Fifth St.

FRIENDS' ASYLUM FOR THE INSANE.

Near Frankford, (Twenty-third Ward,) Philadelphia.

Physician and Superintendent—JOSHUA H. WORTHINGTON, M. D.

Applications for the Admission of Patients may be made to the Superintendent, or to any of the Board of Managers.

DIED, at her residence in Germantown, on the 19th of 6th mo. 1874, ANN EDGE, a member and elder of Frankford Monthly Meeting of Friends. May the remembrance of her quiet, useful life, her guarded and consistent walk, incite an increased desire in her survivors to be strengthened by grace to follow her as we believe she endeavored to follow Christ.

——, suddenly, on the 11th of 7th mo. 1874, RACHEL L. EVANS, wife of Uriah Evans, in the 71st year of her age, a beloved member and overseer of Upper Evesham Monthly, and Cropwell Preparative Meeting, N. J.

——, on the 23d of 7th mo. 1874, at their residence, near New Sharon, Mahaska Co., Iowa, ELIZABETH, wife of Jonathan Briggs, an elder of Coal Creek Monthly and Particular Meeting, in the 70th year of her age. She bore a short illness with christian patience; evincing an humble trust in the mercy of God, saying she had not put off the preparation for death to a sick bed. She was an example of meekness and humility, and deeply concerned that the doctrines and testimonies delivered to Friends to bear, may be sustained in their primitive simplicity. We humbly trust she has been gathered into one of the many mansions prepared for the righteous. May the survivors who mourn her loss, give up all for Christ's sake, and thus be enabled to walk by the same rule and mind the same things, and witness the same blessed hope to be an anchor to the soul, both sure and steadfast.

——, near Smithfield, on the 18th of 8th mo. 1874, MARK WILLITS, in the 69th year of his age, a member of Short Creek Monthly and Smithfield Particular Meeting. "Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace whose mind is stayed on thee; because he trusteth in thee."

WILLIAM H. PILE, PRINTER,
No. 422 Walnut Street.

THE FRIEND.

A RELIGIOUS AND LITERARY JOURNAL.

VOL. XLVIII. SEVENTH-DAY, NINTH MONTH 19, 1874. NO. 5.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY.

Price Two Dollars per annum, if paid in advance. Two dollars and fifty cents, if not paid in advance.

Subscriptions and Payments received by

JOHN S. STOKES,

AT NO. 116 NORTH FOURTH STREET, UP STAIRS.

PHILADELPHIA.

Postage, when paid quarterly in advance, five cents.

For 'The Friend."

Indian Affairs.

(Continued from page 13.)

Five years have now elapsed since Friends entered upon the work among the Indians under the auspices set forth in the 2nd number of this paper. The tribes placed under their charge are the Kiowas, Comanches and Apaches, numbering about 6,000, Cheyennes and Arapahoes 3,500, the Wichitas and several other small bands united with them in all near 1,200, the Shawnees 700, the Sacs and Foxes 450, the Quapaws and eight or nine other small tribes in connection with them, numbering in all about 1,300, the great and little Osages 3,500, the Kaws 600, Potawatomies 350, and the Kickapoos 300: Total near 20,000. All these are located in the Indian Territory except the three last named tribes which are in Kansas.

There were originally ten different Agents under one general Superintendent in charge of them. The agencies are now reduced by consolidation to seven. Detailed reports of the condition of each have been published from time to time, from which the following facts have been condensed: There were 365 children reported as attending the schools opened at the Kickapoos, Pottawatomies, Osage, Quapaw, Sac and Fox and Wichita Agencies during the last winter. Most of the last mentioned tribes (excepting the Osages) now remain quietly on their reservations, and many of them have engaged in farming and stock raising. There are First-day schools and religious meetings held at nearly all of the Agencies. Perhaps the most interesting of these tribes is the Osage. The following remarks on their condition occur in a letter from Dr. Nicholson, dated 2nd month 6th, 1874:

"These Indians number 3,500, and are located in four principal settlements, each of which is in charge of a farmer, who, (with his assistants) resides at a station most central and convenient to the Indians under his special care. At each of these stations are kept oxen, plows, wagons, and other farming implements for general use in that division. The agency is centrally located as to these four stations, each of which is visited by the agent as often as practicable.

"These Indians have mainly lived heretofore by the chase, but are now manifesting a most remarkable disposition to a settled life. When they were about to leave for the plains last Spring for their usual hunt, the Agent offered to such of them as were willing to adopt a different mode of life, $2.50 per hundred for rails split and laid into a solid staked and ridered fence, and also to have the land thus inclosed broken for them to plant. Fifty-eight heads of families at once went to work, making and putting into fence 81,000 rails, and providing for each of these families a spot of ground which they could call home. Many others, upon their return from the hunt, selected locations, and desired land broken for them, which was done to the extent of the means at the agent's command. About 1,100 acres were broken last year, in lots varying from one acre to eighty, and their farm products greatly exceeded those of any previous year in their whole history. A young half-breed Osage is studying medicine, and renders good service as assistant and interpreter to the physician. Two workmen in the blacksmith-shop, the wheel-wright and the gunsmith, are all Osages. All the laborers at the saw-mill, except the engineer and sawyer, are blanket Osages.

"Agent Gibson, in charge of these Indians, writes me, under date of 27th ultimo, that during that month (January) ten families of blanket Osages have gone into good houses, which they have assisted in building, and that they are asking for chairs, tables, wash-tubs, wash-boards, smoothing-irons, &c. He opened the Manual Labor Boarding School on New Year's day, although the building is not completed, and there are over thirty pupils, three of whom work in the shoe-shop half of the day, one in the carpenter-shop, and one in the blacksmith shop. Others do the heavy work in and about the kitchen and wash-room, haul wood, &c. The girls are also engaged in the household and kitchen departments. The children seem happy, and manifest no disposition to run away from the school. When the blanket Osages come in from the plains, the present accommodations will not suffice for half the children that have been promised. He furthermore states that he has heard of no depredations committed on the plains by Osages during the preceding Summer or the present Winter. This could never have been said of them during any similar period in the past."

The following extracts from the reports given by native Indians, of the condition of their respective tribes, at a General Council held in the Indian Territory in the 5th month last, will throw some light on their present status as regards civilization, and furnish proof of the capacity of these people to acquire the habits of the white race.

By Rabbit Bunch, of the Cherokee Nation.

"Mr. President: I shall say a few words for the benefit of the members of the Council present. I shall say a few words concerning the condition of the Cherokees—of their progress in agriculture, education, and other matters. The Cherokees pay a great deal of attention to the cultivation of corn, wheat, potatoes, and all other products of the farm. They raise enough for their own use and some to sell. They are not, as a general thing, compelled to purchase elsewhere what they can themselves raise on their own farms. As regards the number of acres the Cherokees have in cultivation, I cannot say certainly; but from a printed report I have seen, I suppose they have about seventy thousand acres of land in cultivation. I am satisfied, however, that the number of acres has considerably increased since that report was published. What leads me to believe so, is, that there are many new farms to be seen where there were none a short time since. As to the different kinds of meats we eat, I can say, we raise cattle, hogs and fowl. I have said we raise more cattle than we need for our own use, because a great many are sold annually to cattle buyers, who are constantly passing through the Nation, buying. Our houses, as a general thing, we build ourselves, and many of them look as well as houses among the white people.

As regards education among us, I might say the Cherokees have educated themselves in a great measure—many of them are as well educated as the white people are. As an evidence that we are advancing in education, I would say, I hold in my hand a paper printed in our Nation, and a part of it is printed in the Cherokee language with Cherokee characters, which our people are able to read. We are able to make our own books, which are read also by many of our people."

By Samuel Grayson, of the Muscogees.

"Mr. President: In compliance with the requirements of the proceedings of the Council of yesterday, it becomes my duty on the part of the Muscogees, to make a few general remarks touching some of our various interests. And in doing so, permit me to say that we can exhibit no very material changes since our last report before this body. We are happy, however, to tell you that whatever changes may have occurred have been steps moving us onward toward a higher and better position in life. You who know us best, know that we are an agricultural and stock-raising people, depending almost wholly upon our skill in these pursuits, for our prosperity in the ordinary concerns of life. Interest in these branches of industry is steadily increasing, as is abundantly attested by the expansion now to be seen of the usually small farms of many of those who have heretofore exhibited but little interest in this direction. Corn is the principal production of our farms, as you are aware, and the Muscogees have, for many years raised a surplus of this staple, bartering the same at different points in the country for merchandise; but during the past winter they had the satisfaction of seeing more considerable quantities shipped south by rail, while in the opposite direction have gone cattle and hogs, reared by the industry of the Muscogees. Our citizens in some localities are experimenting in seeds and grains never before tried in this country, the results of which, however, can only be noticed at some future time. The more enterprising are importing improved stocks of cattle and hogs, so that we may safely say that in these branches of industry, we have not much whereof to complain; and although we make the assertion, still it is our humble opinion that our steps, however slow, are 'onward and upward.'

Nothing of importance has occurred in our educational interests save the suspension of twelve of our common schools, which was done in order to realize means wherewith to build other and more comfortable school buildings. One of the results of education among the Muscogees is the existence of an alphabet suited to their tongue, by which means, portions of the Holy Bible, as well as hymns have been translated into their language, and which many are able to read and comprehend.

(To be continued.)

For "The Friend."

John Finch Marsh.

In offering to the notice of the readers of "The Friend," some extracts from a little memoir of our late beloved Friend John Finch Marsh, of Croydon, near London, England, prepared for publication by his daughter, Priscilla Pitt, it may be right to state by way of introduction, that he was an intimate friend and a correspondent of the late John Barclay, so well known in this country by his life and letters, and his character.

John Finch Marsh having, in his own experience, tested the soundness and reality of the principles of the christian religion, as ever held by faithful Friends from the beginning, bore an unflinching and unwavering testimony to them through a long life, down to the very end of it. Having bought the Truth he could not sell it to obtain the smiles, or the favors, or the friendships of men.

He was often introduced into great suffering on this account, and sometimes made to feel, like his Divine Master, as if "he trod the winepress alone," and that of the people, there were none, or few with him.

He was distinguished for great refinement of character, combined with a singular exemplification in his daily walk, of the meekness and gentleness of the humble, watchful follower of Christ.

His aged widow, who survived him, was a sharer with him in these tribulations for the gospel's sake, they being nearly and closely united therein.

The widespread surrender of these principles now become so apparent, and the timidity and hesitation openly and firmly to avow them on the part of others who still claim that they adhere to them, furnish at this day an unmistakable evidence that their sufferings were not without a cause.

May the remnant who are still concerned to hold on to the ancient testimony of the Society, be animated and strengthened to maintain the warfare; and may the number of those who are thus made willing to suffer for the name and cause of Christ and the precious and unchangeable truth of the gospel, be greatly increased.

In her brief preface to this little book, Priscilla Pitt mentions, that while watching by the dying bed of her father, though she was then expecting his recovery, she was so struck with the impressiveness of his words, that she felt impelled to note them down. After his decease, in searching among his papers, she found some memoranda and letters; and feeling "a gentle and clear pointing," she entered upon the work of preparing them for publication.

The extracts from his diary are thus introduced:

"My father was born in the year 1789. After receiving a fair education, he was apprenticed to the linen drapery with his cousin, Samuel Weetch, of Ratcliff, till the age of twenty-one, when he was engaged as shop assistant with Mary Liversidge and John T. Shewell, at Ipswich. His last situation was with John Kitching, linen draper, in Whitechapel, London, whom he ultimately succeeded in the business in 1818. This he carried on satisfactorily for ten years, with a consistent plainness, closing his shop to allow of all attending their mid-week meeting, and would often find customers waiting their return. His marriage took place in the year 1819, to Hannah Lucas, daughter of Samuel and Ann Lucas, corn dealers, in Warwick-street, London, with whom he had been acquainted from childhood. Of their four daughters, two died in infancy, and one peacefully breathed her last in the thirty-seventh year of her age. In 1828, partly from delicate health, and to be more set at liberty for religious service, he retired from business, and the year following came to reside at this cottage in Park Lane, Croydon, which he used to style 'our comfortable, peaceful home.'

The first record we find of his having spoken in meeting was in his twenty-second year. He was acknowledged as a minister in unity in 1818, by Devonshire House Monthly Meeting. His travels in the work of the ministry with the unity of his Monthly Meeting extended over a period of forty-three years, commencing in 1822, during which time he visited all the meetings of Friends in most of the English counties, and some of them several times. Also in Guernsey and Jersey and the Isle of Wight; in Wales and Scotland; and three times paid a general visit to Friends in Ireland, viz., in 1837, '56, and '65. His calling was much in the way of private sittings with individuals or families, which service he diligently performed in many places. Four times, at least, he visited in this way the Friends near home. The largest engagement of this kind was in the winter of 1846-7, when he had 277 sittings alone with the young men in our Quarterly Meeting, 66 with the young women, and 229 other sittings. He not unfrequently was led to hold meetings with persons not in our Society where his lot was cast, and once accompanied Sarah Harris, of Bradford, and Mary B. Brown, her companion, to some parts of Holland and Germany. There are evidences and testimonies that his labors in Gospel love were acceptable, and not without fruit. His ministry, like his nature, was loving and persuasive, bearing a clear testimony to the spiritual and inward nature of religion, and of the powerful operation and working of saving grace in the secret of the heart, often reminding us that it was 'an individual work.' Perhaps on the occasion of interments, his ministry was most of all impressive. It was then his exhortations on the vanities of life, and the realities of death, seemed to penetrate the hearts of many present, and leave a savour of divine life long to be remembered.

His heart yearned over little children, that they might not be hindered from coming to the Saviour by the indifference of those around them; and often when he met with infants would instructively remark, 'This is what we must all come to—the state of a little child.'

He was remarkable in life for endeavoring to walk spotless, and not join with anything that by the inward light was forbidden him, and in the near approach of death he was the same.

He directed that none of his money should be given for the promotion of those undertakings in our Society with which he had not felt unity, because they were not sufficiently carried on in accordance with the principles we profess, saying we could not depart from them without going back to a lower dispensation; and because, deeply feeling the need of a daily cross to possess a true religion, he believed that a superficial religion, or profession only, had too much usurped its place among us, and become a substitute for that vital Christianity, or the life and witness of God manifest in the soul, which ought to precede all our efforts for the good of our fellow creatures. Otherwise he had a sympathizing heart, easily moved to pity and compassion.

He often used to say, 'When I was young, I felt that if there was only one Quaker left, I must be that one'—a feeling he retained to his end. And he lamented that our early Friends' writings are so little valued and read by Friends at the present day."

(To be continued.)

For "The Friend."

Perilous Encounter with a Panther.

In the early part of this century that destructive animal the cougar or panther was quite common in all the mountainous portions of Pennsylvania. With the settlement of the country, the opening of coal mines and the introduction of railroads, &c., it has been nearly exterminated in most places, and is now very rarely seen east of the Susquehannah river. That it is not altogether extinct, however, even within a hundred miles of Philadelphia, is shown by the following narrative furnished the Reading Eagle, by a correspondent. The writer says: "I have just learned the particulars of an encounter had on the Blue Mountain on Wednesday evening of this week, which has caused a great deal of talk in this section. For weeks past, people coming down or crossing the hills have reported at various times having seen a large wild animal, and others as having heard deep growls and strange noises at certain hours of the night. A farmer along the base of the hills lost two young calves and an entire litter of young pigs in the short space of eight days, and he attributes the loss to the incursions of this strange animal. These reports came to the ears of Rudolph Pfleger, an old hunter and trapper who has passed fully forty years on the mountains, and he made several efforts to hunt up the strange animal, but to no purpose. At last he concluded to organize a small hunting party. He got some one to write to Schuylkill county to two old friends of his who were also engaged in hunting, and who had likewise passed more than half their lives on the mountains. On Tuesday last they arrived on foot over the hills and stopped at the cabin of Pfleger that night, determined to start out as soon as they were rested. Their names are Henry Vancolt and Thomas Anson, two Englishmen, who first came to the mines when the canal was built, but gave up their business and took to the hills soon afterwards.

On Wednesday afternoon, about 2 o'clock, the three started out on three different pathways, the men having previously agreed to meet at the 'big tree,' a point five miles off in the mountains. They were well armed and determined to hunt up the mysterious animal if it were possible. Nothing happened to any of the party up to the time when Pfleger and Vancolt arrived at the tree, which was within half an hour of each other. But nothing was seen or heard of Anson. The sun had gone down behind the hills, and the forest and woods were becoming gloomy in the dusk. Anson was making his way slowly and cautiously through a deep and tangled underbrush, and when about one hundred yards from the point of meeting, he determined to pass up through a small ravine, whose sides were overhung with a dense undergrowth of shrubs. When directly under a small crag and walking along with his head bent to the ground and his form doubled in creeping under a low vine, suddenly he heard a crash overhead, and the next minute he felt the claws of an animal sink into his neck and flesh, accompanied with fierce growls. By a very quick movement, Anson swung around his arms, grasped the animal by the neck with both hands and held it in his vice-like grip. He then staggered back to the clearing, when the animal shook off the hunter's grasp and made an effort to bite his neck. Quick as thought the man grasped a knife in his belt, and with great velocity swung it around and sunk it deep into the animal's side. The brute gave a long, low howl, and amidst the excitement man and beast rolled over on the ground, and as they did so the former received three severe bites on the shoulder. The growls of the animal attracted the attention of the remaining two hunters, who came dashing through the brush towards the spot where the hunter and the brute were tussling. The struggle did not last long. Anson plunged his knife the second time in the animal's body, and in a few minutes it rolled over in its own blood and died."

The hunters on examining the animal, found it to be a panther weighing one hundred and forty-six pounds. It was compactly and powerfully built, and stood two feet eight inches high. Its length, including the tail, was six feet and a half.

The Medicinal Rhubarb.—What is known in English commerce as the best Turkey Rhubarb in reality comes from China, through Russia, by the way of Kiachta. It was formerly imported from Natolia, whence the name Turkey Rhubarb. The root is said by Pallas to be dug up in the summer, washed, bored with a hole, strung on a thread, and dried in the sun. In this state it is sent to the chief towns of China, and to the Russian frontier town, Kiachta: at the latter place it undergoes careful examination by the agents of the Russian Government, and all inferior or decayed specimens are rejected.—The Garden.

For "The Friend."

We hear a talk of Centennial tea parties, to be held in different parts of the country; and I have feared that some of our young Friends may be induced to join in or attend them, under the plausible idea that they are intended to encourage industry and the arts; but it appears to me this is nothing more than celebrating the Fourth on a large scale; and we know that consistent Friends have always borne a testimony against this. Some remarks of our dear Friend, William Evans, on the observance of the 4th of July, as it is called, may be suitable to be revived in the pages of the Friend at this time, perhaps it may meet the eye of some one who will consider the motive, before they proceed farther.

"4th of 7th mo., 1853. To-day we have had much noise in the city; and the many cases of intemperance in young men have been mournful. The people seem hardly to think that the Almighty takes any cognizance of evil deeds, committed under the pretext of celebrating the declaration of the independence of this country of Great Britain. I believe it best, and most consistent with our religious profession, to keep aloof from all exhibitions of such character, designed to celebrate events attended with the effusion of human blood.

"Public parades on various accounts, are increasing in our city; by which life is sometimes put at stake, and destroyed, and evil habits of idleness and drunkenness, and looseness of principles and manners are thereby contracted by the working classes, who are most drawn away with such exhibitions. Friends may be esteemed narrow minded in standing opposed to such vanity and wickedness; but there have always been witnesses for the truth, who have withstood the popular current, and been as the salt to preserve society from becoming entirely corrupt. 'Great peace have all they that love thy law,' and keep steadily in the observance of it. When the bustle and confusion are past, they have nothing to look back upon with condemnation. Peace of mind and health of body have not been impaired, by a departure from their conscientious convictions, and their example has tended to discourage vice, not to lead others into it."

In the Laboratory with Agassiz.

It was more than fifteen years ago that I entered the laboratory of Professor Agassiz, and told him I had enrolled my name in the Scientific School, as a student of natural history. He asked me a few questions about my object in coming, my antecedents generally, the mode in which I afterwards proposed to use the knowledge I might acquire, and finally, whether I wished to study any special branch. To the latter I replied that while I wished to be well grounded in all departments of zoology, I proposed to devote myself specially to insects.

"When do you wish to begin?" he asked.

"Now," I replied.

This seemed to please him, and, with an energetic "Very well," he reached from a shelf a huge jar of specimens in yellow alcohol.

"Take this fish," said he, "and look at it; we call it a Hæmulon; by and by I will ask what you have seen."

With that he left me, but in a moment returned with explicit instructions as to the care of the object entrusted to me.

"No man is fit to be a naturalist," said he, "who does not know how to take care of specimens."

I was to keep the fish before me in a tin tray, and occasionally moisten the surface with alcohol from the jar, always taking care to replace the stopper tightly. Those were not the days of ground glass stoppers and elegantly shaped exhibition jars; all the old students will recall the huge neckless glass bottles with their leaky, wax-besmeared corks, half eaten by insects and begrimed with cellar dust. Entomology was a cleaner science than ichthyology, but the example of the professor, who had unhesitatingly plunged to the bottom of the jar to produce the fish, was infectious; and though this alcohol had "a very ancient and fish-like smell," I really dared not show any aversion within these sacred precincts, and treated the alcohol as though it were pure water. Still, I was conscious of a passing feeling of disappointment, for gazing at a fish did not commend itself to an ardent entomologist. My friends at home, too, were annoyed when they discovered that no amount of eau de cologne would drown the perfume which haunted me like a shadow.

In ten minutes I had seen all that could be seen in that fish, and started in search of the professor, who had, however, left the museum; and when I returned, after lingering over some of the odd animals stored in the upper apartment, my specimen was dry all over. I dashed the fluid over the fish as if to resuscitate the beast from a fainting-fit, and looked with anxiety for a return of the normal, sloppy appearance. This little excitement over, nothing was to be done but return to a steadfast gaze at my mute companion. Half an hour passed—an hour—another hour; the fish began to look loathsome. I turned it over and around; looked it in the face—ghastly; from behind, beneath, above, sideways, at a three-quarters' view—just as ghastly. I was in despair; at an early hour I concluded that lunch was necessary; so, with infinite relief, the fish was carefully replaced in the jar, and for an hour I was free.

On my return, I learned that Professor Agassiz had been at the museum, but had gone, and would not return for several hours. My fellow-students were too busy to be disturbed by continued conversation. Slowly I drew forth that hideous fish, and, with a feeling of desperation, again looked at it. I might not use a magnifying glass; instruments of all kinds were interdicted. My two hands, my two eyes and the fish; it seemed a most limited field. I pushed my finger down its throat to feel how sharp the teeth were. I began to count the scales in the different rows, until I was convinced that that was nonsense. At last a happy thought struck me—I would draw the fish; and now, with surprise, I began to discover new features in the creature. Just then the professor returned.

"That is right," said he: "a pencil is one of the best of eyes. I am glad to notice, too, that you keep your specimens wet and your bottle corked."

With these encouraging words, he added,

"Well what is it like?"

He listened attentively to my brief rehearsal of the structure of parts whose names were still unknown to me; the fringed gill-arches and movable operculum; the pores of the head, fleshy lips, and lidless eyes; the lateral line, the spinous fins, and the forked tail; the compressed and arched body. When I had finished, he waited, as if expecting more, and then, with an air of disappointment,

"You have not looked very carefully; why," he continued, more earnestly, "you haven't even seen one of the most conspicuous features of the animal, which is as plainly before your eyes as the fish itself; look again, look again!" and he left me to my misery.

I was piqued; I was mortified. Still more of that wretched fish! but now I set myself to my task with a will, and discovered one new thing after another, until I saw how just the professor's criticism had been. The afternoon passed quickly, and when, towards its close, the professor inquired,

"Do you see it yet?"

"No," I replied; "I am certain I do not, but I see how little I saw before."

"That is next best," said he, earnestly, "but I won't hear you now; put away your fish, and go home; perhaps you will be ready with a better answer in the morning; I will examine you before you look at the fish."

This was disconcerting; not only must I think of my fish all night, studying, without the object before me, what this unknown but most visible feature might be, but also, without reviewing my new discoveries, I must give an exact account of them the next day. I had a bad memory; so I walked home by Charles river in a distracted state, with my two perplexities.

The cordial greeting of the professor, the next morning, was reassuring; here was a man who seemed to be quite as anxious as I that I should see for myself what he saw.

"Do you, perhaps, mean," I asked, "that the fish has symmetrical sides with paired organs?"

His thoroughly pleased "Of course, of course," repaid the wakeful hours of the previous night. After he had discoursed most happily and enthusiastically—as he always did—upon the importance of this point, I ventured to ask what I should do next.

"Oh, look at your fish," he said, and left me again to my own devices. In a little more than an hour he returned, and heard my new catalogue.

"That is good, that is good!" he repeated; "but that is not all; go on;" and so for three long days he placed that fish before my eyes, forbidding me to look at anything else, or to use any artificial aid. "Look, look, look," was his repeated injunction.

This was the best entomological lesson I ever had—a lesson whose influence has extended to the details of every subsequent study; a legacy the professor has left to me, as he has left it to many others, of inestimable value, which we could not buy, with which we cannot part.—By a Former Pupil, in Every Saturday.

Jeremiah Waring, who died in 1710, observed in his last sickness, "I had once a desire, with submission, to have visited two or three meetings more, observing in my last journeys how thin the elders everywhere appeared, and how religion appeared to be at a low ebb. Yet the principle of truth must prevail; for the Lord has promised, he will give his Son the heathen for his inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for his possession. And though we see but little of this yet, I shall die, as several elders have before me, in the faith of it. Abraham saw but little of that large promise made to him of multiplying his seed as the stars of heaven, and as the sand upon the sea shore."—Piety Promoted.

For "The Friend."

Scraps of Travel.

A portion of the heated term of our summer may not be more agreeably spent, than by a look into New England. There is much there to enjoy, both in the climate, and among the people. It is charming to quit for a time the sultry walks of this city, to breathe the lighter, cool and bracing air, that comes in from her northern border.

A situation near the ocean, where the shore is picturesque and bold, as at Newport, is most delightful; where to-day we may have an exhilarating air from the sea, and to-morrow the tonic virtue in the winds that sweep outward over the pines that adorn so many of her forests. Many beautiful harbors are there, shut in from the direct effect of the ocean; locked in the numerous bays that indent the coast, and giving by its indirection, variety and a charm in the constantly changing outlook.

Her bold headlands, and border islands, some of which lift their tall heads several hundred feet above the tide, afford the grandest views of the outlying ocean.

The numerous rivers and smaller streams, that divide the bay shores, into points of land running far out into the surf, are often favored fishing grounds, and their margin, the seat of a cheerful New England village, where most of the inhabitants find employment somehow in the oceans companionship. The glassy smoothness of some of these charming bays, and the safe ground they offer for receiving all that is enjoyable at the sea side; their rich and varied border of forest, field and village, make them always a scene of attraction and interest.

Much has been well said of New England hospitality, and of the cheerfulness and independence generally prevalent. The comfort and neatness of New England homes are proverbial. All who have gone in that direction whether on business or pleasure, and have mingled in the social life of her people, must have noticed an element of character, not so marked with us; the exercise of original talent, and patient courage, zeal and self-reliance in its application, measuring the value of theories always by results. The manly independence, and pride of success under strong adverse circumstances, is a feature that belongs as truly to her mentality as the native pine, and granite rock, is a part of her rich, though rugged landscape. This seems not confined to any favored class, but animates the spirit, and gives courage to every intelligent member of society. It is as a life current running through the very soul of the State. The herculean labor into which most New England farmers are introduced, would seem insurmountable to those whose lot has been cast in more favored fields, but the patient husbandman of Massachusetts plods on in his struggle with an ungenerous soil, and a surface in many places nearly covered with rock. Stone fences mark the boundaries of farms, and make the subdivision into fields, many of these being much smaller than is needed, were it not to make room for more fencing, and larger deposits for the surface stone, which are in places so abundant as to occupy much of the labor of a life time to remove them. I noticed in one place where a considerable portion of a large property had been gone over, the whole surface changed, the rocks buried, depressions filled, and the low ground thoroughly drained. Many acres had been thus released and reclaimed, the boulders which had nearly covered the surface were now beyond the reach of the plough, and a large canal laid in heavy blocks of stone, obtained along its margin, afforded safe conduct to a small stream that passes through this most expensively improved property. On every hand the purse had been taxed, and ingenuity as well, to find out uses for the super-abundance of surface rock. I said to myself, why till these acres at all, when for less than it would cost to reduce a square rod to easy tillage, several acres might be paid for and prepared for the seed, in other parts of our country. But herein is the farmer's persistency shown, his settled purpose and stability also, and his contentment. Except a small number, who come upon the surface of society each year, and who are fired with the passion, and the snare of rapid accumulation, the people are more hopeful, self-possessed and contented, than where fewer natural hindrances lie in the path of success. How true it is, when comforts are purchased at an easy cost, they are apt to be more lightly estimated, than when obtained by patient labor and continued effort.

The mass of the people of New England enjoy a large intellectual equality; the result of a more efficient system of school education and mental training. The Public School is often the best school of the town or country district, graded and taught by able teachers, to meet the requirements of advanced pupils, as well as those receiving primary instruction. They are patronized by all, the children of the wealthy, the poor and the middle classes alike, often meet under the same roof, and receive from the same fountain a common inspiration, and many of their earliest and longest remembered lessons.

Other schools are hence not much needed, and the college is an institution sought more by a class of young men, who wish to prepare themselves for professional pursuits. This tends to make the people more homogeneous in feeling, while their tastes and business interests may differ as widely as their natural endowments are diverse. Accustomed to independence of action, they cultivate independence of thought; are less swayed by impulse, or passion, and whatever does not appeal to their understanding. A larger toleration prevails, and the broadest liberality compatible with public order; and herein many of the asperities that so often roughen the surface, and mar the beauty of society, both as to our religious connection, and our obligations to the State, find at least, a cheerful solution among the masses of New England; in a unity, whereof its distinctive individuality animated by true cordiality, may be said to be its chief element of power.

I am well satisfied they are a more simple people. They cling with fondness to old associations, and whatever may be their faults, their purpose is to rise higher, and to improve upon the best models in all they undertake. In their cultivation of the higher enjoyments of life, they have grown out of the bigotry that characterized a past generation, and have obtained a praiseworthy influence over some of those appetites which are too often the bane of human life, and indispose it for the pursuit of any high calling. The love of wealth has not become an over-ruling passion, nor does it seek so much ostentatious display. Men and women pass more for what they really are, and for what they contribute to the moral and intellectual wealth of their surroundings. And now the question seriously arises, are these elements of prosperity and growth, a secure foundation to risk the future upon; and will any system of government, or social order, continue to merit and receive the Divine approbation, that rests its strength upon the intellectual forces alone? That if the people's delegated servants do not practically acknowledge their dependence upon the King of kings, and seek for His direction to aid them, will not the political temple they have reared be permitted to crumble, as surely as individuals are brought to naught, who continue to live in rebellion to His law in their hearts. To human wisdom it would appear, that a government that derives its power from the people, ought to strengthen with time, under such influences, moral and educational, as prevails in New England; but we are bound to confess, that the history of the human family teaches the very opposite, and that if one truth is made plain more than any other, it is, that the human mind, unenlightened and unsustained by Divine Grace, is not fitted, in an absolute sense, for the duties of self-government. It is only righteousness that truly exalteth a nation, and until the people come to this, they will not walk in His fear, but in the blindness and instability of human wisdom, and their own image and not His, will be stamped upon their works.

May the Divine Ruler cause such an outpouring of His spirit upon the world, as that the hearts of men in every relation of life, may not only acknowledge Him, as a doctrine to be taught, but as a living, operating power in the soul, by which the kingdoms of this world would become the kingdoms of our Lord, and righteousness cover the earth, as the waters do the sea.

P. B.

Philadelphia, 9th mo., 1874.

Selected.

No change has taken place in the nature and fruit of true religion. We are called upon to cease to do evil, and to learn to do well. Merely contending for sound doctrines does not prove that we are fruit-bearing branches of the true Vine. The letter-learned professor may do this, and zealously censure wrong opinions, and yet not produce the fruits of the Spirit. "As the branch cannot bear fruit except it abide in the Vine, no more can ye," said our Lord, "except ye abide in Me. Herein is my Father glorified, that ye bear much fruit, so shall ye be my disciples." And the Apostle says: "The fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance, against such there is no law."

It is matter of joy to me, whenever I behold among the dear youth, any who appear engaged to promote the dignified cause of God and the gospel of his dear Son; and as the cross is great, so doubtless, will their crown be also.—Rebecca Hubbs.

Selected.

THE ACORN.

Up grew the twig, with a vigor bold,
In the shape of the parent tree,
And the old oak knew that his doom was told,
When the sapling sprang so free.
Then the fierce winds came, and they raging tore
The hollow limbs away,
And the damp moss crept from the earthy floor,
Round the trunk time-worn and gray.

The young oak grew, and proudly grew,
For its roots were deep and strong,
And a shadow broad on the earth it threw,
And the sunshine lingered long
On its glossy leaf, where the flickering light
Was flung to the evening sky,
And the wild bird sought to its airy height,
And taught her young to fly.

E. Oakes Smith.

Selected.

Is it rainy, little flower?
Be glad of rain,
Too much sun would wither thee;
'T will shine again.
The clouds are very black 'tis true,
But just behind them shines the blue.

Art thou weary, tender heart?
Be glad of pain,
In sorrow sweetest things will grow,
As flowers in rain.
God watches, and thou wilt have sun,
When clouds their perfect work have done.

Suffering of Christian Converts in Turkey.

The following letter will give a view of what Christian converts have to suffer from the Turks. It is an account of what was endured by Mustapha and his son Ali, of Marash, because of their confession of the Christian faith. The original letter was written by the son at the father's dictation, of which the following is a translation:

On May 3d (Sunday) a company of the people of Marash, some with clubs and some with swords, surrounded my house, and with abusive language said, "Come out, and we will show you what Christianity is and what Islam is." We replied, "Go and report us to the Government." They said, "We are the Government, and have come to kill you. Come out, and we'll show you what you are coming to." After thus threatening us, they scattered to their places.

The next day, an hour before sunset, we were summoned before the Government, and the Governor said, "I hear you have been to Christian worship. Why have you done so?" I replied, "Simply because I have accepted Christianity." Then the Governor said,—"Carry this fellow off," and we were taken to prison. In the prison certain rich men called me to them, and said, "We will each give you some thousands of piasters, and agree to supply any want you have, if you will come back to your old faith." This offer they made repeatedly. We replied, "We have not accepted the Gospel for gold or silver, or any such thing, but simply because we hope for salvation in this faith." Meantime all those in the prison said, "These hogs are only fit to be butchered," and they spit in our faces, and insulted us till midnight.

About an hour after midnight our hands were bound behind us, and we were driven on foot before three armed horsemen a distance of one hundred miles to a village six hours from Aleppo. There we were met by five horsemen and a regiment scribe, (an equal number of men having been sent by another Marash road.) We were brought to where the scribe was waiting, and he said, "What is this you are doing? I've never heard of such things as this. My son, these Protestants are accustomed to give each convert £10. If you have received this money give it back, and the Government will give you double. Come, give this thing up." We replied, "We cannot accept any such thing. Man does not live by money, or things of that sort, but by the word of God." The scribe again said, "I will make you a sergeant, and will keep Ali in my own service at five liras a month," (nearly £5 sterling.) "Sir," we said, "we cannot accept your offer. We receive the Gospel; we do not accept money." The scribe soon mounted his horse and left for Aleppo.

An hour after we were taken to a place called Guymeydan, just out of Aleppo. Then two of the police met us and ordered us to halt there. Two hours before sunset, two horsemen and a lieutenant came up. The officer said harshly, "Get up." We said, "Where are you going to take us?" He replied, sharply, "We're going to kill you," and then drove us on before him. On the way the officer said, "Don't persist in this. I'll give your son my horse, with 5,000 piasters. Mount him and go." We refused, and he drove us on to a village called Heylanboghasu, two hours from Aleppo. Then they put our feet in fetters and imprisoned us, under the care of five soldiers, and we were exposed to the abuse of the people of the village. The scribe of the Mufti of Aleppo came to us, and with his help my son made out a petition in which he declined to answer questions there of people coming from Aleppo, and asked to be brought before the Governor. The next day the Mufti of Aleppo brought Ali to his garden, and said, "My son, we're going to kill you. You'll be sorry for this afterward." Ali said, "Sir, I accept the will of God; do what you please." Then the Mufti said, "Bring this traitor to the Pasha." The Pasha, however, did not bring him into his presence, but ordered him to be taken back to his father.

Then we were imprisoned thirteen days; and at midnight a captain came and took off the fetters from our feet, and early in the morning they brought my wife from Marash, (the Government having seized my three other children and detained them in Marash,) and we were then mounted on animals and started off under the care of a sergeant and five soldiers. In reply to my inquiry, we were told we were going to Stamboul. Missing the Turkish steamer at Alexandretta, we were kept in prison there for eight days, and taken by Russian steamer to Stamboul.

We were imprisoned for eleven days in Stamboul, but never summoned to any examination, and then brought by Turkish steamer to Smyrna, arriving the 18th instant. We were lodged in prison till afternoon, and then summoned to the presence of the Governor, and the Vizierial order from Stamboul read to us as follows: "You are to give security that you will not set foot in your native place; that you will not leave Smyrna; that you will come here and report yourselves every week; that you will inform us whatever work you may engage in; and that you will not go an hour's distance out of Smyrna without notice given here." Certain Christian brethren brought us to the Protestant chapel, where we now reside. The mother thinks much of her three children in Marash, and says, "What will become of them?" Thank God, we have by his grace, and by the powerful aid of our Master, girded on the spiritual armor and overcome our enemies. We beg that especial prayer be offered for us.—Christian Advocate.

Smyrna, June 22d, 1874.

For "The Friend."

Praise Ye the Lord.

"From the rising of the sun unto the going down of the same, the Lord's name is to be praised." In our daily walk, in dress, and address, in our communications with each other, in thought and prayer, must we praise the Lord.

"Watch and pray lest ye enter into temptation;" was a command given by our blessed Saviour. If we obey Him therein, we shall have no time to indulge in vain amusements, or to follow the frivolous fashions of the world. Our soul's salvation would be the first concern upon arising in the morning, the immediate concern through the day, and the last upon retiring for the night. And why should we set our minds upon obtaining great possessions in this world's goods, when in an instant we may be summoned to leave them all, to stand before the Judge of the whole world, and if our souls are not arrayed in the pure robes of righteousness, an eternity of misery will be presented to our view, in which we must dwell forever. Let us not forget that it is not only upright transactions between man and man, but obedience to our Lord, even in what may appear to be little things, that are needful, for an entrance into a perfect state of felicity. Not all those who cry Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of God, but those who do his will. It is not in making professions, confessions and long prayers, but in waiting for, and obeying "the still small voice," that we shall become acquainted with Him who said, "Ye in me, and I in you:" and the cross that seemed so heavy when we set out on our journey Zionwards, will grow lighter and lighter, until it will be a joy to bear it for His sake; and we shall experience His words, "My yoke is easy, and my burden is light," to be words of truth.

Then let us not be satisfied with stated times for worshipping Him, but let every thought, word and deed, praise Him; looking to Him for strength to live as He would have us live, a life of self-denial and of perfection, believing this to be attainable if our greatest desire is to that end, in accordance with the command of our Saviour to his disciples, "Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect." Surely, He would not have given a command impossible for us to obey. By watching unto prayer alone can it be accomplished, and thus through strength which our Lord shall give us, we may praise him from the rising of the sun, unto the going down of the same.

H. M.

The Eucalyptus Plantations of Algeria.—A correspondent writes to the Pall Mall Gazette as follows:—The Eucalyptus, a tree of the myrtle family, was introduced from Australia into Algeria about eleven years ago, and flourished surprisingly. It was not, however, until within the last seven years that any extensive plantations were made. A few days since we made an excursion to visit those on the estates of M. Trottier, M. Ramel and M. Cordier.

On M. Trottier's estate at Hussein Dey, we walked under tall trees, the Eucalyptus globulus (blue gum trees), on an average fifty feet high, which seven years ago were planted with seeds not so big as a mustard seed; this particular plantation was on bad soil, and had not had very experienced care, yet the growth of the trees was marvellous. In this evergreen wood all around us were tall reddish smooth stems, with the bark hanging down in a ragged, untidy manner, for the tree sheds its bark in winter, and grey willow-like leaves were waving on flexible boughs. For about twenty-five feet the stems of the trees in the inner part of the plantation rose up with no branches at all, but on the skirts of the wood the trees sent out branches in the light and air nearly to the ground. It produces a curious impression to walk in the dim twilight of this Australian-African forest, and to think that this was also a wood of the miocene period. Beautiful is not the word I should apply to its appearance, but, in exchange for bare sun-baked earth or deadly swamps, I must say these Eucalyptic forests are most grateful, and the smell delightfully resinous, warm and gummy. The multitude of birds in the branches and their busy twitterings, added much to the pleasant impression. I measured these trees as I walked along, and found them from forty to forty-five inches in circumference, those on the borders of the wood always, of course, a few inches larger.

Many village communities in the plain have planted scores of gum trees in this neighborhood, and feel the benefit, but at present there is certainly an exaggerated manner of speaking of the Eucalyptus. It is praised as a scent, as cigars, as a medicine, as a tonic, as a throat lozenge, and above all, as a bath. Branches and leaves are put into hot water, and I am assured by those who have tried it that such baths remove rheumatic pains, neuralgia, and the debility left by the malaria incidental to the country. The flower of the Eucalyptus tribe is very like the myrtle flower; it is very full of honey, and attracts a multitude of flies and bees, and the birds naturally follow, for they find not only food but thick, warm, leafy cover in winter, and shelter from the burning sun in summer. Some species of Eucalyptus have large and very beautiful flowers.

Finally, our opinion is that the Eucalyptus tree may prove the most powerful element of civilization as yet put in force on the coast of north Africa; that in a very few years it will be self-sowing, and thus take its place as a naturalized subject, there is very little reason to doubt. This year the seed ripens plentifully on the seven-year-old trees. Thus in a few years we may see the one thing most longed for on the Barbary coast—that is, shade from the fierce sun.

Let true brotherly love continue, and kindness, affableness, and courteousness; and whatsoever is decent, comely and of a good report in the eyes of God, and the hearts of all good men, that follow after.—G. Fox.

How convenient does it prove, to be a rational animal, that knows how to find out, or invent, a plausible pretext for whatever it has an inclination to do.—Franklin.

For "The Friend."

An Exhortation to the Youth.

O! how hath my spirit been bowed down, my dear young friends, on our account, that we might be more faithful, double our diligence, in these perilous times; and not put from us that which is lain upon us, as being our portion in rebuilding Zion's wall. The present time only is ours, and loud is the call for laborers; for true, deep, heart-searching service; a daily digging for bread, pure and fresh from His Sanctuary; for that alone will sustain the never-dying soul.

O! that I could persuade you more and more, to come taste for yourselves, and see if obedience to the Divine will does not give that joy which is joy indeed, and peace which is lasting, and that can and does comfort when the soul is almost in despair, and ready to sink beneath the swelling tide, and all earthly pleasures are turned into sorrow. Oh then, how doth the agonizing spirit turn to its Redeemer and say, Here am I, do with me what seemeth to thee good; and we are brought into submission. Perhaps it may seem but a little thing that is required, but it is faithfulness to this little that gives us possession of more, and makes our peace true.

K.

A Frenchman on the Prospect of a French War for Revenge.—At a meeting of the general committee of the International Arbitration Association, held in Manchester, last month, M. Bouteiller, of Havre, attended, and made an interesting statement on the present tendency in France on the question of peace or war. From it the following passages are taken:—"It is generally believed in England and elsewhere, that France desires and prepares for a war of revenge. In my eyes this opinion is greatly exaggerated. Noisy voices are indeed heard from time to time crying out for retaliation, and to superficial observers such voices may appear to express the sentiments of the public at large. But one who has travelled through the country and has seen the peasants toiling to pay for the follies of their rulers, one who has visited the workshops in the large towns, cannot fail to be struck with the earnest desire for tranquillity at home and abroad that prevails among the working classes of France, which represent the great majority of the nation. I am aware that these very classes were, and are still, charged with having forced the Imperial Government into the war with Germany; and this reproach is one of the chief arguments which is used in order to prove that they still long for revenge. Recrimination in itself is useless; moreover it would be out of place in a meeting whose object is the furtherance of peace and goodwill. But facts which belong to history must be told as they really are, without fear of discrediting individuals, and so far as the last war is concerned, such facts go to prove that that crisis, instead of having been provoked by the French people, was brought upon it by dynastic fears. There were certainly at that time, among the military and literary classes of France, especially those who give the tone to the press, arrogant utterances demanding the frontier of the Rhine; but that the nation abstained from joining in the cry is clearly proved by the fact that the prefects of the departments, when reporting upon the state of public opinion respecting the contemplated declaration of war, came to the conclusion that out of one hundred citizens seventy-four were for the maintenance of peace. This fact, which is generally unknown, was carefully concealed at that time. It has since been revealed through the papers discovered at the Tuileries on the fall of the Empire."

"As regards the present state of things, I contend that the spirit of revenge which arose out of the misfortunes of France, so far from increasing, is gradually subsiding. The peasants, as I have already stated, only ask to be allowed to cultivate their fields in peace. The workmen understand that liberty cannot be founded in their country so long as it is in danger of being stifled by the military dictators whom war, whether successful or unsuccessful, is nearly sure to produce. They begin to see that the social questions, which are becoming through all Europe the vital questions of the day, cannot be solved whilst military power reigns supreme, and military expenditure cripples public wealth and public industry by the enormous load with which it now burdens them."—The Herald of Peace.

Russian Isinglass.—The Russian isinglass, as it appears in commerce is made from the swimming bladder of the sturgeon, especially of the variety known as the Belouga (Acipenser huso). When of good quality it should be pure white, brilliant, semi-transparent, dry, and horny in texture and free from smell. It should dissolve in water heated to 90°-120° Fah., without any residue, and in cooling should produce an almost colorless jelly. This isinglass is generally prepared by boys under the supervision of older experts. The swimming bladder is first placed in the water and left there for some days, with frequent changes of the water and removal of all fatty and bloody particles. The warmer the water the more rapidly the operation is completed. The bladders are finally removed and cut longitudinally into sheets, which are exposed to the sun and air; being laid out to dry, with the outer face turned down, upon boards of linden or basswood.

The inner face is pure isinglass, which, when well dried, can be removed with care from the external lamellæ. The finer sheets thus obtained are to be placed between cloths to keep them from flies, and are then subjected to a heavy pressure so as to flatten them out and render them uniform. After this they are assorted and tied up in packets. The packets composed of the isinglass of the large sturgeon usually contain from ten to fifteen sheets, and weigh a pound and a quarter; those of the others contain twenty-five sheets, weighing a pound. Eighty of these packages are usually sewed up in a cloth bag, or sometimes inclosed in sheet lead.

The outer lamellæ of the air bladder, after the isinglass proper has been removed, also contain a considerable quantity of glue, which, when softened in water is scraped off with a knife and moulded into little tablets of about the size of a silver dollar and then dried. This form of isinglass is packed in boxes, and is less expensive than the other.

It is said that an excellent isinglass has been made from the scales of shad and herring, which are first freed from their silvery coating. This may furnish a useful hint to persons who are near some of the great fishery establishments of the country; that of Alexandria, Virginia, for instance, where hundreds of thousands of shad are scaled and salted every year.—Late Paper.

"Poor human wisdom is often baffled in the paths it marks out for itself. The hand of God hedges up the way, and we turn aside and wonder. Let us try simply to trust our Father, and walk in the way of His commandment, then shall we never go astray."

THE FRIEND.

NINTH MONTH 19, 1874.

There has been, of latter years, a growing looseness in the people of Philadelphia, as well as of many other parts of our country, as to the observance of the First-day of the week, as a time specially set apart for religious purposes. This is evidenced by the opening on that day, one after another, of places of resort, such as the Mercantile Library, the Library of the Franklin Institute, and the Zoological Garden, in the Park; by the continued frequenting of lager beer and other drinking saloons, and by the publication and sale of newspapers, especially designed to be read on that day of the week.

Many causes have conspired to produce this effect. One of these we believe, to be the spread in our midst of materialistic sentiments among scientific men, who endeavor to explain all the phenomena of our spiritual nature, as mere motions of matter, and thus practically reject all religion. In regard to such, it is still true; that the natural man receiveth not the things of God, "neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned."

The large influx of immigrants from the continent of Europe, has tended in the same direction. In those countries, even among professors of religion, it is considered proper to spend such parts of the day as are not specially set apart for religious services, in social visiting, amusements, and other similar employments. Those who have been trained up with such views, in removing to a new home bring their former feelings and practices with them.

But independently of a lowered tone of religious feeling in the community, there is probably some reaction of the public mind against that mistaken view, which attributed an intrinsic holiness to the day itself; a view inconsistent with the spiritual nature of the Christian religion, and not warranted by the precepts of our Saviour and his apostles. The doctrine of the Society of Friends on this subject, is thus expressed by Robert Barclay:

"We, not seeing any ground in Scripture for it, cannot be so superstitious as to believe, that either the Jewish Sabbath now continues, or that the first day of the week is the anti type thereof, or the true Christian Sabbath; which; with Calvin, we believe to have a more spiritual sense; and therefore, we know no moral obligation by the fourth command, or elsewhere, to keep the first day of the week more than any other, or any holiness inherent in it. But first, forasmuch as it is necessary that there be some time set apart for the saints to meet together, to wait upon God; and that secondly, it is fit at some times they be freed from other outward affairs; and that thirdly, reason and equity doth allow, that servants and beasts have some time allowed them to be eased from their continual labor; and that fourthly, it appears that the apostles and primitive Christians did use the first day of the week for these purposes; we find ourselves sufficiently moved for these causes to do so also, without superstitiously straining the Scriptures for another reason."

While Friends have been thus careful to place the obligation of observing the First day of the week on its true grounds; they have ever realized the importance of spending the time in the attendance of religious meetings, in quiet thought, in reading the Scriptures and other good books, and in such other ways as might tend to strengthen and establish their religious feelings. The pursuits of business, and the ordinary employments of life, are apt to prove so absorbing in their character, that the frequent recurrence of a time like this, in which they need not so much as be named among us, and in which our thoughts may rightly be turned from them, has been found eminently refreshing and serviceable by many serious minds. The good results which have flowed from its observance, prove that Friends, and others, have not been mistaken in believing they were divinely led, so to use one day in seven for other purposes than the outward concerns of life.

Those who have thus tasted of its benefits, cannot but regret that it should be converted into a day to be used for common social visiting, excursions into the country, or other forms of amusement, or for the ordinary business avocations. The usual argument, that if comparatively innocent places of amusement are not provided, multitudes would spend the time in a more objectionable way, we believe is fallacious. It is quite as likely to be the case, that those who would otherwise spend it more religiously, may be induced to visit such places, and thus misapply time which would have been more profitable employed.

We have received a letter from one of our subscribers, expressing a desire that a much larger portion of the columns of "The Friend" should be devoted to religious matter, and the reprinting of the works of our early members. While we desire to respect the wishes of all honestly concerned Friends, as we believe the author of the letter to be, it must be borne in mind, that one of the objects which those had in view who originated this paper, was the providing of suitable literary matter for the families of Friends, in connection with such religious extracts and essays, as might increase their attachment to the principles of their profession; and free from the objectionable reading so generally found in other periodicals. This object has never been lost sight of. We may have erred as to the relative space given to the different departments of the paper, but we would remind the Friend who wrote to us, that those who conduct a paper must be governed, in some degree, by the materials at their disposal.

Our correspondents do not always keep us equally well supplied with religious articles, and the filling our columns with extracts taken at random from the approved writings of the Society, would not be so likely to be useful, as when the selections are the result of some pointing of duty, or sense of their being applicable to the needs of our readers.

SUMMARY OF EVENTS.

FOREIGN.—Telegraphic communication with Europe was suspended from the morning of the 8th to that of the 9th inst., a period of more than 24 hours. The French cable was interrupted between Duxbury and St. Pierre, and the lines in Cape Breton, gave out at the same time. The Anglo-American cable resumed operations at 8.30 A. M., the 9th inst. It is conjectured that the interruption was caused by the movements of an iceberg.

According to a parliamentary return just issued, the total number of parliamentary electors in the United Kingdom, on the register, is 2,764,285, of these 2,245,108 reside in England and Wales, 280,308 in Scotland, and 238,869 in Ireland.

On the 11th inst. a collision occurred on the Great Eastern Railway, near Norwich, England, by which the trains were wrecked. Twenty persons were killed instantly and fifty others wounded, many of them fatally.

The recent agreement of the Atlantic steamship companies at Liverpool, for a uniform rate of steerage passage, was quickly broken, some of the lines having withdrawn from the arrangement, and steerage passengers are now taken on part of the slow lines at three guineas.

The Spanish steamship Tomas and Anchor line steamer Alexandria, came in collision in the Mersey, the 9th inst. The latter was sunk and the Tomas badly damaged.

The ship Euxine, while on a voyage from Shields for Aden, took fire and was destroyed. Twenty-one members of the crew, who escaped in two boats, have arrived at St. Helena, after a perilous voyage of over 1100 miles, during which neither boat saw the other. The third boat, containing the remainder of the crew, has not yet been heard from.

A strike of the cotton operators at Bolton, which for some time past was thought likely to occur, commenced on the 12th instant. The strike stops 74 mills, which employed 13,000 hands. Forty-eight mills, employing 7,000 hands, continue operations. Subscriptions for the strikers have been opened by the trades unions throughout the manufacturing districts.

According to the returns of the British Board of Trade, for the first half of the present year, the exports to the United States, were £11,987,734, as against £15,631,589, for the corresponding period last year, a reduction of nearly twenty-five per cent.

Liverpool, 9th mo. 14th. Uplands cotton 8*d.*; Orleans 8¼*d.*

The old Catholic Congress at Frieburg closed with a public sitting, at which over 5000 persons were present.

A Berlin despatch says: It is reported that an order will soon be issued expelling from Prussia all foreign priests, monks and nuns.

The Carlists recently fired on a train of cars in which they believed that the Austrian and German ambassadors were passengers. Only two persons were killed.

A Geneva dispatch of the 11th says: "The international Law Association, which has been in session here this week, closed its proceedings to-day with a public meeting, at which over 3000 persons were present. D. D. Field, of New York, made a speech explaining the objects of the session, which, he said, were to obviate the necessity of war. Henry Richard and Père Hyacin the also addressed the meeting.

An ambassador from Japan has arrived at Shanghai, China. It is generally considered that a pacific solution of the difficulties with regard to Formosa will be effected. It is reported that the question will be submitted for arbitration to the President of the United States or the King of Italy.

Guizot, the eminent statesman and author, died at his residence in Paris, the 13th instant, aged 87 years. He expressed a desire that his funeral should be private and uncremonious.

A Madrid dispatch states that the German and Austrian ministers had been received by President Serrano, and presented their credentials simultaneously, in accordance with the instructions of their governments. The German minister said that the Emperor William, in recognizing the executive power of Spain, was moved by a desire to contribute to the restoration of peace in that country, and hoped that President Serrano would succeed in maintaining order by conservative measures.

It is stated that 3000 troops will leave Cadiz for Cuba about the end of the present month, and 5000 more in the 10th month.

The voting on the 13th inst., in the Department of Maine et Loire, to fill a vacancy in the French Assembly, has resulted in no election. De Maile, the republican candidate, received 45,000 votes, Bruces, government, 26,000, and Berger, Bonapartist, 25,000. A second ballot is ordered for the 27th instant.

UNITED STATES.—The interments in Philadelphia last week numbered 307, including 133 children under two years of age.

The assessors for the City of Philadelphia have completed their enumeration of the male taxable inhabitants, and find the number at this time is 166,521. The largest number entitled to vote in any ward is 12,765 in the 19th ward, and the smallest 2720, is in the 6th ward.

Since General Custer's exploration of the Black Hills country, many applications have been made at Washington on behalf of companies or individuals wishing to go there. As the region in question is a part of the territory reserved by the Sioux Indians, the Department of the Interior has announced officially that all applications for permission to visit it will be denied, until Congress has taken some further action in the matter.

From a late number of the Liverpool Cotton Brokers Association, it appears that on the 20th ult., American "middling upland" cotton sold at 8¼*d.* per pound, and the highest priced India cotton 5⅞*d.* per pound, the difference in price being 2⅜*d.* a pound in favor of American cotton. Notwithstanding the low price of India cotton, the consumption of the manufacturers still consists mainly of that procured from the United States.

The affairs of the Pennsylvania Railroad have been fully and carefully investigated by the committee appointed for that purpose some months since. It appears from the report of that committee that the capital stock amounts to $68,144,475, the bonded debt and liabilities of every kind to $59,416,373, making $127,560,848. The assets of the company are valued by the committee at $178,371,778, which is $50,810,930 more than the stock and debts.

The Markets, &c.—The following were the quotations on the 14th inst. New York.—American gold 109½. U. S. 6's 1881, registered, 117¼; do. coupon, 117¾; do. 1868, registered, 116; coupon, 116¾; do. 5 per cents. 111 a 112. Superfine flour, $4.50 a $5; State extra, $5 a $5.40; finer brands, $5.50 a $10.50. White Michigan wheat $1.35 a $1.39; red western. $1.24 a $1.25; No. 2 Chicago Spring, $1.18; No. 3 do. $1.14 a $1.15. Oats 64 a 66½ cts. Jersey rye, 95 cts. Western mixed corn, 96 a 97 cts. Philadelphia.—Cotton 17 a 17½ for middling uplands and New Orleans. Superfine flour, $3.50 a $4.00; extra, $4 a $5.25; finer brands, $5.50 a $8.75. White wheat $1.38 a $1.40; red $1.23 a $ 1.25. Rye 97 a $1.00. Yellow corn, 95 cts. Oats, 63 a 67 cts. Smoked hams, 15 a 16 cts. Lard 14½ a 15 cts. Clover seed 10½ a 11 cts. The cattle market was dull and prices lower. Receipts of beef cattle 4100 head, which sold within a range of 3½ a 7½ cts. per lb. gross, the latter being the price for choice. About 14,000 sheep sold at 4 a 6 cts. per lb. gross, and 5000 hogs at $11 a $12 per 100 lb. net. Chicago.—Spring extra flour $4.60 a $4.88. No. 1 Spring wheat, $1.04. No. 2 do. 98 cts.; No. 3 do. 94 cts. No. 2 corn, 75 a 76 cts. No. 2 oats, 48 cts. No. 2 Spring barley, 96 cts. Baltimore.—Amber wheat, $1.33 a $1.35; Maryland red, $1.20 a $1.30; Western red, $1.25. Yellow corn, 93 cts. Oats, 60 a 62 cts. Cincinnati.—Family flour $5.30 a 5.50. White wheat, $1.14 a $1.18; red, $1.05 a $1.10. Corn, 80 a 83 cts. Oats, 48 a 53 cts.

SHELTER FOR COLORED ORPHANS.

Wanted, a Teacher for this Institution, to enter upon her duties 1st of 10th mo. Apply to

Hannah R. Newbold, 643 Franklin St.
Mary Wood, 524 South Second St.
Mary Randolph, 247 North Twelfth St.
Sarah Richie, 444 North Fifth St.

FRIENDS' ASYLUM FOR THE INSANE.

Near Frankford, (Twenty-third Ward,) Philadelphia.

Physician and Superintendent—JOSHUA H. WORTHINGTON, M. D.

Applications for the Admission of Patients may be made to the Superintendent, or to any of the Board of Managers.

WANTED.

A suitable Friend to take the position of Writing Teacher and Assistant Governor at Westtown Boarding School—for next Session. Apply to

Charles Evans, 702 Race street, Philadelphia,
Clarkson Sheppard, Greenwich, New Jersey,
Joseph Walton, Moorestown, New Jersey.

RECEIPTS.

Received from George Sharpless, Agent, Pa., $2, vol. 48, and for Robert W. Lewis, $2, vol. 48; from Joshua Jefferis, Pa., $2, vol. 48; from John M. Smith, Agent, O., for Amos Hibbs, $2, to No. 43, vol. 48; and for David Stephen, $2, vol. 48; from Levi Varney, Canada, $2, vol. 48; from Edwin P. Hannum, Pa., $2, vol. 48; from Oliver Miller, O., $2, vol. 48; from Richard Buzby, N. J., $2, vol. 48; from Nathaniel B. Brown, City, $2, vol. 48, and for James Brown, N. J., $2, vol. 48; from Isaac Huestis, M. D., Agent, O., $2, vol. 48, and for Fleming Crew, Henry Crew, Jesse Hiatt, and Amy John, $2 each, vol. 48; from Walter Edgerton, Ind., $2, vol. 48; from Pemberton Moore, Pa., $2, vol. 48; from James Woody, Agent, Ind., $2, vol. 48, and for Israel Hall, $2, vol. 48; from John W. Buzby, N. J., $2, vol. 48; from Joel Thompson, Jr., Pa., $2, vol. 48; from Daniel Williams, Agent, O., for Isaac Mitchell, Jacob Holloway, Asa Branson, John C. Hoge, Mary Chandler, Juliann H. Branson, Mary Ann Holloway, Sarah Purviance, Joseph H. Branson, Joseph Walker, Ephraim W. Holloway, and Jane Holloway, $2, each, vol. 48; from James Edgerton, O., $3, to No. 52, vol. 48; from Richard E. Ely, Pa., $2, vol. 48; from William B. Oliver, Agent, Mass., $2, vol. 48, and for Pelatiah Purinton, $5, to No. 13, vol. 49; from Phebe Parker, Pa., $2, vol. 48; from Joseph Bancroft, Del., $2, vol. 48; from Thomas Wistar, Pa., $2, vol. 48; from Mark Haines, N. J., $2, vol. 48; from Ashton Richardson, Del., $2, vol. 48; from William C. Taber, Mass., $2, vol. 48; from Stephen Hobson, Agent, O., for Achsah Mott, and James McGirr, Jr., $2 each, vol. 48; from Hannah Flanagan, City, $2, vol. 48; from William Thorp, Fkfd., City, $2, vol. 48, and for Rachel M. Thorp, $2, vol. 48; per Jacob Maule, O., for Israel Sidwell, $2, to No. 18, vol. 48, and for Nathan Steer, Joseph P. Lupton, and Joseph Raley, $2 each, vol. 48; from Jane DeCon, N. J., per Daniel DeCou, $2, vol. 48; from Josiah A. Roberts, Pa., $2, vol. 48; from Charles Darnell, N. J., $2, vol. 48; from Marshall Fell, Pa., per Dr. C. E., $2, vol. 48; from William Carpenter, Agent, N. J., for George Abbott, John Tyler, and George Abbott, Jr., $2 each, vol. 48; from Nathan Warrington, Agent, Io., for John Vail, Thomas Penrose, Evan Smith, John Edmundson, and Phebe McBride, $2 each, vol. 48; from Sarah Larkin, Pa., per John Trimble, $2, vol. 48; from William P. Smedley, Pa., $2, vol. 48; from William Windle, Pa., $2, vol. 48; from Thomas J. Edge, Pa., for Elizabeth D. Edge, $4, to No. 35, vol. 49, and for Palmer Good, $2, vol. 48; from Zebedee Haines, N. J., $2, vol. 48; and for Joshua L. Harmer, $2, vol. 48; from Sarah H. Matson, Pa., $2, vol. 48; from Gideon C. Smith, R. I., $2, to No. 28, vol. 49; from Micajah M. Morlan, Agent, O., for William Fisher, Hannah Bonsall, Sarah Alleson, and Aaron Stratton, $2 each, vol. 48; from Samuel Trimble, M. D., Pa., $2, vol. 48; from Thomas Doan, Pa., per George Reid, $2, vol. 48; from Elisha Woodworth, Mass., $2, to No. 44, vol. 48; from Samuel King, O., $2, vol. 48; from Abraham Gibbons, Pa., $2, vol. 48, and for R. L. G. Tatnall, Del., $2, vol. 48; from Charles E. Ganse, N. J., $2, vol. 48; from Benjamin Hayes, Pa., $2, vol. 48; from Thomas Emmons, Io., $2, vol. 48; from Richard Hall, Agent, England, 10 shillings, vol. 48, and for Thomas Williamson, Robert Bigland, William Walker, Josiah Thompson, Thomas Jackson, William Adair, George M. Goundry, Nancy Ritson, Richard B. Brockbank, Alice Altham, Martin Lidbetter, Joseph Hall, Josiah Hall, William Wigham, John Little, John H. Walker, Alfred Smith, and Jonathan Pearson, 10 shillings each, vol. 48, for Susan Williams, £1.10, to No. 52, vol. 48, (2 copies,) and for Sarah S. Moss, 10 shillings to No. 31, vol. 49.

Remittances received after Fourth-day morning will not appear in the Receipts until the following week.

CORRESPONDENTS

Will please address their communications (whether remittances or otherwise,) to No. 116 North Fourth Street, as formerly, it was through a typographical error that the address at the head of the Paper has been printed 115 for the past few weeks.

RASPBERRY ST. SCHOOLS FOR COLORED ADULTS.

Teachers will be wanted for these schools, to be opened 10th mo. 5th. Applications may be made to

Thomas Elkinton, 118 Pine St.
Elton B. Gifford, 719 Market St.
James Bromley, 641 Franklin St.
George J. Scattergood, 413 Spruce St.

THE FRIEND.

A RELIGIOUS AND LITERARY JOURNAL.

VOL. XLVIII. SEVENTH-DAY, NINTH MONTH 26, 1874. NO. 6.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY.

Price Two Dollars per annum, if paid in advance. Two dollars and fifty cents, if not paid in advance.

Subscriptions and Payments received by

JOHN S. STOKES,

AT NO. 116 NORTH FOURTH STREET, UP STAIRS.

PHILADELPHIA.

Postage, when paid quarterly in advance, five cents.

For "The Friend."

John Finch Marsh.

(Continued from page 34.)

Extracts from diary.

"Whitechapel, 10th mo., 1816.

Some account of a short visit to Southampton and the Isle of Wight.

Early on Third-day morning, 17th of 9th mo., 1816, left London by coach for Southampton, and arrived there about six o'clock. Lodged at the George Inn. I have good reason to remember that evening, both before and after retiring to bed, it being a season of divine favor, my soul tasted of the goodness of the Lord, and under an humbling sense thereof was sweetly bowed in supplication. Slept comfortably, and awoke in the morning much refreshed; walked a little before breakfast. At eleven went to meeting, sat with a very small company, and expressed a little by way of encouragement. Here I met with John Barclay, who kindly engaged to meet me in the afternoon at W. W.'s, at whose house I dined, to walk with me. I was pleased with his company, and presently found him an amiable, interesting companion; his mind evidently appears impressed with much seriousness, a seriousness accompanied with a solemn sweetness. I esteem it a privilege my lot was cast so as to meet with him. He has been much the pleasant companion of my thoughts since my return; my heart has rejoiced on his account, and been comforted in the belief that he is bowing with fear and humility under the forming hand of the Lord. My heart longs for his encouragement, and that he may continue to be preserved in a watchful, humble frame, that so none of the many hindering, hurtful things that are in the world may be permitted in any degree to obstruct his progress in that path in which I believe the feet of his mind are sweetly turned. Oh! how delightful and encouraging in passing along to meet with those young in years concerned to remember their Creator in the days of their youth. My heart, yea all that is within me, is at times made to rejoice over such as these, and tenderly and affectionately desires their encouragement and growth in the Truth.

May I be so preserved on the watch as to omit no opportunity of doing what my hands find to do, and endeavoring to encourage and strengthen the minds of these preciously-visited, exercised little ones, according to that ability which may be given. The mind thus engaged, if careful not to move beyond present ability, if careful to attend to right feeling, need not be afraid, while thus preserved in the simplicity and humility, of expressing anything that would be likely to bring forth anything like unripe fruit, or an untimely birth; but would, I believe, if faithful in attending to the pointings of Truth in the inward parts, be made instrumental in different and many ways, to gather the children and people—to strengthen the brethren and sisters.

We spent the remaining part of the day pleasantly; went to Netley Abbey to see those ancient and interesting ruins; the scenery of country and water from the spot and about Southampton exceeding beautiful. Got back in the evening in time to meet our young friend Edmund Janson, who had been on a visit at J. S.'s at Shaftesbury, and agreeable to appointment met me here in order to accompany me to the island. We supped at W. W.'s.

19th. After breakfast our young friend J. B. met us and accompanied us to Netley Abbey; spent the morning pleasantly together, stopped at a neat, quiet house on our return, and, taking a light meal, got back in time for the packet, when, parting with dear J. B., went on board between three and four, and after a pleasant sail with agreeable company, landed at Cowes about six, took some tea, and walked to Newport in the dark.

[Here follows an account of their brief walking excursion on the island, and of his return to Whitechapel on the 23rd.

It is to be regretted that nothing more than a few scattered memorandums can be found during the interesting period of his early life, so that there appears to be no record concerning the happy event of his marriage, which took place in the year 1819.]

1821, 12th mo., 1st. After reading the 6th chapter of Daniel in the morning, this language seemed pleasantly impressed on my mind—'The same Lord over all is rich unto all that call upon Him.' In the afternoon had a short time of retirement in my chamber.

1823, 1st mo. 1st. Last evening, at the close of an eventful year, my mind favored with the overshadowing of good; and to day the secret breathing of it hath been that the words of my mouth and the meditation of my heart may be more acceptable in the Divine sight for the future than of late they have been.

[Near the close of a long visit to relatives at Warwick, he mentions,]

1831, 11th mo. 27th. We attended Warwick meeting morning and afternoon. My dear wife and self appeared in testimony in the morning. In the afternoon broke up meeting too soon, which was a cause of much uneasiness to my poor mind the remainder of the evening, &c., having reason to believe that my dear Hannah was not quite clear of some in that little company, and came away burdened. Oh! what sorrow and regret I felt!

1839, 2nd mo. 9th. [Being on a visit at Rochester] I called on a medical man, having felt my mind secretly attracted towards him in love; I found him at home. We had a sweet little time together, much to my satisfaction, and I trust to our mutual comfort and strengthening. I believe him to be a valuable character, one whose mind has often been previously visited, humbled and contrited, under a sense of the goodness and mercy of the Lord towards him, and which I believe has followed him from his youth up, and continues to follow him. May he be preserved humble and watchful! O the preciousness of the love of our Heavenly Father, shed abroad in the hearts of the children of men!

7th mo. 24th. I attended the interment of the remains of dear Eliza Bell, of Croydon. Her dear bereaved husband seemed preserved in much calmness, and was strengthened to express a few words sweetly at the grave side. There were several communications in the meeting, and some supplications. I am of the mind, that more silence, and fewer words would have been more profitable and edifying. I incline to think if there was more inwardness and watchfulness, that there would be less of the feeling of excitement experienced by those who may at times have to minister, that it is to be feared, is often the case on such occasions.

[Whilst holding a minute, liberating both my parents for service in Croydon, during which time they had nearly 50 sittings with Friends, also sittings in nearly 60 families not Friends.]

1840, 1st mo. 26th, First-day. Very poor, and stripped of the feeling of good, and of any qualification or fitness for the important engagement in prospect [among our neighbors]. P. B., R. B., H. D., and Brother S. H. L. took tea with us, they being appointed by the monthly meeting to confer with and assist us in making the way for our visits. After tea we had a comfortable, strengthening and encouraging time together. R. B. appeared in supplication."

"29th. We are proceeding, I trust, safely and peacefully in our engagement; oftentimes comforted with a feeling of sweet fellowship of spirit in the company of the humble in heart, in our visits. And I think I may acknowledge that gratitude has often been the covering of our minds for the help which has from time to time been afforded to our own humbling admiration, so that we are abundantly compensated for the humiliating and proving seasons we are often introduced into.

3rd mo. 15th, First-day. Felt something towards an individual who attended our meeting in the afternoon (not in membership with us), at the close of which I found it safest for me to seek an opportunity with him, which I did by walking a little way with him, much to the peace of my own mind, and I believe to the comfort of his. He parted sweetly from me, expressing the desire the Lord might be with me. He was at meeting also in the morning. I think his words were, "The Lord be with thee."

Myself and wife attended the marriage of —— and ——. We dined at the house; a large company. The want of simplicity at the dinner table, as also in the appearance of some as respects dress, was affecting to witness. Oh the sorrowful departure in this our day, in so many ways, from the simplicity which the Truth leads into, and would lead into, was there but an individual faithfulness in yielding to the dictates thereof—its pure teaching and guiding.

I attended the marriage of —— and ——, and appeared in testimony. On going into the room afterwards to speak with the bride and bridegroom, &c., I was concerned to see such a display of flowers, so many having a nosegay in their hands. Alas! how many deviations there are in the present day from the simplicity which the Truth would lead all into, was there but a willingness to yield to its simple leadings and guidings. No one perhaps can enjoy the sight of flowers more than myself, and I believe it an allowable pleasure for us all; but the display of them on this occasion, and in this way, does not feel comfortable to me, neither do I thing it right. Also it appears the practice of many Friends now-a-days to ornament their dishes brought to table, with flowers, which does not appear to me consistent in us so to do."

(To be continued.)

For "The Friend."

Indian Affairs.

(Continued from page 34.)

By Thos. Cloud, of the Seminoles.

"The Seminoles are still making commendable improvement in the advancement of every thing that tends to a higher degree of civilization. During the past year they have built two churches, and one school room in connection with one of the churches, of stone; have enlarged their farms, set out many orchards, and new buildings are seen going up in all parts of the nation. This year there will be many more acres put under cultivation than formerly. There are five district schools in operation. They have not been as well attended as formerly, arising from differences between the agent and the people, in not employing teachers satisfactory to the people, but there is a proposed change of the system, which if carried out will give the control of the schools to the people themselves, and their interest will be awakened in them, and we hope for better results. The mission school heretofore in operation, is closed, and has been for more than a year, and will from what we learn, be discontinued, but there will probably be a boarding school established by the Seminoles of a higher grade than heretofore.

The Seminoles have under cultivation about 10,000 acres; they raised, according to the last census, 200,000 bushels of corn, 6,000 of potatoes, 200 of rice, and annually put up 1,000 tons of hay; they have 3,000 head of horses, 15,000 head of cattle, and 30,000 head of hogs, are introducing improved stock of all kinds, and the best of agricultural implements. The population of the nation in October last was 2,500, and they are increasing in numbers."

By L. Flint, of the Eastern Shawnees.

"Most of you are aware of the fact that the Eastern Shawnees and five other small tribes are located in the northeast corner of our Territory, bounded on two sides by the States of Kansas and Missouri, and on the other two sides by the Cherokee Nation. These States, as well as the Cherokee Nation, have laws to prevent the commission of crimes, while we, the Eastern Shawnees, have no written laws of any kind; and the fact that we get along so peaceably among ourselves, as well as with others, has always seemed strange. But we might account for it in this way: Now the Shawnees, while they are but few, entertain great respect and veneration for their chiefs, so much so that his word is to the Shawnees very much as written laws are to other nations. Besides this, it is made his principal duty to call the people together from time to time, and to advise and encourage them to be industrious, honest, kind, and loving toward all men."

By E. H. Black, of the Confederated Peorias, &c.

"Mr. President, Friends and Brothers: In accordance with a resolution adopted at the present session of the General Council, I have to say that the condition of the Confederate Peorias, &c., is very good at present. As an agricultural people they are very successful. They are industrious, striving hard every year to raise all the grain and vegetables they can for home consumption, and in most cases very successful; they have every year enough, and surplus grain to sell. They take a great interest in this branch of industry, more than any other, because of the profits to be derived from that source.

And they are not neglectful of raising stock. They have introduced some fine breeds of cattle, horses and hogs, which they take pride in raising.

They have greatly interested themselves in setting out fruit trees of every description on their farms, and it is to be hoped that in a few years they will have good orchards and fruit in abundance. They have not fallen back in the least, in their industrial pursuits, ever since their removal to this Territory, but have been improving every year. They live in log and frame houses, neatly built, have good barns and pastures for their stock, and the farming implements used are of the latest improvements.

The Peorias have had one good school in successful operation, but parents moving to different sections of the reserve, away from the neighborhood school house, the pupils have been reduced to a small number, and on that account the school has been suspended for some time, but only until a boarding school can be located near the central point of the settlements, so that all the children can be accommodated; the school will then go on as usual. But still our Sunday school is in operation, where men, women and children spend their time for a few hours in this religious exercise every Sunday, and it is doing much good amongst old and young.

The Peorias are a quiet and peaceable people, living in peace with all the neighboring tribes and the whites."

By John W. Greyeyes, of the Wyandotts.

"The Wyandott tribe are situated at the head of Grand river, owning there twenty thousand acres of land, purchased for them by the government of the United States, from the Seneca tribe in A. D. 1867. This country is well adapted to raising grains of various sorts, and the people are endeavoring to open out farms, building houses, &c. The dry season of the last year was to their disadvantage in raising enough to supply fully their wants, but at the present many have sown wheat, which is now growing and very promising. Many have, in the last year, put out orchards, and are putting out more this spring. The Wyandotts have for many years abandoned the hunting of game for their living. Many of them are now well experienced farmers, and are in the position that by continuing their industry they will in a year or two be again comfortably fixed with homes. They have horses, cattle, hogs, and other stock sufficient to start for well to do. They have opened in cultivation, about six hundred acres in all; their number of acres in improvements runs from three to forty acres; and in every thing the indications are favorable to our people for improvement in their present condition. And as there are prospects for receiving more money from the government, when so done, this will enable many to enlarge these comforts. On last fall they erected a fine church building for the Methodist denomination, to which some fifty or sixty members belong, who have preaching on every Sabbath day. In the Wyandott reserve there is instituted one mission school specially for the benefit of the Wyandott, Shawnee and Seneca children, which is carried on by the Friends or Quakers, and, I believe, assisted by government, and at this school there are about eighty scholars attending, and averaging in the year around an attendance of about fifty."

By Francis King, of the Ottawas.

"It is now five years since we settled on our present reserve, and considering the shortness of the time, we are in a prosperous condition. Upon our arrival here we went about planting orchards of the choicest fruits to be had, and this spring the prospects for fruit are promising. We have heretofore had to pay out a great deal of money for flour, but last autumn we sowed about one hundred acres of wheat, which now promises well, and which we think will be the means of saving to us considerable money.

With these facts in view, we have reason to believe that next fall and winter our home comforts will be very sensibly enhanced. As regards our interest in stock raising, I may say we spare no pains in improving our stock, but more particularly cattle and hogs. The implements of agriculture used are of the latest patents. The moral character of our people has improved greatly, but more particularly during the last year. The Ottawas are strictly temperate in their habits, abstaining from all intoxicating drinks. We labor hard through the week, and on Sundays attend our place of worship, where we invoke Divine aid in our improvement spiritually as well as temporally. We have one mission school in successful operation, satisfactory to all, and where the children are not only taught the rudiments of an English education, but also the doctrines of religion. Sunday school is also taught regularly, which is no less a source of great good. In this connection I can say the Ottawas have the Bible and hymns translated into their own language, which they read and understand."

By Wacamo, of the Sacs and Foxes.

"About four years ago we visited and examined some lands in this Territory in company with three commissioners. They showed us the country, marked it off, showed us the lines, and told us this was ours. We came, occupied it, and commenced work, when in a short time we were told we were on Muscogee soil. This caused many of us to remove and commence anew a second time; but now, for the first time in many years, we are feeling as if we were at home again. We've commenced farms and homes, and are pushing ahead as fast as we can every year. We have a very good and commodious school house built of bricks. In our last treaty $10,000 were set apart for the purpose of building this house, which fact will give you some idea of this school house. We appropriate annually $5,000 for the support of the school. We have a national saw and grist mill, and have commenced to build log houses, something we have never done before. When we first procured our mill it was operated by white men, but now it is operated by our half-breed and full-blood Indians. We also have a blacksmith who is a half-breed Indian, and who does all our blacksmithing. The number of acres in cultivation I do not know. There is fifty acres of corn at the school, ten acres of oats, and ten acres of wheat, all looking promising, and most of which was planted and is being tended in part by the pupils in school. The number of stock in the tribe I do not know; nearly all have horses, hogs and cattle. There has been five hundred fruit trees planted this year, each family planting from ten to fifteen. We have always respected the advice of our great father, and indeed will hear good advice from any body."

By Black Beaver, of the Delawares.

"Mr. President: Long years ago the Delawares were acknowledged the oldest in the brotherhood of tribes, and I am therefore pleased to meet and talk with so many whom I regard as grandchildren. The Delawares have melted away to but a few souls, probably seventy on the Washita—the remainder having confederated with the Cherokees. This remnant of a once proud tribe, are endeavoring, like others, to learn the art of the culture of the soil, but heretofore a great hindrance has been lack of implements. A year ago each family planted a few peach trees, while during the present season some have planted apples, pears and cherries. I planted one hundred fruit trees this season, I also planted one hundred and two acres of oats and one hundred and twenty-five acres of corn before starting to this session of the Council. I suppose the entire number of acres in cultivation is about five hundred and fifty. We have six children in school. My people are mostly young men, so we have not many children. They are remarkably quiet, molest no one, but attend only to their own affairs. They fear to do wrong, and desire only that which is right. This is all I have to say."

(To be continued.)

The world expects more from Friends, than from other people, because you profess more. Therefore you should be more just than others in your words and dealings; more righteous, holy and pure in your lives and conversations; so that your lives and conversations may preach.—Epistle of Geo. Fox to Friends, 1679.

Selected.

Light to the Blind.

Many who are suffering from severe affliction of the eyes will remember the sorrow with which they learned of the death of the famous Graefe, of Berlin, who, though a young man at the time of his demise a few years ago, had gained a world-wide reputation in his specialty. It would seem that his mantle has fallen on another of the same name—a cousin—who is rapidly becoming known in the medical world of Germany as the "second Graefe." And in a period when affections of the eye are so common, we believe a short account of this rising benefactor of his race will be acceptable.

Alfred Graefe, born in 1830, and now proprietor of an extensive eye-infirmary in the old University town of Halle, in Saxony, was for a time the diligent pupil, and then the zealous assistant, of his cousin in the far-famed "Eye Clinic" of Berlin. In this position he became a skilful and confident operator, and distinguished himself to such an extent among German oculists that on the sudden death of his chief he was generally regarded as the legitimate successor to the place of this cousin and namesake. In the meantime, however, he had acquired a reputation which gained for him the chair of ophthalmic surgery in the University of Halle, where he had become quite distinguished for successful operations for the removal of cataracts from the eye. He preferred, therefore, to remain in Halle, where he soon founded an institution for treatment of the eye on the model of the one where he had earned his fame in Berlin.

This institution of Graefe is rapidly becoming the Mecca of those whose sight is threatened, and twice he has already been obliged to enlarge his accommodations for the numerous patients whose afflictions are so sensitive and delicate as to require them to be in his private hospital, or "Eye Clinic," as the Germans prefer to call it. The actual labor and practical activity of the man is marvellous. Besides his regular practice and the lectures in the University, the traditional midnight lamp finds him working at the manuscript of his numerous articles on his specialty in the medical journals; and he even finds time to write in a popular vein for the benefit of the people at large, a great many of whom in Germany suffer from affections of the eye, brought on, it is now believed, by injudicious use of the organ in the public schools.

The actual extent of his practical labors may be judged from the statistics. He is famous for the removal of cataracts, of which during the past year he has treated about one hundred and fifty due to old age, and two hundred from the ordinary causes, to say nothing of the many for strabismus, or squinting. He counted twelve hundred important operations last year, and treated, in all, about four thousand cases. During his hours of consultation and operation—from nine till one—his house is besieged by a suffering crowd with bandaged eyes, and while his waiting-rooms are crowded, a line of carriages is standing before his door. The most affecting sight among his visitors, are the many children of tender age brought by parents whose hearts anxiously beat for their little ones, and frequently suffer the keenest pangs to learn the danger of the malady and probable loss of sight for life.

Before beginning this daily duty Graefe visits some sixty patients in his clinic, and generally sees them again about six o'clock in the evening. It is needless to say that this terrible strain frequently so exhausts him that he returns to his domestic fireside entirely worn out, and then his favorite relaxation is found on the back of his horse, which bears him to the friendly surroundings of the old city and the beneficent charms of quiet nature along the stream and in the forest.

A few words may be acceptable in regard to the nature of an operation which the writer of this article now remembers but too vividly as the terror of his childhood during a trying affliction, but which now, thanks to such noble men as Graefe, is robbed of half its agony, if not, indeed, of almost all. The days of tedious operations or removal by vitriol are past; the work is now done so quickly, and often painlessly, that the suffering is almost entirely in the anticipation, so that chloroform is only used for those who cannot trust to the steadiness of their nerves. The object of the operation is to remove a turbid and opaque lens from the axis of light, that this may again reach the retina and bear the image of external objects. This lens is either to be entirely removed from the eye, or to be so handled that it may be absorbed. The operation now generally consists of a perforation of the cornea, which makes the total removal of the opaque lens possible.

The incision of a skilful operator seldom lasts more than thirty seconds, and gives no more pain than the cut of an ordinary razor; the removal of the lens is effected by a careful pressure, and is not very painful. The test is then made, and the patient is delighted to find after a successful operation, that he can count the fingers that have performed it. This, however, must last but for a moment, as the eye must be protected from the light while in the process of natural healing, which may be accomplished in four or five days. But during this period the greatest care is necessary, for the slightest pressure may cause the water which nature supplies for a new lens to be exuded, in which case the sight is nearly always irreparably lost. The patient must therefore lie quietly on the back, and neither speak, nor cough, nor sneeze, medical appliances aiding to suppress this latter. Even in sleep it is not well to leave the patient alone, for a careless rubbing of the itching eye destroys the sight forever.

When the wound is healed, the eye requires great care and the use of so-called cataract-glasses for some time, until it is completely restored. But the world is indebted to such men as Graefe for modern improvements in the delicate operation which now makes success the rule and failure the exception.—W. Wells.

Skimming the Seine.—Of all the things in the world which appear utterly worthless are soap-suds. Mr. Simmonds takes a different view. He tells us that "soap-suds as a stimulant of vegetable life cannot be too highly appreciated." We cannot go into his arguments on the great value of soap-suds, and it is sufficient to say that when poured out as a manure they are of prodigious efficacy. The French who are up to everything in the chemical line, have taken a proper view of the value of soap-suds. Whether from private dwellings in Paris, or from the barges of the blanchisseuses, the Seine must have a good deal of soap floating about in a wasteful kind of way, to say nothing of the greasy pollution from dead dogs and cats. There was a fortune, if properly looked after. An enterprising firm, fortified by the authority of the prefect, determined to begin a system of skimming the Seine. You would imagine it was a nonsensical idea. Quite a mistake. By uniting the skimmings of the river with the offal from hospitals, the firm is able by the aid of chemistry, steam and cookery, to fatten 3,000 pigs, and to produce annually 500,000 pounds of soap. Let England touch that if it can. Can any one mention a town in Great Britain where the most valuable products are not senselessly floated off down the gutters and sewers, never more to be of use to human beings?—Chambers' Journal.

A happy Old Age.—A fine old man, only mellowed by time, only made charitable by hard experiences, with the harvest of a wise career garnered all about him, with the love which he has won now a light to his eyes and a guide to his feet, with the respect which without command is cheerfully yielded, with his heart halved between heaven and earth, between those who remain and those who have gone before, sweeter and more lovable for his simplicity and partial helplessness, affection's pensioner, love's creditor, with a rich estate in the tender gratitude of all about him—such an old man, an ancestor still abiding, a founder who may contemplate the actual, fair extension of his line, is such a consummation of life's best and most honorable purposes that gallant youth, even in its morning arrogance, may well study it and seek in turn to win it. Even in this world we reap that which we have sown. The ruin and the desolation may be consummate at noonday, just as the average life of man, which should probably be a century, is hardly a third of it. Old age need not bring with it that for which we fear it—loneliness, ennui, peevishness, the general absence of all that makes an abiding here desirable, but the precaution against such weary doom must begin with the morning, out of which will come the evening issues. Nobody who is wise forgets to make provision for material wants which will survive the arm's strength and the mind's cunning; why may we not educate head and heart in habits which will survive much decay and operate by their own inherent force, even after our will has grown feeble and our judgment untrustworthy? Though we may seem to go on by a kind of mechanical momentum, yet the credit of it as well as the benefit of it will be ours, since it will have had its origin in our own wise provision and forethought. —N. Y. Tribune.

It is a circumstance worthy of observation, that the discipline of our Society can never be faithfully administered, where the peculiar testimonies are not maintained. A neglect of any one of these testimonies, whether it be as regards plainness in dress, address, or manner of living; the known scruples of Friends against wars, oaths, a hireling ministry, moderation in trade and business, or the due attendance of our meetings for Divine worship, necessarily disqualifies a person for laboring to reclaim those who may have violated the rules of the Society in other particulars. Hence it becomes highly important, that all those who are actively engaged in the affairs of the church, should exercise a watchful care over their own conduct and that of their families, that as far as lies in their power, no occasion of reproach may be brought upon the high profession we make of being the self-denying followers of Jesus Christ. And as we believe the discipline to have been instituted in the wisdom, and under the guidance of the Holy Spirit, and founded upon the restoring love of the gospel, so nothing short of the influence of a degree of the same divine Spirit, can qualify for duly administering it.

Thomas Story, at a meeting held at Fairfield, Connecticut, in the year 1702, spoke after this manner: That no name of distinction or contempt, among men, of their own inventing, through ignorance or envy, would stand any of us in stead at the last day; nothing would do then but the name, virtue and power of the Lord of life, the Lord Jesus Christ, the quickening spirit, and to have life eternal by Him: that we shall not be asked in that day, whether we had been named or called, Papists, Episcopalians, Presbyterians, Independents, Baptists, Quakers, or by any other name of that kind; but, "What have been thy thoughts, words and deeds in life? How hast thou lived? Hast thou done unto all men as thou wouldst they should have done unto thee."

We should cherish that state of mind in which we may be best prepared to perceive the warnings, and checks of God's Holy Spirit. What should we do without them? We ought to watch that we may never do any thing, or go anywhere, that may have the effect of robbing us of tenderness of spirit, or blind our sensibilities to this influence. If this sense were duly cherished by our young Friends, they would not be found at places of diversion. Limits, as to recreation and amusement, are to be known by attending to the reproofs of the Spirit. The religion of the cross of Christ is not intended to rob us of the true happiness of life, but blessed is the man who feels that God Almighty does set bounds to our amusements.

There is no other name by which any of us can be saved, but Jesus Christ. Let us labor to get into his name, for he hath promised, that where two or three are gathered together in his name, he will be in the midst of them. And he will make his promise good unto all them that are truly concerned to labor to get through all the opposition that stands in their way, that so they may get into the name, spirit and power of Christ, and witness him to be as a place of broad rivers unto them.—Mary Lamley.

"When the rays of this world's prosperity are around us, and there are no clouds of earthly sorrow to mar our earthly enjoyments, we may feel secure in them and be tempted to take up our rest in temporal gratifications, but, we should remember that it has been recorded in Holy Writ, that in this world we have no 'continuing city.'"

When we have missed our way through disobedience, we must know a fresh dispensation of repentance and amendment of life, through the power of the Holy Spirit in the heart.—Thos. Scattergood.

From "The British Friend."

Hannah Bellows.

Hannah Bellows was the wife of William L. Bellows, of Gloucester [England]. She was also the daughter of John Stickland, of Wareham, Dorset, a local preacher among the Wesleyan Methodists. Very early in life she manifested a love for serious things; and when she was about 20 years of age, a religious awakening at Salisbury became the means of her seeking in earnest, and finding the forgiveness of her sins through living faith in Christ.* Not content, however, as too many have been, to loiter or sit down in a false rest after attaining to this measure of life, she was concerned to press onward, through many inward baptisms and outward tribulations, to that fuller victory over the fallen nature, the very possibility of which is doubted by many, and was permitted to witness, through close following her Divine Master, a state of establishment in the truth which rendered her a blessing to others. Her gift in prayer was remarkable, and she became a class leader among the Methodists; though she often found herself restrained by the unerring Head of the Church, from either speaking too freely herself, or encouraging others so to speak of private religious experience. At such times she was in the practice of commencing by sitting down in silence; and frequently, in after life, recurred to these seasons as having been especially owned by the Master of Assemblies to the refreshing of those present. In the revival at Salisbury, already mentioned, the time which she had felt most eminently blessed to her own soul, was one in which the entire congregation had been drawn into solemn silence.

Hannah Stickland further felt that man was sometimes put too prominently forward in things relating to God—among some of those whom she so much loved, and with whom her religious lot had been cast. She was married in 1827, and soon after became acquainted with the late William and Anna Forster, of Bradpole. The sweetness and simplicity of their spirit left a favorable impression on her mind, inclining her to look toward the Society of Friends, and to examine its principles. She was several times at Bradpole before her removal to Cornwall, which was about the year 1829.

A visit from Stephen Grellett to that county was made the means of great encouragement to Hannah Bellows to take up the cross that lay in her way in the adoption of the plain language, as well as in her apparel. Her dress had for many years been marked by a degree of nonconformity with the fashions of the world; but to dress as a Friend would make this yet more marked. Stephen Grellett's message of counsel now sunk deep into her heart "to give up fully that which was for the hammer and for the fire; and the sooner the better." She was again enabled to win the victory over self, by faith in and obedience to the voice of the Spirit of God in the secret of her soul.

While living at Liskeard she began regu-

* That faith in Christ, which is living, is His own gift; and is only bestowed on those who submit to the convicting and converting power of His Holy Spirit. These are they who experience the truth of the Apostle's declaration: "If we walk in the Light, as He is in the Light we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ, His Son, cleanseth us from all sin."

larly to attend Friends' meetings. Having occasion to make a journey into Dorsetshire, where she would be among her old friends, the Wesleyans, she felt it a close trial, as she must now appear peculiar in their eyes; but He who makes rough places smooth and crooked places straight, had paved the way for her. The prospect of using the plain language to one individual with whom she had been very intimate, was especially trying to her: but the first words this good woman said to her as they met, were, "Now my dear, do say thee and thou to me; for I dearly like people to carry out their principles." Simple as this incident may appear to many, yet to those who have had to go through a similar trial it will not be without weight.

Hannah Bellows often looked back with pleasure to her fellowship with the Methodists. She said there was much that was precious and of pure gold among them; and she felt that in leaving them she could give up "none of the gold."

From Liskeard she removed to Tavistock, and while residing there became a member of the Society of Friends, being admitted at the same time with her husband and children.

For sixty years out of her long term of eighty, Hannah Bellows so lived as to exemplify the text, "The work of righteousness shall be peace, and the effect of righteousness quietness and assurance forever." Crowned with a humility that did not permit her even to suspect any worth in herself, few were more truly honored. While unwearied in her efforts for the good of others, she often wondered why her life should be prolonged, as she felt of so little use.

In middle life she had many trials—loss of children, reverses, and changes of home; but all were borne without murmuring. Again and again she leaned so firmly on the everlasting arm for support, that she was enabled to strengthen the hearts of others. The marked characteristic of her temper was an even cheerfulness; and when grey hairs drew on, and the grave became a nearer prospect, this cheerfulness grew even brighter than before. Frequently when she thought no one heard her, she would sing to herself in the overflowing of a joy which was the foretaste of that state she was soon to enter on for ever.

Those who knew her best can easily understand that it was natural for her family to look forward to a gradual and pleasant close to such a life. But He, who knows the end from the beginning, saw otherwise; and was pleased to appoint her yet a long and fierce trial, before she was to receive the crown of life, which He hath prepared for all them that love Him. For many years she had been subject to rheumatism, which increased in severity until she became not only helpless, but unable to lie down at all; and, with the exception of a brief interval, had to spend the last two years of her life confined to her arm-chair. This, to one of such active habits, was a close trial. She had also to bear not only sharp bodily pain, but deep spiritual baptisms. She said that her Heavenly Father saw something in her that needed refining, and that she earnestly prayed for patience, to bear all He saw meet.

One night as a relative was taking leave of her, while her bodily suffering rendered articulation extremely difficult, she gasped in a low voice, "If I should be taken in my sleep, be under no uneasiness: all will be well with me." She had often expressed a hope that she might be removed while asleep, if consistent with the Divine will. Sometimes she said she was afraid lest the restlessness she could not restrain should "bring dishonor on the profession of religion;" and she would frequently apologize to her kind watchers for disturbing their rest by her groaning.

Two nights before her departure her agony seemed to have reached its culminating point. For twelve or fourteen hours she had been unable to keep still for more than a minute at a time, and while tossing to and fro, she asked, "O how long will this last? can it be much longer?" A little later she groaned, "This is dying . . . and this is death." At length a lull came, and she bowed her head forward in silence; and then she whispered, "Glorious! glorious! glorious!" "O what a company! ten thousand times ten thousand, and thousands of thousands!" Presently she raised her head, and cried out in a clear triumphant voice, "They are coming! there they come! there they come! the horsemen and the chariots of fire!" "It is over! Satan can do no more!" After another pause, she again cried, "They are come! they are come! they are waiting for me!" and then, as if answering to some one, "I shall soon be ready." . . . Another time of silence followed, and the vision was veiled from her. Physical suffering succeeded, though her mental conflict appeared to be over.

For two days after this she said but little, beyond taking an affectionate leave of her husband, to whom she said, "Our union will be eternal;" and giving some advice to her children.

On Fifth-day evening she fell into a gentle sleep, after twenty-four hours' wakefulness, and her son and daughter believing she would awake refreshed by it, left her thus a little after ten at night in the care of a nurse, who was to call them if any change occurred. They were summoned at four in the morning, as the watcher had become uneasy from her continued stillness; and her unchanged attitude and calm, painless features showed that her desire had been granted. She had passed away in her sleep, and was already numbered with those who through great tribulation had washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb.

Selected.

"Grievous is it when we reflect how insensible we are to our smallest mercies, and how ungrateful for our highest blessings. A visitor to an Asylum, was solemnly and suddenly reminded of his great sin in the latter respect. As he passed among the lunatics, one of them walked directly toward him and abruptly said, 'Have you ever thanked God for your reason?' He uttered not another word, but darted off without waiting for a reply, leaving his question to sink deep, as well it might, into the mind of the visitor."

I leave it as an observation, that I have seldom, if ever, seen any stand, and arrive to any considerable degree of usefulness in the Church, whose foundation has not been deeply laid in afflictions and exercises; whereby they are crucified with Christ, and shall therefore rise with him to glory and honor, in the present as well as in the future state.—Catharine Phillips.

Selected.

A SONG OF A NEST.

There was once a nest in a hollow—
Down in the mosses and knot-grass pressed—
Soft and warm, and full to the brim;
Vetches leaned over it, purple and dim,
With butter-cup buds to follow.

I pray you, hear my song of a nest,
For it is not long;
You shall never light in a sunnier quest
The bushes among—
Shall never light on a prouder sitter—
A fairer nestful—nor ever know
A softer sound than their tender twitter,
That, wind-like, did come and go.

I had a nestful, once, of my own—
Ah, happy, happy I!
Right dearly I loved them; but when they were grown,
They spread out their wings to fly.
Oh! one after one they flew away,
Far up in the heavenly blue—
To the better country, the upper day,
And—I wish I was going, too!

I pray you, what is the nest to me—
My empty nest?
And what is the shore where I stood to see
My boat sail down to the West?
Can I call that home where I anchor yet,
Though my good man has sailed?
Can I call that home where my nest was set,
Now all its hopes have failed?

Nay, but the port where my sailor went,
And the land where my nestlings be—
There is the home where my thoughts are sent—
The only home for me.

Birds in the Woods.—One cannot go far into the woods in any direction without observing what a protest all the birds utter at first. There are harsh screams, sharp notes of warning, and general scolding. Every bird has a great deal of curiosity to take a look at strangers. For a time they flit about in the tall tree-tops, and afterwards begin to hop down to lower limbs, and, gradually deseending, come to the ground, or to low bushes. By remaining quiet an hour or two, a dozen or more will circle around within a few feet, turning their heads on one side occasionally, and quizzing in a saucy, merry way. In a little while one may be on intimate terms with the very birds which protested so loudly at his coming. They will tell him a great many secrets. The leaves of his book on ornithology may be a quarter of a mile square, but what cannot be read on one day may be read on some other. Even an owl burrowing with a ground-squirrel, and both agreeing very well as tenants, in common with a rattlesnake, may suggest questions of affinity and community which it might be inconvenient to answer at once. If you prefer to have some readings in the book of nature, you can turn down a leaf and go back the next day with the certainty that no one has lugged off the volume. And if your finger-mark is a tree 250 feet high, there will be no great difficulty in finding the place.—W. C. Bartlett, in Overland Monthly.

Be on Time.—"I just stopped to finish what I was doing," is the perpetually recurring excuse for lateness at fixed appointments. It is no excuse at all. If we know that at certain hours we should meet certain duties or engagements, other things should be brought to a close in good season, or they should be broken off. Punctuality is a form of honesty—tardiness, of dishonesty. "Just stopping to finish" your work is an injustice to others whom you are to meet.—Presbyterian at Work.

Selected.

The Power of Meekness.

One of the largest Hospitals in a city in he south of France was blessed with a directress or matron who was a faithful follower of the Lord. Her service was not a thing apart from her spiritual life, but a field in which she sought to glorify Him whose disciple she was.

She was often subjected to misapprehension by, and even insult from the patients; but she had learnt by grace, that a meek and quiet spirit was of great price in the sight of Him who was meek and lowly of heart.

On one occasion a patient, angry at a rule of the Hospital being enforced, spat in the matron's face in the presence of the assembled ward; she quietly wiped her face, saying, "I have been greatly honoured to share the indignity offered to my blessed Saviour." The outrage was never repeated. But afterwards a new patient was admitted, and when placed in bed, the matron sent her daughter to remove the apparel from the room to another apartment, as no clothing was allowed to be retained in the sleeping-room. As the young girl stooped to gather the clothing together, the woman, enraged that it should be removed, bent over her, and raising one of her heavy sabôts (clogs) struck her violently and repeatedly on the back.

All looked on in wonder and dismay at this undeserved cruelty to one who had never offended, feeling that this must touch the mother's heart far more severely than any indignity offered to herself.

The matron calmly continued her duties. In the evening the culprit beheld her approach her bed. She waited for some word of reproach,—none came; for some expression of displeasure in her face,—none was seen. Christ was in His Holy Temple, and all the earth kept silence before him.

Carefully she arranged the pillows, tenderly she spoke to the woman while performing the offices of kindness which she might well have deputed to another. The culprit shrank before her; there was no sign of the remembrance of this most unlovely deed. The heart of the harsh and violent woman melted beneath the power of the Holy Spirit. She watched and listened to the directress, as from day to day she ministered of the "good things" promised by her Heavenly Father; and in a little time the truly newborn child of God confessed Christ. Before leaving the Hospital she declared that the meek forgiveness of injury thus manifested, by one who walked with God, had broken her heart and prepared it for the blessings awaiting her.—A. Shipton.

It is stated that by a careful analysis it has been found that apples contain a larger amount of phosphorus, or brain food, than any other fruit or vegetable, and on this account they are very important to sedentary men who work their brain rather than their muscles. They also contain the acids which are needed every day, especially for sedentary men, the action of whose liver is sluggish, to eliminate effete matter, which is retained in the system, produces inaction of the brain, and, indeed, of the whole system, causing jaundice, sleepiness, scurvy and troublesome diseases of the skin.

A good name is rather to be chosen than great riches.

Birds and Insects.

The writer well remembers when in his quarter of the country, such a thing as the failure of a crop from insects or worms was unknown. We had plenty of apples, pears, peaches, cherries, and the smaller fruits. Now what is the fact? The tent caterpillar, the canker-worm, the army-worm, the curculio and the borers devour our fruit; while grubs and insects destroy our corn and grain crops, and the grass even may in the future fail from the same cause. We ourselves have seen within the past few years patches a quarter of an acre in extent as bare of vegetation as if just ploughed, every root eaten off by a species of grub. This was an interesting case, for as soon as the grass began to show its condition by withering, our friends, the crows and black birds (grakles), came in flocks, and in the course of two or three days not a grub could be found. Our strawberries were eaten off to a considerable extent by the same grub, and we are told by others, that they have had theirs ruined by this grub. Who shall say how long before this important crop will share the fate of the plum? Could we have called into our aid the crows, how quick and effectual would have been their service! And why could this not be done? Is there anything preposterous in the idea? We think not. Birds have been taught to hunt and fish, and even bring home their game at the command of their masters; and who has not seen also trained birds perform feats entirely out of the way of their usual habits? And could not the crow, the most sagacious of birds, be taught to perform an office which is in strict accordance with his instincts? The crow is readily tamed, and there has been one in this neighborhood for the past year that is so intelligent, and has taught himself to be so useful that his case goes far to prove that these birds may easily be trained so as to be of much value. This bird belonged to a gentleman whose farm is mostly cultivated as a fruit and garden farm, and the first idea he had of his usefulness, was one day when the crow followed him to the squash field where he was engaged in fighting his annual battle with the black and striped bugs, which render it some years almost impossible to raise a single squash. The crow watched his master's proceedings with great apparent interest, first looking out of one eye and then turning the other, as if to study both sides of the question—as is the habit of the crow-people—when with a single jump he pounced upon the bugs, and from that time took the whole business upon himself, turning up the leaves and peering under them in the most comical manner, devouring all the bugs, and in a very short time clearing the entire piece, and what was more, he performed the same office for the neighbors for some miles around, watching the plants for the whole season. What was curious in regard to this crow, he confined his travels to his own side of the street; he could not be enticed to cross on any account. He also appointed himself "perpetual sentinel" over the place, giving a caw of alarm when any one, man or animal, came near. He ruled over all the other birds with the exception of the king-birds, and these he seemed to regard with a sort of ludicrous fear, diving into the grass whenever attacked by them, which was by no means an unfrequent occurrence, and cawing loudly to his master for protection. Within sight of my window, where I am now writing, a tame crow was reared this last season, who took upon himself, in a similar manner, the guardianship of his master's garden, keeping it entirely clear of worms and insects. The bird, however, has never seemed to think himself competent to undertake any more extensive office, but has confined himself strictly to his own home. All the family of the Corvidæ (crows) are remarkably intelligent, and can be easily tamed. Some members of the family are diffused over all parts of the globe capable of producing food for man. "In some respects," says Carpenter, "these birds are the most highly organized of the whole class." They can digest almost any kind of food. The bill, which is of itself a wonderful display of mechanical skill in its construction, and is worthy of the most careful study, is capable of seizing and tearing the flesh of animals, and also of picking up the smallest grain. The anatomical structure of the stomach is equally curious, and in its adaptation to its uses, presents to the mind of the most careless observer as strong evidence of the agency of an intelligent First Cause, as does the type-setting machine, or any other wonderful piece of human mechanism of that of a human mechanic. The stomach of this family is intermediate between the membranous kind peculiar to the pure flesh-eaters, and the gizzards or strongly muscular organs of those which feed upon hard vegetable substances. Their feet are formed for rapid walking and running, their wings for powerful flight. They can see from long or short distances. Their hearing is very acute, and some appear to have a strong sense of smell. And as we have shown above, they are remarkably sagacious, and, as Carpenter says, "they possess an unusual degree of docility, are courageous and active, and at the same time extremely vigilant and cautious. We have only space to touch upon this most interesting subject; it will well repay a careful and extended study. To the crows properly so called belong the raven, the carrion and hooded crows, the rook, the jackdaw and the magpie. As will be seen, some of these are foreign varieties. They could, no doubt, be domesticated here. We have also several varieties of the family in this country. They live chiefly," says our authority, "upon the ground, and do great service in devouring carrion, worms, slugs and the larvæ of insects, &c., but when this fails they resort to the grain fields."—Evening Post.

There were many Friends who had gone out into extravagant furniture and apparel, to please and gratify a fine, nice mind, which, as the Lord's Spirit led us to put away in the beginning, so it will never lead us to take them up again; and whoever goes into them, does so far go from the leading of Truth; and wherever I see it, the testimony of Truth arises in my heart against it. Truth allows liberty enough for all the conveniences of life, in moderation, according to our circumstances in this world, without unnecessary and superfluous adornings, according to the customs and fashions of this world to please a vain mind.—Life of Joseph Pike.

War is an instrument entirely inefficient towards redressing wrong and multiplies instead of indemnifying losses.—Jefferson.

"If it should please the Lord to draw my soul after Him, to the uttermost parts of the earth, and place my peace with Him in my obedience there, I might not expect it otherwise. And who can live without the comfort of His presence, that has been favored with it? For his presence is life to all the faithful and obedient, but death and condemnation to such as reject His counsel."—T. Story.

THE FRIEND.

NINTH MONTH 26, 1874.

Some excitement has recently been created in England and this country, in scientific circles, and among those who believe that the love and fear of God are the foundation of national and individual happiness, by a recent address delivered before the British Association for the advancement of science. Its author, Professor Tyndall, advances fully-developed materialistic sentiments, professing to discern in mere matter, "the promise and potency of every form and quality of life;" and thus ignores the existence or need of any controlling ruler of the universe, so far as in his view merely scientific researches can demonstrate.

Such doctrines are by no means new, having been held by some of the ancient philosophers, and of modern times by many European men of science; and it has long been known that Professor Tyndall's own opinions were of a sceptical character. The stir that has been made by their announcement in this instance is due therefore, not so much to the sentiments, as to the circumstances under which they were advanced—by the President of one of the most distinguished scientific associations of the world, and to a body, where heretofore a decent respect has been shown to the prevalent religious belief of the country.

We have no fears of any permanent or extensive injury to the cause of religion by this republication of the old atheistic doctrine. However subtle and ingenious the arguments of such men may be, the innate conviction is unshaken, that we are not ourselves mere collections of material atoms, acting on each other under the influence of certain general laws, such as gravitation, &c. We feel that we have an existence, and that our physical frames do not constitute the whole of our being. This conviction is not only a sufficient, but a logical reply to all the arguments that can be drawn from mere physical research. We are only, in this age, repeating the experience of olden time, when, it is said, "The world by wisdom knew not God." For though, as the Apostle Paul asserts, "The invisible things of Him, from the creation of the world are clearly seen, being understood by the things that are made, even His eternal power and Godhead;" yet even in his days there were those who "became vain in their imaginations, and their foolish heart was darkened."

It is no new conviction on our part, that obedience to Christ, as he is revealed in our hearts as the Light of life, is the one safe abiding place of the Christian. If we are founded on that Rock, all the floods of infidelity, and the storms of temptation of whatever kind, will beat upon us in vain. The Spirit of the Lord will lift up a standard against them. On the other hand, if we depart from that sure foundation, we know not how far and how fatally we may fall. "This is the condemnation that light is come into the world, and men loved darkness rather than light, because their deeds were evil." If we indulge in anything which we feel to be at variance with the pure leadings of the Holy Spirit in our hearts, we so far turn our backs to the Light, and open the way for further degrees of darkness and death to come over us. Thousands, who once knew better, have in this way become blinded, so as even to deny the Lord that bought them.

One case comes to remembrance of a young man, who had been blessed with pious parents, who had endeavored to train him up as a consistent member of our religious Society, both by precept and example. Becoming actively engaged in business, and much interested therein, he too much neglected that inwardness of mind and habitual sense of the Divine presence which would have preserved him from the snares of the evil one; and gradually laid aside some of that simplicity in language, dress and manners, in which he had been educated. As he advanced in this downward course, he felt darkness and doubt increasing in his mind. He no longer experienced those seasons of heavenly tenderness and sweet consolation, with which he had been favored in his more innocent days; and was tempted to doubt the genuineness of those impressions made directly on the heart of man by the agency of the Holy Spirit, and the kind care of a superintending Providence, in the affairs of life. In this blinded and dangerous state, a renewed visitation of Heavenly Love was remarkably extended to him, in the silent part of a religious meeting; and a convincing evidence was thus afforded that a compassionate Redeemer was operating in his soul, in love and pity for his benighted condition; his eyes were opened to see his dark state, and he was enabled to say with the patriarch of old, "Now mine eye seeth thee, wherefore I abhor myself, and repent in dust and ashes." Living faith was again raised in his heart, and gratitude for his escape from that evil spirit, which ever seeketh to blind the minds of them which believe not.

We sincerely desire that none of our members, especially our younger friends, may be caught with the snares of a false philosophy. There is often a tendency, especially in immature minds, to seize hold of any thing new or startling, and profess or advocate it, from a desire (of which the individual himself may be scarcely conscious) to attract the notice of others, and obtain their admiration, as if they possessed unusual intellectual boldness, or were wiser than their fellows. They do not know or appreciate that the real feeling towards such is one of mingled pity and contempt.

He who has submitted his heart to the gracious visitations of his Saviour, and has known the feeling of condemnation for sin; the godly sorrow and repentance which follow; the sweet, tendering influence which often, at an unexpected moment, is spread over the heart, causing it to rejoice in the feeling of Divine love; the solemn quiet which settles over the mind, hushing everything into stillness as in the presence of the Holy One; and the whole train of blessed experiences, which attend the sincere follower of Christ,—he has within him, in these things, an answer to every infidel suggestion. He knows that these feelings are not at his own control, that they come and go at the bidding of a higher power than his own; and he regards as simply absurd the doctrine that they have no other force or meaning than the mutual action of particles of matter among themselves.

SUMMARY OF EVENTS.

FOREIGN.—Nothing has been heard from the steamship Faraday, laying the direct cable from Ireland to the United States, since the 9th instant, when she had paid out 574 miles, and was in water over two miles deep.

The differences which caused the great strike of mill operators at Bolton, have been referred to arbitration. On the 15th and 16th inst., eight hundred farm laborers sailed from Liverpool for Quebec. These people go to Canada to seek employment and homes. It is said the number of this class of workmen in England is needlessly large, since the introduction of agricultural machinery.

According to the New British Factory Act, which goes into effect on the first of the coming year, no child is to be employed under nine years, and after 1875 under ten, except where he was lawfully employed before that period. No employment is to be beyond four and a half hours continuously, without a meal, nor any work after 2 P. M., on Seventh days. After the 1st of 1st month, 1876, children must attend efficient schools.

The Scotch papers report a marked improvement in the ship building trade of the Clyde, resulting, in a great measure, from the fall in the iron and coal market. The tonnage of vessels launched during the last eight months has been larger than for that period in any one of the five preceding years.

Liverpool, 9th mo. 21.—Orleans cotton, 8¼*d*; Uplands, 8*d*. for middlings.

In Germany 8,515,041 persons are entitled to vote for members of the National Legislature. It appears that at the last election only 5,288,203 votes were cast, and of these 1,564,999 were Catholics. The Democrats and Social Democrats cast 374,000 votes. The National liberals and Progressists numbered 2,095,591.

The Pope peremptorily refuses to join the European Powers in the recognition of Spain.

Madrid despatches state that a feeling of confidence and security continues to strengthen in that city. The military operations in the North, have not recently been on a large scale. The Carlists have been defeated in several small engagements.

The Iberia says, that the Duke of Parma and Counts Caserti and Bari have had a conference with Don Carlos, at which it was agreed that Don Carlos should be the sole representative of the four Bourbon branches, with presumptive rights to the French throne.

The government of Denmark has directed its Envoy at Berlin, to ask explanations from the German government in regard to the expulsion of the Danish subjects from Schleswig.

At the beginning of the present year, the order of Jesuits numbered 9104 members. Of these 2303 live in France, 1527 in Italy, 1080 in England and English colonies, 1588 are on missions, and 2706 in the United States.

Advices from Rio Janeiro state that the Emperor, in his speech closing the Chambers, on the 12th inst., congratulated the country on its satisfactory relations with foreign Powers, and declared that his government would endeavor to promote agriculture by the extension of the railway system. Most important measures would be presented at the next session, looking to electoral and educational reform, and in aid of the agricultural interest.

The latest rumored phase of the Formosa dispute is that the Japanese are willing to vacate the part of the island occupied by them, on condition that the Chinese government will hold the people under subjection, and acknowledge that the Japanese were justified in taking possession.

Bergen, the Bonapartist candidate for the Assembly, in the department Maine-et-Loire, who stood lowest on the polls, has withdrawn from the contest.

President MacMahon, has been well received by the French, in his last tour through some of the Departments.

At a late meeting of the Permanent Committee, it was stated by the Duke Decazes, Minister of Foreign Affairs, in answer to a question, that nothing had been done in regard to the withdrawal of the French man-of-war Orenoque, from Civita Vecchia.

The trial of persons charged with aiding Bazaine in his escape, ended on the 17th inst. The Judge delivered a lengthy and explanatory judgment. He considered that the escape by a rope was proved, but declared that Col. Villette assisted in the preparations. The wardens were adjudged guilty of negligence. Colonel Villette and Plantin, were sentenced to six months, Doinau to two, and Gigoup to one month's imprisonment. The remainder of the alleged accomplices in the escape were acquitted.

In France the tobacco monopoly is a source of large revenue to the government. The manufacture is conducted in sixteen large establishments. The returns from these factories show a yearly consumption of 17,000,000 pounds of snuff, 1,500,000 pounds of chewing tobacco, 8,000,000 of segars, and 43,000,000 pounds of smoking tobacco.

UNITED STATES.—When the state election occurred in Louisiana in 1872, the leaders of both the "Republican," and "Liberal or Conservative" parties resorted to fraudulent means of obtaining power, so that it is believed no fair election took place. Kellogg the Republican candidate for Governor, managed to get possession, and he and his associates have been in office for nearly two years. The opposing party have constantly insisted that the Kellogg government is only an usurpation, and this was especially the case in New Orleans, where the discontented form, it is said, the great bulk of the white inhabitants. On the 14th inst., a large meeting was held in that city, in order to demand a redress of grievances, but the government refused to listen to their complaints. On this the malcontents, with an armed force numbering thousands, defeated and dispersed the military police of a few hundred men, drove Gov. Kellogg from the Capital, and installed his rival McEnery in office. When information of these acts of violence reached Washington, President Grant, took prompt measures for restoring the government which had been so long in actual control, and the McEnery party, knowing the folly of a conflict with the Federal authority, promptly and quietly withdrew, and submitted to a power they were unable to resist. Gov. Kellogg resumed his official duties on the 19th inst.

According to the Commercial and Financial Chronicle, the total receipts of cotton, in the year ending 9th month 1st, at the shipping ports of the United States, were 3,819,436 bales; exports 2,840,891 bales. The domestic consumption is about 1,000,000 bales.

There were 546 interments in New York last week, and 321 in Philadelphia, including 131 children under two years.

A fire attended with serious loss of life, occurred at Fall River, Mass., the 19th inst. Soon after seven o'clock in the morning, when all the operators, about 700 in number, had gone to work in one of the mills, a fire was discovered in the factory, which spread so rapidly as to create a general consternation, and cause many persons to jump from the windows in order to escape the flames. It appears that 23 persons, mostly women, were killed, 5 others are missing, and 36 wounded, some of them fatally. The loss of property is estimated between $250,000 and $300,000.

The exhibit made by the money order division of the Post Office Department, for the year ending 6th mo. 30th, 1874, shows a large increase of business. The amount of orders issued was $74,424,854 against $51,516,216 the preceding year.

The Markets, &c.—The following were the quotations on the 21st inst. New York. — American gold 109¼. U. S. 6's 1881, registered, 116⅜; do. coupon, 117⅜; do. 1868, registered, 116; coupon, 116½; do 5 per cents. 111½. Superfine flour, $4.40 a $5; State extra, $5.10 a $5.40; finer brands, $5.50 a $10.50. No. 2 Chicago spring wheat, $1.14; No. 3 do., $1.10; red western, $1.22 a $1.24; amber $1.24 a $1.26; white Indiana, $1.35; Oats 65 a 67 cts. Rye, 91 cts. Western mixed corn, 97 a 98 cts. Yellow, 98½ cts. White $1.01 a $1.02. Philadelphia.—Cotton 16¾ a 17¼ cts. for middling uplands and New Orleans. Superfine flour, $3.50 a $4.00; extras, $4 a $4.50; finer brands, $5.00 a $8.75. Red wheat $1.22 a $1.25; amber $1.25 a $1.28; white $1.38 a $1.40. Rye 96 cts. Yellow and mixed corn, 98 a $1.00. Oats, 64 a 67 cts. Smoked hams, 15 a 16 cts. Lard 15 cts. Clover seed 10¼ a 11 cts. About 2000 beef cattle sold at 6 a 7¼ cts. per lb. gross, for fair to good, and common 3½ a 5½ cts. Sheep sold at 4½ a 5⅞ cts. per lb. gross, and hogs at $11.50 a $12.00 per 100 lb. net. for corn fed. Chicago.—No. 1 Spring wheat, $1.03; No. 2 do. 98 cts.; No. 3 do. 91 cts. No. 2 mixed corn, 82½ cts. No. 2 oats, 52½ cts. No. 2 rye, 91 cts. Spring barley $1.15. Lard $11.70 per 100 lb. net. Louisville.—White wheat, $1.05; red, 90 cts. Corn 83 a 85 cts. Oats, 55 a 56 cts. Lard 16½ cts. Cincinnati.—White wheat $1.15 a $1.20; red $1.05. Corn, 83 a 85 cts. Oats, $48 a 55 cts. Lard 13⅝.

RECEIPTS.

Received from James R. Kite, Agent, O., $2, vol. 48, and for Thomas Llewelyn, Ezra Llewelyn, Hannah M. Penrose, Patience Gifford, Robert Milhous, Richard Penrose, Joseph King, Joseph Masters, Jesse Dewees, Mary Wilson, David Ball, William Masters, Jason Penrose, and David Masters, $2 each, vol. 48; from James Lee, Pa., $2, vol. 48; from Deborah C. Hatton, Pa., $2, vol. 48; from Daniel Packer, N. J., $2, vol. 48; from Anna Pickering, City, $2, vol. 48; from Rebecca Askew, Io., per Benjamin Askew, $2, vol. 48; from Mary Ann Baldwin, and John E. Baldwin, Pa., $2 each, vol. 48; from Jacob Reeder, Io., $2, vol. 48; from Nicholas H. Guindon, Vt., $2, vol. 48; from David Roberts, N. J., $2, vol. 48; from Thomas M. Harvey, Pa., $2, vol. 48, and for Martha H. Linton and Sarah L. Passmore, $2 each, vol. 48; from Jno. M. Saunders, N. J., $2, vol. 48; from Thomas Smedley, Pa., $2, vol. 48; from Joel Harlan, Pa., $2, vol. 48; from Beulah Embree, Pa., per Richard B. Bailey, $2, vol. 48; from James R. Cooper, Pa., $2, vol. 48, and for Thomas B. Hoopes, $2, vol. 48; from Robert Thomas, N. J., $2, vol. 48, and for Howard A. Mickle, $2, vol. 48; from John B. Balderston, Pa., $2, vol. 48, and for Edward Balderston, Pa., and John Deacon, N. J., $2 each, vol. 48; from Louisa Warner, Pa., $2, vol. 48; from Margaret P. Warner, Pa., $2, vol. 48; from Joseph Rhoads, Pa., $2, vol. 48; from Asa Garretson, Agent, O., $2, vol. 48, and for Dempsey Bundy, Jehu Baily, John Bundy, Jesse Bailey, Sarah Bundy, Joel Bailey, Elizabeth Bailey, Asenath Crew, Joseph Doudna. Joseph W. Doudna, Francis Davis, Elisha Doudna, Chalkley Dawson, Joshua Dewees, John S. Davis, Aaron Frame, Rachel Green, Armelia Garretson, John G. Hoyle, John Hall, Eli Kennard, Isaac Lightfoot, Jesse K. Livezey, Robert Plummer, Matilda Parker, Asa Parry, William Stanton, Esther Sears, Jonathan T. Scofield, Barclay Smith, George Tatum, John Thomasson, Catharine Wilson, Dr. Ephraim Williams, and Samuel French, $2, each, vol. 48; from George W. Cooper, Jr., Pa. $2, vol. 48; from Job Young, Io., $2, vol. 48; from Samuel A. Willits, N. J., $2, vol. 48, and for Joseph G. Evans, $2, vol. 48; from Isabella P. Huston, Pa., $2, vol. 48; from Joseph Hall, Agent, Io., for Thomas Heald, Jonathan Bundy, John Thomas, Joseph Armstrong, Thomas Crozer, Isaac Walker, Richard H. Beeson, Nathan Satterthwaite, Abraham Cowgill, Israel Heald, Samuel S. Cowgill, William H. Walker, Lindley Holloway, Lindley Heald, Sarah Ann Atkinson, Samuel Fawcett, John Oliphant, and Aaron Roberts, $2 each, vol. 48; for Thomas Leech and Sarah Sharpless, $4.50, each, vols. 47 and 48, and for Joseph W. Satterthwaite, $2, to No. 27, vol. 48; from Daniel M. Mott, O., $2, vol. 48; from Burwell Peebles, Lewis W. Bye, and Ann Smith, O., per Dr. Isaac Hnestis, Agent, $2 each, vol. 48; from Lewis Forsythe, Pa., $2, vol. 48; from Benjamin D. Stratton, Agent, O., for Sarah S. Lupton, Christopher Allen, Benjamin H. Coppock, and Alfred Brantingham, $2 each, vol. 48, and for Jesse Edgerton, $2, to No. 52, vol. 47; from Tacy Satterthwaite, Pa., per G. R. Chambers, $2, vol. 48; from Larkin Pennell, City, $2, vol. 48; from Sarah G. McCollin, City, and Margaretta E. Reed, Pa., $2, each vol. 48; from Ezra Wilkins, N. J., $2, vol. 48; from Owen Evans, Pa., $2, vol.; 48; from Rebecca Hibberd, Pa., $2, vol. 48; from Jonathan Fawcett and Asenath Raley O., per Rachel Raley, $2, each, vol. 48; from Henry Wood, N. J., $2, vol. 48; from Abner Eldridge, Io., $2, vol. 48; and for M. A. Fritchman, $2, to No. 19, vol. 49; from John Boadle, N. J., $2 vol. 48; from Edward Michener, Pa., $2, vol. 48; from James W. Haines, N. J., $2, vol. 48, and for George Haines, Jr., $2, vol. 48; from David Heston, Fkfd., City, $2, vol. 48; from William Pickett, O., $2, vol. 48; from Thomas Y. Hutton, Pa., $2, vol. 48; from Benjamin Hoyle, O., $2, vol. 48; from George D. Smith, O., $2, vol. 48; for Mary Maris, Pa., $2, vol. 48; from Samuel Morris, Pa., $2, to No. 27, vol. 49; from Ann Burgess, Pa., $2, vol. 48.

Remittances received after Fourth-day morning will not appear in the Receipts until the following week.

WESTTOWN BOARDING SCHOOL.

The Winter Session commences on Second day, the 2nd of Eleventh month. Parents and others intending to send pupils will please make early application to BENJAMIN W. PASSMORE, Sup't, (Address Street Road P. O., Chester Co., Pa.,) or to

CHARLES J. ALLEN, Treasurer,
No. 304 Arch Street, Philada.

SHELTER FOR COLORED ORPHANS.

Wanted, a Teacher for this Institution, to enter upon her duties 1st of 10th mo. Apply to

Hannah R. Newbold, 643 Franklin St.
Mary Wood, 524 South Second St.
Mary Randolph, 247 North Twelfth St.
Sarah Richie, 444 North Fifth St.

WANTED.

A suitable Friend to take the position of Writing Teacher and Assistant Governor at Westtown Boarding School—for next Session. Apply to

Charles Evans, 702 Race street, Philadelphia,
Clarkson Sheppard, Greenwich, New Jersey,
Joseph Walton, Moorestown, New Jersey.

The Stated Annual Meeting of Haverford School Association, will be held on 2nd day, 10th month 12th, 1874, at 3 o'clock, P. M., in the Committee room of Arch Street Meeting-house, Philadelphia.

PHILIP C. GARRETT, Secretary.

WESTTOWN BOARDING SCHOOL.

A Stated Meeting of the Committee having charge of the Boarding School at Westtown, will be held in Philadelphia, on Sixth-day, Tenth month 2nd, at 1, P. M.

The Committees on Instruction and Admission will meet at 10 A. M., of the same day.

The Visiting Committee, appointed to attend the Examination at the School, meet there on Second-day evening, 9th mo. 28th.

For the accommodation of this Committee, conveyances will be at the Street Road Station on the 28th inst., to meet the trains that leave Philadelphia at 2.30 and 4.45 P. M.

SAMUEL MORRIS,
Philada. 9th mo. 18th, 1874. Clerk.

FRIENDS' FREEDMEN'S RELIEF ASSOCIATION.

The Executive Board are about to re-open the Schools in North Carolina and Virginia, and have immediate need for funds. We have strictly limited the number of Teachers to that of last year, but will need contributions fully equal to those of 1873. The cost of transporting teachers, and of needful supplies for opening schools, is large, and must be met at the outset. Our Treasury is exhausted. We have no new source of interest upon which to base an appeal for the liberal aid of Friends. These people still need uplifting, and past efforts have been much blessed. "Freely ye have received, freely give." On behalf of the Board.

James E. Rhoads, President.
Thos. K. Brown, Secretary.

Contributions may be sent to Richard Cadbury, Treasurer, No. 108 S. Fourth Street, Philada.

Philadelphia, Ninth mo., 1874.

MARRIED, at Friends' Meeting House, in Smyrna, N. Y., on the 9th of Ninth month, 1874, CURTIS L ROCKWELL, of Westmoreland, Oneida county, N. Y., to CAROLINE S. KNOWLES, daughter of Benjamin Knowles, of the former place.

DIED, on the 19th ult., at the residence of David Roberts, near Moorestown, N. J., LAURA H. PAGE, in the 20th year of her age, a member of Chester Monthly Meeting, N. J. With thankfulness we acknowledge, that through redeeming love and mercy, she was favored with an assurance that her sins were forgiven, and could rejoice in the prospect of a happy immortality.

——, on the 17th of Seventh month, 1874, ELIZABETH LEE, widow of the late Samuel Lee, in the 86th year of her age, a member of Exeter Monthly Meeting, Pa.

——, on the morning of the 19th of 8th month, 1874, at her residence near Tuckerton, N. J., PHEBE W., widow of the late Willits Parker, an esteemed member of Little Egg Harbor Monthly Meeting, in the 81st year of her age. Her friends have the consoling belief that through the mercy of her Saviour, she has entered her heavenly rest.

——, on the 9th of 8th month, 1874, THOMAS H. TROTTER, in the 59th year of his age, a member of the Western District Monthly Meeting.

WILLIAM H. PILE, PRINTER,
No. 422 Walnut Street.

THE FRIEND.

A RELIGIOUS AND LITERARY JOURNAL.

VOL. XLVIII. SEVENTH-DAY, TENTH MONTH 3, 1874. NO. 7.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY.

Price Two Dollars per annum, if paid in advance. Two dollars and fifty cents, if not paid in advance.

Subscriptions and Payments received by

JOHN S. STOKES,

AT NO. 116 NORTH FOURTH STREET, UP STAIRS.

PHILADELPHIA.

Postage, when paid quarterly in advance, five cents.

For "The Friend."

Wayside Notes.

Among the interested members of our religious Society, there are few perhaps who have not read the sad but thrilling memorial of the sufferings, tortures, and cruel death, (in several instances) inflicted upon the persons of unresisting, unoffending men and women, who were among those faithful disciples of gospel truth, and co-laborers of George Fox, who first found their way into New England. There quite a number of the early Friends went, from the bigotry and oppressive power of a church hierarchy, from which they had endured much, to plant in the openings of Divine wisdom, our distinguishing, primitive, christian doctrines, among a people where, as they had hoped, their cause would find larger acceptance. The ruling classes in those colonies were themselves dissenters, and to secure wider church privileges, and greater scope for the spread of their doctrines, which were especially directed against the formality and arbitrary rule exercised by the established Church of England, had taken early steps to obtain for themselves greater liberty, and freedom to worship God, as their consciences might lead them. And now, having become the pioneers in founding new States, they had but to assure the crown of their loyalty to the parent government, and they were secured (in their isolation and voluntary banishment) in the privileges and toleration they sought.

It is hard to understand how a people who had been battling for what they conceived to be a Divine right, and who had for the purpose of enjoying it, made large sacrifices, having withdrawn their persons, and parted with their estates often under painful circumstances, that henceforth they might not be overshadowed and overborne by an aggressive, hostile clergy, whose influence was the very life of the civil power, could do otherwise than open wide their hearts, and their homes, to receive all who might follow them in the same spirit of religious emancipation.

The result is familiar to many who may read these lines. How truly the unsubdued, unregenerate nature is described by Jeremiah: "The heart is deceitful above all things and desperately wicked; who can know it?" and to such as have carefully followed in history the successive struggles in the souls of the Lord's children, after a larger participation of the Divine nature, in the outpouring of His gracious gifts upon them; these having been clothed, from one period to another, with the armor appropriate to their day, to fight the good fight of faith, and to make as they were called to it, an aggressive, though righteous warfare, that the spirit of anti-christ might be done away, and His government in the world, through the power of the Holy Spirit, fully acknowledged; have been doubtless most solemnly impressed with the blindness and sectarian bias of many of the Puritan fathers, and with the force and application of this language of the Prophet.

Not being grounded in that practical faith which works by love to the purifying of the heart, as taught by the apostle: "Show me thy faith without thy works, and I will show thee my faith by my works;" many of these primitive people, exemplary for their simplicity and moderation in many things, had lost sight of Him who had mercifully supported them in their former trials and spiritual conflicts, but whom, in their promotion to influence in the church, and in the government of the colonies, they had forgotten, and were now in the outer court, doing the works of Paul when a persecutor. Their example is among the most striking instances upon record, of the instability of the human understanding, when unenlightened by Divine Grace; but here are many evidences presented that they had, as a people, known something of the Lord's dealings, love and mercy, and protecting power; and in that they had suffered much for what they conceived to be their duty to God, and their own souls, it is but just to infer they were, while in a lowly condition, measurably obedient to His will, as manifested to them. And herein is another proof, if any were needed, of the value of this injunction: "In your patience possess ye your souls."

Christ being the head of the visible church, there is no safety short of looking steadily to Him with an eye of faith, and enduring as good soldiers whatever we may be called upon to do or suffer. His loving kindness in every age has been especially toward all who have felt the sharp arrows of persecution for His name's sake; such as have endured hardship from the hands of evil men; the spirit of this world; the evil seed in men's hearts, striving against the spirit which is of God; and had these plain people unpretending in many of their habits, and with an honest purpose in the beginning to do their Master's will, been as faithful to the Lord, as He had been to them, their subsequent history would not have been written in the blood of those christian martyrs, who surrounded by a Boston mob, and for no other crime than being a Quaker, triumphantly ended their lives upon the gallows. And these people were acknowledged evangelical christians; reputed believers in our Lord and Saviour; and among His professed followers. What a solemn lesson it furnishes to all who name the name of Christ, to see to it, in the words of the apostle, that they "depart from iniquity." And the same apostle, in the same verse, uses this impressive language: "Nevertheless the foundation of God standeth sure, having this seal, "The Lord knoweth them that are his." And he further makes this remarkable acknowledgment and testimony in support of his faith: "I can do all things through Christ which strengtheneth me."

What a blessed consolation it is to know, that those who suffer with Him, will be permitted to reign with Him also, if they continue steadfast. Such as have felt through their own deep humiliation, a measure of His outward sufferings for them, will be enabled to look to Christ as their Redeemer; and His abounding love will be theirs in good degree, toward the whole human household. As these go forward in the path of obedience, His face will shine with increasing brightness; bread by the wayside shall be given them,—their waters shall be sure. And these will truly welcome to their hearts the Lord's people, under whatever name; for His spirit and power being in dominion, such will not look to outward means for direction, but when these meet, they will meet as brethren; Christ dwelling in them, they shall abide as under the shadow of the Almighty: encouraging the good; restraining the evil; and helping one another forward in the work of the Lord. And all the true workers in His harvest field, the builders in Zion, will join in the acknowledgment, they are but stewards—servants at will, if faithful—that the cause and the work is not theirs, but His, and the workmen also, by virtue of the one great offering for us all.

I would not misrepresent the class of persons who were the prominent actors in the New England persecutions. Some of them were not members of any church organization; and others, who were among the most cruel and wanton in their conduct toward Friends, often filled the menial offices in the administrative branch of the government, and were ignorant, debased men—scarcely above the lowest orders of society. To this class the execution of court sentences was generally assigned. But it will not be denied that these barbarities were instituted under at least the appearance of law; that a dominant religious organization was the power at work to produce these sad results; controlling the State, overruling courts and juries, and holding public opinion at its disposal, by the terrors pronounced upon all who would contravene its authority.

While these things were transpiring, Friends were gathering strength in England, not only by the immediate preaching of the Word, to the hearts of many, but by the instrumental labor, and godly zeal, of such able advocates for the Truth as Richard Farnsworth, Wm. Dewsbury, Francis Howgill, John Audland, and Edward Burrough, who, with their elder brother and father in the church, Geo. Fox, as well as many others, suffering much abuse and obloquy themselves, were often engaged, sometimes in loathsome prisons, pleading the cause of their brethren, not only at home, but of their even more helpless, suffering fellow believers in America. And the cause went bravely on. As persecution increased in severity, so did their zeal for the Truth, and the Lord of the harvest did work abundantly for their help and deliverance. Emigration continued to flow westward; meetings were settled in various places, and our numbers rapidly increased. At last under a more liberal administration of the government in England, and the persistant courage and godly labor of Friends, the hand of persecution was checked and finally stayed.

Edward Burrough was especially active and effectual in his efforts to help his suffering New England brethren; and in the reign of Charles the Second, having gained an interview with the king, succeeded in obtaining a royal order staying further action against all Friends who were then in prison in the colonies, whether under condemnation or otherwise, and directing their removal to England, which proved equivalent to their discharge. A delegation of the prominent actors in these unlawful proceedings, was sent over to appease the displeasure of the king, but their mission was not fully successful, and they hastily returned. George Fox meeting with them, in the presence of a number of his friends, they were ensnared by their own words, and convicted by their own admissions. It was shown clearly their action was wholly arbitrary; there being no law in England to sanction such proceedings, and as they were her subjects, it was evident they had at least participated in the commission of the highest crime known to criminal law; and seeing the dilemma into which they had brought themselves, were only too willing to retrace their steps home. Some of the royalists were earnest with Friends that they should proceed to prosecute them, but George replied, "They left them to the Lord, to whom vengeance belonged, and he would repay it." P. B.

Philadelphia, 9th mo. 1874.

(To be continued.)

Size and Cost of European Armies.—The following extracts are taken from a series of tables published in Vienna.

The Russian army comprises 862,000 men, 181,000 horses, and 2,084 cannon.

Germany has 37 divisions of infantry, 10 divisions of cavalry, 337 batteries of artillery, comprising 835,000 men, 96,000 horses, and 2,022 cannon.

Austria has 45 divisions of infantry, 5 divisions of cavalry, 215 batteries of cannon, making a total of 740,210 men, 58,125 horses, and 1,600 cannon.

English armed forces comprise 471,000 men; France 300,000 men.

The remaining States in Europe make up with the above a total of about 5,000,000 of men. If each man could earn on an average one dollar daily, here would be a total loss to the world of five millions of dollars a day. And the cost of support and wages of the men alone, including officers, will make five millions more, or ten millions a day exclusive of the cost of arsenals, forts, ships, wagons, tents, hospitals, &c.

For "The Friend."

Indian Affairs.

(Continued from page 43.)

By John Sparnee, of the Absentee Shawnees.

"The Shawnees came upon their present reservation but a few years since, almost destitute of every thing. The war had swept from them all their stock and other property, and they had to commence life anew. We have made ourselves good farms and homes, and enlarge and improve them every year. We receive no annuities or aid from the government of the United States, but rely upon our own labor and own exertions for what we have. We have in cultivation about fifteen hundred acres of land; have eighteen hundred head of cattle, three hundred head of horses, and three thousand head of hogs. We have good farming implements, wagons, &c., and individual wealth and property to the value of about $45,000. We have one school under the control of the Society of Friends, with thirty-five scholars in attendance. We have no written laws, but are governed by former usages and customs of our people. Crimes and misdemeanors are punished under these, and tried by the chiefs and counsellors of the nation, a council of which can be called at any time. There are but few crimes committed among our people; we are upon good terms and are at peace with one another and with all other Indian tribes. We provide for our wives and little ones with our traps and guns, and our own labor and industry, and if protected in our rights to our lands, homes, and property, would soon be prosperous and happy. Our tribe number nearly seven hundred persons, and are on the increase. We are under the care of the Sac and Fox agent."

By Chestadessa, of the Wichitas.

"Last winter I came here but did not know what was doing, now I think I understand all.

In compliance with a resolution of the Grand Council, asking for information from the different tribes in regard to their present condition, and the advancement they have made in civilization, &c., on the part of the Wichitas I have the honor to make the following report:

The Wichitas with the affiliated bands are located on and near the Washita river, on the west of and adjoining the Chickasaw Nation. During the past year there has been a decided change for the better among our people. A great many of our children attend the boarding school at the agency, which at present has an attendance of eighty-five scholars. These are children from all of the affiliated bands. We have a fine boarding school capable of accommodating one hundred scholars; this was built and is sustained by the government, and is under the charge of the Society of Friends.

All of the Wichitas have small fields in which they raise large quantities of corn, pumpkins, beans, melons, &c. This spring we have opened a farm of sixty acres, which is being plowed and cultivated by our young men. This is the first time our young men ever did any plowing, but they take great interest in the work. We are assisted by our agent, who does all he can for us. We have a large number of horses, a number of mules, some wagons, harness, plows, &c. During the winter season we follow the buffalo, and secure a great many skins and a quantity of meat. These skins are sold to traders, or exchanged for goods of all kinds. But the buffalo are fast disappearing, and they will soon be gone from our part of the country. Our people wish to turn their attention to stock raising, and are promised the assistance of the government. We are at peace with all tribes, and wish to remain so."

By Toshoway, of the Comanches.

"Many years ago we lived in Texas, where the government opened farms, and supplied us with cattle and all other domestic animals, which prospered and made us happy for a while, but the citizens of that country soon said 'the Comanches are bad,' and arose and drove us from these homes, destroying all we had. Brothers, I'm very glad to see you doing so well, but my heart feels bad when I look back and think what I might have been, had not Texas treated me and my people so bad. There we had a school like you, at which twenty-five of our children attended; we have none of these now, and my heart is weak, but on the other hand I can say I am glad to see other Indians do well, even if I do not myself. When we left Texas, we stopped on the Washita river; here we tried again to live as we had in Texas, but the white man's war came up and compelled us again to leave our homes. Some of my brothers, the Comanches of the far-off plains, are acting badly; they are very foolish and make raids into Texas; I hope, however, for all that, you will remember that they are Indians like yourselves, and don't tire in doing everything in your power to extend over them your influences for good.

I tell you these things, brothers, so that you may know that although I am among you and my heart is with you, yet I am not doing so well as you are."

(This was spoken by an old Comanche chief, whose long locks are gray with the frosts of many winters.)

By Buffalo Good, of the Wacos.

"My Brothers: I am glad of the opportunity now afforded me of speaking to you. I've heard with a glad heart of the progress of the other tribes, and now it is my turn to tell of the Wacos. We are all brothers, and must work for the good of all. The Wacos understand this, and are willing to take your advice. It is many years ago since the Wacos commenced to live like the white man, in Texas, and I've often thought had they not been disturbed by the whites, they, at this time, would have been equal in civilization to any tribe, perhaps, in the Council. But we were driven away from our homes there, into Kansas; and when we had made another commencement we were again driven away. So that even now, though we are doing comparatively well, our hearts are not strong, for we are by no means certain that we will not again be driven to some other place. We have an agent who has taken pains to aid us in learning to work the ground, and this season many of our people have taken hold. The Wacos have always known one way of making corn, but now they are learning to raise it as does the white man. We have a large and comfortable school, at which we have many children; this fact encourages me, and makes me think there is a better day in the future for the Wacos. The Wacos' history shows that whenever the white man thinks the Indian is in his way he has but to arise in his might and drive him, for there is no law to which the Indian can appeal for protection."

By Waloopee, of the Caddos.

"My Brothers: We are all following your road. We are brothers. We have come to counsel with you. I have heard much good counsel. I am glad to hear it. I will now tell you about myself and my people. My own field is about three hundred acres, all planted in corn. We have peaches and apples planted. We have also planted sweet potatoes that we bought of our brothers, the Shawnees. All my people live in houses, and work. Some of them have twenty, some twenty-five, and others thirty acres in cultivation, planted in corn, pumpkins, &c. About one year ago we had not much to work with, and could not work good. Now we have wagons, plows, axes, and other things to work with. We cannot go back now, we have started to work like our brothers, and will not turn back. About a year ago we had no school, but now we have a good school—twenty-four of our children attending it. My heart is glad, and we will hold fast to the road of our brothers. I am glad to hear the good talk from our brothers.

The Caddos have horses, cattle, hogs, chickens and everything to live upon. Our hogs number twenty-five hundred; some own five, some ten, and some fifty head of cattle, bought about one year ago—all own some. We are getting plenty of cattle and hogs, and have quit hunting for a living. We have plenty of horses—some ten, some twenty, some one hundred, and some more than that. We have good work horses. We make our own houses, split our own rails, and fence our farms.

Our school house is two stories high: the school room below, and sleeping room up stairs. The house cost about six thousand dollars.

This year we are enlarging all our farms.

My brothers, Black Beaver and George Washington, and myself, encourage our young men to work all the time. I am glad to see my brother George Washington in this Council. I hope my brothers, the Cherokees and Creeks, and others, when they hear anything of interest, will tell it to us.

The Caddos, Ionies, Anodarkos and Delawares, all work every year. The Caddos, Anodarkos and Delawares send children to school; I hope the Ionies will, when we go back.

The Caddos have their own laws."

(To be continued.)

Selected.

To keep a watchful eye towards real objects of charity, to visit the poor in their lonesome dwelling places, to comfort them who, through the dispensation of Divine Providence are in strait and painful circumstances in this life, and steadily endeavor to honor God with our substance, from a real sense of the love of Christ influencing our minds thereto, is more likely to bring a blessing to our children, and will afford more satisfaction to a Christian favored with plenty, than an earnest desire to collect much wealth to leave behind us; for, "here we have no continuing city;" may we therefore, diligently "seek one that is to come, whose builder and maker is God."

A cheerful spirit is a great blessing; it makes the yoke of our employments easy, and the burthen of our afflictions light.

For "The Friend."

First Germantown Friends.

BY WILLIAM KITE.

Memorial of Thomas Potts, Jr., by Mrs. Thomas Potts James, Cambridge. Privately printed, 1874.

O. Seidensticker, in Penn Monthly for Seventh month, "The First Antislavery Protest."

That any one, professing to write on points of history, should be led by prejudice or other motives, to deny what is the accepted opinion of writers on a subject, without close investigation of the facts intended to be controverted, seems strange; yet Isabella James, in the book whose title is given above, attacks a well established point in the early history of our State, assigning her suppositions as reasons for denying their authenticity.

She asserts that those persons in Germantown who, in 1688, protested against slavery, were not members of the Society of Friends, and that the Protest was not issued by a meeting of that body. If she had read the document as published in "The Friend," for 1844, she could hardly have made either assertion.

Prof. Seidensticker, in the Penn Monthly, has so ably answered her that there seems but little left to be said, yet a few words as introductory to his article will be interesting to our readers.

Our late Friend, Nathan Kite, whose knowledge of the Family and Church antiquities of Pennsylvania has been rarely, if at all equalled, in the beginning of the year 1844, while examining some of the early papers of the Yearly Meeting contained in the fire proof of the Meeting house on Arch street, found the original paper issued by Germantown Friends, endorsed by Dublin Monthly Meeting and Philadelphia Quarterly Meeting, and published it in "The Friend," of First month 13th, 1844. A copy is given below accompanied by his remarks on the Protest.

Dublin Monthly Meeting was held above Frankford, and was composed of the Preparative Meetings of Oxford, Poetquising, (since Byberry,) Dublin and Germantown. Dublin was a branch of Philadelphia Quarterly Meeting.

William Ames, (as we learn from Sewel,) in his second visit to the Continent, in 1659, visited a Baptist community in Cresheim, and his ministry was followed by the conversion of a number of them to his views. Sewel says they removed to Pennsylvania on the founding of Penn's colony, after having suffered much persecution in defence of the views of Friends. Proud follows Sewel in regard to these facts.

That Pastorius was not only a member, but one in full unity with his Friends, is clearly evinced by Philadelphia Quarterly Meeting appointing him and two other of the original signers of the Protest, representatives to the Yearly Meeting to deliver it on their—the Quarterly Meeting's—behalf. We will note also that both Francis D. Pastorius and Derick up de Grave, in the year 1692, four years later, signed the protest against George Keith and his schism, in the Yearly Meeting, an act they would not, and could not have done, if they were not in membership with Friends, or if they had a "Church" in opposition to Friends, as Isabella James asserts. As George Keith joined the Episcopal church, if Pastorius had any doubts of the views of Friends on the "Doctrine of the Trinity," he would naturally have inclined to uphold Keith, which he did not. We find other of the first German Friends remaining in after years among the Society. Thus in 1695, we find Reiner Tyson serving Germantown Preparative Meeting as an overseer, and in 1705 subscribing to the New Meeting House. Tennis Kunders also helped to build that house. In 1716–17, F. D. Pastorius and Peter Shoemaker signed a release of claims on behalf of Germantown Preparative Meeting. In 1729 Thomas Chalkley records in his Journal being at Dennis Conrad's funeral, adding, the first meeting for worship was held at his house.

I do not care to go into a review of the mistakes in Isabella James' book, which despite some errors, evinces much patient research on the part of the author. Prof. Seidensticker has written all that need be said in the matter. My object is simply to show the honest claim of our early Germantown Friends to the noble distinction of being the first to lift up their voice against slavery, that great blot on our beloved country—since so fearfully eradicated.

The revival of the whole subject has much interested me, and induced a desire to know where these early German Friends held their meetings for worship. Proud says that as early as 1683 a meeting was established in the house of Tennis Kunders—afterward known as Dennis Conrad. The date seems an early one, but we find it followed by Watson in his Annals of Philadelphia, and Hazard also. Tradition designates two other places in the town where Friends' meetings were occasionally held. One, an old frame building, brick-paned, at the corner of School lane and the Main street, long since taken down. The house where Dr. Malin now lives occupies its site. And one in the Meadow, near Shoemaker's station on the Germantown railroad. It appears that Dennis Conrad gave his Friends the use of his house for this purpose, but that meetings were occasionally held in other Friends' houses also.

I have taken some pains to learn the location of Dennis Conrad's house. I find it was taken down and a building known as Lesher's tavern erected on its site; Watson says a portion of the wall was left standing and utilized in the rebuilding. The inn, as an inn, has long since disappeared, but the old tavern, much altered, still stands on the Main street nearly opposite Manheim street. It is the house No. 4537, occupied by Christopher Kinzel as a dwelling and barber shop. In the northwest wall of that house is to be seen a portion, one story high and very old looking, which appears to be the remains of Dennis Conrad's house. On this property then Friends first held their meetings for worship.

In a deed dated 1st mo. 4, 1690, Abraham Isaac op den Græf conveyed two lots to Jacob Shoemaker—and in 1693 he conveyed them to Friends. In the deed of conveyance, which is still extant, I find these words: "Being 50 acres or a whole lot (three perches square, next to Jacob Isaacs Van Bebber only excepted, which the said Jacob Shoemaker herebefore hath granted and conveyed unto the Quakers, so called, for their meeting place, and are always to be fenced by the owners thereof.)"

This larger lot is still—a portion of it—held by the Germantown Preparative Meeting, and is the ground on which their present meeting house and school houses stand. The wording of the exception would show that the small lot was then in the occupation of the Society, and if there was, as the deed evidently implies, a building on the lot, the wording of the subscription paper in 1703, "To build a new meeting house," will be readily explained. Most of the first houses were humble ones of logs, and a few years would bring the necessity for a more substantial structure. The size of the meeting house yard, where the building erected in 1705 stood, corresponds quite nearly with the lot mentioned by Jacob Shoemaker in the deed quoted above.

The house erected in 1705 was of stone, and if I am right in supposing it occupied the site of an older and more primitive structure, we have the twelve years preceding its building readily accounted for, and the supposition that Friends, for the first seven worshipped in private dwellings will cover the whole time. The house erected in 1705 stood on the Main street in what is now the old grave yard. Three sides of the wall enclosing the meeting house yard still stand, but the rear wall, which separated it from the old grave yard has been taken down. Within a few weeks, in digging a grave, part of the foundation of this wall was found.

In 1812 a new and larger house was erected near where the school house now is. This was taken down in 1871, and an old tablet which had been built in the wall has been preserved and placed in the front of the present committee room. It is here given.

PENN. ANNO	GER
OLD 1705	MAN
NEW 1812	TOW.

Germantown, 9th mo. 1874.

(To be continued.)

Owls of the Northern Roost.—Dr. Wood, of East Windsor Hill, known as one of the most enthusiastic and successful ornithologists in Connecticut, has in his collection more than 1,000 stuffed birds, another 1,000 not yet "put up," and about 6,000 eggs. It is believed that he has a specimen of nearly every kind of bird that breeds in Connecticut, or even visits the State. Some interesting results of his observation are given in a late number of the Hartford Times, from which we quote:

In a recent conversation with the doctor, we asked how many distinct kinds of birds nest in Connecticut, and how many kinds of owls, all told, have ever been seen in this State? He replied that the number of distinct kinds or species of birds that nest in Connecticut is upwards of 200. Of the owls he enumerated 11 distinct species. In the order of size they are rated thus: 1, the cinerous, a great grey owl from the Arctic regions, and rare in this State; 2, great horned owl, brown and mottled, four feet six inches from tip to tip—breeds in Connecticut; 3, snowy owl, a splendid bird from the far north; 4, barred owl; 5, long-eared owl; 6, short eared owl; 7, barn owl; 8, hawk owl—rare; 9, screech owl; 10, Richardsonian; 11, Acadian. The last is a visitor from Labrador and lower Greenland, and the region in Nova Scotia which Longfellow has rendered classic by his epic of "Evangeline." It must be a very funny little owl, for it is not so large as a robin, even with all its mass of feathers; and its body is not much bigger than that of an English sparrow. Of these eleven varieties of owls, Dr. Wood has specimens of all but the first-named—the enormous grey fellow from the north. He related some curious facts touching the habits of some kinds of owls. For a long time the period of nesting of some kinds has been a mystery. One of these is the great horned owl—a large bird, which breeds in this State, as well as New York and Massachusetts. He has arrangements for securing specimens of various birds, and one day—it was the 25th of February—a man in a neighboring town brought him a great horned owl, which he had shot in the woods. On looking at it Dr. Wood saw it was a female, and that it was "setting," as was evident from the loss of feathers on its lower breast and body. He sent a letter to the man, telling him that that owl must have been shot either while on her nest or very near it, as the weather was too cold to leave the eggs uncovered, and that if he would find the nest and send him the eggs he (Dr. Wood) would stuff and make him a present of the owl. The result proved as he had expected. The owl had been shot on her nest; and, after a great deal of trouble, the nest was finally reached and its two eggs brought down in safety. The hunter had never imagined that the owl was hatching her eggs in February. On blowing the eggs the doctor found young owls in them, and is confident that the great horned owl begins its nesting about the 1st of February.

Perhaps a more curious occurrence than this of the owls, is the doctor's experience in hatching chickens. One of his hens made a nest in one corner of a big box of cut feed in the barn, and began to set. Soon after a cat brought forth a litter of five kittens in the opposite corner of the same box. Three of these kittens were afterwards killed, and, as it happened, it was about the same time that an attempt was made to break up the setting hen. Her eggs were taken from her nest. Then the old cat, disgusted at the sudden reduction of her own family, ran off and left her two remaining kittens to their fate. Left to take care of themselves, the kittens made their way over to the hen, who was still sitting on her empty nest, crawled under her, and made themselves at home. There they have grown and prospered, the hen coming clucking off the nest to try to help them eat the milk which was placed for them in a saucer, and finally taking them out into the barn yard, clucking and scratching for them—a performance which the kittens couldn't understand, but they crawl up on the hen's back, and in various ways indicate that they regard her as their mother, while the hen seems to look upon these queer chickens as the products of her own hatching, though she is apparently a good deal puzzled over them, and is often plunged into a "brown study."

We do not allow ourselves a full opportunity to become really fitted for our "business," by waiting before the Lord till the Spirit shall descend upon us, and our hearts become filled with the love of Christ. We do not "wait patiently." We do not tarry in Jerusalem until we are endued with power from on high." The vessel must stay at the fountain long enough, if it is to be filled. The corn must stand in the light of the sun long enough, if it is to be ripened. So also only "they, that wait upon the Lord, shall renew their strength."

The Religion of the Heart.

The following excellent letter was written in France, in the latter part of the seventeenth century:—

"The great thing to be kept in view by religious pastors at the present time, is the distinction between outward or ceremonial religion, and inward religion or that of the heart. Religion, in its full development, is the same thing with the inward kingdom or the reign of God in the soul. And certain it is, that this inward or spiritual reign can never be established by outward ceremonies and observances alone.

"It can be nothing new to you, sir, when I remark that the religion of the primitive disciples of Christ was characterized by being inward. It was the religion of the soul. The Saviour made an announcement of unspeakable importance, when He said: 'It is expedient for you that I go away; for if I go not away, the Comforter will not come unto you.' He seems to have intended by this announcement, in part at least, to turn their attention from outward things, and to prepare their hearts to receive the fulness of the Holy Spirit, which he looked upon as the one thing necessary.

"The form is merely the sign of the thing. I may, perhaps, give offence in saying it, and I am certainly liable to be misunderstood; but still it seems to me, that there may even be such a thing as outward praying, or praying in the form without the spirit. It is true the Saviour gave a form of prayer, which is a very wonderful one. Nevertheless, He rebukes long and ostentatious prayers, and disapproves of frequent repetitions. He tells the disciples that they are not heard for their much speaking; and assigns as a reason, that their Heavenly Father knows what they want before they ask him. He says, 'When thou prayest, enter into thy closet, and pray to thy Father, who seeth in secret; and thy Father who seeth in secret shall reward thee openly.'

"Oh, sir! how much it is to be desired that all persons getting beyond mere outward supports may have their life from God and in God! Such a day will certainly come to pass. We see already some evidences of its approach in the lives of those who, in having no will but Christ's will, live by faith; whose whole joy is in having dispositions that are from God and with God; and who regard all outward things as the mere transient signs and incidents, and not the reality of life.

"It is with earnestness, therefore, that I conjure you, sir, to aid souls to the utmost of your power in their spiritual progress; so that they may not stop short of God's inward reign. The subjection of human selfishness by holy love, and the subjection of the human will by union with the Divine will, may be said to make Christ within us. Christ will come visibly in the clouds of heaven. But in the spiritual sense, and in some respects in the more important sense, He may come now; He may come TO-DAY. Oh! let us labor for His present coming; not for a Christ in the clouds, but for a Christ in the affections; not for a Christ seen, but for a Christ felt; not for a Christ outwardly represented, but for a Christ inwardly realized. 'Thou sendest forth thy Spirit, they are created; and thou renewest the face of the earth, (Ps. civ. 30).

"On this subject it is difficult for me to express my feelings, so strong are the desires which exist in me. When will men renounce themselves that they may find God? Willingly, full willingly, I would shed my blood, I would lay down life, if I could see the world seeking and bearing Christ's holy image.—I remain yours in our Lord."—British Friend.

For "The Friend."

Mid-week Meetings.

The following suggestions relative to the duty of attending mid-week meetings, having recently come to the hand of the Compiler, they are herewith submitted for publication in "The Friend."

It is a truth confirmed and settled by many similar testimonials, that while nothing is ever gained by the neglect of this reasonable religious duty, there have on the contrary been many instances, in which great and manifest loss has been sustained. And when we reflect that the grand object of these opportunities is to meet with our Father who is in heaven; to have our faith renewed in Him; and solemnly to worship Him in spirit and in truth, who with His dear Son, our Lord and Saviour, is alone forever worthy; we should vigilantly watch, and never allow ourselves to fall into a habit so weakening and prejudicial to ourselves, so fruitful in contagious example to children and others; and so sorrowfully unmindful of Him, the great Lord of all, in whose hand our breath is, and "whose are all our ways," and to whom we owe not only our time, our talents, our obedience, and our service, but our lives, and our all.

James Thornton, of Byberry, Penn., during his last illness, which was in 1794, was drawn to dwell much on the peace afforded at that time, by his persevering attendance of religious meetings throughout a long life. He was early afflicted with bodily infirmities, and remarked that many times in his youth while walking to meeting, he had been forced to stop and lean his head against a tree to rest; and that since he had arrived at years of maturity, storms nor tempests, nor any other consideration had hindered him from going his Master's errands when able; nor did he remember ever attending meeting without receiving some satisfaction, believing, when people complained of poor meetings, the fault was mostly with themselves; that if we did our part toward attaining a right state of mind, nothing was to be doubted of. He also remarked, that overrating others and underrating ourselves should be avoided, as our conditions are best known to the Lord.

Mahlon Hockett, a minister among Friends, residing in North Carolina, had a neighbor who was in the practice of neglecting week-day meetings. He had built a new house, and had fixed on meeting-day to move. In the morning one of the children went to Mahlon's on an errand. Mahlon said to the child, "Will thy father be at meeting?" "No," said the child, "we are going to move." Mahlon replied, "Tell thy father he must go to meeting; and if he does not go to meeting to-day, before night he will have no house to move to; and tell him Mahlon Hockett says so!" The child delivered the message, but the father staid from meeting. A load of goods was taken to the new house, and two of the children with it. While the father went for the second load, the children lighted a fire to some straw near the house, which spread to the building, and it was consumed, being all in a blaze when he returned with his load.

Selected.

GIVING.

Is thy cruse of comfort wasting?
Rise and share it with another;
And through all the years of famine
It shall serve thee and thy brother.

Love divine shall fill thy storehouse,
Or thy handful still renew;
Scanty fare for one, will often
Make a royal feast for two.

For the heart grows rich in giving,
All its wealth is living grain;
Seeds, which mildew in the garner,
Scattered, fill with gold the plain.

Is thy burden hard and heavy?
Do thy steps drag wearily?
Help to bear thy brother's burden,
God will bear both it and thee.

Numb and weary on the mountain,
Would'st thou sleep amid the snow?
Chafe that frozen form beside thee,
And together both shall glow.

Is thy heart a void left empty?
Naught but God that void can fill,
Nothing but a ceaseless fountain,
Can its ceaseless longings still.

Selected.

JOHN'S WIFE.

A young wife stood with her head on the broom,
And looking around the room;
"Nothing but toil forever," she said,
"From the early morn till the light has fled.
If you only were a merchant now
We need not live by the sweat of our brow;"
Pegging away, spoke shoemaker John,
"We ne'er see well what we're standing on."

A lady stood by her husband's chair,
And quietly passed her hand over his hair—
"You never have time for me now," she said,
And a tear-drop fell on the low-bent head—
"If we were only rich, my dear,
With nothing to do from year to year
But amuse each other—O, dear me!
What a happy woman I should be."
Looking up from his ledger, spoke merchant John,
"We ne'er see well what we're standing on."

A stately form in velvet dressed—
A diamond gleaming on her breast—
"Nothing but toil for fashion," she said,
"Till I sometimes wish that I were dead,
Or long to cast this wealth aside,
And be once more the poor man's bride."
From his easy chair, spoke gentleman John,
"We ne'er see well what we're standing on."

For "The Friend."

John Finch Marsh.

(Continued from page 42.)

1841, 7th mo. 6th. In the forenoon enjoyed a sweet time in prayer in my chamber, under a renewed sense of the fresh extension of my Heavenly Father's love to my soul. My spirit was, I trust, bowed and contrited with the feeling of gratitude and praise.

[After returning a certificate he held for visiting the meetings in Yorkshire, Lancashire, Derby, and Notts., he wrote:]

1842, 1st mo. 20th. During this long engagement it was my lot for the most part to move along in the feeling of much poverty, and weakness, and strippedness; yet I trust there were times when best help was nigh to strengthen and enable me to bear a faithful testimony to the Truth as it is in Jesus,—and that I was mercifully preserved from doing harm to the precious cause.

3d mo. 16th. Our beloved friend Sarah [Lynes] Grubb departed this life at Sudbury, aged about 69 years. Great indeed is the loss the church has sustained by the removal of this faithful servant and minister of Christ. She was one eminently gifted for the work of the ministry, in which she was a faithful and diligent laborer from her youth up to the latest period of her life.

23d. The remains of our beloved Friend S. G., interred at Sudbury before meeting. It was a sweet and solemn time by the graveside, nothing expressed vocally. In the meeting I ventured to bend the knee. Seven Friends appeared in testimony. I believe it would have been safe for me, and have tended to the peace of my mind, had I simply rose towards the conclusion; but, alas! I suffered the meeting to separate without venturing the expression of a little; and which omission occasioned me to feel sad. Ah! how glad should I have been could I but have got the same company of Friends and others together again when it was too late; and how the lost opportunity was afforded for this exercise of faith, even while the people were rising from their seats, and leaving the meeting house, which they did in so deliberate and solid a manner.

May this circumstance, or omission, prove a lesson of lasting instruction to me,—and may I yet be favored to experience a moving along in more simplicity and faith, and in singleness of eye.

1847, 10th mo. 20th. I have been seriously unwell, and confined to my bed about a week. I am now favored to be nicely recovered, and nearly regained my usual health and strength, and trust that my heart is made to feel thankful to my heavenly Father for this great favor, and for the sense of his goodness and mercy towards me in this time of prostration, which I have to look back upon as a season of renewed favor, wherein I trust I did enjoy something of the Divine presence, and was bowed in spirit before the Lord under a sense of my great unworthiness and unwatchfulness—my many short comings and sins of omission and commission, in which I trust near access was found in prayer and praise, and renewed desires raised after a closer walk with God, and that I might become increasingly humble and watchful; yea, experience a daily watching unto prayer. During my indisposition, I had occasion to be well satisfied with the kind attention paid me by our medical attendant, Edward Westall.

21st. Our Monthly Meeting. It seemed with me to remark on the necessity of witnessing the new birth; signifying that that which was necessary for one individual, was needful for all to experience, viz., a true and real change of heart, and conversion of soul—a being born again, agreeable to the doctrine of our Holy Redeemer, which he taught Nicodemus.

11th mo. 8th, 2d day Morning Meeting. My wife and I attended it. Ann Tweedy, from Truro, was there, and had feelingly to remark on the sorrow it had occasioned her, since being up this way, in seeing the increased departure from the simplicity in our young people, bringing the matter close home to Friends filling the station of Ministers and Elders; giving suitable counsel, and encouraging to faithfulness in speaking in love one to another, as occasion might seem to require. I was glad of her communication, as also in that it opened the way for my dear wife to obtain some relief in a similar manner, which she was strengthened to do in unison and accordance therewith. Their communications were, I think, a word in season, and may they prove a profitable watchword.

1852, 1st mo. 30th. It is, I trust, under some feeling sense of the love of our Heavenly Father shed abroad in my heart, and for the nearness of access in prayer, renewedly permitted me again of late in my private retirement, that I incline to write what my heart desires to say, and I trust does say, viz., Rejoice in the Lord, O my soul, rejoice in him always, for He hath dealt mercifully and bountifully with thee; yea, "Bless the Lord, O my soul: and all that is within me, bless His holy name."

"Rejoice evermore. Pray without ceasing. In everything give thanks: for this is the will of God in Christ Jesus concerning you."

Surely the Christian's life is, and ought to be, a life of prayer, of thanksgiving, and of praise. A life of devotedness and dedication of heart unto the Lord, at all times, and in all things. A state of watchfulness is a state of prayer; herein is safety experienced.—How important then is individual attention to the injunction of our Holy Redeemer, to watch and pray, that we enter not into temptation. "Watch and pray, that ye enter not into temptation."

1853, 1st mo. The present is an awful time, calculated indeed to awaken and arouse to serious thoughtfulness and reflection—a season of mourning and heaviness with many. The latter part of the past year, with the opening of the present, has been, and is still, fraught with solemn and fearful events, from the very long continuance of much rain and consequent damp atmosphere, with much illness from fever and other indisposition, the town of Croydon and its neighborhood being remarkably visited thereby, very many being ill, and many removed by death.

How striking that in the short space of five weeks six individuals, members of Croydon Particular Meeting, should have been called upon to render up their accounts; and in about six weeks the remains of each consigned to the silent grave. Affecting, indeed, the events that have been happening about us in this time of visitation with sickness and death. Fever of a typhoid or a typhus kind, with diarrhœa; and in most cases that have been fatal, it seems from the first to have so seized on the intellect as to afford very little if any time of consciousness; so that if preparation for the solemn change was not sought after in time of health, there appears to have been little or no opportunity on the sick bed. Ah! solemn events, indeed, and well it will be if the inhabitants of this place and elsewhere, so profit thereby as to seek repentance, forsake sin, and by so doing come to learn righteousness. And well will it be if some of the members of our meeting, yea, all of us, be afresh instructed in the way of righteousness, by yielding to the humbling and contriting power of that chastening Hand which has seen meet to dispense largely to some of this affliction.

2d mo. 8th. A time of precious quiet in retirement this morning, and prayer.

8th mo. 10th. A. N. dined and took tea with us. This dear young person, aged nearly 19 years, is sweetly visited; the love of our Heavenly Father is, I believe, preciously shed abroad in his heart. May he be strengthened to hold on in the way cast up for him to walk in, in faith and in faithfulness.

Amidst the many discouragements, there are some bright spots to cheer the mourners on their way; here and there a precious plant to cast the eye upon, from which, too, proceeds a fragrant smell, calculated to revive and animate the drooping hope; some sweetly visited minds on whom the good and tender Hand of the Lord is laid, in order, if there be but a yielding to its forming and cleansing power, to fit and qualify for His own work and service in His own way and time.

1854, 9th mo. 8th and 9th. Days spent much in retirement, and I trust in waiting upon the Lord, wherein I was engaged to pour forth my soul in prayer.

10th, 1st day. Toward the close of our evening meeting I ventured in weakness and in fear to stand up, and was, I think, helped in my testimony by Him who "giveth power to the faint, and to them that have no might he increaseth strength." William Higgins feelingly expressed a little afterwards, and in unison with my communication.

17th. Priscilla and myself by ourselves today, wherein we were favored to experience some precious quiet.

18th. A day spent in profitable retirement, and in the feeling of inward quiet. In the forenoon I trust near access was granted in a time of prayer. Oh! how great the privilege of prayer, and the blessedness which is known and felt when so engaged; when, in private retirement waiting upon God, ability is afforded in prostration of spirit to pour forth the soul unto Him, in the name of His beloved Son our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ.

(To be continued.)

For "The Friend."

A Brief Account of Friends in Canada Yearly Meeting.

Since the establishment of Canada Yearly Meeting, a desire has often been expressed to know more about the members and extent of this branch of the Society. I therefore propose to give a short history of Friends in the Province of Ontario. A considerable portion of my information is taken from the Records of Adolphustown Monthly Meeting. I am also under obligations to Friends in other Monthly Meetings for assistance.

At New York Yearly Meeting in 1797, a Committee previously appointed "to the consideration of the situation of Friends in Upper Canada," reported that they had "attended thereto," and they recommended that an appointment be made by the Yearly Meeting, "to make them another visit," which they thought would "be more useful if it was performed in conjunction with a Committee of Nine Partners Monthly Meeting." They also recommended the establishment of a Preparative Meeting, and, considering the remoteness of Friends from any meeting for Discipline, the Committee suggested, "whether it would not be reasonable and proper to grant them the liberty of accomplishing their marriages, and such other business as the Committee may apprehend safe and proper." The new Committee was also to fix upon the time and place of holding the Preparative Meeting.

The report was accepted, and six Friends were appointed to the service proposed.

At Nine Partners Quarterly Meeting 8th mo. 9th, 1797, a Committee was appointed "to unite with that appointed by the Yearly Meeting, on this weighty and important subject."

At the Yearly Meeting in 1798 the Committee reported that, "circumstances have been such that no visit has been made." The Committee was continued.

Pursuant to appointment, five of the Committee attended to the service, and a Preparative Meeting was opened "at the house of Philip Dorland, in Adolphustown, U. C., the 7th of 9th mo. 1798." Philip Dorland was appointed clerk, and the Committee recommended that the meeting be joined to Nine Partners Monthly Meeting.

The remoteness of these Friends from the Monthly Meeting, induced the Committee to recommend that it should have jurisdiction in matters not usually granted to Preparative Meetings. That, besides allowing marriages to be accomplished, it should appoint overseers, deal with offenders, and report to the Monthly Meeting without unnecessary delay, "their sense respecting the case," and "that the same method be pursued in case of a request to be received into membership."

In concluding their report the Committee recommended that the Preparative should read and answer the Queries four times a year, and that the answers should be forwarded "to the Monthly Meeting once a year, and that it be to that meeting which precedes the last Quarter before the Yearly Meeting." The report from which I have made the above extracts, was signed by Fry Willis, Enoch Dorland, Gideon Simon, Henry Hull, and Reuben Haight.

In 10th mo. 1798, a proposition was made to erect a meeting house, and a Committee was appointed to take the necessary steps. In 9th mo. 1799, the meeting house being "partly finished," a new Committee was appointed "to settle with the Trustees, and make an estimate of the whole expense."

I do not find any minute stating when the meeting house was completed, nor when the first meeting was held in it, but it was probably not far from the last date.

At Nine Partners Monthly Meeting in 5th mo. 1800, a Committee was appointed to visit Friends in Upper Canada, and "to open a Monthly meeting if, in the course of their visit, it should seem right."

It appears way did not open for the Committee to make the visit until the Preparative Meeting in 1st mo. 1801, at which time six of the Committee attended, and were "united in believing it right that a Monthly Meeting be established at Adolphustown, in Upper Canada, in Friends' meeting house." Accordingly, the first Monthly Meeting was held the 29th of 1st mo. 1801. After this, upon the recommendation of the Committee, it was "held the third Fifth-day in each month," and the Preparative Meeting was held the "Fourth-day preceding the Monthly Meeting." This report was signed by Thomas Titus, Reuben Haight, Anna Merritt, John Lancaster, Isaac Thorne, Jr., Elizabeth Wing.

I have given the names of the Friends constituting some of the Committees, hoping that many who read these notes, will be led to reflect upon the zeal for the promotion of Truth, and the care over the flock, which enabled our forefathers to endure hardships and privations that, in this day, can hardly be realized. If the same earnest care for the welfare of the brethren, and the same desire to maintain our testimonies, were manifested in these days, how much greater would our influence be!

At the Monthly Meeting in 4th mo. 1801, a request was received to allow a Preparative Meeting to be held at Kingston, which was granted for three months, and a Committee was appointed to have the oversight of it. That meeting was continued under the care of a Committee, until 5th mo. 1810, when the Committee was discharged.

At the same time with the foregoing, a request was made by "Friends at the West Lake, desiring the privilege of holding a meeting." This was a settlement of Friends in the township of Hallowell, about twelve miles west of Adolphustown, and near the present village of Bloomfield. It was called "West Lake" on account of its proximity to a body of water by that name.

After considering the request, Friends were allowed "to meet together for the solemn purpose of worship, once in two weeks for three months,—at the house of Cornelius Blount." In 6th mo. 1802, Friends there were allowed to hold a meeting once a week, and in 9th mo. 1802 the privilege of holding a meeting twice a week was granted, and at the same time a proposition was made to the Quarterly Meeting to establish a meeting there.

At the Monthly Meeting in 4th mo. 1803, a minute from Nine Partners Quarterly Meeting was read, informing Friends that the proposition "is united with, and a meeting for worship is now established accordingly, and the Monthly Meeting left at liberty to establish a Preparative Meeting at that place if they shall judge it best."

The Monthly Meeting then allowed "a Preparative Meeting for three months," at the same place in which the meeting had been held. In the 11th mo. of the same year, a Preparative Meeting was established. At the same time the necessity of "a Meeting house at the West Lake" was considered. Friends of that meeting proposed to erect a log house twenty-one by thirty-one feet, and the Monthly Meeting agreed to assist them, and Thomas Bowerman and Townsend Carman were appointed "to take the oversight in building said house."

In 4th mo. 1804 an Indulged Meeting was allowed at Green Point, about twenty miles northeasterly from West Lake Meeting, which was held the first First-day in each month, under the care of a Committee, until 9th mo. 1807, when a meeting was allowed there on Fourth-day of each week, except in Preparative and Monthly Meeting weeks. In 8th mo. 1811, a meeting was established there, and a Preparative Meeting was opened in 10th mo. that year.

It will be proper to remark here, that there were two other Monthly Meetings in Upper Canada, Pelham and Yonge street, both belonging to Philadelphia Yearly Meeting, the former established in 1799, and the latter in 1806.

At Adolphustown Monthly Meeting in 12th mo. 1806, "A concern arose for Friends to be united in transacting the business of the Church in Upper Canada," and a Committee was appointed to attend Yonge street Monthly Meeting, and to consult with Friends there. In 2d mo. 1807, the Committee reported that they had attended to their appointment, and produced a Minute from Yonge street Monthly Meeting, which was "so far united with as to select" a Committee to draw up a Minute to be forwarded to the Quarterly Meeting.

In 3d mo. 1807, a joint report of the Committee of the three Monthly Meetings was read, and directed to the Quarterly Meeting.

The matter was referred from Nine Partners Quarterly Meeting, to each of the Yearly Meetings, and a Committee was appointed by each.

At Adolphustown Monthly Meeting, held by adjournment, the 26th of 9th mo. 1808, "a part of the Committees appointed by Philadelphia and New York Yearly Meetings, viz: John Shoemaker, John Brown, Reuben Haight, Hannah Fisher, Rebecca Archer, Ann Shipley, and Ann Merritt, attended this meeting, with extracts from [the Minutes of] said Yearly Meetings."

At the Yearly Meetings of Philadelphia and New York in 1809, the report of the Committee was read, and deliberation thereon resulted in the establishment of CANADA HALF YEAR'S MEETING, to be held in the 1st mo. at "West Lake," and at Yonge street in 8th mo., to be a branch of New York Yearly Meeting, and to be opened in 1st mo. 1810. A Committee was appointed by each Yearly Meeting to attend.

At that time Adolphustown Monthly Meeting was composed of three Preparative Meetings, Yonge street of three, and Pelham of two.

The Half Year's Meeting continued to be composed of all the Friends in Upper Canada, until 1841, when at the request of Friends of Norwich and Pelham, Pelham Quarterly Meeting was established, and the Half Year's Meeting was thence composed of Yonge street and West Lake Monthly Meetings, until 1848, when it was divided into two Quarterly Meetings of the same name as the Monthly Meetings.

This arrangement continued until 1867, when, for various reasons, it was deemed best to hold West Lake Quarterly Meeting but three times a year. The change was made, and it has since been held under the name of West Lake Four Months' Meeting.

Pelham and Yonge street still hold Quarterly Meetings.

For some time the question of holding a Yearly Meeting in Canada, was agitated, and finally a proposition was made to the Yearly Meeting to allow Friends in Canada to be set off as a Yearly Meeting. This was granted, and in 6th mo. 1867, Canada Yearly Meeting was opened.

By reports to the Yearly Meeting this year there are belonging to it, 22 meetings; 279 families; 275 parts of families, and 1619 members.

I have spent much time in collecting the foregoing information, and if others are in degree interested in reading it, I shall be repaid for my labor. LEVI VARNEY.

Bloomfield, Ont., 9th mo. 1874.

THE FRIEND.

TENTH MONTH 3, 1874.

That able and experienced minister of the gospel, Thomas Story, in his journal, speaks of being at the meeting at Leeds, in 1736. He thus describes the condition of the younger members: "Sober, but few of them yet baptized of the Lord, by His sanctifying baptism; which is much the case and state of our young people at this day throughout the world; being in danger as others have done, of sitting down under the profession of Truth, in a traditional way, as to the doctrine and form of the discipline of it, and yet short and ignorant of the life, light, virtue and power of Truth essentially in themselves; by which an apostacy from the very form may enter and proceed gradually till the whole be lost, as to them, and some other thing take place under the same name: which the Lord prevent, by His kind and merciful visitation, in His own time and way; for nothing else can do it, or carry on that great and glorious work, which His own arm hath begun in the earth in and by His people."

In the previous year, at Bristol, he found some among the children of those Friends who in earlier days had been faithful sufferers for their religion, who, for want of knowing in themselves "the life, light, virtue and power of Truth," had been taken "with the vain and sinful fashions, customs and notions of the world."

His description of the young people at Leeds is one that well applies to many of the same class among us at the present day. In many neighborhoods they are preserved in comparative innocence; are intelligent, moral, and orderly persons, to whom their older friends are anxiously looking, desiring that they may become prepared to fill the various stations in the militant church. Yet there are too many among them, who have not thoroughly yielded their hearts to the convicting power of Divine Grace, and by humbly obeying all its leadings and pointings, come to know "the life, light, virtue and power of Truth essentially in themselves." Until they are established on this foundation, they are in danger of being swept away from even the profession of Truth, and entirely lost to the church, to their own great hurt.

If it were in our power, we would gladly impress on all such the great necessity of knowing a thorough, heart-felt work of religion. Many of them desire the prosperity of the church, are interested in its movements, and listen with seriousness and pleasure to the preaching of its doctrines, and the earnest exhortations of its ministers. But they have not yet learned to labor availingly for spiritual food. In our religious meetings, when there are present those who are at times enabled to hand forth to others the bread which the Master has blessed; these too often wait to be fed through the medium of such ministers; instead of settling down into a true religious exercise, and seeking to feel for themselves the overshadowing presence of the Head of the Church. Hence they do not derive from their meetings the full benefit which they might otherwise experience; and their growth in grace is not so steady and rapid as it should be. So also, at other times, when engaged in the ordinary pursuits of life, there is too little of that feeling, which drew from Hagar of old the ejaculation, Thou, God, seest me. Where this becomes the habitual clothing of the mind, and there is an honest concern so to walk as the Light of Christ in our hearts shows us to be in conformity to the Divine will; then will be experienced the truth of the Scripture declaration, "The fear of the Lord is a fountain of life, to depart from the snares of death;" "They that wait upon the Lord shall renew their strength."

It is only through the renewed visitations of the Spirit of Christ, that any of us can move forward in the path that leads to eternal rest and peace; and when these visitations are mercifully extended, they ought to be prized as most precious blessings, and embraced with all earnestness of soul, and a full and ready submission given to all the Divine requirings. If this were more the case among us, we would become more like a company with whom Thomas Story had a meeting in the south-western part of England, who, he says, were an innocent people, "very tender, as little children desiring the pure milk of the Word; and the Lord dispensed it largely and freely among them, to our solid and mutual satisfaction, for they were greatly tendered, as we had been when we were first convinced."

SUMMARY OF EVENTS.

FOREIGN.—A London dispatch of the 28th ult. says: A frightful typhoon passed over Hong Kong yesterday. The steamers Lenore and Abbay, and eight other vessels were wrecked or foundered, and many are missing. A great number of houses were destroyed, and it is reported a thousand persons were killed. The damage to property in the city and harbor and surrounding country is immense.

A dispatch from Rome on the 27th says: Mount Etna is still in agitation. Rumbling noises are heard inside, and yesterday an earthquake shook the mountain to its base. The shocks extended to the village of Rendezza and destroyed several houses.

The members of the Austrian Polar expedition declare that explorations in the direction of the North Pole are hopeless of a satisfactory result, and that the reports of the existence of an open Polar sea are untrue.

The Russian government, on account of the extensive emigration of Mennonites, has undertaken to exempt members of that sect from actual military service, but still holds them liable to do duty as hospital attendants and surgeons. The Mennonites of the Volga district will probably all consent to remain, under these conditions.

Work has been resumed by the mill operatives at Bolton, England, pending the result of arbitration of the differences between them and their employers, which will be announced on the 31st of 10th mo.

The Newcastle Chamber of Commerce has adopted resolutions condemning the Canadian reciprocity treaty as prejudicial to British industry.

The Mark Lane Express in its review of the crop prospects says, the recent rains have materially benefitted the root crops. There has been too much rain however, for late potatoes, which show the commencement of disease. Grass has the verdure of spring, which will help growers to carry their stock through the winter notwithstanding the deficiency in the hay and straw crops.

A correspondence has been commenced between the English and French cabinets on the subject of a submarine tunnel under the channel which divides the two countries.

Spanish affairs remain nearly unchanged. The Carlists have been defeated recently in several small engagements. The existence of a cordial and sympathetic letter from the Czar to Don Carlos, which has hitherto been denied at Berlin and elsewhere, is now acknowledged. The letter was written in reply to one from Don Carlos, thanking the Czar for his refusal to recognize Serrano.

The town of Andorra, capital of the neutral country of that name, lying between France and Spain, has been attacked by the Carlists because the authorities refused to surrender a quantity of arms which were seized while in transit across the frontier for the insurgents.

The river Segre, running through the province of Lerida, has overflowed its banks, causing great damage to property, and a serious loss of life. In the town of Tarrega, twenty-five miles northeast of the city of Lerida, fully two hundred houses were swept away, and many persons were drowned.

Heavy rains have fallen in India, and the prospect for the crops continues most satisfactory.

The boundary dispute between Switzerland and Italy, which was referred to George P. Marsh, United States Minister at Rome for arbitration, has been decided in favor of Italy, which thereby acquires 1800 acres of territory.

A special dispatch to the London Times gives the following account of the adventures of the Austrian polar expedition: "The expedition left Tromso on the 14th of July, 1872. They encountered compact drift ice in 48 degrees east longitude, and worked themselves through until, in 58 degrees east, they reached the coast of Nova Zembla. They sailed along the coast to Berch Islands, where they met Count Wiltczek's sloop Isbjornen. They sailed together with him further to Baerent's Islands, near the promontory of Cape Nassau, where they remained at anchor till the 21st of August, 1872, on account of southwesterly storms. They parted with Count Wiltczek and steered northeast the same day, and were completely frozen in. They drifted with the pack ice fourteen months, first northeast to 73 degrees east longitude, and then northwest until October, 1873. In August, 1873, a new land was discovered. They drifted with the ice along this land. They were frozen in, and wintered in 79 degrees 51 minutes north latitude and 59 degrees east longitude. In March and April, 1874, sledge expeditions were sent north and west; 82 degrees north latitude was passed, and land was seen to the 83d degree. The extent of the land northwards and westwards was, apparently, considerable. The ship now being untenable was abandoned. Starting on the 20th of May, 1874, with four sledge boats, they met the open water on the 15th of August, and crossed to Nova Zembla, and went along the coast in search of vessels. They met a Russian schooner and arrived at Vardoe, in Norway, on the 3d of September."

Twenty-five hundred immigrants have arrived in the province of Canterbury, New Zealand, in the last three months.

An election was held on the 27th ult. in the Department of Maine-et-Loire, to fill a vacancy in the French Assembly. De Maille, the Republican candidate, was elected by 3787 majority.

A dispatch from Rome says, the French ambassador has presented to the Pope a letter from President MacMahon, announcing the withdrawal of the man-of-war Orenoque from Civita Vecchia.

The Danish ambassador at Berlin has gone to Copenhagen to confer with the Ministers on the difficulties which have arisen between Prussia and Denmark, as a consequence of the ejection of Danish subjects from Schleswig.

UNITED STATES.—There were 529 deaths in New York last week, and 253 in Philadelphia, including 104 children under two years. There were 33 deaths of consumption, 20 marasmus, and 14 cholera infantum.

Fuller and later reports received in Washington confirm, it is stated, the opinion long held that the Black Hill country contains no great amount of gold or other valuable minerals. Col. Fred. Grant, who accompanied General Custer's expedition under special instruction to report upon its geological character, says that the rock in which it is claimed gold was discovered, is of the metamorphic character, in which no precious minerals have ever been found.

The President is emphatic in his determination to carry out the orders of General Sheridan to prevent all invasion of this country by intruders, so long as by law and treaty it is ceded to the Indians.

The Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railroad have sold 15,000 acres of land in the Arkansas Valley to the Russian Mennonites, who, to the number of 1900, will settle immediately on their purchase.

A Richmond, Va., firm is filling a contract with France for $8,000,000 worth of tobacco, and another has a similar contract with Austria amounting to $6,000,000.

It is announced that the Hoosac tunnel, which it has been the work of many years to construct, will be formally opened on the first of 11th month.

The Markets, &c.—The following were the quotations on the 28th ult. New York. — American gold 109⅞. U. S. 6's 1881, registered, 117⅛; do. coupon, 118; do. 1868, registered, 116¼; do. coupon, 117; do. 5 per cents, 112. Superfine flour, $4.60 a $5; State extra, $5.10 a $5.35; finer brands, $5.60 a $10.50. No. 2 Chicago spring wheat, $1.11; No. 3 do., $1.08; red western, $1.22; amber, $1.25; white Michigan, $1.36 a $1.40. Canada barley, $1.35. Oats 61 a 65 cts. Yellow corn, 98 cts.; western mixed, 96 cts.; white 98 cts. a $1.02. Philadelphia.—Uplands and New Orleans middlings cotton, 16½ a 17 cts. Superfine flour, $3.50 a $4.00; extras, $4 a $4.50; finer brands, $5 a $8.75. Red wheat, $1.15 a $1.20; amber, $1.22 a $1.25; white, $1.35 a $1.37. Rye, $1.02. Yellow and mixed corn, $1.01 a $1.02. Oats, 62 a 64 cts. City smoked hams, 15 a 16 cts. Lard, 15 cts. Clover seed, 10½ a 11 cts. The market for beef cattle dull. Receipts 3400 head. Texas cattle sold at 3½ a 5¼ cts. per lb. gross, and western at 5½ a 7½ cts., the latter for a few choice. About 10,000 sheep sold at 4½ a 6 cts. per lb. gross, and 6,000 hogs at $11 a $11.50 per 100 lb. net. for corn fed. St. Louis.—No. 2 winter red wheat, $1.15; No. 3 fall red, $1.04. Corn, 80 cts. Oats, 52 a 53 cts. Chicago.—No. 1 Spring wheat, 97 cts.; No. 3 do. 89 cts. No. 2 mixed corn, 82 cts. No. 2 oats, 50 cts. Rye, 89 a 90 cts. Lard, 14¾ cts. Baltimore.—No. 1 western red and amber wheat, $1.23 a $1.24; No. 2 do., $1.21 a $1.22; Maryland amber, $1.30 a $1.35. Southern white and yellow corn, $1 a $1.05. Oats, 60 a 65 cts. Cleveland.—No. 1 winter red wheat, $1.09; No. 2 do., $103. Mixed corn, 83 a 84 cts. Oats, 51 a 54 cts.

RECEIPTS.

Received from Charles Wright, N. J., per Jacob W. Fry, $2, vol. 48; from Benjamin Sheppard and Margaret Miller, N. J., per H. C. W., $2 each, vol. 48; from Abner Eldridge, Agent, Io., for Alexander L. McGrew, Simon O. McGrew, and Nancy L. Thompson, $2 each, vol. 48; from Richard Mott, Agent, Io., $2, vol. 48, and for William P. Deweese, Ezra Embree, R. W. Hampton. Stephen Hodgin, Asenath Edgerton, Eli Hodgin, Thomas D. Yocum, John Hodgin, Samuel W. Stanley, Benjamin V. Stanley, Joseph Embree, Thomas Hoyle, Thomas C. Battey, and Joseph Battey, $2 each, vol. 48, and for William Pierpont, $2, to No. 52, vol. 47; from Samuel Hoopes, Pa., $2, vol. 48; from Hannah Roberts, Pa., $2, vol. 48; from Edward Bonsall, O., $2, vol. 48; from Samuel W. Maris, Md., $2, vol. 48; from Sarah A. Allen, N. J., $2, vol. 48; from M. M. Childs, Del., $4.50, to No. 52, vol. 48; from Enoch Zelley, N. J., $2, vol. 48; from Mary D. Maris, Del., $2, vol. 48; from Seth Warrington, N. J., $2, vol. 48; from Lydia S. Fell, Pa., $2, vol. 48; from Thomas M. Harvey, for Susan Chambers, Pa., and for Mary Jane Chambers, Pa., $2 each, vol. 48; from M. M. Morlan, Agent, O., for Frederick Maerkt, $2, vol. 48; from Mary B. Wills, N. J., $2, vol. 48; from Mahlon Hoffecker, Pa., $2, vol. 48; from Rachel E. Woodward, Pa., $2, vol. 48; from Edward S. Yarnall, $2, vol. 48; from Reuben Battin, Agent, Pa., for Job McCarty, Jesse McCarty, Joseph McCarty, Theodore Hess, Charles Hess, George Schill, John S. Brown, Abel McCarty, Henry Brackman, and Reuben Battin, $2 each, vol. 48.

The Stated Annual Meeting of Haverford School Association, will be held on 2nd day, 10th month 12th, 1874, at 3 o'clock, P. M., in the Committee room of Arch Street Meeting-house, Philadelphia.

PHILIP C. GARRETT, Secretary.

WESTTOWN BOARDING SCHOOL.

The Winter Session commences on Second day, the 2nd of Eleventh month. Parents and others intending to send pupils will please make early application to BENJAMIN W. PASSMORE, Sup't, (Address Street Road P. O., Chester Co., Pa.,) or to CHARLES J. ALLEN, Treasurer, No. 304 Arch Street, Philada.

WANTED.

A suitable Friend to take the position of Writing Teacher and Assistant Governor at Westtown Boarding School—for next Session. Apply to

Charles Evans, 702 Race street, Philadelphia,
Clarkson Sheppard, Greenwich, New Jersey,
Joseph Walton, Moorestown, New Jersey.

FRIENDS' FREEDMEN'S RELIEF ASSOCIATION.

The Executive Board are about to re-open the Schools in North Carolina and Virginia, and have immediate need for funds. We have strictly limited the number of Teachers to that of last year, but will need contributions fully equal to those of 1873. The cost of transporting teachers, and of needful supplies for opening schools, is large, and must be met at the outset. Our Treasury is exhausted. We have no new source of interest upon which to base an appeal for the liberal aid of Friends. These people still need uplifting, and past efforts have been much blessed. "Freely ye have received, freely give." On behalf of the Board.

James E. Rhoads, President.
Thos. K. Brown, Secretary.

Contributions may be sent to Richard Cadbury, Treasurer, No. 108 S. Fourth Street, Philada.

Philadelphia, Ninth mo., 1874.

FRIENDS' ASYLUM FOR THE INSANE.

Near Frankford, (Twenty-third Ward,) Philadelphia.

Physician and Superintendent—JOSHUA H. WORTHINGTON, M. D.

Applications for the Admission of Patients may be made to the Superintendent, or to any of the Board of Managers.

THE FRIEND.

A RELIGIOUS AND LITERARY JOURNAL.

VOL. XLVIII. SEVENTH-DAY, TENTH MONTH 10, 1874. NO. 8.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY.

Price Two Dollars per annum, if paid in advance. Two dollars and fifty cents, if not paid in advance.

Subscriptions and Payments received by

JOHN S. STOKES,

AT NO. 116 NORTH FOURTH STREET, UP STAIRS.

PHILADELPHIA.

Postage, when paid quarterly in advance, five cents.

For "The Friend."

First Germantown Friends.

BY WILLIAM KITE.

(Continued from page 52.)

From "The Friend," 1st mo. 13th, 1844.

The testimony of the Friends at Germantown against slavery, sent up to the Yearly Meeting of 1688, has, within the last few days, been discovered. These Friends were Germans, and mostly from Cresheim, a town not far from Worms, in the Palatinate. They had suffered persecution in their own country, and seem to have had a very correct appreciation of the rights of others. One of them, Francis Daniel Pastorius, informs us, that he (and most probably many of his old neighbors were with him) reached Philadelphia on the 20th of Sixth month, 1683, after a passage of eight weeks. He came in the ship America, Joseph Wasey commander, which did not make the voyage without encountering various storms. Thirty years after this, Pastorius writes, "the second and twelfth of the Sixth month, our ship was covered with a multitude of huge surges, and, as it were, with mountains of terrible and astonishing waves." "I was as glad to land from the vessel every whit as Paul's shipmates were to land at Melita. Then Philadelphia consisted of three or four little cottages; all the residue being only woods, underwoods, timber and trees; among which I several times have lost myself in travelling no farther than from the water side to the house, (now of our Friend William Hudson,) then allotted to a Dutch baker, whose name was Cornelius Bom.* What my thoughts were of such a renowned city, (I not long before having seen London, Paris, Amsterdam, &c) is needless to rehearse unto you here. But what I think now of the same, I dare ingenuously say, viz., that God has made of a desert an enclosed garden, and the plantations about it, a fruitful field."

These German Friends settled near together, and in 1686 were joined by a number from different parts of Holland and Germany, and a meeting was soon established among them. It was attached to Dublin Monthly Meeting, which was then composed of Oxford, Poetquising [Byberry], Dublin, and Germantown meetings. By minute of Dublin Monthly Meeting dated Twelfth month 23rd, 1685, it was concluded to hold that meeting alternately at Richard Walln's [Cheltenham], at John Hart's [Byberry], and at Oxford. Thus it continued until First month 31st, 1687, when it was agreed that it should thenceforward be held at the house of Richard Worrell, Jr., in Lower Dublin, on the last Second-day in every month.

Coming from a country where oppression on account of color was unknown, and where buying, selling, and holding in bondage human beings, who had been legally convicted of no crime, was regarded as an act of cruelty and injustice, to be looked for from the hands of none but a Turk or barbarian, the members of this little community were shocked to see that negro slavery had taken root, and was increasing around them. It would appear from the testimony, that many of their religious friends and acquaintances, were deterred from coming to this land, by the report they had received of this sad stain on the character of the new settlement.

Impelled then by reproaches borne over the Atlantic, as well as by the testimony of their own consciences as to what was right, the Friends at Germantown drew up this paper. It is certainly a strong document; and whilst it bears evidence that the writers had an incompetent knowledge of the English language, it plainly demonstrates that they were well acquainted with the inalienable rights of man, and with the spirit of the gospel. We publish it as it is in the original, and doubt not that our readers will find sufficient clearness in the argument, notwithstanding some confusion in the use of prepositions.

The paper from which this is taken is the original. At the foot of the address, John Hart, the clerk of the Monthly Meeting, has made his minute, and the paper having been then forwarded to the Quarterly Meeting, has received a few lines from Anthony Morris, the clerk of that body, to introduce it to the Yearly Meeting, to which it was then directed. N.

This is to the Monthly Meeting held at Richard Worrell's.

These are the reasons why we are against the traffic of men-body, as followeth. Is there any that would be done or handled at this manner? viz., to be sold or made a slave for all the time of his life? How fearful and faint-hearted are many on sea, when they see a strange vessel,—being afraid it should be a Turk, and they should be taken, and sold for slaves into Turkey. Now what is this better done, than Turks do? Yea, rather is it worse for them, which say they are Christians; for we hear that the most part of such negers are brought hither against their will and consent, and that many of them are stolen. Now, though they are black, we cannot conceive there is more liberty to have them slaves, as [than] it is to have other white ones. There is a saying, that we shall do to all men like as we will be done ourselves; making no difference of what generation, descent or color they are. And those who steal or robb men, and those who buy or purchase them, are they not all alike? Here is liberty of conscience, which is right and reasonable; here ought to be likewise liberty of the body, except of evil-doers, which is another case. But to bring men hither, or to rob and sell them against their will, we stand against. In Europe there are many oppressed for conscience sake; and here there are those oppressed which are of a black colour. And we who know that men must not commit adultery,—some do commit adultery in others, separating wives from their husbands and giving them to others; and some sell the children of these poor creatures to other men. Ah! do consider well this thing, you who do it, if you would be done at this manner? and if it is done according to Christianity? You surpass Holland and Germany in this thing. This makes an ill report in all those countries of Europe, where they hear of [it], that the Quakers do here handel men as they handel there the cattle. And for that reason some have no mind or inclination to come hither. And who shall maintain this your cause, or plead for it? Truly we cannot do so, except you shall inform us better hereof, viz., that Christians have liberty to practise these things. Pray, what thing in the world can be done worse towards us, than if men should rob or steal us away, and sell us for slaves to strange countries; separating husbands from their wives and children. Being now this is not done in the manner we would be done at [by] therefore we contradict, and are against this traffic of men-body. And we who profess that it is not lawful to steal, must, likewise, avoid to purchase such things as are stolen, but rather help to stop this robbing and stealing if possible. And such men ought to be delivered out of the hands of the robbers, and set free as in Europe.* Then is Pennsylvania to have a good report, instead it hath now a bad one for this sake in other countries. Especially whereas the Europeans are desirous to know in what manner the Quakers do rule in their province;—and most of them do look upon us with an envious eye. But if this is done well, what shall we say is done evil?

If once these slaves (which they say are so wicked and stubborn men) should join themselves,—fight for their freedom,—and handel their masters and mistresses as they did handel them before; will these masters and mistresses take the sword at hand and war against these poor slaves, like, we are able to believe, some will not refuse to do; or have these negers not as much right to fight for their freedom, as you have to keep them slaves?

* This house stood a little south-east of the corner of Third and Chestnut streets.

* Alluding probably to the abolition of the old feudal system.

Now consider well this thing, if it is good or bad? And in case you find it to be good to handel these blacks at that manner, we desire and require you hereby lovingly, that you may inform us herein, which at this time never was done, viz., that Christians have such a liberty to do so. To the end we shall [may] be satisfied in this point, and satisfy likewise our good friends and acquaintances in our native country, to whom it is a terror, or fearful thing, that men should be handelled so in Pennsylvania.

This is from our meeting at Germantown, held ye 18 of the 2 month, 1688, to be delivered to the Monthly Meeting at Richard Worrell's.

Garret henderich
derick up de graeff
Francis daniell Pastorius
Abraham jr. Den graef.

At our Monthly Meeting at Dublin, ye 30—2 mo., 1688, we having inspected ye matter, above mentioned, and considered of it, we find it so weighty that we think it not expedient for us to meddle with it here, but do rather commit it to ye consideration of ye Quarterly Meeting; ye tenor of it being nearly related to ye Truth.

On behalf of ye Monthly Meeting,
Signed, P. Jo. HART.

This, above mentioned, was read in our Quarterly Meeting at Philadelphia, the 4 of ye 4th mo. '88, and was from thence recommended to the Yearly Meeting, and the above said Derick, and the other two* mentioned therein, to present the same to ye above said meeting, it being a thing of too great a weight for this meeting to determine.

Signed by order of ye meeting,
ANTHONY MORRIS.

(To be continued.)

For "The Friend."

Indian Affairs.

(Continued from page 51.)

By Esedotodes, Pawnee Chief.

"My Brothers: I am glad to see the faces of so many of my red brothers here to-day. For this purpose I came here. Many years ago the Pawnees and Wichitas lived together in this country, but have long since been divided, and it seems to me now that the Great Spirit is bringing all Indians together again. I do not know when my people lived here, but our old people tell us of it. They moved away from this country in those early days, and those who then lived have all passed away. I think that was a bad move. After living awhile upon the present Pawnee reserve, our old men without informing us sold the greater portion of the country, and we did not know of the fact till we found ourselves surrounded on all sides by white people. We now can scarcely move without disturbing some white person. If a Pawnee lays hands on a stick of timber or grass, the white man says, 'Hold! this is mine.' If a Pawnee's horse gets beyond the limits of his narrow reserve, he need not hunt him. We are surrounded up there on all sides by the white man, and it seems that everything belongs to him; so I think I and my people will come here and surrender our part to him."

By Dave, of the Towoccanies.

"My Brothers: We have met here to have a good talk; this is good, this is right. I am glad I'm here to hear what is said. We are all brothers, the same people, coming from the same common Father. Many of you here are very smart men, and I feel that I am far behind all of you, but brothers, I have my ears wide open to hear all you have to say. Some of you look like white men, but you think you are Indians, you should forget this thought, and go about setting good examples for such of your brothers as we are. Some Indians talk about their intentions of living like the white man, when probably they don't mean it, but I mean exactly what I say on this subject. Having planted forty acres of corn last summer, I labored very hard; when dry weather came on I lost all of my labor. Many an Indian would have become discouraged and quit, but I did not. I have made my farm as large again this year, and have gone to work harder than ever I did before. I am trying to get my young men to live as they should, and when I go home I will tell them all you have said here. These talks from you are always helpful to us in controling our young men. I am thankful of one thing, that is, that we have a good school at which our children attend; already can some of them read the white man's books.

My brothers, although I've started last, I'm going to work manfully, and if you are not careful I'll catch some of you. This spring for the first time, I've planted such things, besides corn, as the white man plants, and expect soon to know more of these things. I'm told they are good to eat, so if I'm successful I'll know by having them on my own table."

Report of Committee on Agriculture.

To the Grand Council of the Indian Territory:

Gentlemen: The committee to whom was assigned the duty of preparing the report on agriculture, would respectfully submit the following:

The Cherokees, Choctaws, Muscogees, and Seminoles are the four largest tribes represented in this Council, and from reliable information, are making equal and rapid improvement in the art of agriculture. The Cherokees cultivate eighty thousand, the Choctaws eighty-five thousand, the Muscogees sixty-five thousand, and the Seminoles ten thousand acres of land. The productions are corn, wheat, oats, cotton, rice, tobacco, sweet and Irish potatoes, and many of the garden vegetables adapted to this climate. They are also giving great attention to the growing of orchards, consisting of apples, peaches, plums and grapes. They are enlarging their farms, improving their houses, and using the latest improved implements of agriculture. They are advancing in wealth by the increase of horses, cattle, hogs, mules, sheep and goats. The introduction of fine stock, in many portions of the territory, has made great improvement in the quality of their stock.

The Wyandotts, Ottawas, Senecas, Eastern Shawnees, Quapaws and Peorias, are six small tribes who have reservations in the northeast corner of the Indian Territory. The Wyandotts cultivate six hundred, Ottawas eight hundred, Senecas six hundred, Eastern Shawnees five hundred, Quapaws eight hundred, and the Peorias two thousand acres of land. They grow corn, wheat, oats; also potatoes, beans, onions, cabbage, beets, and various other garden vegetables. They are making orchards of choice fruit trees, such as apples, peaches, pears and cherries. They are enlarging and opening new farms the present year, and also erecting new and improving their old houses. They, too, use the gang plow and other improved agricultural implements. Their stock consists of horses, mules, cattle and hogs, which they are improving by the introduction of the different kinds of thoroughbreds.

The Sacs and Foxes have six hundred acres cultivated, not including the mission farm of fifty acres. They raise corn, beans and pumpkins. They use the plow, hoe and grubbing-hoe. They have mowing machines, a sorghum mill, a steam saw and grist mill, and horses, cattle and hogs.

During the past year many families have come in and settled on new homes, and have fields well fenced and cultivated.

The Osages cultivate two thousand acres of land. They own many horses and mules, and some cattle and hogs, and raise various kinds of grain and vegetables.

The affiliated bands of Indians are the Absentee Shawnees, Caddos, Delaware, Kechi, Towacconie, Ionie, Waco, and others. They live on the extreme border, and cultivate fifteen hundred or two thousand acres of land. One of the Delawares has a farm of three hundred and twenty acres.

Now if all these nations and tribes are sustained in their present forms of government, and no violence done to their treaty stipulations, and the land grants that are conditioned on the extinguishment of Indian titles be repealed, in a few years their agricultural department will compare favorable with the States bordering on the Territory that we inhabit and own.

C. COLE,
Chairman Committee.
MARK BEAN, Secretary.

For "The Friend."

He that ruleth his spirit is better than he that taketh a city.

This means individual work; each one of us laboring in the vineyard of our own hearts, and not undertaking to enter into judgment upon the hearts of others without the strongest occasion. Always bearing in mind the impressive language, "they made me the keeper of the vineyards, but mine own vineyard have I not kept." And how is the poor pilgrim in his journey through life to obey this vital command, "keep thine heart with all diligence, for out of it are the issues of life?" Is there any safer or surer path than the lowly one our Great Pattern trod? Meekness, gentleness, humility, patience, forbearance, charity. That charity which "suffereth long and is kind, beareth all things, believeth all things, hopeth all things, endureth all things." Dear friends and fellow travellers to a better country, do we realize the precious promises which are held forth to those who tread this safe and lowly path? It is not merely declared that "the meek shall inherit the earth," but the glorious assurance is added "the meek will He beautify with salvation." How is it that we so seldom hear the "soft answer that turneth away wrath?" Is it not because we neglect "to keep our hearts with all diligence?" Do we believe with the apostles James and Peter, that "God resisteth the proud and giveth grace to the humble?" Do we seek earnestly and reverently to dwell in the patience, the everlasting patience of which it was declared, "Because thou hast kept the word of my patience, I also will keep thee from the hour of temptation which shall come upon all the world to try them that dwell upon the earth?" Dear fellow travellers towards an immortal inheritance, have we not in our pilgrimage known this hour of temptation? Have we not all encountered it? How have we kept this word of his patience? The day is fast passing away with many of us. If we have failed hitherto, let us be up and doing, for "He that ruleth his spirit is better than he that taketh a city." SENEX.

* There were three others signed it.

A South Carolina Waterspout.

The following account is given of a waterspout at Langley, S. C., on the 12th ult. A dense cloud was first seen approaching the pond, being apparently a considerable distance up. Nothing particular was thought of it, the citizens of Langley being at the time occupied in trying to keep cool, a hard thing to do with the thermometer at one hundred degrees in the shade. But presently a startling circumstance occurred. The cloud had halted over the pond and established connection with the latter. A genuine waterspout had in fact been evolved, and an immense quantity of water was rushing skyward through the liquid conductor. When first seen the waterspout was near the dam, and travelled slowly across the pond until it reached the railroad trestle work, a distance of a mile and a quarter from its starting point, when it disappeared and the cloud moved majestically off, carrying with it thousands of gallons of water which had been drawn from the pond. The latter, covering an area of six hundred acres was, in fact, lowered fully two inches. The huge column which joined the upper region to the expanse of water below resembled a cone in form, and rotated horizontally with exceeding rapidity. The marvellous speed with which the column turned impressed the beholder immediately with the idea that it was associatad with a whirlwind. This was most probably the case, as a tremendous wind passed over Augusta from the direction of Langley some hours afterwards. The heavens were brilliant with incessant flashes of lightning after the spout described above had disappeared. There was no rushing noise connected with it, as is the case in some instances. The water underneath the clouds just before the spout formed, was in a state of great agitation. Waves rolled angrily and a perceptible bulge was seen. As the cloud halted a sort of funnel protruded from it and dropped slowly down, becoming larger as it lengthened, the broader portion or base being at the surface of the cloud. When it reached a point about one-fourth the distance between the cloud and the pond the bulge on the surface of the latter rose to meet it, and the two at length joined, when the water from the pond commenced ascending into the cloud, which moved slowly towards the trestle work, the waves in the water—all leaping and tending towards the spout—and the spout itself continued the vertical motion referred to above. The outside of the watery funnel was dark and not well defined, while the centre was much lighter, being rather of a bluish cast. This would seem to indicate that the column was partly hollow, the dark portions representing the sides. There can be no doubt but that the immense quantity of water which was transferred from the pond to the cloud was literally sucked up. The spout finally disappeared, as if it had been drawn bodily up into the cloud, while the latter quietly moved off to parts unknown. Not a drop of rain fell during the occurrence or afterwards. The formation and subsequent motions of the spout are described as having made up a spectacle grand in the extreme. Nothing of the kind was ever before seen in that section. The strangest part of the phenomenon was the fact that the cloud, so burdened with water, moved off without dispensing any of it in the form of rain in the neighborhood.

The following interesting statement was furnished by a civil engineer: Area of mill pond, 600 acres; depth of water diminished, two inches by a water-spout, which prevailed for about ten minutes. The superficial area of one acre is 43 560 square feet; the decimal for the depth of two inches is 0.166 of a foot; hence 43,560x0 16—6966.60 cubic feet is the quantity taken from one acre — and then 6959,60x600 gives us 4,181,769 cubic feet as the whole quantity taken from the mill pond. The cube root of this last is about 161 feet, so a cube of that size would nearly measure the quantity of water taken off. This quantity would make a column ten feet diameter, 53,243 feet high—rather more than ten miles. At 62½ pounds to a cubic foot, the above 4,-181,769 cubic feet would weigh 261,360,000 pounds.

For "The Friend."

John Finch Marsh.

(Continued from page 54.)

29th. Favored this morning with the overshadowing of heavenly good, and my mind clothed with the spirit of prayer; unworthy and undeserving do I feel myself of such mercy in being thus permitted to rejoice in the light of the Lord's countenance, "in whose presence is fulness of joy, at whose right hand there are pleasures for evermore."

10th mo. 15th, 1st day. Having been looking toward going to Wandsworth to-day, to sit with Friends in their meeting, I left home with that intention; but giving way to unprofitable discouragement I returned back, which occasioned me some feeling of regret, and by so doing it is likely I deprived myself of the privilege of the exercise of a little faith.

1855, 4th mo. 13th. The thirty-sixth anniversary of our marriage; many and multiplied have been the blessings and favors received at the Lord's hand during our happy union. Under the sense thereof, our hearts, I trust, have been often raised in the feeling of gratitude and thankfulness to our Heavenly Father, whose goodness and mercy have indeed followed us all the days of our lives, and whose supporting arm has been near and underneath to sustain and uphold in seasons of deep proving, of trial, and of conflict. Surely we have renewed occasion to adopt the words of the Psalmist and say, "What shall I (we) render unto the Lord for all His benefits towards me" (us).

1856, 4th mo. This day, the 13th, memorable as being the thirty-seventh anniversary of our marriage. Many and multiplied have been the mercies and favors continued to us and our beloved daughters since noticing the 13th of 4th mo. in the past year, and renewed desires are, I trust, raised in our hearts that the remainder of our days may be devoted, as ability is afforded, and the requirings may be, to the service of the precious cause of Truth, which hath been and still is near and dear to us. As in years that are past, and in the morning of life, we may have been strengthened, according to our measure, to sow the seed, so also now in the approaching evening of our day we may not withhold the hand. The watchword is important. Eccles. xi., 6.

1859, 5th mo. 28th. To be again returned to our comfortable and quiet home is truly pleasant, and in being so permitted, I trust our hearts are made to feel thankful to our Heavenly Father for the many favors partaken of during our stay in London, and in the attendance of the Yearly Meeting; and for the help afforded both mentally and bodily.

A stripped time with me, and many are the discouragements of the present day. The sight and sense of the low state of things amongst us as a people is affecting and sorrowful; yet amidst all our various shortcomings, and many and great deficiencies, &c., &c., we were at times, during the sittings of this our Annual Meeting, favored with the evidence that we are not as yet a forsaken people.

Discouraging as may seem the present aspect of things as regards our religious Society, my faith is that the Lord will preserve unto himself such a people; that there will be preserved from generation to generation those who in their day will be strengthened to stand for the honor of the precious cause of Truth, yea, to bear a faithful testimony to the simplicity of the Truth as it is in Jesus, who will be enabled to uphold those various precious testimonies committed to us as a People to bear before the world.

Testimonies so precious, and for which our forefathers in the Truth suffered so much in a faithful supporting of them.

"Great is the Lord, and greatly to be praised, and his greatness is unsearchable."

"One generation shall praise Thy works to another, and shall declare Thy mighty acts." —Ps. cxlv., v. 3. 4.

Again, sweetly is set forth the watchful care of our Heavenly Father over His vineyard,—"I the Lord do keep it; I will water it every moment: lest any hurt it, I will keep it night and day."—Isaiah xxvii. 3.

1864, 4th mo. 13th. The forty-fifth anniversary of our marriage. A happy union, having been, as we trust, joined together in and by the Lord, blessed of Him, and in and to each other. Surely we have abundant cause reverently to bless and praise His holy Name for his goodness and mercy which has followed us, not only through this lengthened period of a happy married life, but we may also say from our youth up, yea, from the days of our early childhood; so that under some sense and feeling, the query may well be, not only, what shall we render? but also, what have we hitherto rendered unto Him for all His benefits towards us, for all His manifold gifts and blessings, both spiritual and temporal? Many have been the trials, conflicts, and exercises through which we have had to pass during our journeying along; yet through all, the good and tender hand of the Lord hath been near to sustain and support under them, thus verifying in our experience that He is indeed good, and a "stronghold in the day of trouble, and He knoweth them that trust in Him."

And how especially near is He felt to be in seasons of affliction, in moments of extremity, by all them that put their trust in Him. Ah! it is then that the everlasting arms are felt to be underneath.

It is when the floods are permitted to lift up their voice and their waves, that these are favored to experience "The Lord on high to be mightier" for their help and deliverance, "than the noise of many waters, yea, than the mighty waves of the sea."

And O! how much, how very much, have we to be thankful for, in that at our advanced period of life, so comfortable a share of health and bodily ability is granted us, as also for the continued preservation of our mental powers. I trust there are times when our hearts, tendered under a sense thereof, are clothed with a feeling of gratitude and thankfulness, and of praise to our Heavenly Father, who giveth so richly to partake of His many mercies and blessings.

5th mo. 1st, 1st day. In our forenoon meeting our dear aged friend William Ashby was remarkably engaged in testimony, as he is often favored to be; he also knelt in prayer. It is instructive and encouraging to witness how this beloved Friend appears to be raised up and strengthened to bear a living and faithful testimony to the Truth as it is in Jesus, as I have often thought, before being gathered to his heavenly home. "The righteous shall flourish like the palm tree; he shall grow like a cedar in Lebanon. Those that be planted in the house of the Lord shall flourish in the courts of our God. They shall still bring forth fruit in old age; they shall be fat and flourishing."

1866, 3rd mo. 19th. [Having been] confined to the bed and chamber many days, I had Alfred Carpenter, our medical attendant, to see me, under whose kind judicious treatment, and with the most tender nursing care of my beloved and affectionate wife, it has pleased our Heavenly Father to permit me now to feel much recovered. My thus being laid by, I trust has been a time of some spiritual profit, some searching of heart, and renewal of best strength. Among other precious portions brought to remembrance, that Scripture has, I trust, been realised in experience, "Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace whose mind is staid on Thee, because he trusteth in Thee."

And O how true it is, that in quietness and in confidence the Christian's strength is renewed. Yes, in proportion as the heart and mind is inwardly stayed and fixed on the Lord in quietness and in confidence, that a renewal of spiritual strength is experienced.

24th. Came down to breakfast, afterwards read the ciii. Psalm. It is, indeed, cause of thankfulness my being thus favored with an increase of bodily strength; and O that I may daily experience a renewal thereof spiritually. "The Lord is good unto them that wait for Him, to the soul that seeketh Him."

1866, 9th mo. 19th. I went to the Kent Quarterly Meeting, held at Canterbury.

28th. We left Folkestone. We much enjoyed the quiet time spent there [for change of air], which I trust was beneficial, both mentally and bodily. In attending their little meeting while there, we were, I trust, helped in testimony suitable to the few assembled. Also when walking out, we had at times some interesting conversation with serious persons we occasionally met with.

1867, 4th mo. 2nd. Oh! the preciousness of near access to the throne of grace in prayer, in times of retirement when waiting upon the Lord. Such, I trust, was my favored experience this forenoon.

(To be continued.)

Selected.

HYMN OF PRAISE.

Lo! God is here! let us adore,
And own how dreadful is this place;
Let all within us feel His power
And silent bow before His face!
Who know His power, His grace who prove,
Serve Him with awe, with reverence love.

Lo! God is here! Him day and night
Th' united choirs of angels sing;
To Him, enthroned above all height,
Heaven's host their noblest praises bring;
Disdain not, Lord, our meaner song,
Who praise thee with a stammering tongue.

Gladly the toils of earth we leave,
Wealth, pleasure, fame, for Thee alone;
To Thee our will, soul, flesh, we give—
O take! O seal them for Thine own!
Thou art the God, Thou art the Lord—
Be Thou by all Thy works adored!

Being of Beings! may our praise
Thy courts with grateful fragrance fill;
Still may we stand before Thy face,
Still hear and do Thy sovereign will;
To Thee may all our thoughts arise—
Ceaseless, accepted sacrifice.

As flowers their opening leaves display,
And glad drink in the solar fire,
So may we catch Thy every ray,
So may Thy influence us inspire—
Thou beam of the eternal beam!
Thou purging fire, Thou quickening flame!

Selected.

ECHO.

BY JOHN MONSELL.

I wandered through the forest gloom,
When Autumn winds were drear,
The glories of its summer-bloom
Lay round me dank and sere:
And oh is this, man's fate, I cried,
From all that's bright to sever?
And a far-distant voice replied,
And answer'd—Ever!—ever!

I stood upon the sounding shore,
Beneath me in the bay,
To ride the booming waves no more,
A hopeless shipwreck lay:
And oh are these the ends, I cried,
Of hope and high endeavor?
And a far-distant voice replied,
And answer'd—Ever!—ever!

I sought the woods again, when Spring
Called forth my love and me,
And I was glad, and everything
Was glad as glad could be:
And oh can love e'er fail, I cried,
Life's load to lighten ever?
And a far-distant voice replied,
And answer'd—Never—never!

We wander'd by the glassy tide,
Our happy hearts at ease,
A gallant ship in all its pride
Swept past us in the breeze:
And oh, shall man despair, I cried,
Shall sorrow sadden ever?
And a far-distant voice replied,
While some one whisper'd by my side,
And answer'd Never!—never!

I have ever found it safest and best, under all distresses, temptations and desertions, to be as still, and quiet as possible; not so much as look at the temptation, if we can help it, the boisterous waves, billows and storms pass ever our heads. This counsel I know is easy to give, but hard to learn. However we may be assured of this, the Lord will never utterly leave and forsake his dependent ones. They are to endeavor to keep the word of his patience, in the hour of temptation, but if we are restless and uneasy under distresses, we shall certainly add to our sorrow and affliction.—Joseph Pike.

For "The Friend."

Lactantius.

This early Christian writer and rhetorician was born about the middle of the third century. The place of his nativity is somewhat uncertain, but it is supposed to have been at the Italian city of Firmium on the Adriatic. He was a worthy pupil of Arnobius, the teacher of rhetoric of Sicca-Veneria, near Carthage; but subsequently, his fame having eclipsed even that of his preceptor, he was invited by Diocletian to settle at Nicomedia, the emperor's favorite city on the Bosphorus, and to practice there his art.

Nevertheless—and probably owing to the adversities which his royal patron met with at the hands of Galerius, that rough and hard-featured Dacian of the Danube—Lactantius was reduced to poverty, and while in that strait became a convert to the Christian religion. Then could he speak in the impassioned strain of Arnobius, himself a pagan born: "O blindness! but lately I worshipped images just brought from furnaces, gods made on anvils, and forged with hammers! now, led by so great a Teacher into the ways of truth, I know what these things are." Upon the discomfiture of the enemies of Constantine, the elevation of the latter to the imperial purple, and the proclamation of Christianity as the religion of the empire, the (worldly) fortunes of Lactantius were again in the ascendant, and he became preceptor to Crispus, Constantine's son. He died about A. D. 325, in the province of Gaul.

The principal work of Lactantius is The Divine Institutes, being a treatise in seven books, upon the true religion, wherein are demonstrated the grossness and falsity of the pagan system, and, contrasted therewith, the nature of righteousness and the true worship of God. It is the purpose of the present article, however, merely to consider this primitive Christian's views upon one topic of so voluminous a subject as that which he presented to the consideration of the pagan world, namely, whether self-defence (by implication, national as well as personal,) is permissible in those claiming to be Christ's followers—whether the use of deadly weapons as against a fellow-being is, under any circumstances, divinely warranted.

The extracts which follow are all from the treatise above referred to. It appears conclusive from these that Lactantius, in common with the primitive Christians, as a body, considered that carnal warfare was, for them, not lawful. To present the subject frankly, however, it should be stated that there is extant a relation, attributed to Lactantius, of "the manner in which Persecutors died," and in which are described the lamentable experiences and "just deserts" of Diocletian, Maximian, Maxentius, Galerius, and the other principal enemies of Constantine—referring their tribulations, it is true, to the mighty "hand of God," and yet not condemning Constantine for his endeavors to establish Christianity by the sword. The reader can presently judge for himself what were the convictions of Lactantius upon the latter method of action. Assuming the "relation" to be his writing, we may rightly infer, I think, that in consequence of his position in the emperor's household, he considered it expedient under the circumstances to refer, as he did, the downfall of the pagan opponents of Constantine to the conquering arm of the Almighty. Yet hitherto the conquests of Christianity, rapid and marvellous as they were, were brought about by the "sword of the Spirit." Hence we believe that the victorious Constantine made a grievous mistake in spurning the spiritual weapon; and well might it have been for the world had the eloquent lips of Lactantius told him so.

Speaking of the indignities and tortures imposed upon the Christians, Lactantius intimates to the teachers of the pagan philosophy that "they should undertake the defence of their gods, lest, if our affairs increase—as they do increase daily—theirs should be deserted, together with their shrines and vain mockeries; and since they can effect nothing by violence—for the religion of God is increased the more it is oppressed—let them rather act by the use of reason and exhortations. * * There is no occasion for violence and injury, for religion cannot be imposed by force; the matter must be carried on by words rather than by blows, that the will may be affected. Let them unsheath the weapon of their intellect; if their system is true, let it be asserted. * *. For they are aware that there is nothing among men more excellent than religion, and that this ought to be defended with the whole of our power; but as they are deceived in the matter of religion itself, so also are they in the manner of its defence. For religion is to be defended, not by putting to death, but by dying; not by cruelty, but by patient endurance; not by guilt, but by good faith; for the former belong to evils, but the latter to goods; and it is necessary for that which is good to have place in religion, and not that which is evil. For if you wish to defend religion by bloodshed, and by tortures, and by guilt, it will no longer be defended, but will be polluted and profaned."

"Let us suppose that this duty of defending the good belongs only to the good man. Yet to undertake it, is easy; to fulfil it, is difficult: because when you have committed yourself to a contest and an encounter, the victory is placed at the disposal of God, not in your own power. And for the most part the wicked are more powerful both in number and in combination than the good, so that it is not so much virtue which is necessary to overcome them as good fortune. Is any one ignorant how often the better and the juster side has been overcome? * * It is not virtue, therefore, either to be the enemy of the bad or the defender of the good, because virtue cannot be subject to uncertain chances."

As opposed to the brotherhood of mankind at large, he objects to this saying of a pagan author, Reckon the interests of our country as having the first place. It partly corresponds with the modern patriot's cry, "Our country, right or wrong." Of the fallacy and selfishness of such a plea he thus speaks:

"When the agreement [concord] of men is taken away, virtue has no existence at all; for what are the interests of our country, but the inconveniences of another state or nation? That is, to extend the boundaries which are violently taken from others, to increase the power of the state, to improve the revenues—all which things are not virtues, but the overthrowing of virtues. For, in the first place, the union of human society is taken away, innocence is taken away, the abstaining from the property of another is taken away; lastly, justice itself is taken away, which is unable to bear the tearing asunder of the human race, and wherever arms have glittered, must be banished and exterminated from thence. This saying of Cicero is true; 'But they who say that regard is to be had to citizens, but that it is not to be had to foreigners, these destroy the common society of the human race; and when this is removed, beneficence, liberality, kindness and justice are entirely taken away.' For how can a man be just who injures, who hates, who despoils, who puts to death? Yet they who strive to be serviceable to their country do all these things: for they are ignorant of what this being serviceable is, who think nothing useful, nothing advantageous, but that which can be held by the hand; and this alone cannot be held, because it may be snatched away."

"Whoever, then, has gained for his country these 'goods' (as they themselves call them) —that is, who by the overthrow of cities and the destruction of nations has filled the treasury with money, and has taken lands and enriched his countrymen—he is extolled with praises to the heaven: in him there is said to be the greatest and perfect virtue. And this is the error not only of the people and the ignorant, but also of philosophers, who even give precepts for injustice, lest folly and wickedness should be wanting in discipline and authority. Therefore, when they are speaking of the duties relating to warfare, all that discourse is accommodated neither to justice nor to true virtue, but to this life and to civil institutions."

(To be concluded.)

The Romance of Arithmetic.—The most romantic of all numbers is the figure nine, because it can't be multiplied away or got rid of any how. Whatever you do, it is as sure to turn up again as the body of Eugene Aram's victim. One remarkable property of this figure (said to have been first discovered by W. Green, who died in 1794) is that all through the multiplication table the product of nine comes to nine. Multiply by what you like, and it gives the same result. Begin with twice nine, 18; add the digits together, and 1 and 8 make nine. Three times nine are 27; and 2 and 7 make 9. So it goes on, up to eleven times nine, which gives 99. Very good: add the digits; 9 and 9 are 18, and 1 and 8 are 9. Going on to any extent it is impossible to get rid of the figure nine. Take a couple of instances at random. Three hundred and thirty-nine times nine are 3,051; add up the figures and they give nine. Five thousand and seventy-one times nine are 45,-639; the sums of these digits is 27; and 2 and 7 are 9.

M. de Maivin, found out another queer thing about this number; namely, that if you take any row of figures, and, reversing their order, make a subtraction sum of it, the total is sure to be nine.

For example:

Take 5,071
Reverse the figures 1,705

3,366—18, but 1 and 8—9.

The powerful be-nine influence of these figures is exemplified in another way. Write down any number, as, for example, 7,549,132; subtract therefrom the sum of its digits, and, no matter what figure you start with, the digits of the product will always come to nine:
7,549,132—sum of digits 31.
31

7,549,101—sum of digits 27, but 2 and 7—9.
—Chambers' Journal.

For "The Friend."

During William Penn's visit at Krisheim, in the Paltzgrave's country, Germany, 23rd of 6th month, 1677, he addressed the following salutation of love to Elizabelh, Princess Palatine, and Anna Maria de Hornes, Countess of Hornes, at Herwerden.

"My worthy Friends:—Such as I have, such I give unto you; the dear and tender salutation of light, life, peace, and salvation by Jesus Christ, the blessed Lamb of God, with the unspeakable joy of which, He has replenished my soul at this time, that my cup overfloweth; which is the reward of those who cheerfully drink his cup of tribulations, love the cross, and triumph in all the shame, reproaches and contradictions of the world that do attend it. My God take you by the hand, and gently lead you through all the difficulties of regeneration; and as you have begun to know and love his sweet and tender drawings, so resign the whole conduct of your lives to Him.

"Dispute not away the precious sense that you have of Him, be it as small as a grain of mustard seed, which is the least of all seeds; there is power in it, if you do but believe, to remove the greatest mountains of opposition. Precious is this faith, yea, more precious than the glory and honor of this world that perisheth; it will give courage to go with Christ before Caiaphas and Pilate; yea, to bear his cross without the camp, and to be crucified with him, knowing that the Spirit of God and of glory shall rest upon them. To the inheritors of this faith, is reserved the eternal kingdom of peace and joy in the Holy Ghost.

"Oh! be you of that little flock, unto whom Jesus said, 'Fear not, for it is my Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom;' and to be of this flock, you must become harmless; and to become harmless, you must hear and follow the Lamb of God; as He is that blessed Light which discovereth and condemneth all the unfruitful works of darkness, and maketh harmless as a dove; which word, all, leaveth not one peccadillo or circumstance undiscovered or unjudged; and the word darkness, taketh in the whole night of apostacy; and the word unfruitful, is a plain judgment against all those dark works. Wherefore, out of them all come, and be you separated; and God will give you a crown of life, which shall never fade away.

"Oh! the lowness and meanness of those spirits that despise or neglect the joys and glories of immortality, for the sake of the things which are seen, that are but temporal; debasing the nobility of their souls, abandoning the government of the divine Spirit, and embracing with all ardency of affection the sensual pleasures of this life; but such as persevere therein, shall not enter into God's rest forever.

"But this is not all that hindereth and obstructeth in the holy way of blessedness; for there is the world's fear, as well as the world's joy that obstructeth many, or else Christ had not said, 'Fear not,' to his little flock. The shame of the cross is a yoke too uneasy, and a burden too heavy, for flesh and blood to bear, it is true; but therefore, shall flesh and blood never enter into the kingdom of God. And not to them that are born of the flesh, but to those that are born of the Spirit through the word of regeneration, is appointed the kingdom, and that throne which shall judge the twelve tribes of Israel, and all the world.

The Lord perfect what He hath begun in you, and give you dominion over the love and fear of this world. And, my friends, if you would profit in the way of God, despise not the day of small things in yourselves: know this, that to desire and sincerely to breathe after the Lord, is a blessed state. You must seek before you find. Do you believe? make not haste; extinguish not those small beginnings by an over-earnest or impatient desire of victory. God's time is the best time; be you faithful, and your conflict shall end with glory to God, and the reward of peace to your own souls. Therefore love the judgment, and love the fire; start not aside, neither flinch from the scorchings of it, for it will purify and refine you, as gold seven times tried; then cometh the stamp and seal of the Lord upon his own vessel, Holiness to Him forever; which He never gave, nor will give, to reprobate silver, the state of the religious worshippers of the world. And herein be comforted, that Zion shall be redeemed through judgment, and her converts through righteousness; and after the appointed time of mourning is over, the Lord will give beauty for ashes, the oil of joy for mourning, and the garment of praise for the spirit of heaviness.' Then shall you be able to say, 'Who is he that condemneth us? God hath justified us; there is no condemnation to us that are in Christ Jesus, who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit.'

"Wherefore, my dear friends, walk not only not after the fleshly lusts, but also not after the fleshly religions and worship of the world; for that which is not born of the Spirit is flesh, and all flesh shall wither as the grass, and the beauty of it shall fade away as the flower of the field before God's Sun that is risen, and rising. But the Word of the Lord in which is life, and that life the light of men, shall endure forever, and give life eternal to them that love and walk in the light. And I entreat you, by the love you have for Jesus, have a care how you touch with fleshly births, or say amen, by word or practice, to that which is not born of the Spirit; for God is not to be found of that, in yourselves or others, which calleth him Father, and He hath never begotten it in them; that latitude and conformity is not of God, but secretly grieveth his Spirit, and obstructeth the growth of the soul in its acquaintance and intimate communion with the Lord. 'Without me,' saith Jesus, 'you can do nothing;' and 'all that came before me are theives and robbers.' If so, what are they that pray, and preach, and sing without Jesus, and follow not him in those duties, but even crucify him in them? Oh that I may find in you an ear to hear, and heart to perceive and embrace these truths of Jesus!

"And I can say I have great cause to hope, and patiently to wait till the salvation of God be further revealed to you, and the whole family; with whom I must acknowledge, I was abundantly refreshed and comforted, in that God in measure made known the riches of his grace and operation of his celestial power to you; and his witness shall dwell with you, if we never see you more, that God magnified his own strength in our weakness. With Him we leave our travails, affectionately recommending you to his holy Spirit of grace, that you may be conformed to the image of his own dear Son, who is able and ready to preserve you. Oh, stay your minds upon Him, and He will keep you in perfect peace, and abide with you forever! The Almighty take you into his holy protection, now and forever.

"I am your true friend, ready to serve you with fervent love in the will of God.

WILLIAM PENN."

The Unknown God.

"I found an altar with this inscription, 'To the Unknown God.'"—Acts xvii. 23.

Diogenes Laertius, who wrote about the year 210 B. C., in the History of Epimenides, who is supposed to have flourished nearly six hundred years before Christ, relates of him, that being invited to Athens for the purpose, he delivered the city from a pestilence in this manner:—

"Taking several sheep, some black, others white, he had them up to the Areopagus, and then let them go where they would, and gave orders to those who followed them, wherever any of them should lie down, to sacrifice it to the god to whom it belonged; and so the plague ceased. Hence," says the historian, "it has come to pass, that to this present time may be found in the boroughs of the Athenians anonymous altars, a memorial of the expiation then made."

These altars, it may be presumed, were called anonymous, because there was not the name of any particular deity inscribed upon them. Pausanias, who wrote before the end of the second century, in his description of Athens, having mentioned an altar to Jupiter Olympus, adds, "And nigh unto it is an altar of unknown gods." Lucian, who wrote about the year 170, makes Critias swear by the unknown god of Athens: and afterwards has these words:—"But let us find out the unknown god of Athens; and stretching our hands to heaven offer him our praises and thanksgivings." This is a very curious and a very important coincidence. It appears beyond controversy, that altars with this inscription were existing at Athens at the time when St. Paul is alleged to have been there. It seems also, (which is very worthy of observation), that this inscription was peculiar to Athenians. There is no evidence that there were altars inscribed "To the unknown God" in any other country. Supposing the history of St. Paul to have been a fable, how is it possible that such a writer as the author of the Acts of the Apostles was should hit upon a circumstance so extraordinary, and introduce it by an allusion so suitable to St. Paul's office and character?—Day of Days.

A Farmer's Opposition to the Granges.

The following letter is from the New York Tribune:

Believing that your paper is open for the investigation of subjects pertaining to the national welfare and prosperity, and believing that the subject of farmers' organizations would be a suitable theme at present, I would like to call the attention of my brother farmers to a few facts and figures in regard to the grange epizootic which is at present spreading over this country. And I would like to ask a few questions for their candid thought and reflection. In the first place, who got up this grange movement? Are they farmers? Was this grange organization formed for the express purpose of benefiting the farmers? Or, was it to benefit the pockets of a few interested men, who are not farmers? I present these questions in consideration of the fact that everything that is good and honest will not shrink from the light of investigation. Now, how does it happen that it requires so much money to run this machine? Perhaps not one in a thousand has paid any attention to this part of the question, and has any idea of the amount to which we have been and are being victimized by this concern. In order to show what an enormous amount of money the farmers have paid into this grange organization, we can easily make a calculation by taking the number of granges, as stated by master Adams at the National convention at St. Louis, 120,000. Estimating 50 members to each grange, we have 600,000 grangers. About one half of this number (300,000) joined as charter members; about three-fourths, 225,000 (men), $3 each, $675,000: the other one-fourth, 75,000 (women) at 50 cents each, $37.500. The other 300,000 members, joining after the grange is organized, must pay higher rates, notwithstanding the motto, "equal rights to all, special privileges to none;" so that we have 225,000 men at $5 each, $1,125,000; 75,000 women, at $2 each, $150,000. The next item is monthly dues, 10 cents per month, or $1.20 for one year for each granger, for 600,000 grangers, $720,000. Total, $2,707,500.

$2,707,500! Now the questions are, what is the object? who is benefited? and where does this enormous sum of money go to? A word to the wise is sufficient. "Do men light a candle and put it under a bushel?" Must we organize secret societies, meet in private, draw curtains over the windows, and place a guard at the door, as if we were afraid or ashamed to have others see us at work in this "glorious cause?" Brother farmers and brother grangers, I have been through this grange humbug, and know by experience whereof I speak. I might point out many inconsistencies and absurdities, but for the present let this suffice. But it may be asked, don't you believe in farmers' organizations? Yes; I believe in farmers' clubs and associations. And I know from actual experience that the farmers can and do carry on successful organizations. J. F. DUNCKLEE.

Girard, Ill., May 1st, 1874.

A Warning to Young Men.—Says the New York correspondent of the Buffalo Express: Not long ago a young man, a clerk in a shipping house in this city, became acquainted with one of those tempters. The clerk belonged to a most excellent family, had been well brought up, and no one thought him capable of doing a dishonest deed. His tempter was also a young man, and one of unusual graces of manner and person. One day he got his victim to ship a lot of goods to his address in Jersey City, and destroyed the receipt. They sold the goods and shared the proceeds of the sale. The man who had been tempted felt the stings of conscience, and when his friend asked him to do the deed again he refused. But it was of no use. The "friend" told him if he did not do as he was bid he would expose him. Anything rather than that! He destroyed another receipt and another, and for a whole year kept up this system of peculation. He never received a cent of the guilty money after the first transaction, for the sharper had him in his power, and merely used him as a tool. Finally the clerk's dishonesty was discovered, and he was brought to trial. He appeared to find relief in his arrest, and said that anything was better than the agony of suspense that he had been in for the past year; that he was ashamed to go home to his mother and sister at night, and could not look an honest man in the face. Now it was out, he could make a clean breast of it, which he did. The court upon learning the facts of the case, released the young clerk and arrested the real culprit, to whom was dealt the full rigor of the law. During the year the swindling was going on, $3,000 worth of goods had been shipped to this receiver in Jersey City; and the trial further brought to light the fact, that the same man had several other places where he received goods from clerks whom he had similarly entrapped.

No Compromise.—As I grow older as a parent, my views are changing fast as to the degree of conformity to the world which we should allow to our children. I am horror-struck to count up the profligate children of pious persons and even ministers. The door at which these influences enter, which countervail parental instruction and example, I am persuaded, is yielding to the ways of good society; by dress, books, and amusements, an atmosphere is formed which is not that of Christianity. More than ever do I feel that our families must stand in a kind but determined opposition to the fashions of the world, breasting the waves like the Eddystone light-house. And I have found nothing yet which requires more courage and independence than to rise even a little, but decidedly, above the par of the religious world aronnd us. Surely, the way in which we commonly go on is not that way of self-denial and sacrifice and cross-bearing which the New Testament talks of. Then is the offence of the cross ceased. Our slender influence on the circles of our friends is often to be traced to our leaving so little difference between us.—J. W. Alexander.

The Wild Sheep of California.—I have been greatly interested in studying their habits during the last four years, while engaged in the work of exploring these high regions. In spring and summer the males form separate bands. They are usually met in small flocks, numbering from three to twenty, feeding along the edges of the glacier meadows or resting among the castle-like crags of lofty summits; and, whether feeding or resting, or scaling wild cliffs for pleasure, their noble forms, the very embodiment of muscular beauty, never fail to strike the beholder with liveliest admiration. Their resting places seem to be chosen with reference to sunshine and a wide outlook, and most of all, to safety from the attacks of wolves. Their feeding grounds are among the most beautiful of the wild Sierra gardens, bright with daisies and gentians and mats of blooming shrubs.

These are hidden away high on the sides of rough canyons, where light is abundant, or down in the valleys, along lake borders and stream banks, where the plushy turf is greenest and the purple heather grows. Sweet grasses also grow in these happy Alpine gardens, but the wild sheep eats little besides the spicy leaves and shoots of the various shrubs and bushes, perhaps relishing both their taste and beauty, although tame men are slow to suspect wild sheep of seeing more than grass. When winter storms fall, decking their summer pastures in the lavish bloom of snow, then, like the blue birds and robins, our brave sheep gather and go to warmer climates, usually descending the eastern flank of the range to the narrow-birch-filled gorges that open into the sage plains, where snow never falls to any great depth, the elevation above the sea being about from 5000 to 7000 feet. Here they sojourn until spring sunshine unlocks the canyons and warms the pastures of their glorious Alps.

In the months of June and July they bring forth their young, in the most solitary and inaccessible crags, far above the nest of the eagle. I have frequently come upon the beds of the ewes and lambs at an elevation of from 12,000 to 13,000 feet above sea-level. These beds consist simply of an oval-shaped hollow, pawed out among loose disintegrated rock-chips and sand, upon some sunny spot commanding a good out-look, and partially sheltered from the winds that sweep passionately across those lofty crags almost without intermission. Such is the cradle of the little mountaineer, aloft in the sky, rocked in storms, curtained in clouds, sleeping in thin icy air; but, wrapped in his hairy coat, nourished by a warm, strong mother, defended from the talons of the eagle and the teeth of the sly coyote, the bonnie lamb grows apace. He learns to nibble the purple daisy and leaves of the white spiræa; his horns begin to shoot, and ere summer is done, he is strong and agile, and goes forth with the flock, shepherded by the same Divine love that tends the more helpless human lamb in its warm cradle by the fireside.—Overland Monthly.

Lived it Down.—An honest blacksmith was once grossly insulted and his character infamously defamed. Friends advised him to seek redress by means of law, but to one and all he replied, "No; I will go to my forge and there in six months I will have worked out such a character and earned such a name as all the judges, law courts and lawyers, in the world could not give me." He was right. It is by honest labor, manly courage, and a conscience void of offence that we assert our true dignity and prove our honesty and respectability.

Of all the evils to public liberty, war is perhaps the most to be dreaded because it comprises and develops the genius of every other. War is the parent of armies; from these proceed debts and taxes, and armies and debts and taxes are the known instruments for bringing the many under the dominion of the few.—Madison.

THE FRIEND.

TENTH MONTH 10, 1874.

The apostle exhorted the believers in his day to exercise charity or love towards each other; and this exhortation is applicable to us of the present time; and especially to those, who in any way, are concerned to spread religious truth among men, either vocally or through the medium of the pen. For how can we availingly invite others to enlist under the banner of the Prince of Peace, if we ourselves are not clad in His armor—even that spirit of love which seeks the welfare and salvation of all? Let the example and precepts of our Saviour and His apostles, and the teaching of sound reason also, show that this is not inconsistent with an earnest contending "for the faith once delivered to the saints," or with rebuking "sharply" those who may need such reproof; though all upon whom such services are laid had need to keep a double watch over their spirits, and not to mistake the heat of their own tempers for that holy zeal inspired by pure love of the Truth.

When we criticise the course of those who differ in judgment from us, especially when the matters at issue are such as strongly affect the best interests of our religious Society, it is easy for us to impute to them motives which do not actuate them, or to exaggerate the real defects that may be apparent, and so to condemn that which is mainly and substantially right.

We have had many evidences of this weakness of human nature, in the religious controversies that have arisen in our Society during the last thirty or forty years, and which still agitate it. At the present time, the evidences of departure from our ancient principles and practices, the preaching of new doctrines at variance with our long established views, the sanctioning of many things that were formerly discouraged, and the widespread influence of innovation and change, are so open and notorious, that they are admitted on all hands. But many of us can remember, that when these things were in their infancy, and some of the clear-sighted watchmen on the walls of our Zion saw the tendency of the times, and were constrained to raise a warning voice to the flock, these faithful servants were much misjudged. They were spoken of as troublers of Israel, as fault-finders, prejudiced, deficient in Christian charity, and influenced by improper motives. Those who thus condemned them were probably not aware that this very condemnation evidenced the existence in the speakers of the faults which they were ascribing to others; for in their haste, they mistook honest zeal for untempered earnestness, religious concern for party spirit, and faithful dealing for prejudiced utterances.

The same misconception of the motives which influenced these defenders of the faith, of a generation now nearly passed away, has attached in measure to those on whom their mantle has fallen, and who in all parts of our Society have felt bound to oppose changes which they believed destructive to its true interests. Our own Yearly Meeting, as a body, has shared in the suffering caused by this misunderstanding of its position. When it has taken a step, or come to a decision, which, with the light afforded, it believed to be most conducive to the welfare of its own members or of the Society at large, and in accordance with the will of the Head of the Church; it has often had to bear serious charges of being governed by an intolerant, exclusive, self-righteous spirit, and not actuated by love for the brethren, &c. Such charges have even been made by some of its own members, who have thus been the instruments of spreading abroad in other portions of our Society an incorrect impression of its real position and feelings.

We can freely admit that an increased degree of fervent love for the brethren is greatly to be desired among us, but we are thankful to believe that there does exist in Philadelphia Yearly Meeting, among those who are fully in unity with the general course of its proceedings, a warm desire for the preservation of Friends everywhere on our original doctrines; an earnest concern that these doctrines should be exemplified in the life and conversation of those who profess them; and a feeling of sympathy with those in other places who are struggling to maintain the same precious faith. There are some within its borders who know what it is to mourn over the desolations of Zion, and to wrestle for the pouring forth of a blessing upon her —even such an effectual visitation of the Spirit of grace as may awaken the careless ones, show their dangerous condition to those who are trusting in a faith of their own begetting, and settle all in a patient walking with the Light of Christ in the heart, through whose operations they may come to receive living faith in their Saviour, and know Him to be their Ruler, Guide and Teacher.

SUMMARY OF EVENTS.

FOREIGN.—London dispatches of the 2nd state that four tons of gunpowder in a barge exploded that morning on Regent's eanal, near the Zoological Garden. The bridges and houses in the vicinity were shattered, a number of persons were killed and many hurt; some of the animals in the Zoological Garden were also destroyed. The report of the explosion was heard twenty miles from the place where it occurred. Many trees were uprooted, and houses two miles distant from the eanal were shattered. Several persons, it is stated, died from fright.

The steamer Faraday had returned to England after an unsuccessful attempt to lay the direct cable. It broke in deep water, and all attempts to recover the eable failed. A buoy was then placed to mark the spot and the Faraday returned to England for coal and provisions. When these are obtained she will resume the attempt to find the submerged portion and complete her task.

The London Times contradicts the statement recently eurrent that the Queen has paid the debts of the Prince of Wales. The debts do not amount to much more than one-third of his annual income. It is true that the Prince has not lived within his income, but the excess is provided from a fund which is his private property. of Cornwall, which accumulated during his minority.

It is estimated that Great Britain has raised this year more than half of the bread-stuffs required by its popnlation, and will not have to spend abroad more than one hundred millions of dollars to supply the deficiency. In the two previous years the outlay for foreign grain averaged about $180,000,000 annually.

London, 10th mo. 5th.—U. S. 5 per cent. bonds, 104. The rate of discount in the open market for three month's bills is 3 per cent., which is the same as the Bank of England ratc.

Liverpool.—Uplands cotton, 8 a 8¼*d.*; Orleans, 8⅜*d.*

Layard, Minister of Great Britain, and Chandordy, the newly appointed Minister of France, were received by the Spanish President, Serrano, on the 4th inst. Layard, on presenting his credentials, declared his confidence in the triumph of the Spanish government in the present crisis. Both ministers addressed Serrano as President of the Exeeutive power, and in their speeehes made no allusion to the Republic.

Advices from the north of Spain report that several of the Carlist leaders have abandoned the cause on account of disagreements with Don Carlos' Minister of War. Others have surrendered to the Republican troops, and it is said the Carlist junta in Biscay demand the restoration of peace.

The late military operations of the Carlists have not been successful.

It is stated on the authority of one of the most eminent political economists in France that the Franco-Prussian war, and its consequences, cost Franee 9 milliards 288 millions of francs. This vast sum was obtained in the following manner: First, 6 milliards 738 millions were raised by means of loans; second, 1 milliard 530 millions were borrowed from the Bank of France; and third, 1 milliard and 20 millions of francs were furnished by means of direct and indirect taxation.

Elections for Councils General were held in France on the 4th inst. The Republicans gained some Departments but lost others. On the whole but little change has been made in the political complexion of the councils. Elections have been ordered in three of the Departments of France, on the 8th of next month, to fill vacant seats in the Assembly.

The Pope has written a conciliatory and friendly letter to President MacMahon, acknowledging the efforts of France in his favor. The letter was written in reply to an announcement of the withdrawal of the man-of-war Orenoque, from Civita Vecchia. The Pope recognized the reasons for this measure, but declares he would not have used the vessel to quit Rome under any circumstances.

The Danish government has sent a note to Berlin with reference to the expulsion of Danes from Schleswig. The note cites treaties by virtue of which Danish subjects in Prussia are to enjoy all the privileges accorded to the most favored nations, and seeks to show that they are liable to expulsion only for open violation of the laws.

The King of Italy has issued a deeree dissolving the Chamber of Deputies and ordering new elections to be held on the 8th and 15th proximo. Parliament is convened to meet on the 23d of Eleventh month.

Late advices contain accounts of the fearful hurricane which recently swept over southern Japan. The loss to shipping was very great. Upward of 300 persons were killed by being buried in the ruins of dwellings which werc overthrown, and by shipwreck. Fully 7000 houses were destroyed.

All the Enropean governments represented in the Postal Congress, except France, have instructed their delegates to sign the Convention, on condition that it receive the support and ratification of the United States. France has reserved the right to hereafter examine the conditions before signing the Convention.

The annual fair in Nijni Novgorod is this year more numerously attended than ever. The business done at the fair has inereased from 30,000,000 roubles to 150,000,000 roubles.

The Swiss Federal Council has approved the selection of the city of Berne as the location for international postal-offices.

Advices from Peru to the 14th ult., state that a resolution had been taken by the Ministry to declare closed all deposits of guano on the Chincha Islands, and the wooden buildings and other property on the islands are to be taken away.

An insurrection has broken out in Buenos Ayres in consequence of the alleged fraudulent conduct of the late Presidential elections. General Mitre is at the head of the insurgents.

The anniversary of Mexican Independence was cele- [illegible] ceremony. The President's message gives a most satisfactory account of the condition of the Republic. It says internal peace is becoming more firmly established, and every day the relations with friendly foreign nations are increasing in cordiality. The government will continue with energy its efforts to promote internal improvements.

Count Von Arnim, the late German Minister at Paris, has been arrested on the charge of embezzling important State papers.

A Cairo dispatch of the 5th inst. says: The water in the Nile is rising above the usual point reached in the periodical overflow, and there are grave fears of a disastrous inundation. The government is lending its assistance to prevent damage to the eountry.

UNITED STATES.— The monthly debt statement shows a reduction of the publie debt during the Ninth month, of $435,417. The coin balance in the Treasury was $77,469,678, and currency $16,225,840.

The interments in Philadelphia last week numbered 268. The mean temperature of the Ninth month, by the Pennsylvania Hospital record, was 70.12 deg.; highest during the month 89 deg., and the lowest 53 deg. Amount of rain during the month 3.98 inches. The average of the mean temperature of the 9th month for the past 85 years is given as 66.38 deg., the highest mean during that entire period was in 1865, 72.68 deg, the lowest occurred in 1840, 60 deg. The rain fall of the first nine months of 1874 has been 34.72 inches, against 45.60 inches in the corresponding months, 1873.

The "Grand Hotel," at Saratoga, was destroyed by fire on the first inst. The building was worth $300,000, and was insured for $200,000.

Reports received at the Agricultural Department say that the wheat crop will nearly average that of last year. None of the large corn-producing States reach the average. There will be a fair erop of oats, potatoes and hay, but less than half a erop of tobacco.

The iron industry appears to be steadily growing in importance. The number of blast furnaces now reported in the United States is 681, and of rolling mills 343, besides which there are 51 steel works, 37 forges and 47 bloomeries.

The city of New York has ten business edifices the assessed value of which is $10,465,600. The annual taxes on these buildings amount to $290.580. Alexander T. Stewart pays a yearly tax of $72,800 on three buildings.

The Markets, &c.—The following were the quotations on the 5th inst. New York. — American gold 110. U. S. 6's 1881, registered, 117¼; do. coupon, 118; do. 1868, registered, 116⅝; do. coupon, 117½; do. 5 per cents, 112½. Superfine flour, $4.50 a $4.75; State extra, $5.05 a $5.30; finer brands, $5.50 a $10.50. White Kentucky and Michigan wheat, $1.40; red western, $1.22 a $1.23; No. 2 Milwaukie spring, $1.14; No. 3 Chicago spring, $1.10. Oats 60 a 65 cts. Rye, 92 cts. Western mixed corn, 96 a 97 ets.; yellow, 97½ a 98 cts.; white, $1 a $1.03. Philadelphia.—Cotton, 15½ a 16 cts. for uplands and New Orleans. Superfine flour, $3.50 a $4.00; extras, $4 a $4.50; finer brands, $5 a $8.75. White wheat, $1.30 a $1.37; amber, $1.22 a $1.25; red, $1.15 a $1.22. Rye, $1.02. Yellow and mixed corn, $1.01 a $1.02. Oats, 60 a 65 cts. Lard, 14½ a 15 cts. Clover seed, 10½ a 11 cts. Sales of beef cattle at 4 a 5½ cts. per lb. gross for common, and 6 a 8 cts. for fair to choice. Receipts 4,000 head. Good sheep sold at 5½ a 6 cts. per lb. gross, and hogs at $10.25 a $11 per 100 lb. net. for corn fed. Baltimore.—No. 1 western red wheat, $1.24 a $1.25; No. 2 do., $1.21 a $1.23; amber Maryland, $1.32 a $1.35. White corn, $1.03 a $1.05; yellow, $1; western mixed, 96 a 97 cts. Oats, 62 a 67 ets. Chicago.—No. 1 Spring wheat, 96 cts.; No. 2 do., 91½ cts.; No. 3 do. 86 a 87½ cts. No. 2 mixed corn, 80½ cts. Oats, 49½ cts. No. 2 spring barley, $1.07. Lard, 14½ cts.

WESTTOWN BOARDING SCHOOL.

The Winter Session commences on Seeond day, the 2nd of Eleventh month. Parents and others intending to send pupils will please make early application to BENJAMIN W. PASSMORE, Sup't, (Address Street Road P. O., Chester Co., Pa.,) or to CHARLES J. ALLEN, Treasurer, No. 304 Arch Street, Philada.

FRIENDS' ASYLUM FOR THE INSANE.

Near Frankford, (Twenty-third Ward,) Philadelphia.

Physician and Superintendent—JOSHUA H. WORTHINGTON, M. D.

Applications for the Admission of Patients may be made to the Superintendent, or to any of the Board of Managers.

DIED, 8th mo. 1st, 1874, at his residence, Fairhaven, Mass., ELNATHAN E. DELANO, aged 66 years, 10 months and 19 days, a member and minister of New Bedford Monthly Meeting. Having in early life submitted to the sanctifying power of Divine Grace, he was put in trust with the gospel, and as a disciple of the Lord, was concerned to follow Him in the narrow path of self-denial. During the last few years of his life, he was mostly confined to his house; yet he sweetly magnified that grace which had been sufficient for him through all, and which enabled him, often in severe suffering, to give utterance to thanksgiving and praise. After expressing the preciousness of an opportunity by his dying bed, with gratitude and love he ejaculated, "Marvellous! Marvellous! Is it not marvellous after all my deviations and shortcomings to be aeeepted of the Father." Thus with robes washed and made white in the blood of the Lamb, was an entranee ministered unto him abundantly into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ.

——, on the 23d of 8th month, 1874, at his residence in West Chester, Chester eounty, Pa., ABRAHAM PENNELL, in the 72d year of his age, a member of Birmingham Monthly and West Chester Partieular Meeting. "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth; yea, saith the spirit, that they may rest from their labors, and their works do follow them."

——, on the morning of the 6th of 9th month, 1874, at his residence, JAMES PENNELL, in the 68th year of his age, a member of Middletown Particular and Chester Monthly Meeting, Delaware county, Pa. During his life he evinced a zealous eare in the attendanee of all our religious meetings, both for worship and discipline. His illness, whieh was severe and of short duration, was borne with Christian patience and resignation to the Divine will, and his friends have the eonsoling belief that through infinite mercy he is now receiving the reward of all those who faithfully serve God in their day and generation.

——, on the 15th of 9th mo. 1874, at her residence in Plainfield, N. J., CHARITY COCKS, widow, in the 87th year of her age, an esteemed member of Rahway and Plainfield Monthly and Plainfield Particular Meeting of Friends.

WILLIAM H. PILE, PRINTER,
No. 422 Walnut Street.

THE FRIEND.

A RELIGIOUS AND LITERARY JOURNAL.

VOL. XLVIII. SEVENTH-DAY, TENTH MONTH 17, 1874. NO. 9.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY.

Price Two Dollars per annum, if paid in advance. Two dollars and fifty cents, if not paid in advance.

Subscriptions and Payments received by

JOHN S. STOKES,

AT NO. 116 NORTH FOURTH STREET, UP STAIRS.

PHILADELPHIA.

Postage, when paid quarterly in advance, five cents.

For "The Friend."

Lactantius.

(Concluded from page 61.)

He proceeds to show that even the palpable guiltiness and rancorous behaviour of our enemies, do not suffice as grounds for hating them, but that these rather become an occasion for the manifestation of kindness, by reason of our common brotherhood.

"Kindness is the greatest bond of human society; and he who has broken this is to be deemed impious, and a parricide. For if we all derive our origin from one man, whom God created, we are plainly of one blood; and therefore it must be considered the greatest wickedness to hate a man, even though guilty. On which account God has enjoined that enmities are never to be contracted by us, but that they are always to be removed, so that we soothe those who are our enemies, by reminding them of their relationship. Likewise, if we are all inspired and animated by one God, what else are we than brothers? And, indeed, the more closely united, because we are united in soul, rather than in body Accordingly Lucretius does not err when he says: 'In short we are all sprung from a heavenly seed—all have that same father.' Therefore, they are to be accounted as savage beasts who injure man; who, in opposition to every law and right of human nature, plunder, torture, slay and banish. On account of this relationship of brotherhood, God teaches us never to do evil, but always good."

"True bravery is shown to consist in fulfilling the commands of God to the uttermost, even though we suffer humiliation and contempt in the eyes of the world. But this is a narrow way, which is very hard to the fleshly mind; it is stooping down to bear the very cross which Christ bore; and hence it not only finds little acceptance with the world, but is too often practically contemned by Christ's professed disciples."

"If any one reviles, he must answer him with a blessing; he himself must never revile, that no evil word may proceed out of the mouth of a man who reverences the good Word [i. e., Jesus Christ, the Word of God.] Moreover, he must also diligently take care, lest by any fault of his he should at any time make an enemy; and if any one should be so shameless as to inflict injury on a good and just man, the latter must bear it with calmness and moderation, and not take upon himself his revenge, but reserve it for the judgment of God. And this precept is not limited to this—that he should not himself inflict injury, but that he should not avenge it when inflicted on himself. For there sits on the judgment-seat a very great and impartial Judge, the observer and witness of all. Let him prefer Him to man; let him rather choose that He should pronounce judgment respecting his cause, whose sentence no one can escape, either by the advocacy of any one or by favor. Thus it comes to pass that a just man is an object of contempt to all; and because it will be thought that he is unable to defend himself, he will be regarded as slothful and inactive; but if any one shall have avenged himself upon his enemy, he is judged a man of spirit and activity—all honor and reverence him."

Lactantius has somewhat to say upon the following declaration of Cicero, that "He is a good man who profits those whom he can, and injures no one unless provoked by injury." And since this plea of self-defence is the only one which well-inclined men can possibly advance in extenuation of carnal strife, the rejoinder of Lactantius to the words of the great orator is given pretty fully, that we may recognize the golden line in the gospel rule which places it far above the excellent Roman maxim of the renowned Tully.

"Oh, how he marred a simple and true statement, by the addition of two words! For what need was there of adding these words, 'unless provoked by injury?' That he might append vice as a most disgraceful tail to a good man, and might represent him as without patience, which is the greatest of all virtues. He said that a good man would inflict injuries if he were provoked; now, he must necessarily lose the name of a good man from this very circumstance, if he shall inflict injury. For it is not less the part of a bad man to return an injury than to inflict it. For from what source do contests, from what source do fightings and contentions arise among men, except that impatience opposed to injustice often excites great tempests? But if you meet injustice with patience, than which virtue nothing can be found more true, nothing more worthy of a man, it will immediately be extinguished as though you should pour water upon a fire. But, if that injunction which provokes opposition has met with impatience equal to itself, as though overspread with oil, it will excite so great a conflagration that no stream can extinguish it, but only the shedding of blood. Great, therefore, is the advantage of patience, of which the wise man [Cicero] would deprive the good man. For this alone causes that no evil happens; and if it should be given to all, there will be no wickedness and no fraud in the affairs of men. What, therefore, can be so calamitous to a good man, so opposed to his character, as to let loose the reins of anger, which deprives him not only of the title of a good man, but even of a man; since to injure another, as he himself most truly says, is not in accordance with the nature of man? For if you provoke cattle or horses, they turn against you either with their hoof or their horn; and serpents and wild beasts, unless you pursue them that you may kill them, give no trouble. And to return to examples of men—even the inexperienced and the foolish, if at any time they receive an injury, are led by a blind and irrational fury, and endeavor to retaliate upon those who injure them. In what respect then does the wise and good man differ from the evil and foolish, except that he has invincible patience, of which the foolish are destitute; except that he knows how to govern himself, and to mitigate his anger, which those, because they are without virtue, are unable to curb? But this circumstance manifestly deceived him [Cicero,] because, when inquiry is made respecting virtue, he thought that it is the part of virtue to conquer in every kind of condition. Nor was he able in any way to see, that a man who gives way to grief and anger, and who indulges these affections against which he ought rather to struggle, and who rushes wherever injustice shall have called him, does not fulfil the duty of virtue. For he who endeavors to return an injury, desires to imitate that very person by whom he has been injured. Thus he who imitates a bad man can by no means be good * * And to show how pernicious this repayment of insult is, and what carnage it is accustomed to produce, from what can a more befitting example be sought than from the most melancholy disaster of the teacher himself, who, while he desired to obey these precepts of the philosophers, destroyed himself?* Therefore it is not the part of a wise and good man to wish to contend, since to conquer is not in our power, and every contest is doubtful; but it is the part of a wise and excellent man not to wish to remove his adversary, which cannot be done without guilt and danger, but to put an end to the contest itself, which may be done with advantage and with justice."

The author of the Divine Institutes, had he lived in our day, would doubtless have been a zealous advocate of the plan of International Arbitration, as is evident from the foregoing citation. May his words even now have weight! Furthermore, that he believed that not only carnal warfare, but also capital punishment, were opposed to the spirit of Christ's teachings, is apparent from the following:

"When God forbids us to kill, He not only prohibits us from open violence, which is not even allowed by the public laws, but He warns us against the commission of those things which are esteemed lawful among men. Thus it will be neither lawful for a just man to engage in warfare, since his warfare is justice itself, nor to accuse any one of a capital charge, because it makes no difference whether you put a man to death by word, or rather by the sword, since it is the act of putting to death itself which is prohibited. Therefore, with regard to this precept of God, there ought to be no exception at all; but that it is always unlawful to put to death a man, whom God willed to be a sacred animal."

* Alluding to the fatal sequence of his Philippics against Marc Antony.

"What then, or where, or of what character is piety? Truly it is among those who are ignorant of wars, who maintain concord with all, who are friendly even to their enemies, who love all men as brethren, who know how to restrain their anger, and to soothe every passion of the mind with calm government!"

"Why should he [a just man] carry on war, and mix himself with the passions of others, when his mind is engaged in perpetual peace with men? Will he be delighted with foreign merchandize, or with human blood, who does not know how to seek gain [selfishly,] who is satisfied with his mode of living, and considers it unlawful not only himself to commit slaughter, but to be present with those who do it and to behold it?" L.

For "The Friend."

A brief account of Thomas Carleton, who was convinced in the year 1663, in his own words.

I was early visited by the love and tender mercy of the Lord, which often presented unto me my state and manner of life, and by the same love and light He made known unto me that his way and worship was a purer, holier way, and cleaner life than I had yet attained to. Thus I was induced to seek after the Lord; I read and searched the Scriptures with much diligence and zeal, and gave myself up to hear sermons, search catechisms, &c., was often tossed in myself, like restless waves of the sea, not feeling peace nor stability. I often besought the Lord in contrition of spirit to clear my understanding and judgment, and make me to know his living way, truth and people; sects and opinions then abounding, one saying, Lo, Christ is here, another, Lo, he is there; every denomination construing, wresting, and interpreting the Scriptures to their sundry tenets, and forcing meanings from them to answer their principles, and to maintain every of their interpretations as authentic truths; in all which I was as one without foundation, tossed with every of their windy doctrines; but it still rested with me that man was created for God's glory, I being ever and anon judged and condemned in myself for sin and disobedience; for the law was come by which is the knowledge of sin, and the commandment being come, sin revived and I died as it were; then sin in me became exceeding sinful, and then I was driven to seek for peace night and day, early and late, in public and private fastings, feastings, family devotions, &c., running from one house, town, assembly and worship to another, seeking the word of the Lord in all these sabbaths, lectures, humiliations or thanksgivings, diligently observing every ordinance in which the minister said God was to be found, and all to obtain peace with my Maker; but it fled from me, nor was to be found amongst them. At length after much humiliation, contrition and distress, it pleased the Father to reveal his Son in me: and by his light that gives the knowledge of the glory of God, in the face of his Son Jesus Christ, (2 Cor. iv. 6), he was pleased to give me a glimpse of the heavenly land, and of the way to the kingdom of God, which I saw to be in and through the Light of Christ Jesus, which lighteth every man that cometh into the world, as it was then preached and testified to by the servants of the Lord; a measure of which I felt in myself, which told me all that ever I did, secretly condemning every work in me, with every word that was contrary to the will and mind of the Father; and also justifying every word and work that was according to his will; thus the Lord having opened my understanding, and given me in measure a feeling of himself, I was forced to conclude, (as the woman of Samaria did), that this was the Christ, this was the way, this was the truth: as by daily experience I found, by the operation of the Light in my own heart, compared with the testimony that the saints and servants of God had given in ages past, and thus in the mouths of two or three witnesses, this testimony was confirmed in me. But still how to receive and give obedience to it I knew not: the enemy often raising doubts and fears in me, and the warfare between flesh and spirit was great. I saw that I should never find peace nor reconciliation with the Lord until I gave obedience to the Light, and came into society with the children of light and to the worship that stood in spirit contrary to all the ways, worships and services of the world, set up in the wills and limitations of men, which I saw to be only formal and traditional, and no less than idolatry as they then stood in the will-worship, being prescribed and set forth at the wills and pleasures of men, and established by the then present powers, governments and authority. * * But they that are come to the Light and Liberty of the sons of God, and so live and walk in the Spirit, by the Spirit they know the anointing which abideth in them, and is truth and no lie, which teacheth them in all things to follow the Lamb only, whithersoever he goes, and the leadings of his Spirit, and not the formal and traditional precepts of men, and so they are ceased from man and his teachings, knowing the Lord is come to teach his people himself; whereof I being persuaded in my own heart, was at length constrained to yield myself unto the will of the Lord.—History of Friends in Ireland.

Friends say of him, "he came to Ireland in 1673, was a very zealous honest Friend, and an able minister, having a divine gift to administer from, in the exercise of which he was very serviceable both for the convincing many who were strangers to the way of the Lord, and for the edifying and building up and provoking to diligence those already convinced."—Ibid. 147.

It is only as we are brought to live under the Law of the Spirit of Life in Christ Jesus, that we are able to overcome all our spiritual enemies, and by which alone we can be of any real service in his church or in the world, to gather from man alone to Christ, and as his first disciples had to tarry at Jerusalem and wait to be endued with power from on high, so we must wait and seek for the same holy power to subdue all that which is arisen contrary to his mind and will, and as he has all power he is able to dispense it for his own glory and the bringing about his own purposes, and by the obedience of faith to make us co-workers in gathering to him. So that we may all unite in giving glory and praise to him who alone is worthy now and forever.

S. C.

Millville, Orleans Co., N. Y., 26th 9th mo. 1874.

For "The Friend."

First Germantown Friends.

(Continued from page 58.)

From "Penn Monthly," 7th mo. 1874, by Prof. O. Seidensticker.

THE FIRST ANTI-SLAVERY PROTEST.

Till lately it never had been questioned that the small band of Germans who, at Germantown, in 1688, passed the well-known first protest against slavery, belonged to the Society of Friends. The document itself which originated in "our meeting at Germantown," dated the 18th of 2nd month, 1688, and addressed to the Monthly Meeting, at Richard Morrell's, appears to bear evidence of the fact on its face. An attempt has nevertheless been made to correct what is called "an error that has crept into history." The Quakers are no longer to plume themselves with feathers that belong to entirely different birds. In a work recently published, "Memorial of Thomas Potts, Jr.," by Mrs. T. P. James, a book that does eminent credit to the patient and painstaking industry of the authoress, issue is taken against the common notion that the protest was passed in a meeting of the Society of Friends.

How much or how little credit for anti-slavery sentiment, manifested at so early a date, should be awarded to the Quakers of Pennsylvania is a question we do not care to discuss. It must be admitted that the difficulties with which the abolition of slavery was even then entangled, were in the eyes of the ruling majority of Friends too great for taking action against the evil. The protest remained unheeded. But if it comes to a question of fact, whether Pastorius and his associates and friends were Quakers or not, at the time when they gave their solemn testimony against slave-holding, an unprejudiced inquirer will find the hitherto accepted view not invalidated but strengthened by a close scrutiny of all circumstances.

The Germantown anti-slavery protest is headed: "This is to the Monthly Meeting held at Richard Morrell's," and its closing paragraph reads as follows: "This is from our meeting at Germantown held ye 18 of the 2d month, 1688, to be delivered to the Monthly Meeting at Richard Morrell's.

"Garret Henderich, Derick up de Graeff, Francis Daniel Pastorius, Abraham jr. Den graef."

(The latter name is evidently a misconception for Abraham up den Graeff.)

At the foot of the address is the minute of John Hart, the clerk of the Monthly Meeting at Dublin, acknowledging that it was received on the 30 of the 2 month, 1688, considered and being deemed too weighty transmitted to the Quarterly Meeting. The Quarterly Meeting disposed of the document on the 4 of the 4 month in a similar manner, recommending it to the consideration of the Yearly Meeting. Here the matter was taken up in the same year, but the meeting did not deem it expedient "to give a positive judgment in the case." (See "The Friend of 1844," p. 125, 126. Mitchener Retrospect of Early Quakerism, p. 332; Bowden History of the Society of Friends in America, Vol. II, p. 143, &c.)

Thus we find that the paper took its regular course through the successive grades of Quaker Meetings. That the clause quoted above, which credits the protest to "our meeting in Germantown" has reference to a Quaker meeting is fully borne out and confirmed by the official action of the Monthly, Quarterly and Yearly Meetings, who would not have troubled themselves with an appeal coming from quarters entirely foreign to their organization.

To overcome this strong prima facie evidence of Quaker paternity would require very positive proof in a contrary direction. If it could be established, for instance, that no Quaker meeting was organized in Germantown at that period, there would be some ground on which to argue: but unfortunately for Mrs. James' theory, there is documentary evidence, that such a meeting existed, at least one year before the adoption of the protest. The Records of the Abington Meeting expressly state that in 1687 Quaker meetings were held in Germantown. The entry of the 31 of 1 mo. 1687 is this: "Resolved to hold monthly meetings at the house of Richard Morrell, jr.," at Dublin.

"That there shall be a general meeting moveable at the four several places, viz: at Germantown the last 4 day of the month, next ensuing, and the next to be at Byberry the last 4 day of the month, the next to be at Oxford on the last 3 day of the month, and the next shall be at the house of Richard Stoll the Elder on the last 5th day of the month." It would seem, therefore, to be a mere caprice to deny that the Germantown "meeting" to which Pastorius belonged, was a Quaker meeting. There is no particle of evidence for Mrs. James' assertion: "The Church of 1686 was built for the colony and was used for all public purposes."

Certainly town meetings could not be held in 1686 or 1688, because Germantown had no corporative existence till 1693, and no other Christians preceded the Quakers in organizing there a religious society.

The Mennonites built their first church in 1708, the Lutherans not until 1730. But German Quakers worshiped in the very year when the German settlement was formed, viz: 1683, in the house of Dennis Kunders (See Proud, History of Penn'a, I., p. 220.) That the place of worship built in 1686 belonged to the Quakers is confirmed by an entry in the minutes of the Abington Meeting, where under date 26 of 12th mo. 1704, we read as follows: "At this meeting Friends of Germantown having laid before us, that they intend to build a new meeting house next summer and Friends thought fit that each particular meeting subscribe at their preparative meeting and bring the same to the next Monthly Meeting, and that the Overseers of each meeting have the care thereof."

A new meeting house presupposes the existence of a previous one. Mrs. James suggests that one might have been built on the 3 perches given by Jacob Schumacher, in 1693, for that purpose, but mention is made nowhere that such a house was really erected, while we know from Pastorius' own narrative, (Description of Pennsylvania, p. 34,) that a place of worship—though a very humble one—was built in 1686, a fact which should not have been questioned in the note on p. 15 of the Potts' Memorial.

An inquiry into the personal religious profession of the first settlers at Germantown, as far as it can be instituted, after this length of time, leads to facts entirely corroborative of the view here taken. Many of the permanent settlers were Quakers at an early date; several arrived as such in America. That Pastorius was a Friend is positively known. He conducted the Preparative Meeting at Germantown. His MS. cash-book and the Record of the Philadelphia Quarterly Meeting show this). He is repeatedly mentioned as a delegate from Germantown to Philadelphia Meetings, and commissions assigned to him are specified. His name and those of his children appear in the Abington* Meeting. At the famous Yearly Meeting, held at Burlington, he was a delegate, and his name appears in the list of those who signed the protest against the doctrines and practice of George Keith. (See Smith's History of Pennsylvania, in Hazard's Register of Penna., vol. VI., p. 300.) Two years after this he signed the Quaker Petition for the restoration of William Penn, (see Manuscript Documents of the Historical Society of Pennsylvania.) In a letter to William Penn, written 1701, (Logan papers in the Hist. Soc. of Pa.,) he uses the so-called plain language (thou and thee) of the Quakers.

Of many other settlers of Germantown, the documentary evidence as to their attachment to the Quaker society is as conclusive. The Burlington Protest of 1692 was signed by the following Germans from Germantown: F. D. Pastorius, Dirk op den Graeff, Peter Schumacher, Arnold Cassell, Paul Kästner, Henry A. Kramer, Paul Wulf.

The petition for the restoration of William Penn which proceeded from Friends, has beside Pastorius' signature, that of 29 other residents of Germantown.

The Abington Records furnish 18 Germantown names. Abraham and Herman op den Graeff signed papers in behalf or in defence of George Keith, with whom they appear to have sided, while Dirk, their brother, is on record against Keith. (See Appeal from the 28 judges to the Spirit of Truth, signed by Keith, Budd, &c., and also by Abraham op den Graeff; and the paper in favor of Keith printed in the appendix to the Potts' memorial, containing the name of Herman op den Graeff.)

As to the particular time when these Germans joined the Society of Friends, no precise data are ascertainable. But several of them had been made converts before they came to America. Speaking of the early immigrants to Pennsylvania, Robert Proud (Hist. of Pennsylvania, vol. I., p. 219,) says: "Among those from Germany were some Friends or Quakers from Krisheim or Cresheim, a town not far from Worms in the Palatinate. They had been early convinced of the religious principles of the Quakers by William Ames, an Englishman."

Concurring with this testimony is that of Besse, who in the "Sufferings of the Quakers," vol. II., p. 450, mentions several Friends in Griesheim (Krisheim) that were fined and otherwise annoyed by the authorities in the years 1658 to 1666. William Penn, when journeying through Germany in 1677, stopped at this place, to give his religious brethren advice and comfort.† Some of these named by Besse, viz: Peter and George Schumacher, came with their families to Germantown, and several others of the first settlers, personal friends of Pastorius, hailed from the same place. (Manuscript Autobiography of Pastorius in the "Beehive.") Also Croese, in his "Historia Quakeriana," which appeared 1695, relates that several of the Germans, with whom William Penn consorted during his journey, afterwards emigrated to America. The 13 families who formed the settlement of Germantown in 1683, all but one, turn up as members of the Quaker Society in contemporary documents. Let it be stated here en passant that Mrs. James is mistaken in speaking of these families as fellow-passengers of Pastorius in the ship America, (p. 10.) Pastorius arrived in the "America," August 20, 1683, and with him a few persons, partly engaged as servants, among whom was Jacob Schumacher. (See the above quoted Autobiography.) The 13 families that formed the nucleus of the Germantown settlement arrived in the same year on the 6th of October, by the ship Concord. These families were: Dirk, Herman and Abraham op den Graeff, Lenert Arets, Tunes Kunders, Reinert Tisen, Wilhelm Strepers, Jan Lensen, Peter Keurlis, Jan Simens, Johann Bleickers, Abraham Tunes, Jan Lücken.

The three op den Graeffs we found in Quaker papers, committed either for or against George Keith; all the others except "Lensen" are proved as Quakers either by entry into the Abington Records or by the signature of their names to Quaker papers, such as the Burlington Protest, The Petition for Penn's Restoration, Subscription to the Quaker meeting-house at Germantown. Among them are three out of the four who signed the anti-slavery address of 1688. The fourth, Garret Henderich, we have reason to think, was a native of Griesheim, and a Quaker before he left Germany. Besse mentions among those who suffered persecution at Griesheim in 1666, John Hendrichs and Peter Schumacher. In a list of arrivals (MS. Documents of His. Soc. of Penna.) we find Gerhard (Garret) Hendrich and Peter Schumacher as passengers in the same ship, the Francis and Dorothy, which landed in Philadelphia, October 12, 1685. It is fair to presume, that Garret was one of the Hendrich family that had tasted the intolerance of the government.

Thus whatever slender information can be gathered from the scanty records, either in relation to the meetings or about the individuals that settled Germantown, it tends to the same conclusion, viz: that primitive Germantown was hardly less imbued with Quakerism than primitive Philadelphia.

We have to turn now to the evidence that is brought forward to arraign and upset this consistent tissue of facts, with a view of proving "that an error has crept into history," and that the originators of the anti-slavery protest were far from being Quakers.

"A community," says the authoress of the Potts' Memorial, "that kept the 28th of December, as the records prove, because on this day Herod slew the Innocents, could not have been the followers of Fox." Now he who proves too much proves nothing at all. Were premises and conclusions correct, it would follow that in the year 1703 there were no Quakers of any account in Germantown, while the existence of a Quaker meeting at that time is as little questionable (and even admitted by Mrs. James) as it is at the present day. For the record alluded to in the Potts' Me-

---

* The Germantown Meeting kept then no Records, but its concerns were noticed in those of the Abington Meeting, to which it was attached.

† See William Penn's Journey through Holland and Germany.

morial is the record of the Germantown court; and the only time the Slaughter of the Innocents looms up is in the minutes of December 28th, 1703. Now, strange to say, the records do not prove what is asserted, but just the contrary; for the court was on that day in regular session, Quakers and other officers attending. Business was transacted as usually. How then about the Slaughter of the Innocents? A certain Matthew Smith had an action against Daniel Falkner, and "by reason of conscience, viz: that this was the day when Herod slew the Innocents, as also that his witnesses were and would for the above reason not be here," desired a continuance of the case to the next day of record. This continuance was granted and other business taken up. How the scruples of Matthew Smith, who for aught we know, may have been a Roman Catholic, can be adduced as a proof that the Germantown community kept the day of the Slaughter of the Innocents, were no followers of Fox, and that consequently the anti-slavery protest of 1688 was not the work of Quakers, passes our comprehension. Were not the Quakers the Innocents that had to be slaughtered?

Again the authoress of the Potts Memorial says: "There is no reason to suppose that Pastorius or his eleven families were Quakers when they arrived here. In his letters home he calls the Friends Tremulendos, and he disclaims for himself the name of Pietist."

It is of no consequence, whether Pastorius was a Quaker when he arrived in Philadelphia; we surely find him one by documentary evidence after he had been here several years. He does not call the Friends in his letters Tremulendos, but "Tremulanten" (p. 33) which in the German of the period is merely a latinizing equivalent for the word Quaker, implying no disrespect whatever.

Some stress seems to be laid in the Potts' Memorial on Pastorius' declaration that he meant to impart to the Indians a knowledge of Holy Trinity and Christian Faith. But if the ground be taken that a person's belief in Trinity disproves him a Quaker, George Fox himself runs the risk of having his Quakerdom questioned. (See what Fox in his address to the Grand Turk says about the three Heavenly witnesses; Gospel Truth, Philadelphia edition, vol. III., p. 381.) Where Pastorius in his book on Pennsylvania discusses religious principles, (p. 86—89,) he utters not a word that a Quaker could not subscribe to.

Before we close, a word remains to be said about the tone and wording of the anti-slavery protest, so far as it may throw some light on the religious profession of the originators. Mrs. James insists that the paper reproaches the Quakers for their practice of slave-holding, and could not have emanated from any Quaker Society. We are of a different opinion. Of course the Germantown people held no slaves and might therefore address those that did by "you."

The use of "we" where it does occur, seems to argue on the other hand, for a vinculum, connecting the writers and the receivers of the address; and as this was directed to a religious body, the vinculum must have been that of religious profession. Such terms as these, "we who profess that it is not lawful to steal must likewise avoid to purchase such things as are stolen," and "Europeans are desirous to know in what manner the Quakers do rule in their province, and most of them do look upon us with an envious eye," may perhaps not weigh much as arguments; but if any inference is to be drawn from the tenor of the instrument, we claim that it is in favor of and not against the conclusion that has been arrived at on other grounds.

Selected.

THE SEARCH FOR HAPPINESS.

BY CHARLOTTE ELLIOTT.

"Her ways are ways of pleasantness, and all her paths are peace." Prov. iii. 17.

Where is happiness, oh, where?
Breathes she not the mountain air,
Where the wild thyme scents the breeze,
And enchanting prospects please?
No, oh, no!
Bending low,
In a tranquil spot withdrawn,
Greeting thus the golden dawn,
There I caught her radiant smile,
There she tarried for awhile.

Treads she not the classic halls,
Where the light of science falls
On the lore of years gone by?
No, oh, no!
Whispering low,
In a chamber small but neat,
Soothing pain with comfort sweet,
There I caught her radiant smile,
There she tarried for awhile.

Seeks she not the banquet bright,
Splendid rooms lit up at night,
Gay with mirth and music sweet,
And the merry dancers' feet?
No, oh, no!
Soft and slow,
Reading words of truth divine,
Pondering o'er each sacred line,
There I caught her radiant smile,
There she tarried for awhile.

Seeks she ne'er the crowded mart,
There to take a busy part
In the schemes of high emprise
Which to fame and affluence rise?
No, oh, no!
Here below
She but seeks one jewel rare,
One rich pearl absorbs her care;
When she finds it, mark her smile,
Heaven seems opening the while!

Shows she then the joys of earth?
Dreads she cheerfulness and mirth?
She is called "a serious thing,"
Glooms and shadows does she bring?
No, oh, no!
Brightly glow,
On her garments, on her brow,
Lovelier hues than earth can show,
But from heaven is caught her smile,
Here she visits but awhile."

Selected.

MYSTERY OF CHASTISEMENT.

"We glory also in tribulations."—Rom. v. 3.

Within this leaf, to every eye
So little worth, doth hidden lie
Most rare and subtile fragrancy.

Wouldst thou its secret strength unbind?
Crush it, and thou shalt perfume find,
Sweet as Arabia's spicy wind.

In this dull stone so poor and bare
Of shape and lustre, patient care
Will find for thee a jewel rare.

But first must skilful hands essay,
With file and flint, to clear away
The film which hides its fire from day.

This leaf? this stone? It is thy heart:
It must be crushed by pain and smart,
It must be cleansed by sorrow's art

Ere it will yield a fragrance sweet,
Ere it will shine, a jewel meet
To lay before thy dear Lord's feet.

S. Wilberforce.

For "The Friend."

Indian Affairs.

(Concluded from page 58.)

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON EDUCATION.

To the General Council of the Indian Territory: — Gentlemen: Your committee to whom was referred the resolution of the General Council calling for a report on the subject of education among the several tribes and nations comprising what is known as the Indian Territory, beg leave to submit the following as their report:

The Cherokees.—The Cherokee Nation has a population of about eighteen thousand, and has a good and efficient school system, controlled by a Board of Education, a Superintendent of Public Instruction, and three School Commissioners, to whom is assigned the especial superintendence of the public schools of three districts each, of the nine districts into which the Cherokee Nation is divided. The schools are graded into first, second and third class schools, and teachers are obtained at salaries of five, four, and three hundred dollars, per scholastic year of ten months. The Cherokees have an annual school fund of about $50,000, by means of which there is being supported, this year, sixty-four national schools, five of which are set apart for the benefit of freedmen citizens of the Cherokee Nation, and colored people, lawfully resident in the Nation. Beside these there is a Cherokee female seminary, with an average attendance of about forty young ladies, gathered there from different sections of the Cherokee Nation; and this school is partly supported by the patrons of the school. There is furnished to the seminary from the national school simply the salaries of a principal and assistant teachers, their salaries amounting to seven and six hundred dollars per year respectively. There is also furnished from the general school fund, a small amount annually for books, stationery, &c. There is annually appropriated from this general school fund, two thousand dollars for the purchase of books, stationery, &c., for the use of the district schools of the nation. Beside these there are kept up and supported by individual citizens of the Cherokee Nation, quite a number of private schools, at no expense to the nation.

In the Cherokee treaty with the United States government of 1835, there was set apart for a permanent orphan school fund one hundred and fifty thousand dollars, and to this sum has been added fifteen per cent. of the sale of the Cherokee Neutral Lands, also the unclaimed bounties of deceased Cherokee soldiers of the late war, who were either killed or died leaving no heirs; and with these funds a Cherokee Orphan Asylum was put in operation, at the Cherokee Male Seminary, until a permanent location should be provided for the asylum. The law of the Nation providing for putting in operation the asylum, makes a provision for taking charge of and caring for one hundred Cherokee orphan children. This school is in charge of a Board of Trustees, appointed by the National Council, and is conducted on the manual labor school system, and the school is making commendable progress. The Cherokees appropriate fifteen per cent. of all public moneys, and invest it as a permanent Orphan School Fund, and thirty-five per cent. of all public moneys are invested as a permanent public school fund.

The Muskogees. — The population of the Muskogee Nation, according to the last census, was thirteen thousand five hundred. The Muskogees have an annual school fund of twenty-four thousand one hundred and fifty-eight dollars. The whole number of schools in operation is nineteen, and of this number five of the schools have been set aside for the exclusive benefit of the Freedmen of the Muskogee Nation. The average number of pupils who attend the schools of the Muskogee Nation is four hundred and five. The teachers are mostly natives. There are but four white teachers. In addition to the public schools, the Muskogees have two boarding schools, each accommodating eighty pupils, an equal number of males and females. One is under the supervision of the Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions, the other under the control of the Methodist Board. Besides these there is one boarding and day school, in the charge of the Presbyterian Church South, with an average attendance of twenty-three scholars the last session. Twelve of our district schools are closed this session for the purpose of improving the school buildings, this year, and for the purpose of building a boarding school, and for putting the schools generally nearer together.

The Choctaws.—The population of the Choctaw Nation is between seventeen and eighteen thousand. They have about fifty neighborhood schools, of this number forty-four are in operation, the remainder are for the present suspended. The Choctaws have one academy for the education of boys, and one seminary for the instruction of girls. Their school fund amounts to thirty-two thousand dollars annually, paid to them by the United States government. The number of pupils in these schools is about one thousand, including ten young Choctaws, who are sent to high schools in the States at national expense. One-half of these scholars are males, the other half are females. One-half of the school teachers in the Choctaw Nation are citizens of the Nation. About one-fourth of the Choctaw people read and write the English language, the other three-fourths read and write the Choctaw language.

The Seminoles.—The population of the Seminole Nation is about twenty-five hundred. They have five district schools with an average daily attendance, the past year, of about fifty scholars. The Mission school, formerly carried on by the Board of Foreign Missions, has been closed for the past year. The Seminole Council are about deciding to add five thousand dollars to their school fund, making seventy-five hundred dollars for school purposes. When this arrangement is effected a boarding school will be established capable of accommodating fifty more Seminole children. The Seminoles have during the past year built one good school house in connection with the Presbyterian church at Wewoka.

The Confederated Peorias.—The Confederated Peorias have a population of one hundred and sixty. They have a school fund of three thousand one hundred and twenty-nine dollars. They have one neighborhood school in successful operation, with an average attendance of only ten scholars, a smaller average than heretofore, in consequence of the removal of many families from the vicinity of the school.

The population of the Wyandotts, Senecas, and Shawnees, is five hundred and fifty-three, of this number two hundred and seventy-five are Wyandotts, one hundred and ninety-five are Senecas, and eighty-three are Shawnees. They have one school under the supervision of the Friends, with an aggregate attendance of sixty pupils, forty-six of these are Wyandotts, five are Senecas, and nine are Shawnees. Neither of these tribes have any school funds. The cause of education among them, however, is encouraging. The Wyandotts are to a considerable extent an educated people.

The Quapaws and Modocs.—The Quapaws have a commodious Mission house and school house on their reserve, with a manual labor farm of one hundred and sixty acres, well cultivated, at which their youth of suitable age, and about twenty-five Modoc children are provided for, under the care of the Friends.

The Ottawas.—The Ottawas have a population of one hundred and sixty. They have one Mission school under the supervision of the Society of Friends, with an average attendance of twenty scholars. They are cared for at the Mission. There are ten day scholars, who attend the school daily from their homes, making an average attendance of thirty scholars. They are making commendable progress in their studies in reading, spelling, arithmetic, geography, grammar, history, writing &c. The children, through the untiring efforts of their teacher, Henry Thorndike, have organized a temperance "Band of Hope," and have kept it up, until its influence has spread out and embraces a large portion of the adults who are members of the organization, and are zealous temperance workers. The school has up to the beginning of the present year been supported by the government, other arrangements are now being made to have a permanent school fund. The chief and council form the board of trustees, and it is their duty to visit, examine, and encourage both teachers and scholars, and make quarterly reports thereof to the people, a record of which is kept by the clerk.

The Affiliated Bands of Indians.—The Affiliated Bands of Indians have a population of about fifteen hundred. They have but one school at the Wichita Agency, in charge of the Society of Friends. The school has an average attendance of eighty pupils.

The Sacs and Foxes.—The Sacs and Foxes have a population of four hundred and fifty on their reservation in the Indian Territory. There are still two hundred of their number in the State of Kansas, proposing to get on the reservation some time during the present year. They have but one school, a boarding school, with an average attendance of thirty-five scholars. They have a school fund of five thousand dollars annually. Their school is in charge of the Society of Friends.

The Chickasaws have no representation in the Council at this session, and hence no report from the Chickasaw Nation.

The Osages—The Osages have a population of about thirty-five hundred. They have one school on the Reservation at the Osage Agency, with an average attendance of twenty five scholars, and is under the supervision of Friends. They have also twenty children at the Osage Mission school, in the State of Kansas, and that is under the supervision of the Roman Catholics.

As will be seen from the foregoing reports, your committee find that there are represented in this General Indian Council, for May, 1874, about fifty-eight thousand Indians of the Indian Territory (and quite a large part of the Territory is not represented at this Council), and that there are about four thousand Indian children attending the schools of the Territory, and improving the means at their disposal, for acquiring an English education, and are making an effort, unparalleled in Indian history, to elevate themselves to a position where they can be the equals in intelligence and honor of their great prototype, of whose protection and defense they are assured as long as grass grows and water runs, and in whose honor and integrity they depend for the perpetuity of their institutions and of their national existence.

ALBERT BARNES,
Chairman of Committee on Education.

Selected.

You who are laboring unremittingly to "join house to house, that lay field to field," without a thought or a desire beyond the attainment of these perishable possessions, learn from the lips of your Redeemer the true nature of the work in which you are engaged. You are merely assisting the great enemy of your souls, in forging these golden chains, with which he binds you to his cruel service. Difficult as the work of salvation unquestionably is, to every fallen child of Adam, to the rich and to the man "hastening to be rich," the difficulty is infinitely increased: with a profusion of the gifts of God, the ungrateful heart of man becomes, in general, strangely alienated from the heavenly Giver: with an earnest desire after wealth, comes an increasing indifference to spiritual duties and spiritual privileges; with an attainment of wealth, comes frequently a sordid selfishness, deadness of heart to God, coldness to the brethren. Few Christians perish from the cutting winds of adversity, many wither and fall away beneath the burning sun of prosperity. Intimately was he acquainted with the human heart, who looking round upon the splendid mansion of his friend, and remarking the exulting expression of his countenance, exclaimed, "Ah, these are the things that make a death-bed terrible!"

New York City Sold for Twenty-four Dollars.—Twenty-four dollars purchased the whole city and county of New York in 1625. In 1638 tobacco was produced to a considerable extent on New York Island. In 1652 the first public school was established; streets first paved in 1676; in 1667 there were twelve streets and 384 houses. In 1711 a slave market was established in Wall street. In 1729 three pence a foot was given for land on the west side of Broadway, near the Battery. The first stage route between New York and Boston was established in 1732—time, fourteen days from city to city. In 1733 a law was passed to preserve the fish in the Fresh Water Pond (the Kolck), now Centre street and neighborhood. In 1737 a market-house was built in Broadway, opposite Crown, now Liberty street; the city at that time contained 1416 houses. In 1745 the first coach (Lady Murray's) was driven in New York. When the British evacuated the city, November 25, 1783, the buildings did not extend beyond Murray street. In 1801 Broadway was ordered to be continued through Thomas Randall's land, near Eighth street, to meet the Bowery, and the hills levelled and carted into Fresh Water Pond, which was then the northern limits of Broadway, and much beyond the settled parts of the city. Previous to this extension of Broadway the Bowery was the only entrance to the city, through groves of cedar, to the Bull's Head, now the Bowery Theatre. The old Potter's Field is now the Washington Parade Ground.

For "The Friend."

Circular of the Bible Association of Friends in America.

In again calling the attention of Auxiliaries to the Annual Queries to be answered previous to the general meeting of the Association on the 4th of Eleventh month, the Corresponding Committee would press upon Friends, who have been engaged in the distribution of the Holy Scriptures, the importance of furnishing full and accurate answers to all the Queries, and of forwarding their report seasonably to the Depository.

It may be recollected, that in making donations to Auxiliaries, the Board are guided in deciding what number of Bibles and Testaments shall be sent to each, by the information given in its report. Hence those Auxiliaries that do not report in time, are liable to be left out in the distribution.

Specific directions should be given in every case, how boxes should be marked and forwarded; and their receipt should always be promptly acknowledged.

Address John S. Stokes, No. 116 N. Fourth Street, Philadelphia.

SAMUEL BETTLE,
CHARLES RHOADS,
ANTHONY M. KIMBER,
Committee of Correspondence.

Philada., Tenth mo. 1874.

QUERIES.

1. What number of families or individuals have been gratuitously furnished with the Holy Scriptures by the Auxiliary during the past year?
2. What number of Bibles and Testaments have been sold by the Auxiliary within the past year?
3. How many members, male and female, are there belonging to the Auxiliary?
4. What number of families of Friends reside within its limits?
5. Are there any families of Friends within your limits not supplied with a copy of the Holy Scriptures in good clear type, and on fair paper; if so, how many?
6. How many members of our Society, capable of reading the Bible, do not own such a copy of the Holy Scriptures?
7. How many Bibles and Testaments may probably be disposed of by sale within your limits?
8. Is the income of the Auxiliary sufficient to supply those within its limits who are not duly furnished with the Holy Scriptures?
9. What number of Bibles and Testaments would it be necessary for the Bible Association to furnish gratuitously, to enable the Auxiliary to supply each family?
10. What number would be required in order to furnish each member of our religious Society, capable of reading, who is destitute of a copy, and unable to purchase it?
11. How many Bibles and Testaments are now on hand?

The Lord hath been pleased in his great love, to give a gift or manifestation of his Holy Spirit to the sons and daughters of men, to show unto them the way to eternal life, and to help them to walk in it. And although it is universally extended, yet those who give up their hearts to obey and follow the manifestations and requirings thereof, do only find favor with God, and are good examples to mankind in their generation, patterns of righteousness, meekness, humility, self-denial, patience, temperance, godliness, brotherly kindness and charity, which are the fruits of the Holy Spirit.—Griffith Owen in Piety Promoted.

For "The Friend."

John Finch Marsh.

(Continued from page 60.)

5th mo. 31st, 1867. The Yearly Meeting concluded. My wife and I attended most of the sittings, but were not at any of the committees. The meeting was largely attended, and notwithstanding the many weaknesses and shortcomings and serious innovations, an evidence was mercifully afforded that we are not a forsaken people, but that our Heavenly Father is still watching over us for good. Then how well it would be if as a people we were so humbled under a sense of our departure in so many ways from the simplicity, which the Truth as it is in Jesus ever leads into, as to be able to say, "Let us search and try our ways, and turn again to the Lord;" and also be able individually to say with the Psalmist, "I thought on my ways and turned my feet unto Thy testimonies. I made haste, and delayed not to keep Thy commandments."

6th mo. 5th. Some near access, I trust, in prayer, in private retirement this morning; and during the day was favored to enjoy much precious quiet.

1868, 12th mo. 14th. Oh! the blessedness of feeling daily the mind clothed with the spirit of prayer. I had a sweet time on the bended knee in the forenoon. And oh! the blessedness of knowing something of what I apprehend the apostle meant when he said, "Pray without ceasing; in everything give thanks, for this is the will of God in Christ Jesus concerning you." Not that we were to be on the bended knee of the body from morning until night, but that we should throughout the day live in the spirit of prayer, in a state of watchfulness unto prayer, inwardly feeling after the Divine Presence, the liftings up of the light of the Lord's countenance, and in earnest and secret breathings for holy help and merciful preservation on every hand, and every way. Ah! such as these know some thing of the blessed privilege of prayer, and under the constraining influences of heavenly love and peace have often, and at times often in the day, to bow the knee in vocal prayer, and in the retirement of their chamber and elsewhere, to pour forth their souls in solemn prayer and supplication to their Heavenly Father, in the Name and for the sake of His beloved Son our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ.

1870, 10th mo. 25th. T. F———, an interesting young man, not a member of our Society, came to tea with us. We enjoyed his company, and had some serious converse together.

10th mo. 28th. Last evening finished reading the memoranda left by the late I. H., including some extracts from the journal of her mother I. T., kindly lent to us for perusal by one of the family. The reading of it has been truly interesting and edifying, and my spirit sweetly tendered in marking the pureness of life and genuine piety, as manifested throughout; and peaceful close of each. It has, I trust, tended to lead afresh into some searching of heart, giving me to feel my own nothingness, unworthiness, and many shortcomings. My dear wife has also shared with me in the profitable reading thereof.

1871, 4th mo. 13th. To-day is the fifty-second anniversary of our marriage. Surely we have great occasion afresh to commemorate the goodness and mercy of our Heavenly Father extended to us during our lengthened happy union, a period of time but few perhaps comparatively speaking, are alike permitted to realise, enjoy, and share together in the blessings and privileges of a married life. Varied have been the trials, conflicts, and exercises we have been partakers of; yet through all, and under some close and heavy bereavements of beloved and precious children and grandchildren, the everlasting Arms have been felt to be underneath for our support; yea, when the floods of affliction have lifted up their voice and their waves, the Lord on high hath proved Himself to be mightier for our help and deliverance than the noise of many waters, yea, than the mighty waves of the sea. So that now in our advanced years we have abundant cause to put up our Ebenezer, and say as heretofore, that "Hitherto the Lord hath helped us." I think we may each say that from the days of early childhood and youth, we have experienced His love and fear to be placed in our hearts, so that He who was our morning light, we reverently trust is now our evening song, our joy and rejoicing.

1872, 5th mo. 11th. Thirty-four years to-day since my much beloved friend John Barclay departed this life; also that much beloved friend Anna M. Thorne, of America. How precious, yes always how precious, is the memory of them. "The righteous shall be in everlasting remembrance."

17th. "Blessed are they which do hunger and thirst after righteousness, for they shall be filled."

The soul that is thus quickened and made alive unto God, feels the necessity of seeking day by day, and more often than the day, a renewal of spiritual strength, and for the fresh supply of that heavenly bread which nourishes the soul up unto eternal life; and surely that day may be said to be a lost day in which something of this hunger and thirst after the bread and water of life is not felt and experienced,—this hunger and thirst after Christ and His righteousness, and some sense and feeling of His heavenly presence in the lifting up of the light of his countenance upon us; and though there may be and are times when for the trial of our faith and exercise of patience, the bread may be given us as by weight, and the water as by measure; yet as faith and patience are abode in, the needful crumb and needful drop of water will not be withheld in the time of need, the ancient promise being realised and experienced—"Bread shall be given him; his waters shall be sure."

12th mo. 17th. To-day's post has brought us the affecting intelligence of the death of our beloved cousin John Marsh, of Dorking, in the eighty-fourth year of his age.

May the remembrance of his watchful, upright, and consistent walk, be so teaching to survivors as to quicken in them the desire to be alike strengthened by grace to follow him, as we may believe he endeavored to follow Christ.

1873, 1st mo. 7th. To-day has brought us the affecting intelligence of the death of Richard Allen, of Newtown, Waterford. It was my privilege, I may say our privilege (my beloved wife being a sharer therein), to enjoy for many years an uninterrupted and abiding friendship with this our beloved, departed friend and brother in the Truth, and throughout, a lively interest in each other's best welfare; and epistolary correspondence has been maintained between us, being, as we were, nearly united in spirit, and in the love and fellowship of the Gospel. "The memory of the just is blessed."

7th mo. 3rd. Fourteen years to-day since our preciously beloved daughter Hannah departed this life; precious, indeed, is her memory. I trust I may say, as heretofore, that, "She being dead, yet speaketh."

7th. We attended our Quarterly Meeting of ministers and elders. We each had something to express in the meeting.

8th. I went to our Quarterly Meeting. Our dear friend Mary Ann Bayes paid an acceptable visit to the men's meeting for discipline.

[The diary was broken off soon after, and gives no account of his last visit to the seaside, in company with my dear mother and ourselves.]

(To be continued.)

For "The Friend."

Scientific Notes.

The Gunpowder Pile Driver.—As its name implies, this new pile driver is actuated by the force of exploding gunpowder. A heavy ram, running in slides, falls into a "gun," placed on the head of the pile, and in so falling explodes, by the heat of the blow, a cartridge containing sufficient powder to send the ram back to its original position, where by means of friction brakes, or other suitable appliances, it is held till released by the attendant, in order to deliver another blow. The force of the explosion, besides returning the ram to its place, drives the pile into the ground. The operation is very quickly performed, the interval between the blows being little longer than the time necessary to place a fresh cartridge in the gun, and to release the ram. The bottom of the gun is made to fit over the head of the pile to be driven.

Dr. Livingstone.—At a recent meeting of the Royal Geographical Society, it was announced that Dr. Livingstone's son has undertaken the task of editing the journals and correspondence of the great traveller. The materials are of the most voluminous kind.

The fastest Steamer in the World, is the title claimed for a small vessel 87 feet long, and drawing 3 feet 9 inches water, recently built for the government of India for service in the Oussa canal. At the official trial, her average speed was 24.6 miles per hour.

A Light house in a Hurricane.—The Bishop's Rock light house is erected on a rock beyond the Scilly Islands, far out in the Atlantic. During a recent hurricane, it was struck by enormous waves in quick succession, each causing a noise like the discharge of cannon, and making the massive stone building rock to and fro, so that every article fell away from its place. One fearful sea broke the great lens into several pieces, and another smashed the cylinders of the spare light, while sand from the bottom, 30 fathoms deep, was found heaped upon the light house gallery. The keepers had a narrow escape.

Selected.

Whatever savors of the things which be of men, that is to say, whatever rule of conduct has for its foundation the desire of propitiating the favor, or averting the opposition of men; whatever is founded upon the ungodly, though, alas! too fashionable doctrine of expediency, or wordly policy, with no reference to the will, or the honor of God, is unscriptural, unholy, and unsafe. It may for a time, have fewer crosses, and less anxieties: you may congratulate yourself upon your wisdom and your prudence; but be assured, that the end will be bitterness and vexation of spirit. Better, infinitely better, to take up at once the cross, to bear the opprobium, to become, if needful, a by-word and a reproach, than, by a constant succession of timid, temporizing efforts, always shrinking from the confession of your real feelings, always attributing your refusal of sinful enjoyments to any motive but the true one, to suffer the men of this world, as David says, foolishly to think that you are even such an one as themselves; or worse than this, to remain so long "halting between two opinions," that when at last the book of life be opened, you shall too late discover that your name is not enrolled therein; that you have never been decidedly with the Saviour, and that therefore he has pronounced you to be against him; that as you have not suffered with him, so neither shall you be glorified together.

Dartmouth College Students. — President Smith, of Dartmouth, in talking to the students the other day, said, in regard to the employment of Dartmouth students as waiters at summer hotels, that so much is said and written in the abstract, now-a-days, about the dignity of labor, and so little is practiced, that it is refreshing to notice an instance which is of so common an occurrence that it attracts no attention in the district where it occurs, and is scarcely known beyond that district. The students who act as waiters in hotels at the White Mountains, during the summer, come chiefly from college — Dartmouth — where labor has always been held as honorable, sixteen from that institution having served in the Profile House this season. They get as regular wages twenty dollars a month, which is sometimes trebled by donation. "When we consider," said the President, "the fact that nearly one-third of the students of Dartmouth teach school during the winter, and work at harvesting during the summer, we need have no fear about the dignity of labor becoming an obsolete expression."

THE FRIEND.

TENTH MONTH 17, 1874.

We have received from a Friend of Ohio, the following account of the proceedings of their recent Yearly Meeting. A few verbal alterations have been made therein.

"Ohio Yearly Meeting convened at Mt. Pleasant on Second-day, 9th mo. 28th, 1874. The representatives were all present except one, who was prevented from attending by illness. A few Friends from Philadelphia Yearly Meeting were present, producing certificates of concurrence from the subordinate meetings of which they are members, which were read and a suitable minute made by the clerk relative thereto, which was very generally united with. A committee was appointed to audit the Treasurer's account, and report to a future sitting what sum was necessary to be raised for the use of the meeting the ensuing year, and also the name of a Friend for Treasurer.

The minutes of the Meeting for Sufferings were read and its proceedings approved. Being informed by the Meeting for Sufferings that we have been deprived of our Boarding School property by a decree of the Supreme Court of the State, a large committee of men and women Friends was appointed to take the whole subject into consideration, and report thereon to a future sitting.

Third-day.—The Representatives reported that they were united in proposing the names of Wilson Hall, for Clerk, and Joseph Branson for assistant, also the names of Aaron Frame and Jehu L. Kite for messengers to Women's Meeting, which being united with, they were accordingly appointed. The meeting then entered into the consideration of the state of Society by reading the Queries and answers as far as the sixth, inclusive, during which the meeting was introduced into a lively exercise for the welfare of its members; and much tender counsel was imparted.

Fourth-day.—A public meeting for worship was held as usual, at 10 o'clock in the morning. In the afternoon sitting the consideration of the state of Society was resumed and finished by reading and answering the remaining Queries. The Committee on the subject of the Boarding School reported: that they had all met, and after a time of consideration were united in proposing that immediate steps be taken to establish another Boarding School for the religiously guarded education of our youth, and that said school be located within the limits of Stillwater Quarterly Meeting; that a committee be appointed to have charge of this concern, to open a subscription amongst our members, and when in their judgment a sufficient amount of money shall have been subscribed to warrant the prosecution of the work, to select and purchase a site, and proceed to erect thereon a plain substantial building, sufficient to accommodate seventy-five or eighty pupils. The subscriptions to be paid in three equal instalments: the first when the progress of the work requires it, and the balance in annual payments thereafter. After a time of deliberation and free interchange of sentiment, the report of the committee was united with and adopted by both men's and women's meeting, and a committee appointed to carry out the several propositions contained therein, and report thereon next year. Women's meeting also appointed a committee to assist said committee in carrying out the concern.

Fifth-day.—The committee appointed to audit the Treasurer's account, &c., made a satisfactory report, and the Friend therein named was appointed Treasurer, and the Quarterly Meetings were directed to forward their quotas of the proposed sum to the Treasurer of this meeting, in the Fifth month next. The Book Committee reported very satisfactorily, and, with the addition of a few names, was continued in care of the concern, and encouraged in the prosecution of its work, as it is gratifying to believe that much good has been and may yet be done in this way in disseminating a knowledge of the principles of Friends, not only amongst our own members but others. An appropriation was made for the use of the committee the ensuing year. The Boarding School Committee made a report of the condition of the school at the time it passed from under their control, which was satisfactory to the meeting, and the committee was continued to extend care in such matters as may properly come under its notice in the establishment and opening of the new Boarding School.

The reports on education were rather discouraging, showing that more than one-half of the whole number of children of proper age have been receiving instruction at district schools; and a number of Friends expressed a fear that we had exceeded the bounds of truth by saying in answering the Query that a good degree of encouragement is given to schools under the tuition of teachers in membership with us. This state of things was much deplored, and Friends were urged to increased faithfulness in this respect. The names of elders who have departed this life during the past year were read, with the date of decease of each.

The business being brought to a close, a committee was appointed to have the minutes of this meeting printed and distributed among the Quarterly Meetings.

Under an humbling sense that we are still cared for by the Head of the Church, and that we had been favored, from time to time, with ability to transact the business of the Yearly Meeting in a good degree of harmony and condescension one to another, the concluding minute was read.

THE DOCTRINES AND MINISTRY OF GEORGE FOX.

The Book Committee of the Meeting for Sufferings has just published a small pamphlet of twenty-eight duodecimo pages, with the above title. In it are given, mostly by concise extracts from his writings, the scriptural opinions of that eminent servant of Jesus Christ on the Atonement; The Light of Christ the Way to Salvation; Justification and Sanctification, and on Worship and Ministry. A few connecting remarks are interspersed between the extracts, so as to render more clear the points on which the former treat, and the whole, though brief, give a fair exposition of the views of him, who has been considered the founder of the Society of Friends, on the points touched on. It is for sale at Friends' Book Store, and we commend its perusal to our readers.

SUMMARY OF EVENTS.

FOREIGN.—The managers of the direct cable company have decided to abandon about thirty miles of cable, which is now lying on rocky bottom, and effect a splice at a more suitable point. About 1100 miles of cable have been laid, and satisfactory tests are obtained daily by the electricians.

The labor troubles continue in England. The miners of West Riding, Yorkshire, having refused to consent to a small reduction in their wages, have been locked out to the number of six thousand.

A company has been formed to work the sulphur deposits at White Island, a marine volcano 140 miles from Auckland, in New Zealand. It is estimated that 100,000 tons of sulphur, in an almost pure state, are lying on the island ready for shipment. Chemical works are likely to be established soon, and the island leased.

The total value of the coal and metals produced in Great Britain in 1872, is stated to be £68,380,976. In 1859 the total value of these products was only £31,680,581.

London, 10th mo. 12th.—Consols 92¾. Liverpool.—Breadstuffs quiet. Uplands cotton, 8*d.*; Orleans, 8¾*d.*

The Journal de Paris says Count Von Arnim, when Ambassador at Paris, hastened the downfall of President Thiers, and urged Germany to recognize the government of MacMahon immediately. Prince Bismarck disapproved this course of Von Arnim, and wrote to the latter explaining the reason why he preferred the policy of Thiers to that of MacMahon, and says these are the letters of Bismarck which are missing.

The will of M. Guizot is published. It commences with a declaration of his devotion to the Reformed Church of France.

A Milan dispatch of the 7th inst. says: Ex-President Thiers arrived here yesterday and addressed the French residents last evening. He said the establishment of the French Republic should not be displeasing to the rest of Europe. He believes that the general election would give about fifty additional Bonapartist Deputies to the Assembly.

The French government are taking measures preparatory to a resumption of specie payment.

A Paris dispatch of the 12th says: The second ballots in the Councils or Districts which failed of a choice a week ago took place yesterday, completing the election for the Councils General. The following is the total result: Republican elected, 672; Monarchists, 604; Bonapartists, 155. The Republicans have a majority in 38 Councils; the Monarchists in 44, and three Councils are equally divided.

A Madrid dispatch of the 6th says: The French Minister has had a conference with Sagasta, and explained to him that the sentiments of the French government are opposed to the Carlists and are in full sympathy with the Spanish government.

A bark laden with arms for the Carlists has been seized at Santander.

The Carlist cause is believed to be declining. General Dorregary, the able commander of the Carlist forces, has quarrelled with Don Carlos and left the army and gone to France. Many Carlists are coming into Barcelona and Taragona, and asking for amnesty. The government forces now have possession of the left bank of the river Ebro.

A Berlin dispatch says: The Archbishop of Cologne has been released after an imprisonment of six months and nine days. The remainder of the term for which he was sentenced will be treated as cancelled.

Count Von Arnim is in close confinement. Heavy bail has been offered but refused. It is now believed the papers which it is desired to obtain from him have been sent to England for safe keeping.

The Post says Arnim's documents were arranged in three categories. The first, referring to his appointment as ambassador and his salary, were not included in the search. The second comprises those which Von Arnim acknowledges are in his possession, and which he claims to have retained because they will serve as a justification of his conduct; and the third and largest category comprises those of a confidential nature.

The documents contain Bismarck's unqualified approval of Von Arnim's conduct while ambassador at Paris, up to the time the semi-official journals of Germany began to attack him as the leader of the reactionary and ultramontane movement. The friends of Count Von Arnim, having petitioned for his release on account of ill-health, physicians were appointed by the government to examine the prisoner's condition. They made a report recommending a change in the place of confinement, as air and exercise are necessary, and he was accordingly removed to a sanitary establishment where he will be guarded by policemen.

On the 9th inst. the river Nile was falling, and the danger of a disastrous inundation was considered over. No damage had been done except the overflow of about 2000 acres of cotton lands.

Advices from those sections of India where famine prevailed, state that 600,000 natives were still supported by the government relief works, but it was expected that the disbursements on that account would soon be closed.

Dispatches from Yeddo say the Japanese government authorizes an official denial of the reported declaration of war between China and Japan.

The Demerara Royal Gazette states the interesting fact that nearly 300 Chinese immigrants have embraced the Christian religion, and have taken the necessary measures to provide themselves with a suitable building in which religious services may be conducted in their own language. In 1863 a small number of Chinese Christians came to the colony, and since then there has been a quiet work going on mainly through the efforts of the converts themselves.

A dispatch from Montevideo of the 11th inst. says: General Mitre has issued a manifesto announcing that he has assumed command of the insurgent forces in the Argentine States. He declares that he does not seek power, and that if a successful issue to the movement is reached he will retire to private life.

The great controversy between Chili and Bolivia has been adjusted by a protocol signed in Sucre, Bolivia. Bolivia remains mistress of the disputed territory between the 23d and 25th parallels, as well on the coast as inland. Thus the rich mines of Caracoles, which yield the government upward of two million dollars yearly, only in export duty, continues in the hands of Bolivia. Chili is to get paid an indemnity for giving up her claim, the sum to be fixed by arbitration.

UNITED STATES.—A recent official examination of the Mississippi levees reports them to be in a condition worse than ever before. The caving in of the banks continue at almost all points. Much labor and heavy expense must be incurred before they can be put in proper order.

The interments in Philadelphia last week numbered 250, including 93 children under two years.

During the Ninth month a daily average of 47,420,850 gallons was pumped at the five water works of Philadelphia.

The Markets, &c.—The following were the quotations on the 12th inst. New York.—American gold 110. U. S. 6 per cents, 1881, registered, 117¼; coupon, 118; do. 1868, registered, 116¾; coupon, 117¼; do. 5 per cents, 112¼. Superfine flour, $4.40 a $4.75; State extra, $4.90 a $5.10; finer brands, $5.50 a $10.57. White Michigan wheat, $1.30 a $1.35; amber, $1.24; red western, $1.20 a $1.23; No. 2 Chicago spring, $1.08; No. 3 do., $1.06. West Canada barley, $1.41. Oats, 63 a 66 cts. State rye, $1. White corn, $1 a $1.04; yellow, 97 a 97½ cts.; western mixed, 96 cts. Philadelphia.—Uplands and New Orleans cotton, 15½ a 16 cts. for middlings. Superfine flour, $3.50 a $4; extras, $4 a $4.50; finer brands, $5 a $8.75. White wheat, $1.30 a $1.35; amber, $1.23 a $1.25; red, $1.20 a $1.22. Rye, $1.08. Yellow and mixed corn, $1.02. Oats, 60 a 63 cts. Lard, 14½ a 15 cts. Clover seed, 10½ a 10¾ cts. Sales of about 3000 beef cattle at prices ranging from 4½ to 7¼ cts. per lb. gross, and 12,000 sheep at 4¾ a 6 cts. per lb. gross. Corn fed hogs sold at $10 a $10.50 per 100 lb. net. Receipts 6000 head. Baltimore.—Family flour, $6.25 a $8.75. Southern white corn, $1 a $1.03; yellow, 98 cts.; western mixed, 95 cts. Oats, 60 a 64 cts. Sugar-cured hams, 14½ a 15 cts. Lard, 15 cts. Chicago.—No. 1 Spring wheat, 96 a 96½ cts.; No. 2 do., 90 cts.; No. 3 do. 85 a 86 cts. No. 2 mixed corn, 76½ cts. Rye, 84 cts. Lard, 14½ cts. St. Louis.—No. 2 winter red wheat, $1.13; No. 3 red fall, $1. No. 2 corn, 83 cts. No. 2 oats, 51½ cts. Cincinnati.—Red wheat, $1 a $1.05; white, $1.10 a $1.15. Old corn, 79 a 80 cts. Oats, 53 a 56 cts. Rye, 93 a 95 cts.

NOTICE.

The Annual Meeting of the Auxiliary Bible Association of Friends of Philadelphia Quarterly Meeting, will be held at No. 109 North Tenth street, on Fourth-day evening, the 28th inst., at 7½ o'clock.

A. M. KIMBER, Secretary.

Philadelphia, Tenth mo. 13th, 1874.

WESTTOWN BOARDING SCHOOL.

The Winter Session commences on Second day, the 2nd of Eleventh month. Parents and others intending to send pupils will please make early application to BENJAMIN W. PASSMORE, Sup't, (Address Street Road P. O., Chester Co., Pa.,) or to CHARLES J. ALLEN, Treasurer, No. 304 Arch Street, Philada.

FRIENDS' ASYLUM FOR THE INSANE.

Near Frankford, (Twenty-third Ward,) Philadelphia.

Physician and Superintendent—JOSHUA H. WORTHINGTON, M. D.

Applications for the Admission of Patients may be made to the Superintendent, or to any of the Board of Managers.

DIED, at her residence in Attleboro, Bucks Co., Pa., on the 4th of 1st mo. 1871, MERCY STACKHOUSE, in the 89th year of her age, an esteemed member of Middletown Particular and Falls Monthly Meeting of Friends, and formerly an overseer and useful member of Middletown Monthly Meeting.

——, at her residence, near Attleboro, Bucks Co., Pa., on the 21st of 9th mo. 1874, MACRE BUCKMAN, widow of John Buckman, an esteemed member of Middletown Particular and Falls Monthly Meeting of Friends.

——, on the 27th of 9th mo. 1874, at the residence of her son, William Cook, in Salem, Ohio, MARTHA, wife of Stacy Cook, a much esteemed member and elder of Salem Monthly Meeting, in the 80th year of her age. She was zealous for the support of the principles and testimonies of Friends in their ancient purity, and after a short but severe illness, which she bore with Christian fortitude, quietly and peacefully passed away, leaving her relatives and friends the consoling assurance her end was peace.

WILLIAM H. PILE, PRINTER,
No. 422 Walnut Street.

THE FRIEND.

A RELIGIOUS AND LITERARY JOURNAL.

VOL. XLVIII. SEVENTH-DAY, TENTH MONTH 24, 1874. NO. 10.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY.

Price Two Dollars per annum, if paid in advance. Two dollars and fifty cents, if not paid in advance.

Subscriptions and Payments received by

JOHN S. STOKES,

AT NO. 116 NORTH FOURTH STREET, UP STAIRS.

PHILADELPHIA.

Postage, when paid quarterly in advance, five cents.

For "The Friend."

Wayside Notes.

(Continued from page 50.)

The successful struggle of gospel freedom in New England, against the bitterness, envy and wanton use of power, by a people such as have been thus briefly described, is an encouraging example, that the abuse of authority will not attain the end designed; but that men, given up to follow their passions and prejudices, will be overruled; that strength, and ultimate victory will be given to the humble—those who are in the Lamb's warfare; that He will put to flight the armies of the aliens, and the meek He will guide in the paths of judgment. They were conspicuously a self-righteous people, and having sinned against the Light of the Lord, were permitted to wander in darkness, even farther away in some particulars, than the heathen world, who not having known the Scriptures, or of the coming of our Saviour in the flesh by any external evidence, are to be accounted less responsible, and more the objects of Divine regard, than many whose outward condition has favored a growth in religion, but who have proved unfaithful. Paul in his epistle to the Galatians, describes a situation not unlike theirs, where he puts this plain question: "This only would I learn of you, Received ye the Spirit by the works of the law, or by the hearing of faith? are ye so foolish? having begun in the Spirit, are ye now made perfect by the flesh?" and he adds, "Have ye suffered so many things in vain?" And in this connection it may not be out of place to add, that the condition of a large portion of the professing christian world to-day, it is to be feared is, in a modified sense at least, too nearly represented in this very quotation. But of the Gentiles, Paul writes, "Which have not the law, do by nature the things contained in the law, these, having not the law, are a law unto themselves; which show the work of the law written in their hearts." By which it is clear these are not by any means excluded from the benefit of God's grace, but in common with other members of the human household, have received a certain measure and manifestation of His saving light, adapted to their less enlightened condition, which if submitted to, will work for them also cleansing of heart—reconciliation and acceptance by obedience in the fear of God, which is the universal test of discipleship. And in that most impressive sermon of the Apostle Peter to Cornelius, he sets forth in a striking manner the universality of God's love, and the high way cast up for all to walk in. He says: "Of a truth I perceive that God is no respecter of persons; but in every nation he that feareth him and worketh righteousness, is accepted with him." And as he proceeded to preach Jesus of Nazareth, it is stated, the Holy Ghost fell on all them which heard the word; and the Jews who were present were astonished, as many as came with Peter, because that on the "Gentiles also was poured out the gift of the Holy Ghost." It is hence plain the way of salvation is open to all. "He willeth not the death of any," but that all should come and partake at His table.

And in dwelling upon the character and antecedents of many of the instigators and actors in the New England persecutions, I have thought their hypocrisy was more to be condemned, than the infidelity of the Gentile world; and that in the infinite justice of God, men will not be judged by their acts alone, but also by the blessings they have enjoyed; their opportunities, and the means of light around them. As in the parable of the talents, it is impossible to discharge our duties with fidelity to Him, who furnished us with the one, or the two, or the five talents, unless we seek for ability to improve them; so will our condemnation be increased, if after having been favored abundantly with the outward means of grace, we turn our faces backward, and shut up our hearts in wilful blindness. I believe there is danger of such being shrouded in greater darkness, and carried into deeper and more flagrant sin, than very many who are in the gloom of heathen worship, and, as Paul found the men of Athens; who had erected an altar inscribed, "To the unknown God." Whom, therefore, he told them, "ye ignorantly worship, him declare I unto you."

The ignorance and superstition into which men are introduced by birth, or in which they find themselves placed by some inevitable cause, over which they had no control, is a situation that might claim, or plead the long forbearance of the Almighty Ruler, whose mercy is from everlasting to everlasting; whose tender regard is ever directed to raise the helpless, and to feed the ignorant with spiritual food. Paul testifies to having been a blasphemer, and persecuter of the church of God; but I obtained mercy, he says, "because I did it ignorantly in unbelief."

Now, I believe, it will not be contended the persecutions practised upon Friends in New England, had even the justification of ignorance to palliate them. Friends, and those who sought their destruction, were not so widely separated in belief, as were the ancient Jews and the early Christians, whose numbers were drawn chiefly from the Gentile world; both acknowledging the same gospel, and its glorified Head, why should there not have been an active sympathy, and a certain spirit of co-operation between two such religious communities, brought together from a desire which was common to both, to obtain greater religious freedom? On the one hand, Friends were a peaceable people; they sought no man's silver or gold, or to do him injury in person, character, or estate; they were law-abiding, and cheerfully suffered whenever their consciences could not yield a willing compliance. They were simple, unaffected, without disguise in their dealings; loving the truth; seeking their own salvation, and the spiritual good of all. Warmness of heart, and great frankness of manner, were prominent qualities among them; and while they claimed the most perfect liberty under the gospel, in the exercise of their religious duties, striving to follow in this, and also in doctrine, the teaching of our Saviour to the primitive believers, they were careful to accord the same measure of Christian freedom to others. Were Friends received in this spirit of generous, loving, open-handed welcome? Were they ever allowed the liberty of the broad unoccupied territory of the Colonies? To these questions the painful narrative of their sufferings furnishes a sad reply.

The opposition with which Friends were at once confronted upon their arrival at Boston, has few parallels in severity. A reign of terror was instituted, and many in their rage and blind zeal, were found plotting means for their suppression, or banishment, which would have disgraced any age or people. In the exercise of their wrath, some of the chief men in New England, both in the church and in the government, were seized with a sort of religious frenzy, under which they often lost all self-control; and the more ignorant classes whose prejudices were easily awakened by the clamorous appeals from those in authority, joined to their leaders, Friends were not only at the mercy of faithless men in power, but they often found themselves the prey of a lawless mob. And what could have prompted these men to commit such wrongs; and how were they urged forward in their madness, often setting aside their own local laws, or trampling under foot the supreme authority of the realm, in carrying into practice their cruel designs! They were not ignorant men: they lived in an age when large intellects abounded; an age wherein there was much intellectual culture; some of them were governors, and their associates; judges of courts, and prominent church men, whose minds were well stored with information. They knew the motives that prompted their own coming to America. They knew that Friends were induced to follow them from what they believed to be the call to religious duty. They knew, moreover, Friends taught no strange or unchristian doctrine, notwithstanding some of their enemies had been busy inventing heresies of which they were said to be guilty.

I am at a loss, indeed, to fully understand the cause of such a fierce blast of opposition, which found no rest, until its force was spent in torturing its victims, and human nature, turning away from the dark picture, had moulded public opinion more widely to abhor it. In their profession of faith in Christ Jesus, and in their ostentatious display of religion, rigidly adhering to the deadness of external forms, but living without its leavening virtue, and restraining power in their hearts, may not a parallel be drawn between them and the Pharisaical teachers of old; the essential features of whose character, wherever found in Christian lands, are as odious to Christ as then. In their condition, they could not behold the work of grace, where it was to be really found; and were, even as the unbelieving Pharisee, unable to comprehend the outpouring of God's love through His dear Son, for even those of them who believed were "astonished," when they found the Holy Ghost had been received by the Gentiles. True they did not nail the blessed Saviour to an outward cross, they did not take away his natural life, but they trampled upon the cross in their own consciences; counted His blood an unholy thing; crucified the Lord of Life afresh in their own souls, by rejecting His blessed Spirit; and even sought to destroy this seed of God, if it were possible, by subjecting to torture and death, some, who were the monuments of His grace through the power of the Eternal Spirit.

But there were many who sternly opposed these oppressive measures; and there were a number of examples, where men who had been elected to office, threw down their official robes, when they found they were likely to become participators in these wrongs; though for a number of years the waves of passion and sectarian bigotry overwhelmed all other influences, and it was scarcely safe for any citizen to proclaim his manhood, by exercising independence of thought.

What a solemn lesson it is to us; how it opens to our view the natural tendency of the heart to sin; and if through continued disobedience, we are left as without God in the world, we shall become the prey of our own passions, and riot in their enjoyment; and in the end suffered, it may be, to drink deeply of the cup of His avenging wrath, as will appear, occurred to a number of the more active, determined perpetrators of these offences against the work of grace in the hearts of His believing children.

A darker page than this we may vainly look for, in the history of the colonies.

P. B.

Philadelphia, 10th mo., 1874.

(To be continued.)

The Australian Gum.

Some notice of this tree has already appeared in "The Friend." The following fuller account of it, is taken from the "San Francisco Bulletin."

"The eucalyptus globulus, or Australian gum tree, is favorably known to all residents of California, where probably not less than 1,000,000 trees are planted. In this city, in front of handsome residences, you will find it with its magnificent drooping branches making an effective and graceful shade tree. In Oakland the broad avenues are lined with them, eucalyptus forests are planted in the country surrounding Oakland, and, in fact, in every county of this State where the cold winter will permit it to live, the eucalyptus will be found growing.

The wonderful properties of this tree have only within the past few years been discovered and appreciated. It is justly claimed that when the tree flourishes in low, marshy, and feverish districts all miasma will cease. It destroys the malarial element in any atmosphere where it grows, and is a great absorbant of moisture, draining the subsoil almost as thoroughly as a regular system of piping.

The eucalyptus is an evergreen, and is found in its native country (Tasmania) in boundless forests, both on the hillside and in the lowlands, under extremes of climates, both as to heat and cold, ranging from 130 to 20 degrees Fahrenheit. Whether it will endure a greater degree of cold we think has as yet been undetermined. It is, however, worthy of trial.

Its remarkably rapid growth is a matter of much surprise, attaining as it does, a maximum height of about 300 feet, with a circumference of from thirty to fifty feet. For timber and fuel it is exceedingly useful, being hard and easily worked, and very serviceable for such purposes as the keels of vessels, bridges, &c., where strength and durability are essential. It is estimated that from $4,000,000 to $5,000,000 in value of this timber is exported annually from Australia.

The leaves of this tree are of a dark bluish color of about ten inches long, an inch wide, and oddly twisted. They exhale a strong camphor-like odor, quite agreeable and pleasant, which with a large absorption of water by the roots, cause the beneficial influence of the tree. It bears a small white flower having no odor.

In consequence of its anti febrile qualities, the English Government has planted it extensively in the East Indies and Africa, in fever districts, with the most satisfactory results. In France, Cuba, Spain, Mexico, and many other places where malaria, fever, ague, and other pestilential diseases prevailed, the eucalypti have also been planted. The wonderful properties of this tree have been discussed by many scientific institutions in Europe. In the Academy of Sciences in this city its medical and anti-miasmatic qualities have received considerable attention. Dr. Pigne Dupuytren testified before that academy of the virtues of the eucalyptus, and stated that he and Dr. D'Olivera had tested it in the French hospital. In the garden surrounding this hospital a large number of the trees are planted for sanitary purposes. It had been found efficacious in the treatment of affections of the larynx and of mucous membranes in general. Experiments carefully made, have proved that in a medical preparation it cures cases of intermittent fever against which quinine alone proves powerless. It is also valuable as a disinfectant.

In Algeria its cultivation was undertaken on a large scale. Some 13,000 eucalypti were planted in an extremely pestilential and unhealthy section, where fever prevailed to a great extent every year. During the fourth year of their growth, at the time when the fever season used to set in, not a single case of fever occurred, yet the trees were only nine feet high. Since then this place is reported free from its unwelcome visitations. In the vicinity of Constantinople, another fever spot, marshy and sickly, the whole ground was dried up by 14,000 of these trees.

In Cuba marsh diseases are rapidly disappearing upon the introduction of this tree. A railway station in the department of the Var, France, was so pestilential that the officials could not remain there longer than a year. Forty of these trees were planted, and the unhealthy condition of the place was changed.

Two miles from Hayward's, in this State, the Surveyor-General planted two groves of the eucalyptus, one of about ninety acres and the other seventy acres; the whole comprising about 150,000 trees. They are now only about five years old, yet many of the trees are forty to fifty feet high, the whole making a most extensive and beautiful forest, for fuel and timber purposes being worth thousands of dollars.

For "The Friend."

Can Music be Demoralizing?

The following essay on music is taken from a common-place book of the writer, without his now knowing whence derived, or who is its author. If the exponents of the science, and the guardians of the virtue of young people, both speak the same language with regard to this fascinating amusement being sensual and demoralizing, let them beware. And let parents no less beware, who instead of the needed restraint, have foolishly indulged their children herein, as well as in other breaches of our testimonies, lest long indifference to, or habitual neglect of what is right, may close the ears, drown the sensibilities, or harden the heart against the still, small voice of the Saviour's love, so that it may cease to strive.

Picking up a stray number of the Musical Review a few days since, my attention was arrested by the following remarks, setting forth the weakening effects of music, which I hope may meet the eyes of many of our young people, who are too apt to think that whatever their concerned parents and friends say upon this important subject is only the result of a stereotyped mode of thinking, and that their objections are not founded upon sound reason. There are many other and still more potent reasons why we discard the practice, but for the present we will allow the organ of our musical societies, and the exponent of the science, to speak for itself.

"Music in itself is sensual. Nothing applies more directly to the nerves, and through the latter to the senses, than sounds. It is for this reason, that in the history of all eminently musical men of the strictly musical genius or talents, you can trace the immense influence their art had upon their sensual condition. That influence is generally so great that their bodily strength grows weaker and weaker, (till an early death calls them away, long before they have fulfilled, not only what they promised the world, but much more—what they promised themselves.) Mozart, Schubert, Mendelssohn, Bellini, and others, may be cited as examples of the truth of this remark. They would have lived much longer, had not the sensibility of their nature found superabundant food in the sensuality of their art. And yet these were the high priests of art, the followers of the beautiful and the pure in sentiment. But where these conditions are wanting—where music has no other purpose than to please and excite you—what do you think will be the result of that enervated state of body in which such music will have put you? Your mind will be also enervated; it will soon lose its balance, and be unable to distinguish what is pure and noble, until you will have become one of that large class of society which lives only by animal instincts, and unprincipled, and often even unlawful means of satisfying them. We think the best answer to the above question may be gathered from the records of the victims which fill our hospitals and mad-houses. An intelligent doctor will easily trace the frightful ravages which in some instances licentious music has had upon his patient. At least in Germany and Paris, amongst a hundred sufferers of a certain class of the residents in the lunatic asylum, you will find a fourth who are or were musicians."

MUSIC.

I have known several men who were skilful players on musical instruments. Nearly all of them were of idle habits and worthless character—showing that music has not that elevating and sublime influence which some claim for it. I have known several girls or young women, commonly called "young ladies," who had spent two or three years in learning to play on the piano, and they had thus become, as they thought, very "accomplished;" yet they could not write a letter in a neat, business-like manner, could not express themselves well, nor spell all the words correctly, nor punctuate properly, nor fold and direct the letter neatly. They could neither make bread nor mend a coat, and understood very little of household economy. The study of music had contributed largely to destroy their usefulness, and to prevent intellectual improvement. I have known young people of both sexes who had a strong passion for music—they resolved to indulge it, and having acquired some skill, sought such company as appreciated their attainments. This soon led to midnight parties; to the acquaintance of skilful musicians of low character, to wine drinking, to concerts, to balls, to theatres, to practical infidelity, to ruined morality. The Society of Friends has therefore, with much wisdom, adopted the principle of total abstinence—it has reasoned as temperance men have done, and maintained that on account of the numerous evils which are very apt to result from a study of music, and the bad influence and bad company to which it often leads, the simplest and easiest remedy is to forego the little good that it may sometimes do, and to exclude it from the list of studies and amusements. Do young people want amusements? Far more satisfactory and enduring charms may be found in the pursuit of the natural sciences—in making botanical collections, in studying minerals, in geological tours, in microscopical examinations, in drawing and sketching objects of natural history and landscapes, and in the pursuit of astronomy and the enjoyment of the wonders of the telescope. These improve the intellect and expand the mind, and do not, like music, address themselves merely to animal delights.

The ear is sometimes pleased, at the same time that improving and exalting impressions are received through its medium. The happiness of animal life indicated by the song of birds; the murmurs of the breeze through forests; the sound of falling water; the roar of cataracts or the ocean—these and many other enjoyments of a similar character, are sometimes adduced to prove the lawfulness and propriety of that other kind of music which costs so much time to study, which gives a distaste for the sober, self-denying duties of life, and which so strongly tends to bad company and dissipation.

There are at the present time, according to authentic statistics, 700,000 pianos in use in the United States. The cost, at three hundred dollars each, would amount to over 200,000,000 dollars. This sum would build 200,000 school-houses, at an expense of one thousand dollars each—or it would construct the Pacific railroad—or it would provide fine libraries, of about one thousand volumes each, for 200,000 neighborhoods—or it would provide every human being in the world with a cheap Bible or good Testament. Is it not a wise prohibition which Friends have adopted, of the practice which has led to this enormous extravagance, for a useless, not to say worse than useless gratification; while so many are suffering for the necessaries of life, and are growing up in ignorance and darkness, for want of suitable provision to enlighten them? It is now common to find families provided with costly pianos, who when called upon to assist charitable objects, "cannot afford to;" and the parents "cannot" buy for their children useful books for intellectual and religious instruction.

Music has been largely introduced, of late years, to attract hearers to public lectures for benevolent objects. But those who come to hear the songs, like them merely for the music they possess, and care little for the subject; and the attempt to throw fascinations around the enterprise, in this artificial and extrinsic manner, has defeated its own object, by preventing labor unless when accompanied with these fascinations. The attempt has also been made to make studies at schools alluring, by largely interspersing music; but as the mind cannot be exercised, disciplined, and developed, except by positive exertion and labor, to which there can be no "royal road," the intended assistant is likely only to make an enervated and thoughtless people.

I have no doubt that what is called "church music" has this tendency. A pious and intelligent Presbyterian minister, now a missionary in a foreign land, assured the writer that it was his conviction that the religious world at large were suffering great loss for want of more of the spirit of Friends' mode of worship in their religious meetings. He thought there was not enough of silent, individual exercise—everything was done by the minister and the choir—and every moment was occupied either in acting or listening, from the commencement to the close. Yet the incompatibility of the enervating influence of music, and the exercise and discipline of silent worship, had not occurred to him. It is questionable whether the two, so opposite in their nature, could ever be advantageously introduced into the same assembly.*

* The artificial, not to say superficial influences, which are called in to aid religious worship, were strikingly shown some years ago, at an extensive revival in a large village in New York. A young woman, a very skilful musician, was leader of the choir, and was waited on by a special deputation of the leading men of the congregation, to secure her regular services, "for," said they, "the Lord's cause cannot go on without your help"—although she made no profession of religion, and even her moral character was not of the highest grade.

And they that know thy name will put their trust in thee, for thou, Lord, hast not forsaken them that seek thee.

For "The Friend."

John Finch Marsh.

(Continued from page 71.)

SOME ACCOUNT OF HIS LAST DAYS.

My father appeared much benefitted by our visit to Margate. During the whole five weeks of our stay he was remarkably well, enjoying the fresh air and exercise greatly. But soon after our return the weather became autumnal, and in little more than a week he was laid up, having appeared to take a chill, which brought on congestion of the liver. He was ill about four weeks. For nearly two the expectation of recovery was dominant, and my beloved mother nursed him with calm cheerfulness. Sweet composure reigned in the house. I called in repeatedly, and observed his desire to get everything worldly off his mind, that he "might have nothing to think about." "You shouldn't let little things trouble you; I seem to have done with time." He gave me a gentle hint to come as often as possible, "for we do not know how it may be from one day to another." "It seems hid from me whether I shall get about again; if I do, I shall be thankful; and if not, resigned."

Fourteen days before he died, I called in for an hour, which seemed to comfort him. He asked me to write a letter for him, and then took me quite by surprise with the following words, "If I pass away all will be well with me, I believe." I asked him if he felt that? He replied, "Of course I do. My Heavenly Father that visited me when a child is the same now. I loved and feared Him from a child. I have found I have not followed cunningly devised fables,—it's the Inward Saving Grace—though it has not been my way, like many do, to make a great talk. I'm afraid many pass away unprepared, and their relations and friends think they are prepared. They must know something that I have known. Sometimes in the night I felt low, that I had no one to speak to, but I endeavor to bear it." I asked if he was pleased to see me? He answered, "I am now, and always pleased, night or day." He wondered his friends had not been to see him. I told him I had not given a very bad account of him. He said, "It's no use to mince the matter; I have never had such an illness before, to seem so near the close; my poor tongue," &c. I asked if he wanted to see my husband, who was from home? "Of course I do; George knows I want him to be with me at the close."

From that time I was with him night and day, with little exception (notwithstanding we had obtained a nurse,) and the next evening my husband came, and also remained until the close. We all felt it a great privilege to wait on him. The calm, peaceful serenity which had been his portion through life, was doubly present now, and the feeling inspired in the hearts of all who were with him was, oh! that their latter end might be like his!

On hearing a letter read one day, he said, "So much about outward enjoyments, and nothing about the inward life; so much living in outward gratification, feeding and encouraging the earthly mind. It's one thing to talk about being prepared, but another to be prepared. There's an inward guidance for us all; we all know when we have not done what is right, and what we ought to do." "Let us try and be cheery; we have known the Truth, and we love the Truth, and we know what the Truth is; and the more we know of it, the more we see the beauty and excellency of it."

"How people can settle down as they do in world!"

After the complaint seemed giving way, and his tongue beginning to clear, and our drooping hopes to revive, he said, "I like to look at your countenances; it may not be long we shall look upon one another. I don't think you know how ill and weak I am." He wanted my husband to sit down with me by him, and said, "I have always loved quiet; I enjoy it. I think we are alike for that, George and I. It's not in the much talking. When I was in my cradle the Lord was my loving Father, my loving Saviour. I should wish my interment conducted in great simplicity; no show; no brass on the coffin. I hope you will have a nice opportunity after tea of waiting on the Lord!" "I have so many kind nurses; your attention could not be exceeded."

Two of his nieces coming in, he said, "I hope we shall all meet one day to sing the same song. We have all of us been preserved from childhood, have we not? I dare say we have all fallen short of our duty, but what is passed cannot be recalled, and the future is hidden from us—the present time only is ours. We have all a great work to do; we must know the New Birth." My aunt, E. P. C., coming in soon after, he said to her; "I never could put up with anything superficial. It is an inward work. I have loved the Truth from a child. I have known what true Quakerism is. I have loved the Truth as it is in Jesus. Mine has been a close walk with the Saviour. I have suffered much, according to my measure, at the state of our Society. There must be such a people. It's not what we profess, it's the principle; it's nothing outward that will do. I was recorded a minister in 1818. Nearly all that knew me at that time are gone. I have known in my life so very many in our Society of the excellent of the earth; yes, the excellent of the earth. Many now have made mistakes of one kind or another, and gone more or less into the world." "I do not see how we can be right unless we dwell in love," then quoting some texts on love, said, "How very beautiful the Scriptures are! The Spirit of the Saviour is all love, gentleness, compassion. If we are on the Rock we are in love, peace, gentleness, and joy in believing."

"Arrayed in robes of purest white
The crown immortal wears;
And numbered with the saints in light,
The palm of victory bears."

"That's when we're gone."

He fondly recognised each face, saying, "What a favor it is I can see so clear!"

In the evening he said, "The prophet Ezekiel, what a wonderful man he was! If ever I get at the Scriptures again, how doubly I shall value them!" The next day, remaining in a critical state, he was cautioned not to talk much. He replied, "I don't want to talk. I don't want to hear what is passing. Wait and see if I get better. I seem to have nothing to do with the world. To know you are all near me, and caring for me!"

In the afternoon, being alone with him, I heard him praying in a low voice; but not being near, could only hear it in broken sentences, "how unworthy, how unfaithfully I have served Thee * * * all my sins are forgiven through Jesus Christ * * * If it be Thy will, oh! Heavenly Father, to spare me a little longer, I trust my heart * * * or be with me in the last extremity and support." The next evening I heard him again, and these were the words, "Thou knowest, oh! Lord, how poor and weak I am brought, but hitherto Thy Hand has sustained me, and I believe the everlasting arms will be underneath, and I believe Thou canst raise me up if it be Thy will. I thank Thee that I do not suffer great pain. And to think my little grandson is so kept; dear boy, I do love him!"

My husband's mother coming in, he said, "My dear love to her; I'm too weak to talk; so many kind friends!" She replied, "And One kinder than all." He said, "Oh! yes, yes, yes, yes, yes. yes."

He said to me one day, "I don't want the meeting to say anything about me; my life has been my testimony."

One day when the doctor was here, my father said, "I know him well, and feel him like a brother. I believe he will do his best for me." The doctor answered, "And you are doing the best for yourself by your quiet, passive conduct." Father replied, "I always have desired to dwell in the sweetness and gentleness of the Saviour's spirit."

He said, "I think it will be a miracle if I am raised up again; but miracles have not ceased. The Lord could raise me up." He also said several days back, that if he recovered he did not wish "there should be a great deal of talk about illness, but rather dwell on the mercy of recovery, and talk of better things." "I have thought if my life was spared, I should like to pen a little how sweetly I was visited from a child."

In the night I was awoke by his melodious voice in wrestling prayer on his own account, concluding with "And oh! that my darling boy may be kept as we desire him to be kept while his mother is away." Soon after he said, "I don't want to hear any more about houses made with men's hands," referring to that expression in an epistle "a House in the Heavens." The next morning, after giving directions about some of his things, he wished to be quiet; and then turning the 8th and 9th verses of the 55th of Isaiah into a prayer, offered an humble supplication for the light of the Lord's countenance and presence.

He had become so weak, he often felt unable to talk; and one day said, "I don't think it likely I can be raised up. I would not have you look to it."

One who came in said she hoped he had a bright prospect either way? He nodded yes, saying, "It would be a sad thing if it were not so, would it not?"

Once when we were giving him something, he said, "How everything is provided! Even the sparrows are not forgotten."

One day he said to one who was attending on him, "If I get about again, I hope I should be even more careful of my walk." "Set a watch, oh! Lord, before my mouth; keep the door of my lips." "Let the words of my mouth, and the meditation of my heart, be acceptable in Thy sight, oh Lord, my strength and my Redeemer."

(To be continued.)

For "The Friend."

Indian Affairs.

(Continued from page 69.)

The subjoined account of the results of the labors of Friends among the four most intractable tribes under their care, and their present condition, has been furnished by Dr. J. E. Rhoads, by request. Having visited their agencies both in the years 1873 and 1874, and travelled extensively among them, his facilities for information have been considerable, and give weight to the views expressed.

The Cheyennes and Arapahoes number respectively 2250, and 1675; a portion of each tribe are in the Sioux country and affiliate with these Indians. They have long inhabited the region now occupied by them, with the plains westward toward Colorado. In 1867 the Cheyennes were at war with the United States, and were much humbled by a fearfully destructive attack by troops upon one of their camps.

When Brinton Darlington became their Agent, in 1869, they were in the country around Camp Supply, and fed from that post. B. D., after much hardship, erected a saw-mill and buildings at the site of the present agency, enclosed farms, and had them ploughed. He then induced the Arapahoes to move to the agency, near which their main camps have been situated almost ever since. A school was opened, and from 20 to 45 Arapahoe children have attended it—some have learned to speak English fluently. A few of the Arapahoes gave some attention to farming, and it had been intended to furnish two or three of the chiefs this year with a small herd of cattle for the purpose of beginning the raising of stock, but the recent troubles have prevented it. The Cheyennes have never all been near the agency but once last spring. Most of them have staid out on the buffalo range, but all formed friendly relations with their Agents. They have abstained from raids and depredations, except that last year, about 200 of them went to Colorado and killed some cattle, and that some of their bad young men have joined the Comanches from time to time in raids into Texas. A few acts of violence have been committed by bad young Arapahoes, but the tribe has been steadily peaceful and tractable. Little Raven and Powder Face, their principal chiefs, have seemed to accept in some degree the teachings of Christianity.

The Cheyennes are a proud and warlike race. During the last four years the white settlements in Kansas have approached at least 60 miles nearer the territory. Large numbers of whites have killed buffalo for their hides on the reservations, and many whiskey sellers and horse thieves have debauched and robbed these Indians. Their Agents have arrested several of the whiskey dealers, and incurred their mortal hate. But as their numbers increased, the civil force of three marshals was totally inadequate, and Friends have always been slow to use them, because they were armed. The only efficient force to arrest and remove the white intruders was the military. Friends long avoided calling upon them. At last, through representations made to the Department at Washington, an order was sent down to Col. Brooke, at Camp Supply, to arrest and remove the lawless whites. But it was too late. The Cheyennes, stung by the loss of the horses stolen from them, and seeing the buffalo slaughtered, rose in resistance, and the present war began. No Cheyenne child has ever been in our school, nor has any full blood Cheyenne undertaken the first rudiments of agriculture. Our record is that we treated them with kindness, furnished all their supplies honestly, and induced them to keep the peace for five years. But no positive step towards work or christianization was made.

The Kiowas, Comanches and Apaches, number respectively about 2,000, 3,000 and 400. A treaty was made with them in 1867, whereby they agreed peaceably to occupy their present reservation, lying between the Red River and Washita. The Comanches have roamed over the region from middle Texas to the head waters of the Red River, for ages. The Kiowas have long been affiliated with them, although they have a tradition that they came from the far north, a legend somewhat corroborated by their physical characteristics. For a long time these tribes and the people of Texas have mutually injured each other. They own thousands of horses, and have been wont to go on forays into Texas and Mexico for scalps, and to steal horses and captives. During the five years they have been under the care of Friends, all captives have been given up, and much stolen stock, raiding has diminished, and many bands, especially of Comanches, have come in to their Agency, who formerly remained wholly upon the plains. Especially did the raids result in less loss of life to whites than formerly. The causes leading to this result were: 1st. The honest supply of good rations, upon which they became more and more dependent. 2nd. The impression made upon them by the devoted kindness of the Agents and their employés, and of the two missionary teachers who went among them. 3rd. The killing of so many of their young men while on raids by the military. 4th. The arrest and imprisonment of Satanta and Big Tree. This had a powerful effect upon the Kiowas, who for a year almost wholly, if not absolutely, gave up raiding. An apprehension of what law meant, and punishment for crime instead of blind vengeance, was awakened by this arrest and imprisonment. Doubtless, also, the clemency of the government in the release of Satanta and Big Tree had a temporarily good effect.

The Penetethka band of Comanches, two years since, went to the Wichita Agency to be more settled. They have long practised some tillage of the ground, and are different from the great bulk of the tribe. No Kiowa or Comanche child of full-blood, has attended school. The excellent school at the Kiowa Agency has been filled by Caddos, &c.

The good results of the labors of Friends appear in the settlement of the Penetethka Comanches, and in a very considerable pro portion of the Kiowas, and some Comanche bands remaining now at peace. A few of their leading men have heard the simplest truths of the gospel, and appear to have been influenced by them, and the example of the Friends with whom they came into contact. so as to show marked change of character, if not a change of heart.

The Apaches have changed greatly for the better, and had peace continued they would have been settled in another year. Ten Comanche chiefs or head men might have been entrusted with small herds for raising stock this year, had not the turbulent ones broken out in war. The Kiowas and Comanches had no special grievances to complain of, as a cause of war, unless the slaughter of buffalo is regarded as such, and the placing of troops along the northern border of Texas so as to prevent them from raiding.

These tribes, as well as the Cheyennes, will probably be disarmed and dismounted, and kept under military surveilliance till they learn habits of submission and industry.

For "The Friend."

[The following letter has been kindly furnished by one of the Indian Aid Committee; and we are sure it will interest our readers. The consistent Friend who fills this agency is in a most responsible position, and should receive the sympathy of his fellow-members.]

WICHITA AGENCY,
Anadarko, I. T., 10th mo. 6th, 1874.

Dear Friend,—I am here at the agency, and have been since the 20th ultimo, having arrived here on that day. My dear Margaret is still at Lawrence. She forwarded thy valued and very kind letter of the 16th ultimo, to me, with one of her own in which she says, I inclose a letter from our dear, kind and sympathizing friend.

Things around the agency are looking very much as they did when thou wert here, and in taking a view from our house, there is nothing apparent, to remind us of the late battle and great excitement. If thou wert here and would ride out with me past the school enclosure and onward to the shops to our right, on the hill-side, we would see a soldiers' encampment, and beyond the shops other tents would be met with, and still a little farther on a rifle pit or two. All would be quiet and orderly, and should we meet with the officers they would salute us pleasantly and cordially. Then if we were to climb the hill back of our house, we would find, on its top, that the trees had all been cut down, and in two or three places stockades made by the military companies, from which a most extended view of the surrounding country is had in every direction. The trees on the side of the hill are undisturbed. There is in the corral at the commissary building a small company of cavalry, which have their quarters there. Well, these things look like war; but the soldiers are so seldom seen away from their camp, and things are so quiet among them, that their presence is as little annoying as it can be, perhaps, with soldiers here at all. It seems to be the aim of the officers to do nothing that will conflict with my duty as Agent, and they are careful to avoid things that they suppose will not be in accordance with my views. They are simply here, and attend to their duties, as military men, and I try to attend to mine, as agent.

One of our Indians brought me word on Seventh day last, that some whisky traders were at a point about 12 miles from here, and were supplying the Indians with whisky. I gave the information to the officer in command, who sent a small detachment, with the Indian for their guide, and they arrested three out of four men that were seen there. They were white men, but they were found in a settlement of Mexicans who are living in an out of the way place on the Kiowa reservation. I believe these whisky traders and horse-thieves are harbored and perhaps assisted by the Mexicans, and I have written Agent Hayworth upon the subject of their removal out of the country. It is my intention to follow the matter up closely.

The poor, deluded and misguided Indians! If they had listened to thy counsel and admonition last spring, and acted upon it, what suffering would have been prevented. Satanta, Big Tree, and other Kiowas and some Cheyennes, I understand, have gone into the Cheyenne Agency, and given themselves up, prisoners of war. I suppose thou hast had information from Agent Hayworth, of the situation of affairs at his agency. A number of bands of both Kiowas and Comanches are there.

Most of the Indians belonging here had their camp equipments, housekeeping articles, harness, some plows, indeed almost every thing they had, destroyed. The dry weather and hot winds of summer, cut off their crops till they were almost an entire failure, and what was saved was mostly destroyed by the Kiowas and Comanches. The Indians of the Canadian river settlement suffered but little from other Indians, except in the loss of stock. A large number of their animals have been stolen.

The weather is pleasant, and I think none of our Indians have actually suffered, and if their annuity goods, which I understand are on the way, reach us before cold weather sets in I hope we can keep them from suffering. Many of them left their homes at the time of the disturbance, to seek places of safety, but they are settling down again, and seem desirous of continuing to improve their condition. They all came to the agency after my return, were very friendly, and were glad to see me at home again. Each of them had his own account to give of the late trouble. I think about fifty of our Indians, taken from the different bands, have gone with the troops as guides and scouts, which I fear will have a demoralizing effect upon them.

The school is doing well; on the first day of the session thirty-five children were in attendance, and the number has increased to sixty-six.

And now, my dear friend, what of the future? I have not heard what action was taken by the Executive Committee at its meeting at Richmond, but I do not think these Indians should be forsaken at the time of their greatest need. Why! they are looking to you and to me to relieve them from their distresses. They have put their children under our care and protection, and expect us to give them a training that will fit them for civilization. As much as it may be desirable to take up our abode again among civilized people, I do not think now is the time to forsake this people, and I am not inclined to do so, just now, unless I am called away by those under whose auspices I am laboring, or by those who stand above me in an official capacity.

I am most truly thy attached friend,

J. R.

For "The Friend."

We have been requested to lay the following before our readers.

Pennsylvania Working Home for Blind Men.

"And Jesus took the blind man by the hand." Mark viii. 23.

Our Saviour on this and other occasions, manifested his special interest in the blind. Christian sympathy has largely followed this example. Public sentiment rejoices in the human achievements which have marked the progress of institutions for the instruction of the blind; where those who sat in darkness have been morally and mentally illuminated. Every State in the Union has nobly responded to the public demand, which places the blind child on the same platform of intellectual culture with those who are blessed with sight.

But while public and private benevolence, has done so much for the real elevation of the blind in social life and industrial training, the community has not been fully aware of the large number who have passed from these institutions, and are homeless, or destitute of employment, and need, in the spirit of the Saviour's words, to be "taken by the hand."

When the Saviour asked the blind man what he would have him do? he answered: "Lord, that I may receive my sight." This would naturally be the first request. But another cry comes up with almost equal force: "Give me employment; the means of helping myself; save me from becoming a burden on others."

Those who have learned useful trades, fail to obtain employment in workshops for the seeing; they are often equally neglected by the community in which they live. If homeless and unoccupied, their future is sad and dark indeed.

A "Home" for a limited number, with workshops, and employment outside for a still larger number, is the appropriate relief now sought. Floating on the tide of busy life, they also ask for a working oar, that they may stem the troubled waters which threaten to sweep them down.

This great want, long foreseen and felt, is now, happily, to be supplied. The Trustees of the "Pennsylvania Working Home for Blind Men," recently incorporated, have purchased a commodious lot and building on Lancaster avenue, West Philadelphia, for $20,000. The liberality of the citizens called upon, has enabled them to provide the first payment, and means to put the house in working order.

But to meet the further payments on the property and the erection of workshops, will require about $15,000 more; it is hoped that not only this sum will be forthcoming, but a liberal endowment to enlarge its truly beneficent work.

If "God helps those who help themselves," shall not the blind man's appeal be heard, when he asks not the bread of charity, nor wayside alms, but work,—work on the trades he has learned, that he may help himself, and thus secure the blessing of help from his Heavenly Father. This accomplished, we may be allowed to say, and Jesus still "takes the blind by the hand."

WILLIAM CHAPIN,
Principal of the Penna. Institution for the Blind.
Philada., October, 1874.

THE FRIEND.

TENTH MONTH 24, 1874.

In "An Appeal for The Ancient Doctrines of the Religious Society of Friends," published by direction of the Yearly Meeting held in Philadelphia in the 4th month, 1847, and addressed to its members, there is a brief review of a work entitled "An Inquiry into some parts of Christian doctrine and practice having relation more especially to the Society of Friends," of which Edward Ash was the author. In that "Inquiry" an attempt is made to exhibit an alleged unsoundness of the early Friends on several points of Christian doctrine. In reference to those Friends E. Ash states, "I am persuaded, after much examination and reflection, that their claim to deference in the former character [as interpreters of Scripture and expounders of Christian doctrine] has in past times been too largely and implicitly admitted among us; and that this has been, and in some degree still is, *a source of serious injury to our Society, and to the cause of truth itself."

The principal object of attack is Barclay's Apology, though George Fox, William Penn, Thomas Story, John Richardson and Richard Claridge are all arraigned as promulgators of unscriptural doctrine, and unworthy of confidence as interpreters of Scripture.

After pointing out the serious charges made against some of the fundamental doctrines ever held by Friends, and the unsoundness of those advanced by E. Ash, the Yearly Meeting states, "We feel ourselves bound to bear a decided testimony against the tenor of the whole work; to declare our unshaken belief in the doctrines of the Gospel, as promulgated by our early Friends, and to deny the charges preferred against the founders of our religious Society, and the excellent works which they have left behind them." The Yearly Meeting also declares, "Were the Society to conform to the unscriptural opinions advocated in the work under notice, it would be carried back to the beggarly elements, to the institution of a ministry dependent upon human talents and learning, influenced by the various jarring commentaries upon the Holy Scriptures, now existing in christendom; and that most precious freedom from reliance upon outward means, would be lost, in which we are enabled to sit down together in solemn silence, and worship the Father in spirit and in truth, without the intervention of words. Thus the very existence of the Society would be destroyed."

The sequel is generally well known. E. Ash finding the Society in England not prepared at that time to adopt his views, so far as to withhold the publication of another edition of Barclay's Apology, resigned his right of membership in it as a protest against its continued unsoundness, and joined another religious body. But the Society there issued no disownment of the work or its author. The poison was allowed to work, to permeate the whole body, without any antidote being administered; and its effects, and that of similar sentiments contained in other works published by members, were not long in giving evidence, that the original faith of Friends was being, not only called in question, but discarded by very many. E. Ash saw the change effected and going on, and doubtless thinking the time propitious for the further spread of his heresy, he applied to be received back into the Society. He was received with open arms, without making any acknowledgment of the wrong he had done by the attack made on the founders of the Society, and on the doctrines they promulgated. He was again placed in the station of a minister. How far the consequences set forth by Philadelphia Yearly Meeting in the paragraph last quoted, have already been manifested, those of our readers who are acquainted with the state of things among Friends in Great Britain, can judge. Certain it is, according to the accounts published, not a few have gone "back to the beggarly elements;" there is a strong disposition manifested to have "a ministry dependent upon human talents and learning," and silent meetings have become so irksome to a large portion of the members, that reading the Scriptures has been introduced into many meetings by the consent of the Yearly Meeting.

* The italicising throughout is our own.

There is another remark in "The Appeal for the Ancient Doctrines," the truth of which has been strikingly illustrated by events occurring since it was written. It says, "One inevitable consequence which attends all innovation upon its religious principles, is the injury to the unity and harmony of the Society. Not only is the Society laid open to great unsettlement and confusion, and the peace of families, and the preservation and growth of individuals in the blessed Truth greatly endangered; but by allowing the first wrong to pass uncondemned, the way is open for further departures from the Scriptural doctrines which Friends have believed and maintained from the beginning." As regards the injury that has resulted from that cause, "to the unity and harmony of the Society," if the professions made be true, that evil has been sorrowfully brought home to the hearts of a very large part of the members. Opening the way "for further departures from the scriptural doctrines which Friends have believed and maintained from the beginning," has been taken advantage of, by numbers, who since the publication of the "Inquiry" have tried what they could do to impugn the doctrines and subvert the practices which Friends have "held from the beginning."

Encouraged by the kindly manner in which his attacks upon the founders and principles of the Society had been received by his brethren in England, Edward Ash, a short time prior to the meeting of "the Conference" in London in the 11th mo. 1873, and intended to influence its action, published a pamphlet entitled "George Fox, his Character, Doctrine and Work." His name is not given in full, as the author of this work, the initials only being signed to the preface. It is, however, well known in England that he was the author, and it was fully admitted in the discussion that took place in London Yearly Meeting. We have just got possession of a copy. He thinks "no attempt has yet been made carefully to examine and fully to portray his [G. Fox's] character, doctrine and work;" and therefore he undertakes it and gives his views on the three points mentioned. E. Ash admits that George Fox was a good man, and that he was an instrument of good to the professing church, but insists that he was deluded, self-opinionated and a teacher of unscriptural religious opinions.

Our object, on the present occasion, is not to defend the character or the religious faith of the "founder" of the Society of Friends, were it needful to do so; but to lay before our readers, by a few extracts from this pamphlet before us, the tenor of the sentiments inculcated in it, and virtually endorsed by Frenchay Monthly Meeting; where it says in the memorial prepared by it respecting E. Ash, that "As a minister of the gospel he was deservedly honored;" and that his large and accurate knowled e of the Holy Scriptures, especially of the New Testament, not only became subservient to his work as a minister, but was also turned to a most important practical use, for the benefit of his younger friends in the Bible classes."

After giving several extracts from the Journal of Geo. Fox, E. Ash draws the following conclusions, among others, from them:—

"His [G. F.'s] full persuasion that he was largely the subject of immediate revelations of the truth and will of God, and his implicit confidence in his power of distinguishing them from the operations of his own natural faculties."

"Fifth, the absence of any sufficient evidence, either internal or external, of the reality of much that he relates.

"Lastly, without thinking it needful to indicate the particular passages to which I allude, I must express my conviction that many of the above extracts afford plain evidence that he himself, and not a few of his brethren, more or less frequently mistook the workings of their own imagination or other natural faculties for divine communications and commands."

Speaking of the "arrogant" language sometimes used by Geo. Fox, he says:

"One conspicuous illustration of this is seen in the indiscriminate and unjustifiable way in which he habitually applied the word hireling, in the evil sense in which our Lord uses it in John x. 12, 13, to every one who received stated payment for spiritual work. He seems never to have remembered that Christ himself had elsewhere said, 'The laborer is worthy of his hire,' and that his apostle (with apparent reference to these words) had used the yet more explicit ones, 'Even so hath the Lord ordained that they which preach the gospel should live of the gospel.' The principle of wages or hire, in some form or other, is here as plainly laid down as any thing well can be. Its legitimate and beneficial application is a totally different question."

Alluding to the doctrine taught by G. F. of the inshining of the Light of Christ in the heart, or Grace of God that bringeth salvation, is the following:

"I shall here confine myself to the simple expression of my conviction, arrived at long ago, and confirmed by subsequent examination, that neither in those passages of Scripture to which G. F. evidently refers, nor in any other, is the above doctrine taught;—that nothing is any where said in Scripture which implies that men are to look to any thing in themselves for illumination and salvation;—that there is no warrant in Scripture for any such expression as 'the light of Christ;'—that the word light is never used with relation to our Lord except in a strictly personal sense, denoting him as 'the Light of the world,' or 'of men;'—that these expressions refer to his office as the great teacher of God's truth (see Heb. i. 2);—that it was plainly to him personally, and not to any thing in themselves, derived from him, that John the Baptist bore witness, 'that all men through him might believe' (John i. 7);—that it was to him, and not to any thing in their hearts, that both our Lord himself and his apostles taught men to look for illumination and salvation:—that there is no warrant whatever in Scripture for saying that a measure of the Spirit of God is in wicked men; and that the Holy Spirit is never designated in Scripture by the terms light and grace.

"Entertaining this conviction, I have of course no alternative but to regard G. F. as having been altogether mistaken in supposing that the Spirit of God had immediately revealed the above doctrine to him, that he had afterwards found it in the Scriptures, and that God had commissioned him to teach and promulgate it."

Referring to Geo. Fox's belief that the promises of Christ to his apostles, as to revelations by the Holy Spirit, apply to all true believers, he says: "Here again I shall content myself with expressing my conviction that such is not the case, that nothing is any where said in the New Testament which implies the future continuance of direct or immediate revelation to Christ's followers, and that the whole subsequent experience of the church (including that afforded by G. F. and his brethren) goes to show that nothing of the kind has been known since the days of the apostles."

E. Ash denies that the revelation made in the Scriptures as to the dealings of the Almighty with men, applies to any but those who have a knowledge of the Scriptures; also that the doctrine of Perfection as held by Friends is true. Strangely inconsistent as it is, yet he avows belief in "the work of God's Spirit in the heart of man," begetting "repentance towards God and faith in our Lord Jesus Christ," "sanctifying our fallen nature," opening the mind "to understand the truth as it is revealed in the Scriptures," and "enabling to worship Him in spirit and in truth;" but as he declares there is nothing in Scripture "which implies that men are to look to anything in themselves for illumination and salvation," he leaves his readers in the dark as to how they are to experience it.

One of the evils which, he says, has resulted from George Fox holding the doctrine "that the immediate revelation of God's truth still forms a part of the divine economy" is, preventing his reading and using the Holy Scriptures as the only present source of that truth to the church:" this he also applies to his followers. There were no more diligent and reverent readers of the Scriptures than Geo. Fox and his co laborers, and if they did not believe them to be the only source of "God's truth," it was because they had practical knowledge of another source of that truth, in themselves, even the Grace of God, which taught them, and which E. Ash, if we may judge from his own showing, knew nothing about.

We wish not to weary our readers with prolonged extracts from this tirade against the founders of our Society and their distinguishing doctrine. Almost every page is stained with charges which betray bitter hostility to the original doctrines of the Society, within which he had returned, apparently for the purpose of undermining its faith and standing, and also an overweening self-esteem. We will close the quotations with the following.

After expressing his opinion that great hurt has resulted to the Society by "taking it too much for granted that the ideas of our forefathers respecting christian truth and practice were all necessarily sound and true," he observes:

"What I have just said naturally brings up a subject which occupies a somewhat prominent place in the preceding pages—G. F.'s peculiar doctrine of a saving light of Christ, or measure of the Holy Spirit, imparted to all men. What his own ideas about this doctrine were, we have already seen. What his brethren in that day thought about it is plainly shown by W. Penn's language in his Prefaee to G. F.'s Journal, where he says, 'For they [i. e. people at large] were directed to the Light of Jesus Christ within them, as the seed and leaven of the kingdom of God; near all, because in all, and God's talent to all;—a faithful and true witness and just monitor in every bosom;—the gift and grace of God to life and salvation, that appears to all, though few regard it;' (p. x.) and again, '—their [the first Friends'] fundamental principle, which is as the corner stone of their fabric; and to speak eminently and properly, their characteristic, or main distinguishing point or principle, viz, the Light of Christ within, as God's gift for man's salvation.' (xiii. xiv.) This doctrine elaborately stated, expounded, and vindicated, by Robert Barclay in his 'Apology,' retained its authority among us, almost unquestioned, for nearly two centuries. But where is it now? Never disowned, either directly or indirectly, by the collective body, and openly objected to by very few of its members, it has nevertheless virtually disappeared from among us in this country, and I believe from the larger portion of our community in America. I do not of course mean to imply that there may not be many individuals in our Society who still hold it, or that it may not be sometimes advocated both in public ministry and in print, but only that it now finds no place either in the great bulk of our ministry, or in the Society's corporate utterances.

"Little has been openly said among us about this remarkable fact—one which I believe scarcely has a parallel in the whole history of Christ's professing church. Friends have naturally shrunk from avowing so considerable a departure from the faith of their forefathers. Yet, so far from its being any thing that we have cause to be ashamed of, it appears to me to be one in which we should rather glory, as showing that there has been and is among us so much of reverence for Christ's truth, that when we saw reason to believe that a greatly cherished idea of our forefathers really forms no part of that truth, we were willing to relinquish it. Entertaining the opinions which I have expressed in these pages respecting that idea, I must of course rejoice at its virtual disappearance from among us: and I find a further cause of rejoicing in the indication which this gives of our being now to a very large extent prepared to look at any question that may come before us, not in the light of antiquity or human authority, but simply in that of Christ's own mind and truth."

If this is true—and the published accounts of the proceedings of the First-day School Associations, the Conference, and of the Yearly Meeting seem to confirm it—the question may well be asked, How can such a body of people fairly and honorably claim the name of Friends? Why do they not frankly and honestly as a body avow their rejection of the doctrines of Friends, and make an association and a name for themselves?

Edward Ash died not very long after issuing the pamphlet under notice, and the Monthly Meeting of which he had been a member prepared a memorial of him. Let it be remembered, that when that memorial was before London Yearly Meeting, several Friends protested against that meeting sanctioning it; because, as it was well known, he had attacked the founders of the Society and their distinguishing doctrines; if the Yearly Meeting expressed its approbation of him, it was, under the circumstances, endorsing his doctrines, and thus bearing testimony against the early Friends. But the Yearly Meeting refused to allow, even a word of explanation to be recorded; but accepted the eulogistic memorial, and by the following passage in its general epistle, declared its unity with Edward Ash; thus giving evidence of the truth of his assertion in the paragraphs last quoted. After referring to the variety of character and experience of those for whom memorials had been read, it says, "We have been reminded that though the course of their lives might differ, their faith was one; and that while the laborers have their distinct places in the harvest field, all serve under one Lord." So far as those commemorated, or the memorialists, were or are one in faith with E. Ash, they were or are not Friends, as he makes plainly to appear.

SUMMARY OF EVENTS.

FOREIGN.—The unconditional cession of the Fiji islands to Great Britain was consummated on the 30th ult., and the Governor of New South Wales has taken possession and officially hoisted the British flag on Fiji soil.

The steamers engaged in laying the direct cable have coaled and wait only for repairs to the Faraday's rudder, which will soon be completed.

The British ship Kingsbridge, from London for Sydney, came in collision in the British Channel with the ship Candia, and was sunk. Eleven of the crew of the Kingsbridge were drowned.

A public meeting has been held in Birmingham at which resolutions were adopted protesting against the illegal use of public moneys to defray the expense of illuminating the city on the occasion of the anticipated visit of the Prince of Wales.

London, 10th mo. 19th.—U. S. 5 per cents, 104.

Liverpool.—Uplands cotton, 7⅞*d.* Breadstuffs quiet.

The French Minister of Foreign Affairs has communicated documents to the Spanish ambassador, which exonerates France from accusations made in the note recently sent to the French government by Spain, and show that the note should not be addressed to the other Powers. It is stated that the Spanish ambassador expressed his satisfaction at the explanation.

The French government has issued fresh orders prohibiting the residence of Spaniards in eight communes bordering on Spain. The Prefect of the Department of the Lower Pyrenees whose conduct is one of the subjects of Spanish complaint, will shortly be removed.

The French war steamer, Orenoque, left Civita Vecchia on the 13th inst.

At the election held on the 18th to fill four vacancies in the National Assembly, three Republicans were chosen, and in one Department neither party had a majority.

The German government has paid £1,880,000 as compensation for injuries sustained during the war by inhabitants of Lower Alsace, besides £270,000 for provisions, horses and other requisitions. In Upper Alsace the compensation awarded amounted to £92,000 and £96,000. The government have also contributed about £12,000 for the relief of persons who were indirectly reduced to indigence by the war.

Spanish advices continue unfavorable to the Carlists. Several towns held by them have hoisted the white flag and advised the troops to lay down their arms. The Carlist provincial authorities in Durango have given notice that those wishing to lay down their arms may do so. A Bayonne dispatch says that 400 Carlists were recently captured by the Republican troops, near Albacete, and that in an engagement at Umposta, the Carlists sustained a heavy loss in killed and wounded.

A Berlin dispatch says: It is expected that judgment will be passed upon Count Von Arnim shortly before November 1. The Count occupies two rooms in the hospital where he is confined. He is treated with more general severity and is more closely watched than heretofore. His intercourse with his family has been further restricted. The Count's family have offered increased bail, to the amount of one million thalers, to obtain his release from custody.

A Berlin correspondent of the Pall Mall Gazette writes, it is generally believed the higher court, that to which the case will be appealed, will take a more favorable view of Von Arnim's offence than the lower court. The German government is considering a proposition for the restoration of a Provincial Assembly in Alsace and Lorraine.

The Turkish town of Atchiolge, containing 5000 people, and situated on the Gulf of Burghos, in the Black Sea, has been totally destroyed by fire.

The Italian Consul at Bucharest has refused to open negotiations for a commercial treaty while the Jews in Roumania are deprived of their civil rights. The American Consul has taken the same stand.

The recent earthquakes at Antigua and other towns in Guatemala, caused a loss of over 200 lives, and property estimated at $250,000. The government had ordered supplies from Salvador and California.

The text of the treaty between China and Peru, abolishing the coolie trade, has been received at Lima, and will be submitted to Congress for ratification.

The Buenos Ayres insurrection is assuming more threatening proportions since General Mitre has assumed the chief command of the insurgents, his army being augmented by desertions from the government troops. General Mitre is near Buenos Ayres, with 10,000 men, and great anxiety prevails. A revolt of the government troops in favor of Mitre is apprehended. Both sides are anxious to avoid a conflict, and negotiations between them for a settlement of differences have commenced. The 12th inst. was the date of the expiration of Sarmiento's term as President, and Avellaneda was then installed as his successor. It is contended by the adherents of General Mitre that the election returns which gave Avellaneda a majority were false and fraudulent.

Germany has given friendly and satisfactory assurances to Denmark in regard to the expulsion of Danes from Schleswig. The possibility of a mistake through the excessive zeal of the local authorities is admitted, and a readiness expressed to examine each case and give full satisfaction where wrong has been done.

UNITED STATES.—The returns of the Department of Agriculture for this month show that the wheat crop is equal to or greater than last year's crop in all of the States, except Maryland, Virginia, Texas, Kentucky, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Iowa, Kansas, Connecticut, Delaware and South Carolina, and in Illinois about equal to last year's crop. California, Missouri, Ohio and Michigan have largely increased their yield.

The interments in Philadelphia last week numbered 283.

The salt beds discovered on the Canadian shores of Lake Huron several years since are now turning out salt of superior quality, and in such quantity that the western markets are being largely supplied with their product because of its superiority over our native salt.

The Pennsylvania State Bureau of Statistics report that the value of real and personal property in the State in 1872, was $3 475,831,851; banks and building associations $433,250,801; railroads, telegraphs and canal companies, $393,913,734; corporations of other kinds $1,519,128,870; manufactures $522,073,349; coal and oil $129,710,855: total $6,473,914,461.

The annual report of the Western Union Telegraph Company shows the receipts from all sources during the past year were $8,262,553, and the expenses $6,755,733. There were 16,329,256 messages transmitted during the year, an increase of 1,872,424 over the previous year. The quadruplex instrument by which two messages can be sent and two received on the same wire is in successful operation.

The increasing importance of Oregon as a grain-producing State, is shown by the amount of her exports from the 8th month, 1873, to the end of the 6th month, 1874. These consisted of 1,360,326 centals of wheat, valued at $2,621,815, and 206,752 barrels of flour valued at $1,161,938.

The total number of complete patents issued in England last year was 2906. In the United States 12,864 patents were issued during the same time.

During the three months ending 9th mo. 30th last, there arrived at the port of New York 47,654 immigrants and 12,798 passengers not immigrants.

During the fiscal year ending 6th mo. 30th last, 9,530,873 acres of the public lands were disposed of. This amount is 3,499,734 acres less than in the previous year. The number of acres surveyed during the same period was 29,492,110.

The Markets, &c.—The following were the quotations on the 19th inst. New York.—American gold 110. U. S. sixes, 1881, registered, 117⅞; do. coupons, 118½; do. 1868, registered, 117½; do. coupons, 117¾; do. 5 per cents, 111 a 112. Superfine flour, $4.40 a $4.65; State extra, $4.80 a $5.15; finer brands, $5.50 a $10.50. No. 2 Chicago spring wheat, $1.08; No. 3 do., $1.06; red western, $1.16 a $1.21; amber, $1.24 a $1.25; white Michigan, $1.36 a $1.37. State barley, $1.20. Oats, 58 a 63 cts. White corn, 98 cts. a $1.03; yellow, 93 cts.; western mixed, 90½ a 92 cts. Philadelphia.—Uplands and New Orleans middlings cotton, 15½ a 16 cts. Superfine flour, $3.50 a $4; extras and finer brands, $4.50 a $8.75. White wheat, $1.30 a $1.35; amber, $1.23 a $1.25; red, $1.18 a $1.20. Rye, $1.03. Yellow and mixed corn, 88 a 90 cts. Oats, 59 a 62 cts. Smoked hams, 14 a 15 cts. Lard, 14 a 14½ cts. About 4800 beef cattle sold at prices ranging from 4 to 8 cts. per lb. gross, common, 4 a 5 cts.; fair to good, 5½ a 7 cts., and extra, 7½ a 8 cts. Sheep sold at 4 a 5½ cts. per lb. gross and hogs $10 a $10.75 per 100 lb. net for corn fed. St. Louis.—No. 2 winter red wheat, $1.10; No. 3 do. 98 cts. Old corn, 77 a 78 cts. No. 2 oats, 50 cts. Lard, 12½ a 13 cts. Cincinnati.—Old corn, 73 a 75 cts.; new, 55 cts. Oats, 53 a 56 cts. Rye, 95 cts. Barley, $1.20 a $1.40.

NOTICE.

The Annual Meeting of the Auxiliary Bible Association of Friends of Philadelphia Quarterly Meeting, will be held at No. 109 North Tenth street, on Fourth-day evening, the 28th inst., at 7½ o'clock.

A. M. KIMBER, Secretary.

Philadelphia, Tenth mo. 13th, 1874.

WESTTOWN BOARDING SCHOOL.

The Winter Session commences on Second day, the 2nd of Eleventh month. As the School is not full, either in the Boys' or Girls' Department, parents and others intending to send pupils will please make early application to BENJAMIN W. PASSMORE, Sup't, (Address Street Road P. O., Chester Co., Pa.,) or to CHARLES J. ALLEN, Treasurer, No. 304 Arch Street, Philada.

Pupils who have been regularly entered and who go by the cars from Philadelphia, can obtain tickets at the depot of the West Chester and Philadelphia Railroad, corner of Thirty-first and Chestnut streets, by giving their names to the Ticket-agent there, who is furnished with a list of the pupils for that purpose. In such case the passage, including the stage fare from the Railroad Station, will be charged at the School, to be paid for with the other incidental charges at the close of the term. Tickets can also be procured of the Treasurer, 304 Arch street. Conveyances will be at the STREET ROAD STATION on Second and Third-days, the 2nd and 3rd of the month, to meet the trains that leave Philadelphia at 7.50 and 10 A. M., and 2.30 and 4.40 P. M.

☞ Baggage may be left either at Thirty-first and Chestnut streets or at Eighteenth and Market. If left at the latter place, it must be put under the care of H. Alexander & Sons, who will convey it thence to Thirty-first and Chestnut at a charge of 10 cents per trunk, to be paid to them. Those who prefer can have their baggage sent for to any place in the built-up part of the City, by sending word on the day previous (through the post-office or otherwise) to H. Alexander & Sons, N. E. corner of 18th and Market Sts. Their charge in such case for taking baggage to Thirty-first and Chestnut streets, will be 25 cents per trunk. For the same charge they will also collect baggage from the other railroad depots, if the checks are left at their office corner of 18th and Market Sts. Baggage put under their care, if properly marked, will not require any attention from the owners, either at the West Philadelphia depot, or at the Street Road Station, but will be forwarded direct to the School. It may not always go on the same train as the owner, but it will go on the same day, provided the notice to H. Alexander & Sons reaches them in time.

DURING THE SESSION, passengers for the School will be met at the Street Road Station, on the arrival of the first train from the City, every day except First-days; and small packages for the pupils, if left at Friends' Book Store, No. 304 Arch street, will be forwarded every Sixth-day at 12 o'clock, except on the last two Sixth-days in the Twelfth month, and the expense charged in their bills.

Tenth month 17th, 1874.

DIED, suddenly at Harrisburg, on the 13th of 8th month, 1874, JOSIAH W. HENRIE, son of Hannah Henrie, aged 21 years 9 months and 7 days, a member of Muncy Monthly Meeting and Gleenwood Particular Meeting. "In the midst of life we are in death."

——, on Third-day, Ninth month 8th, LEVIS P. NEWLIN, eldest son of Nicholas and Mary A. Newlin, aged about 21 years, a member of West Chester Particular and Birmingham Monthly Meeting, Pa.

——, on the morning of the 7th of Tenth mo. 1874, at her residence in this city, ANNA M. LOWRY, aged nearly 59 years, a member of Philadelphia Monthly Meeting.

——, at his residence in this city, Tenth mo. 12th, 1874, WILLIAM H. BURR, aged 72 years, an esteemed member of the Monthly Meeting for the Western District. He diligently attended all our religious meetings, and was firmly attached to the doctrines and testimonies of our ancient Friends. His last illness he bore with patience and resignation to the Divine will; leaving his friends the consoling belief, that his end was peace.

THE FRIEND.

A RELIGIOUS AND LITERARY JOURNAL.

VOL. XLVIII. SEVENTH-DAY, TENTH MONTH 31, 1874. NO. 11.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY.

Price Two Dollars per annum, if paid in advance. Two dollars and fifty cents, if not paid in advance.

Subscriptions and Payments received by

JOHN S. STOKES,

AT NO. 116 NORTH FOURTH STREET, UP STAIRS.

PHILADELPHIA.

Postage, when paid quarterly in advance, five cents.

For "The Friend."

Wayside Notes.

(Continued from page 74.)

It was in the Seventh month, 1656, scarcely nine years after George Fox commenced his public labors as a minister, that Mary Fisher and Ann Austin arrived in the harbor of Boston. They appear to have been among the first Friends, to carry into execution a determination to find new homes in the west. In this comparatively brief period, in the face of many obstacles, Friends had grown under the fostering care of the Heavenly Shepherd, greatly in numbers, and to occupy much attention among the leading ecclesiastics, and men in authority; whose unrighteous jealousy had often been shown in bitterness and unmeasured abuse.

Meetings were established in various parts of the kingdom, and Friends were concerned to attend them with diligence, but often while on the way, or when quietly gathered, received the most cruel usage by beating, stoning and imprisonment. They were not unfrequently driven from their places of worship, and ministers while engaged in prayer, or public testimony, were often treated with brutal hardness, and hurried away under the huzzas of an excited, misdirected populace, to occupy a loathsome prison.

The American Colonies were then attracting much attention. Liberal inducements were offered by the parent government; and in various ways, flattering prospects were presented to thousands in Great Britain; and very many had planted themselves already in these young and rising Colonies; some to advance their prospects in an outward point of view, and others, that they might in a distant and sparsely settled region, be far removed from those scenes of discord and violence, that had been the bane of the government, and of social life so long in England. Friends were harrassed upon every side. Between the power and bigotry of a church, overruling the consciences of men; and the dark prejudices of the lower classes, arising from ignorance, the prospect of tranquillity was indeed gloomy enough, for at certain periods there seemed to exist a determination to crush and destroy, to blot Friends out, if it were possible; that it was not surprising they partook more or less, also, of the feeling which animated others, and that under this increasing pressure quite a number should be preparing to leave the home of their nativity, to encounter the untried hardships of a remote settlement.

The reception that these unpretending, plain, christian hearted women, met with from the authorities and people of Boston, is indeed marvellous, when we consider there did not exist at that time any law in the Province against Friends. Hence there was no transgression on their part of even an unjust law, and the opposition they encountered, had not the shallow plea of a desire on the part of the authorities to maintain a love of order, by giving effect to a measure that existed, simply because it did exist as law, although acknowledged to be wrong. By order of the deputy-governor, officers were sent aboard of the vessel, who searched their trunks, took away their books, numbering about a hundred, and carried them ashore, where by order of the council they were burnt in the public market.

Afterward the Friends were brought on shore and committed to prison as Quakers, upon this proof only that one of them, in speaking to an officer, had said thee instead of you. A fine of five pounds was at once laid upon any one who should have communication with them, even by a word through the window of their small apartment. Pens, ink and paper were taken from them, no light was allowed them in the night season, and they were even stripped, under the pretence of discovering whether they were witches; and in this search it is stated they were so barbarously used that modesty forbids to mention it. Provision was denied them, and their starvation being threatened, the heart of one was moved to pity by their helpless condition, and he purchased and supplied them with what they needed. At the end of five weeks they were placed in charge of the master of a vessel, who was put under bonds for 100 pounds, to return them to England, and their beds and bibles were retained by the jailor for his fees. Such was the entertainment that Friends met with from those who had themselves escaped from the power of the oppressor.

In about a month after, eight more Friends arrived, who were imprisoned also, and sent back to England in the same vessel they came out in, the captain being required to return them at his own cost, being kept in close confinement himself until he undertook to do so. These unoffending people were in prison about eleven weeks. John Endicot, who was governor at that time of the Province, and who maintained a character throughout these persecutions of unbending hardness, was absent when the Friends arrived, but had now returned. He took early opportunity to say to them, "Take heed ye break not our ecclesiastical laws, for then ye are sure to stretch by a halter." In this bloody threat he displayed his real character, and his desire to exercise the power of an autocrat. There was no law such as he referred to existing, and the only one so severe and applicable to Friends, was the law of banishment, which was not enacted until the latter part of 1658, more than two years later. When they asked for a copy of these laws, they were not furnished, which caused some of the common people to say, "How shall they know when they have transgressed." I presume the laws referred to were those against witchcraft, so called, which could in no way apply to them. Soon after a decree was made prohibiting all masters of vessels from bringing any Friends into that jurisdiction, and themselves from coming in on penalty of the house of correction. When this law was published, the godly hearted man (who interceded to rescue from starvation, the Friends who were first imprisoned,) whose name was Nicholas Upsal, protested against the iniquity of such proceedings; warning them to take heed that they were not found fighting against God. He is represented to have been a member of the church whose influence conducted these proceedings; to have been a man of unblamable conversation; yet he was heavily fined and imprisoned, and afterwards banished and sent out of the Province in the winter season, though an old and feeble man, and unfitted to bear the exposure. Passing on his way into Rhode Island, he met with an Indian prince, who, having found how he had been treated, manifested, although a savage, a better spirit and kindlier nature, and invited him to make his home with him; and further said, "What a God have the English, who deal so with one another about their God?"

In 1657, Mary Dyer, from Rhode Island, who was one of the four who suffered death at Boston in token of their faithfulness, came into that vicinity; and Anne Burden, a widow, whose business was to collect certain debts, arrived from England. They were both confined in prison—the latter about three months—and then sent back to her home, and not permitted to take with her goods to the value of about 30 pounds, which had been collected for her from some of her creditors, by a few persons, who became interested in her tried situation. Mary was compelled to return to R. I., and the person who gave her a safe conduct, was obliged to enter into heavy bonds not to lodge her in any town of the colony, nor to permit any to speak with her on the way. A. B.'s case appears to have been one of great hardship. She left behind a number of fatherless children, needing relief, and had made a long, expensive, and perilous voyage. Her errand was of a business kind, under the pressure of need in her own home, and when at the very door of those, whom it was her business to see, she was driven out of the country and obliged to abandon her peaceful undertaking. Mary Clark soon afterward arrived from England, having left her husband and several children, under a Divine call to warn these persecutors to cease from their iniquity. After she had delivered her gospel message, she was unmercifully rewarded with twenty stripes of a whip with three cords, on her naked back, and detained prisoner twelve weeks in the inclemency of winter.

Then came C. Holder and John Copeland, who were before banished, being of the eight previously spoken of. Arriving at Salem, the former said a few words in their meeting, after the priest had ended his sermon; but was hauled back by the hair of his head, and a handkerchief thrust into his mouth, and turned out with his companion. The next day these friends were sent to Boston, where each received thirty lashes with a knotted whip. They were then locked up in prison, and it is stated they were kept three days without food or water, with no bed but the boards, without straw. Thus they were held nine weeks, without fire, in the winter season, and then sent, with Richard Dowdney, (who had arrived in the meantime and received similar treatment,) beyond the bounds of the Province. These Friends were also told if they returned their ears would be cut off. It is stated these cruel dealings so affected a portion of the inhabitants, that some would not attend public worship, and maintained their dissatisfaction by meeting together more privately on first-days: for which they were fined five shillings each week, and committed to prison. The first who thus suffered were Lawrence and Cassandra Southick, and their son Josiah, who were carried to Boston, and all of them, notwithstanding the age of the parents, sent to the house of correction and whipped with cords.

In the early part of 1658, a law was passed imposing heavy fines upon all who should be the occasion of any Friend coming into the Province, or should entertain or conceal a "Quaker," and upon conviction, to be consigned to prison until the penalty should be paid. And that all Friends coming, or arising among them, should be dealt with thus: for the first offence, if a male, one ear should be cut off, and the party kept at work in the house of correction until he was sent away at his own expense. For the second, the other ear, and to be placed in the house of correction as before. In case the offender was a female, the operation of the law was not quite so inhuman; but for the third offence, whether male or female, their tongues were to be bored with a hot iron, and they sent at their own cost beyond the limits of the Province.

Scarcely two years had now elapsed, since the first landing of Friends, and what a fearful record of public crime, as set forth in the above recital, had already been committed in the name of Christian civilization! What a sad and solemn picture it presents, wherein the application of this scripture is made plain: "If the Light that is in thee be darkness, how great is that darkness."

P. B.

Philadelphia, 10th mo., 1874.

(To be continued.)

Every day is a little life, and our whole life is but a day repeated; whence it is that old Jacob numbered his life by days; and Moses desired to be taught this holy arithmetic, to number not his years but his days. Those, therefore, that dare lose a day, are dangerously prodigal; those that dare misspend it, desperate.

For "The Friend."

A few Questions and Answers relative to some of the Doctrines and Testimonies of the Society of Friends.

Believing there is need for some concise and elementary exposition of the religious views and principles of the Society of Friends, the following queries and answers concerning its doctrines, its practices, its testimonies, are thus in familiar form or dialogue presented to the reader.

Question.—Where had the Society of Friends its rise?

Answer.—George Fox who is generally reputed, so far as human instrumentality was concerned, as the founder of the Society of Friends or Quakers, was born in the year 1624, in England. And commenced his religious labors in 1643, when about nineteen years of age.

Q. Had he any of the notoriety which distinguished parentage or affluent circumstances give to their possessor?

A. No. He was a man of humble birth, and of but little school education; but was endowed with extraordinary intellectual and moral qualities. "This blessed instrument," writes his learned contemporary, William Penn, "was a man that God endowed with a clear and wonderful depth, a discerner of other's spirits, and very much a master of his own. And though the side of his understanding which lay next the world, and especially the expression of it, might sound uncouth and unfashionable to nice ears, his matter was nevertheless very profound, and would not only bear to be often considered, but the more it was so, the more weighty and instructive it appeared." Thus in him was verified the Scripture testimony: "Not many wise men after the flesh, not many mighty, not many noble are called; but God hath chosen the foolish things of the world, to confound the wise; and God hath chosen the weak things of the world to confound the things that are mighty; and base things of the world, and things which are despised, hath God chosen, yea, and things which are not, to bring to nought things that are; that no flesh should glory in his presence;" but "He that glorieth, let him glory in the Lord."

Q. If not in schools and colleges, where and how was he prepared for the great work his Divine Master called him to, and sustained him in?

A. In the school of Christ. One of the first lessons in which is, to become a fool that we may be made wise unto salvation. It is the school of humility and meekness; of self-denial; of heart-cleansing baptisms. Whereby also, as from the very depths of Jordan, he was enabled to bring up living stones of memorial, and to pitch them to the honor of the Great Name through all succeeding times. The scripture, "Gold is tried in the fire, and acceptable men in the furnace of adversity," was remarkably exemplified in him. He says, "I had been brought through the very ocean of darkness and death, and through and over the power of Satan, by the eternal glorious power of Christ: * * Then could I say, I have been in spiritual Babylon, Sodom, Egypt, and the grave; but by the eternal power of God I was come [brought] up out of it and the power of it into the power of Christ." Thus G. F., in this school of humiliation and self-reduction, became like the Patriarch who, though he had heard of his Creator by the hearing of the ear, when his spiritual eye was anointed to see Him as He is, "abhorred himself and repented in dust and ashes."

Q. What does he further say of his Heavenly Father's teachings through the gift of grace in his heart?

A. "The Lord taught me," says he, "to be faithful in all things, and to act faithfully two ways, viz: inwardly to God, outwardly to man; and to keep to yea and nay in all things." And, on another occasion, after cries and prayers to the Lord, he states: "He said to me, Thou seest how young people go together into vanity, and old people into the earth, [earthly things] and thou must forsake all, both young and old, and keep out of all, and be as a stranger unto all." George Fox early arrived at the conclusion, that Truth is to be sought and found by listening to the still small voice of the Holy Spirit of Christ Jesus in the soul. And in him we have a striking illustration of his own tenet, that a college education was not, of itself, either sufficient or necessary to make men ministers of the gospel; for unaided by advantages of this sort, his reading was confined almost exclusively to the Holy Scriptures, which he perused diligently and with fervent desires to be guided by the same Spirit that gave them forth, and which is necessary to comprehend their meaning. He did not dare to draw any conclusions founded on his own erring judgment, or which the Spirit of Truth did not lead unto, but waited with deep humility and earnest prayer for what he considered to be the openings of the Light of Life, the true Teacher in the heart, respecting the duties they inculcate. That this was his stronghold is exemplified in his first visit to Scotland, when he exhorted all the people to obedience in the light, and to own the grace of God, their free teacher; and it would assuredly bring them their salvation: for it is sufficient.

Q. What is a part of Thomas Ellwood's testimony concerning George Fox, and the purpose for which he was raised up?

A. "He was a man," says T. Ellwood," "raised up by God in an extraordinary manner, for an extraordinary work, even to awaken the sleeping world, by proclaiming the mighty day of the Lord to the nations. He was valiant for the truth, bold in asserting it, patient in suffering for it, unwearied in laboring in it, steady in his testimony to it; unmovable as a rock. Deep he was in divine knowledge, clear in opening heavenly mysteries, plain and powerful in preaching, fervent in prayer."

Q. What can be said of the journal of this Reformer's life?

A. It is worthy of an attentive perusal by all. He begins with these expressive words: "That all may know the dealings of the Lord with me, and the varied exercises, trials, and troubles, through which He led me, in order to fit and prepare me for the work unto which He had appointed me, and may thereby be drawn to admire and glorify His infinite wisdom and goodness: I think fit * * * briefly to mention how it was with me in my youth, and how the work of the Lord was begun, and gradually carried on in me, even from my childhood." It was the declaration of Sir James Macintosh, that George Fox's Journal is "one of the most extraordinary and instructive narratives in the world."

Q. Should not the members of our Society whether younger or older, seek to make themselves acquainted with it?

A. This is highly important. When innovations upon the established doctrines and discipline of a religious Society are attempted, a frequent recurrence and a firm adherence to the original principles of its compact is necessary to its vitality and existence.

Q. Is the ground of the doctrines and testimonies of the Society of Friends pretty well understood by the world at large, or even enough so by its own members?

A. Notwithstanding the Society of Friends has been an organized religious body for more than two hundred years, its Christian principles and practices, particularly as they are distinguished from other religious professors, are little understood by said professors, while many within our own pale are wanting in a clear appreciation of them.

Q. Should not every member of the Society live up to the requisitions of its own discipline, conform to its testimonies, and be able to give a reason for the hope that is in them?

A. Surely they should. King David said, "I have rejoiced in the way of Thy testimonies, as much as in all riches." Again, "Thy testimonies are my delight." And again, "Thy testimonies have I taken as an heritage forever: for they are the rejoicing of my heart." No less important is it that the testimonies committed by the Head of the Church, should be maintained by us, than those required of David should by him be upheld before all. Moreover it was the language of the Prophet to Judah, "If ye be willing and obedient, ye shall eat the good of the land:" so it remains to be an unfailing truth, "If any man will do the will of the Father, he shall know of the doctrine of the Son. And this knowledge is saving and eternal. Touching the hope that is in us the apostle Peter says, "Sanctify the Lord God in your hearts; and be ready always to give an answer to every man that asketh you a reason of the hope that is in you with meekness and fear," &c.

(To be continued.)

Bees at Sydenham, England.

The London Times gives an account of the first exhibition of the British Beekeepers' Association, held at Crystal Palace, Sydenham. It says:

The principal apiarian operation, of which examples were given, was the driving of bees, which includes a great many minor processes. A few puffs from a pipe caused the bees to retreat among the combs, and the hive was then gently inverted. Above it the new and empty hive was placed with its open end toward the former base of the inverted hive. Then the chief beemaster drummed with his fists upon the lower hive and waited for the rush. At the first disturbance the provident creatures, always (though their life in summer is but six weeks) in fear of a poverty-stricken old age, had hastened to fill their bags with honey. Thus they were heavy and good-tempered, and those who escaped through the gap between the two hives forbode to sting the unprotected face and hands of the beemasters. In a few minutes a rushing sound was heard, the bees had begun the ascent; the queen passed up, the remainder were sure to follow her. It was now safe to incline the top backward so that the spectators could see what was passing inside. Like soldiers swarming up the walls of a beleaguered city, the bees were observed hurrying upward in thousands, climbing over each other's bodies several deep, without paying the least attention to the facilities for escape which the open hive gave them. Then the combs were taken out of the old and deserted hive and put in frames into the "slinger" or extractor. A handle is turned and the comb flies rapidly round.

Centrifugal action drives out all the honey from the cell; it drops to the bottom of the vessel, and passes thence into the jar placed to collect it. The next thing is to tie up with tape the old combs, some emptied of all their honey, some remaining full, in new frames, and to place them in the new hive. In twenty-four hours, or at the most, in forty-eight, the fastenings of tape will become unnecessary, for the bees, with cement and wax, will have built the combs into the new frames, and will quickly proceed to fill them with honey. By thus making use a second time of the old comb the time of the bees is saved, and they give to honey-making precious days of summer which would otherwise be devoted to the building up of fresh waxen cells. The whole process lasted less than an hour.

There are fifty different kinds of bees known to exhibitors, but the bee of the Maritime Alps, which gained the prize, is the most highly valuable of all for its fine appearance, good temper, and reproductiveness. It is the "yellow-banded bee" of Tennyson, and is used to improve the strain of the common black bee.

For "The Friend."

John Finch Marsh.

(Continued from page 76.)

About eight days before the close he began to suffer with such intense exhaustion, as though he could not hold out longer, and asked the doctor if it would not be better to let him pass away undisturbed, desiring we might be quiet, and we should see when he passed away. For one day and two nights we kept much upon the watch, his end seemed so near; but again he revived to our great consolation for six days more. It was during this two days when he could swallow nothing, except a little grape juice part of the time, when his departure seemed so near, that a friend came down from London to see him, to whom he said, "This is a proving time; it is wonderful how I have been supported;" and related some incidents in his life, adding, "I don't want the meeting to say anything about me. I have been a poor unworthy servant, but I believe I often divided the word aright." Another friend came in, and remarked, "It is a reality." Father replied, "Yes, I have often told Friends that nothing short of the reality, nothing short of the religion of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, will do in a dying hour."

He wished his love to be given to all his relatives and friends, particularly to all the friends belonging to Croydon Meeting.

After the second night's anxious watching above referred to, he said, "I see so clear, it seems almost as if I could read." He was asked if he would like to hear a Psalm read? He replied, "The Lord is my Shepherd, I have not wanted;" soon after added, "If you like to sit down and read a Psalm." Upon which we all sat down, and the book was given to me. Father said, "The floods have lifted up." While I was finding the xciii, he raised his voice, and said, "The Lord on high is mightier than the noise of many waters." Having read that short psalm, he said, "He shall cover thee with His feathers," upon which I read the xci. Then he repeated the two first verses of ciii, and said, "I hope you will often read the 103rd Psalm, it is so beautiful."

After this he said, "Some will be sorry at my removal; but there will be other ministers raised up; there must be such a people." "God is love, and he that dwelleth in love dwelleth in God, and God in him; we dwell in love, and we dwell in God." "How true it is Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace, whose mind is stayed on Thee, because—because—because—he trusteth in Thee."

In the afternoon my child was brought for the last time to see him, and he would have the young woman in to acknowledge her kind care over him in my absence. Then I heard him in a sweet voice say,

"Oh! God, Thou moves in a mysterious way,
Thy wonders to perform,"—

I then went near, and when he saw me he said, "I want to say,—

"Thou, oh God! moves in a mysterious way,
Thy wonders to perform,
Thou plants Thy footsteps in the sea,
And rides upon the storm."

I should like to say it all, but am not able."

He said he hoped dear mother would not sit down and mourn, and that I should not fret, adding, "Thou wilt be supported; it will be a cause of rejoicing when I am gone. I hope this will long be an open house for you and your mother on first days."

Four days before the close, two of his oldest friends came a long distance to visit him. To them he said, "I am not altered; I am a true Quaker, a true Friend; there must be a living people; there must be such a people. Ah! they have slidden off the foundation, and are building on the sand, and they will find it so when it is too late. I have been preserved in patience. I have fought a good fight, according to my measure. I have fought a good fight with the measure of grace bestowed. I have been helped to keep the faith in Him, who for the joy that was set before Him endured the cross; yes, endured the cross."

They told him he had been a father in the Truth to them, and that they loved him for the Truth's sake—that they met in the Truth. Father replied, "Yes, and we lived in the Truth. We walked in the Truth. Many a little one in secret have I cherished; oh! yes, you know all about me." "I feel nothing but love to all—love to all. I swim in the ocean of love. The everlasting Arms are underneath."

"Dear Lydia and John! (Barclay.) I did love them so dearly; they were very near and dear to me. I always remember the day he died; and precious Anna Thorne died the same day. It was like mother and son going to heaven together."

They expressed the hope of seeing him again, if consistent with the Lord's will. Father said, "Everything is in that. I always desire everything, if consistent with His holy will."

One of them said, "He that was thy morning light is now thy evening song." Father assented to that, and said, "He was my light in my childhood. I have loved the Lord from a child, and my Saviour has loved me—from my boyhood—all my life. A great age, in my eighty-fifth year."

From that time his weakness was so very great, he said but little. He, however, never once, that I heard, expressed anxiety to be gone, as he had the previous week. Now and then humbly appealed to his Heavenly Father that he knew how weak he was; and the last afternoon said he hoped patience would hold out; and seeing George's mother, who came to sit quietly in the room, in a low voice signified his pleasure "to have us all near him."

His weakness increased greatly, but he was able to speak almost to the last, never losing consciousness, and passed away very gently, according to his petition, that the Lord would be "with him in the last extremity and support;" and truly as He was with my father, He also condescended to be with us in the unspeakable trial of parting with one so dear. And sincerely do I bless and praise Him for His gracious dealings with my beloved parent, and for His loving-kindness in granting the fervent desire of my heart, to be permitted to be with him whenever his call should come.

Then let it be an incitement to us all to cleave with fuller purpose of heart to the Lord, whose goodness to us far exceeds our devotedness to Him, and who can fulfil His promise when least expected and least deserved, "When thou passest through the waters, I will be with thee; and through the rivers, they shall not overflow thee; and when thou walkest through the fire, thou shalt not be burned."

The interment took place the week following in the Friends' burial-ground at Croydon Meeting House—when a large company assembled, the weather being fine, and it was a solemn and instructive occasion.

P. Pitt.

The following unlooked-for testimony (inserted by permission,) was received the day before the interment, from the writer, who was unable to be present with us on that occasion:—

A few words of Testimony concerning my beloved and ever sympathising friend, the late John Finch Marsh; who died at Croydon on the 7th of 10th mo. 1873; aged 84 years.

And of Zion it shall be said,
. . "This Man was born there;"
That Jerusalem which is from above
Was Mother unto him:
Whose peace he prayed for,
And true weal he sought,
From childhood to old age:
In labors and in love abundant.
A simple character, sweet, solid, and sincere;
Enlarged and beautified by grace,
And heavenly-mindedness;
Abounding in the love of God,
And in the Spirit of Christ Jesus,
His Lord and Saviour.

In joy of hope;—blest confidence of faith;—
Reverence, humility, and godly fear;—
In tribulations patient, and to Truth sincere,
He lived: and so he died:
Reposing in that Name,
Than which, no other saves,—
Jesus Immanuel!

D. P.

(To be continued.)

Travelling on the Farm.—Did any of your readers, says a correspondent of the American Rural Home, ever think of the amount of travel it takes to raise a crop of corn? I never saw an illustration in print, and I thought I would give you one. I have a twenty-acre field, forty by eighty rods. To break this up would take one hundred and sixty-six miles. Harrowing it, about forty miles. Furrowing out, ninety miles. Planting, forty-five miles, if with a planter; and if chopped and then covered, ninety miles. And for each plowing of two furrows in a row, ninety miles, or five plowings, four hundred and fifty miles. Thus you will see it takes about eight or nine hundred miles of travel to raise twenty acres of corn, not counting going to and returning from the field. Besides there is some re-planting, thinning, rolling, &c.

Selected.

WAITING.

"Mine hour is not yet come."

Jesus' hour is not yet come,
Let this word thine answer be;
Pilgrim, asking for thine home,
Longing to be blest and free,
Yet a season tarry on,
Nobly borne is nobly done.

While oppressing cares and fears
Night and day no respite leave,
Still prolonged through many years,
None to help thee or relieve,
Hold the word of promise fast,
Till deliverance comes at last.

Every creature hope and trust,
Every earthly prop or stay,
May be prostrate in the dust,
May have failed or passed away;
Then, when darkest falls the night,
Jesus comes, and all is light.

Yea, the Comforter draws nigh
To the breaking, bursting heart;
For, with tender sympathy,
He has seen and felt its smart:
Through its hours of darkest ill
He is waiting, watching still.

Dost thou ask, when comes His hour?
Then when, it shall aid thee best?
Trust His faithfulness and power,
Trust in Him and quiet rest:
Suffer on, and hope, and wait,
Jesus never comes too late.

Blessed day, which hastens fast,
End of conflict and of sin;
Death itself shall die at last,
Heaven's eternal joys begin:
Then eternity shall prove
God is Light and God is Love.

Translated from the German.

Selected.

TO THE FRINGED GENTIAN.

BY WILLIAM CULLEN BRYANT.

Thou blossom bright with autumn dew,
And colored with the heaven's own blue,
That openest when the quiet light
Succeeds the keen and frosty night.

Thou comest not when violets lean
O'er wandering brooks and springs unseen,
Or columbines, in purple dressed,
Nod o'er the ground-bird's hidden nest.

Thou waitest late and com'st alone,
When woods are bare and birds are flown,
And frosts and shortening days portend
The aged year is near his end.

Then doth thy sweet and quiet eye,
Look through its fringes to the sky,
Blue—blue—as if that sky let fall
A flower from its cerulean wall.

I would that thus, when I shall see
The hour of death draw near to me,
Hope, blossoming within my heart,
May look to heaven as I depart.

Let us wait to know our duty. We have often heard, that they that wait upon the Lord shall renew their strength. These come to see their duty, and they also receive ability to perform the same, although at sometimes they may be so encompassed about, that they may see no way of deliverance, until the Lord opens an eye in them to see it; yet the Lord will make way in his own time, for the deliverance of his people who trust in him.—Mary Lamley.

For "The Friend."

Divine Interposition.

Many Christians of the present day suffer loss, from want of sufficient faith to enjoy some of the privileges partaken of by the saints of old, promised in the Holy Scriptures, and experienced in measure by some of modern times. The sceptical atmosphere in which we live, with its blinding mists, appears to affect them in degree, and prevent them from seeing with clearness, and receiving some of the blessings which are bestowed upon others who have more simple-minded faith.

The efficacy of prayer to procure both spiritual and temporal blessings, the indwelling of the Spirit of Christ and its sensible operations on the heart, the gift of prophecy and of healing the sick, and the extension of Divine Power in a manner out of the ordinary course of nature, are all realities confirmed by the records of the past, and which we have Scripture authority for expecting to find in the experience of the present day.

Thomas Story was an intimate friend of William Penn, and held several important offices under him. He was a member of the Council of State, Master of the Rolls and Commissioner of Property for Pennsylvania. He had received a classical education, and possessed an unusually clear and logical mind; and having early in life yielded his heart to the operations of Divine Grace, he possessed both the intellectual and spiritual qualities which give value to his testimony on religious matters. He left behind him an autobiography in which are recorded the following interesting circumstances.

In 1692, having been absent from home travelling on a religious account, he says:—"This journey being finished, I went home to my father's house in the evening, and having taken much cold, so that I was hoarse, I spoke with difficulty when I went into the house; yet, through a very sensible operation of the Divine Truth, and the healing virtue thereof, under which I sat in silence for about half an hour, I was perfectly healed; by which I was forever confirmed in the belief of the miracles of Christ, recorded in the Holy Scriptures." (P. 54.)

In 1715, when paying a religious visit in Holland, he met with a Mennonist named Talken Corsten, living at Mackow, in Friezland, who gave him the following narrative:—"That some years ago, our friend Sarah Collier being in those parts, desired a meeting with them [the Mennonists] in their meeting-house, which they refused her; but he himself had a secret desire of a meeting, having never been at one, and accordingly gave her the liberty of his house; where a meeting was held accordingly, and many were there, and well satisfied. After the meeting, Sarah Collier having a mind to see his wife, who then lay ill of a disease which had been upon her for about twelve or thirteen years, was conducted into the chamber where she lay; and, after some time, Sarah was concerned to pray by his wife, and for her help and deliverance from her malady and great exercise of it; and to his great admiration, and also his wife's, and all who had opportunity to observe it, his wife recovered presently upon it, and has been well ever since." (P. 511.)

In 1717, when in the north of England, he was very unwell, and suffered much pain at a meeting at Solport, on the 20th of the 9th month. After the meeting he went to the house of John Irwin, where, he says, "I was ill most of that night; but towards the morning the Lord encouraged me with a little help, which proved very effectual: it was by the operation of His power in my heart; by which all the pains for that time were overcome and quieted, and then I had ease and rest all that day."

Abont two months after that, he attended a meeting at Sunderland, appointed for James Dickinson, a minister of the gospel. At this, he says:—"I was much renewed in my strength, both of body and mind: for though I had been ill all night, and had little rest, by reason of a great cough, and pain in my stomach, and so much indisposed in the morning after I arose that I could not go to meeting till about half an hour after the time; yet, within a few minutes after I was there, I found my heart bound up and surrounded with the girdle of Truth, so close and fast, that the healing virtue thereof overpowered every other power in me both of body and mind; so that I had no present sense at all of any ailing."

In 1698, on a voyage from England to America, the ship in which he sailed encountered a violent storm, so that, as his narrative relates, "all the yards were brought down on the gunnels, and the helm lashed and made fast, and the ship let drive before the wind: And we being met together in the great cabin and steerage to wait upon the Lord, as at other times, he was pleased to appear in the needful time; for the tempest increased, with thunder and lightning and rain to that degree, that few there, if any, had ever seen the like.

"And in waiting upon the Lord, I became concerned in prayer; and being in a mighty agony, and wrestling in spirit with the Lord, I received hope that we should not perish; and having concluded for that time, and my concern returning, I prayed again; and then some stout hearts were broken, and the Lord's power was glorified, and we greatly comforted: For I prayed unto the Lord, who is God of the seas as well as of the earth, and of the winds, the Creator of all things visible and invisible, that He would be pleased to send forth His Word, and command the winds as of old; and that if there was any opposing spirit that stood in our way to hinder our progress, the Lord would please to drive him away: And then I was easy, having fully overcome; and my companion, and some others, were also greatly tendered: And as soon as I arose I took the Friends by the hands, and some others also, and, in full assurance, told them the worst was over for that time; and the words were scarcely out of my mouth, and I set down in the cabin, till the storm abated, and the weather became moderate for sometime after; and we had no more great storms after it to that degree." (P. 152.)

In 1698, when in Ireland, at the castle of Shaunigary, which was on the estate of William Penn, he met with "a gentlewoman of good sense and character," who gave him the following relation:

"That she, being in the City of Cork, when it was invested by King William's army, and having a little daughter of her's with her, they were sitting together on a squab; and being much concerned in mind about the danger and circumstances they were under, she was seized with a sudden fear, and a strong impulse to arise from that seat, which she did in a precipitant manner, and hasted to another part of the room; and then was in the like concern for her child, to whom she called with uncommon earnestness to come to her, which she did; immediately after which came a cannon ball and struck the seat all in pieces, and drove the parts of it about the room, without any hurt to either of them."

"From this relation, I took occasion to reason with her thus: That Intelligence which gave her notice, by fear, of the danger they were in, must be a spiritual being, having access to her mind (which is likewise of a spiritual nature) when in that state of humiliation, under those circumstances; and must also be a good and beneficent Intelligence, willing to preserve them, and furnished also with knowledge and foresight more than human. He must have known that such a piece would be fired at that time, and that the ball would hit that seat, and infallibly destroy you both, if not prevented in due time, by a suitable admonition; which he suggested by the passion fear (the passions being useful when duly subjected) and by that means saved your lives. And seeing that the passions of the mind can be wrought upon for our good, by an invisible, beneficent intelligence in the mind, in a state of humiliation and stillness, without any exterior medium, is it not reasonable to conclude that an evil intelligence may have access likewise to the mind, in a state of unwatchfulness, when the passions are moving, and the imagination at liberty to form ideas destructive to the mind, being thereby depraved and wounded? And when so, is it not likewise reasonable to think that the Almighty himself, who is the most pure, merciful and beneficent Spirit, knowing all events and things, doth sometimes, at His pleasure, visit the minds of mankind, through Christ, as through or under a veil, so as to communicate of His goodness and virtue to a humble and silent mind, to heal and instruct him in things pleasing to Himself, and proper for the conduct of man in his pilgrimage through this present world, and lead him to the next in safety?"

(To be concluded.)

For "The Friend."

Conversion.

It is said that the carnal mind is enmity against God, and is not subject to the law of God—neither indeed can be—therefore when we hear of people who have shown by their conduct and their conformity to the world, that they have this carnal mind—being suddenly converted, as it is called, in a meeting where there is a great deal of excitement—we are apt to think there is a mistake some way about it: for we are told in the Holy Scriptures that the heart of man is deceitful above all things and desperately wicked; who can know it, that is, in its unregenerate condition; and this wicked deceitful heart, that is at enmity against God, must undergo a change, and this is generally a gradual work, not accomplished in a day or a night. Nor is it accomplished in excitement, as in the whirlwind or the fire. Neither is this change experienced in our own will, and in our own time; for we cannot bring the visitations of God's grace upon ourselves, with all our pains and industry. Therefore it is necessary to wait until He is pleased to tender our hearts before him, and bring us on, step by step, from one degree of grace to another; first the blade and then the ear, and then the full corn in the ear; from a child to a young man, and then by degrees to a strong man in the Lord. For it is said even of Him in whom all fulness dwells, who did no sin, neither was guile found in his mouth, that "Jesus increased in wisdom and stature, and in favor with God and man." Now those who are looking and expecting a sudden change, and quickly to have their warfare accomplished, will generally be disappointed—though at the same time I do not wish to limit the power of Divine grace—yet in general the proud and corrupt heart of man is brought to give up first one thing and then another, until all is given up that His controversy is with,—the strong man cast out and his goods spoiled. This is often through a great fight of afflictions, like unto those who John saw in the revelations, who had come out of great tribulation, and had their robes washed and made white in the blood of the Lamb. For this seems to be the common lot of all His children, for the apostle Peter says: "Think it not strange concerning the fiery trial which is to try you, as though some strange thing happened unto you." So it mostly will be found that it will be through much suffering and trial before we are enabled to say we are thoroughly converted unto God—the old man put off, with his affections and lusts, and the new man put on, which is created after God in righteousness and true holiness. We must not depend on a literal faith, nor what is termed an imputed righteousness, the work being all accomplished without us. It is only as we experience our own hearts changed by the washing of regeneration and renewings of the Holy Ghost, that we can experience salvation —saved from our sins—not in them; and that living faith which is the gift of God, and which worketh by love to the purifying of the heart. Not a faith of our own making, and that we can get by our outward knowledge and acquirements, but that faith which purifies the heart, and having our will subjected to the Divine will. When we come to this, we will experience His yoke to be easy and his burden light; then we will not wish to conform ourselves to this wicked world in its fashions and its follies, but live a self-denying life.

This gradual work of regeneration in the heart of man, is represented by our Saviour in his parables under the form of leaven that was hidden in three measures of meal until all was leavened; and the grain of mustard seed, the least of all seeds, sown and becoming a tree. Here is a gradual growth, a gradual changing of the properties of the meal by the leaven until the meal become of the same nature as the leaven. The enlightening of the understanding by the Holy Spirit is mostly gradual, as our Saviour said to his disciples, "I have many things to say unto you, but ye cannot bear them now;" so we are shown things as we are able to bear them; and as we obey what has already been made known to us, then there are other things revealed until we come to the full knowledge of the truth as it is in Jesus. The apostle Peter, in speaking of the sure word of prophecy unto which he says we do well if we take heed, as unto a Light shining in a dark place (which is the unregenerate heart of man) until the day dawn, and the day-star arise in your hearts. Here is a gradual enlightening of the understanding from one degree to another—first the dark heart a light shining into it, and as it is taken heed to, the day begins to dawn—the mere dawn of that bright and powerful light of day; and then when the sun or day-star ariseth and scattereth the mists and darkness of night, then the Sun of righteousness ariseth with healing in his wings indeed. But we must take heed to this light shining in a dark place, not only in seeing, but in obeying its monitions, and its discoveries of what should be done, and what left undone, if we ever expect to see the full light of day. Some seem to expect to see all before they begin to obey what they have already seen. This is the reason why so many stumble when first setting out: they want to see farther than they are able to bear, or they are able to obey, "I have many things to say unto you but ye cannot bear them now; howbeit when He, the Spirit of Truth, is come, he will guide you into all truth, and will show you things to come."

But there has been raised up a cloud of witnesses in every age and generation, both among the early Christians and martyrs and reformers of past ages, and also in our own Society from the time of its rise to the present; there hath been faithful men and women who have borne witness to the efficacy and gradual operation of this grace and light when taken heed unto, and who have grown in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ; and have experienced the inshining of that light in its beginnings, on to its greater effulgence in the heart, and can testify, with Peter, that the sure word of prophecy was in the first place as a light shining in a dark place, until the day dawned and the day-star arose in their hearts, and they have taken heed thereunto, and have found it as it is said of the just man's path—that is, as the shining light, that shineth more and more unto the perfect day.

I don't wish any discouraged at the trials and difficulties that seem to be in the way—nor the length of time taken up before their unregenerate hearts become purified from their defilements, and made a fit receptacle for his Holy Spirit to dwell in; but we might as well sit down first and count the cost, as to be disappointed in the end, or to take up our rest short of the rest of the people of God; we might as well understand that it is through great tribulation we shall enter the kingdom of God, and that the true religion of Christ is no easier than it was in ages that are past and gone; but if we attain unto it, we must follow the same tribulated path which the righteous in times past have walked in. Neither is the way any shorter to the heavenly Canaan than it always has been—though there has been many inventions of man to make it so—the same self-denying life must be lived, the same enemy of all righteousness must be overcome, the same carnal mind which is at enmity against God must be changed, the wicked, deceitful heart of man must be purified, before an entrance is ministered unto us into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. J. H.

Ohio, 10th mo. 1874.

Be assured, that the more you seek God, the more your faults will insensibly be corrected."

THE FRIEND.

TENTH MONTH 30, 1874.

MINUTES OF OHIO YEARLY MEETING.

Held by adjournments from the 28th of the 9th month to the 1st of the 10th, inclusive, 1874.

Reports have been received from all the Quarterly Meetings, from which it appears the representatives are—

* * * * * *

Who being called, were all present except one, for whose absence a satisfactory reason was given.

The Clerk of the Select Meeting presented a minute from Frankford Monthly Meeting of Friends, Philadelphia, for our beloved friend Elizabeth Allen, a minister, dated 9th month 1st, 1874, setting her at liberty to attend this meeting; and one for our beloved friend Marshall Fell, a minister, from Bradford Monthly Meeting of Friends, Chester county, Pennsylvania, dated 9th month 9th, 1874, setting him at liberty to attend this meeting and a few meetings belonging thereto, as truth may open the way. Also a minute from Frankford Monthly Meeting, Philadelphia, for our beloved friend Mary F. Kite, an elder, dated 9th month 1st, 1874; and one from same meeting, and same date, for our beloved friend Thomas P. Cope, an elder, as companions to our friend Elizabeth Allen, all of whom were acceptably in attendance.

Short Creek Quarterly Meeting informed through its reports, that Short Creek Monthly Meeting is without a correspondent, on account of the removal, by death, of Nathan Hall. The representatives from that Quarter were desired to confer together and propose to a future sitting the name of a Friend to fill the vacancy.

This meeting was informed that the quotas of Yearly Meeting stock due from each Quarter were in readiness. The Friends having it in charge were directed to pay it to the Treasurer of this meeting.

* * * were appointed to audit the Treasurer's account, propose to a future sitting a sum necessary to be raised for the use of the meeting the coming year, and the name of a Friend for Treasurer.

The minutes of the Meeting for Sufferings were read and its proceedings approved.

By the reading of the minutes of the Meeting for Sufferings, we were officially informed, we are deprived of our Boarding School House and premises, by decree of the Supreme Court of the State. On deliberation thereon, the following named Friends were appointed, in conjunction with a like committee of women Friends, to take the whole subject into consideration and report thereon to a future sitting of this meeting, viz: * * *

The representatives were desired to confer together at the rise of this meeting, and propose the name of a Friend to serve this meeting as Clerk the present year, and one for Assistant; also, the names of two Friends as Messengers to Women's Meeting.

Then adjourned to 11 o'clock to-morrow.

Third of the week and twenty-ninth of the month.—The meeting again convened.

Asa Garretson, on behalf of the representatives, reported they had conferred together, and were united in offering the name of Wilson Hall to serve this meeting as Clerk the present year, and Joseph Branson for Assistant. * * * * *

The consideration of the state of Society was entered upon by reading the Queries and Answers thereto from the different Quarterly Meetings, proceeding as far as the 6th, inclusive. Then adjourned to 2 o'clock to-morrow afternoon.

Fourth-day, afternoon.—The meeting assembled near the time to which it was adjourned.

The remaining Queries were read with answers thereto from the Quarterly Meetings. The following is a summary of the answers to all the Queries, viz:

Ans. 1st. All our meetings for worship and discipline have been attended (except one meeting for worship during our last Yearly Meeting week), and generally by the most of our members, though all the reports acknowledge a remissness in some in this important duty, particularly in the middle of the week. Unbecoming behavior therein avoided by most, except that some are reported to have given way to sleeping and drowsiness in nearly all our meetings, and one report mentions instances of lightness. The hour of meeting observed by most Friends.

Ans. 2d. Most Friends maintain love towards each other in a good degree becoming our christian profession. Tale-bearing and detraction generally discouraged. Care has been taken to end apparent differences.

Ans. 3d. Endeavors are used by most Friends to educate their children and those under their care in plainness of speech, deportment and apparel, to guard them against reading pernicious books, and from the corrupt conversation of the world, and some encouragement is given to the frequent reading of the Holy Scriptures; but a more earnest travail and exercise for the faithful maintenance of these several testimonies is much needed amongst us.

Ans. 4th. As far as appears, Friends are clear of importing, vending and distilling spirituous liquors, with an exception in one of the reports of the unnecessary use thereof. Clear of frequenting taverns unnecessarily, but not quite clear of attending places of diversion. Moderation and temperance in a good degree observed.

Ans. 5th. The necessities of the poor and the circumstances of those who appear likely to require aid, have been inspected and relieved. They are advised and assisted in such employments as they are capable of, and care is taken to promote the school education of their children.

Ans. 6th. As far as appears, Friends maintain a faithful testimony against a hireling ministry, oaths, military services, clandestine trade, prize goods and lotteries, with an exception mentioned in all the reports of some of our members sometimes attending places where a hireling ministry is supported, and in one, a few have given countenance to military parades, for which deficiencies, some care is reported.

Ans. 7th. Friends generally appear careful to live within the bounds of their circumstances, and to avoid involving themselves in business beyond their ability to manage; generally just in their dealings, and mostly punctual in complying with their engagements. Where any have given reasonable grounds for fear in these respects, care has been extended to them.

Ans. 8th. A good degree of care has been taken to deal with offenders seasonably and impartially, and to endeavor to evince to those who will not be reclaimed, the spirit of meekness and love before judgment is placed upon them.

* * * * * *

The committee to whom was entrusted the subject of our situation in regard to a Boarding School, made the following report, which, on deliberation, and after a full interchange of sentiment, was united with by this and women's meeting, and adopted.

REPORT.

The committee to consider our situation on account of being deprived of our Boarding School House and premises, all met, and after a time of deliberation thereon, were united in sentiment that it would be right for us to endeavor again to provide ourselves with a Boarding School, for the religiously guarded education of our children. And, in view of its importance at the present time, we would propose that measures be immediately taken to carry out the concern.

And it being desirable that a location should be selected the most central and easy of access, for Friends of the different Quarters, we propose that grounds be purchased within the limits of Stillwater Quarterly Meeting; we would also suggest that a building committee be appointed by the Yearly Meeting, out of which a committee be nominated, to circulate subscriptions throughout our limits, payable in three equal instalments; the first payable when the progress of the work requires it, the balance in equal annual payments. And whenever in the judgment of the committee a sufficient amount of subscription is obtained to warrant the prosecution of the work, that they proceed to select and purchase a site containing not more than sixty acres, and erect thereon a plain, substantial building, sufficiently commodious for the accommodation of seventy-five or eighty scholars.

On behalf of the committee,

ASA GARRETSON,
BARCLAY STRATTON,
MARY A. MITCHELL,
HANNAH H. STRATTON.

The following named Friends were appointed to consider and carry out these several propositions, and report thereon to this meeting next year, viz: * * * *

Then adjourned to 10 o'clock to-morrow.

Fifth of the week and first of the month.—The meeting met pursuant to adjournment.

Our Book Committee, continued last year, made the following report, which was satisfactory, and the proposition to add one hundred and fifty dollars to the balance on hand approved.—They were directed to call on the Treasurer of this meeting for that amount, and were continued to have this interesting concern under care as heretofore, and report to this meeting next year.

* * * * * *

REPORT.

The committee in charge of purchasing and distributing the approved writings of Friends amongst our members and others, report that in addition to the books on hand at the time of our last report, we have purchased at Friends' Book Store, Philadelphia, 677 volumes of books, and 166 small books and pamphlets, at a cost of $277.77.

There were added to these by a Friend in Philadelphia, 15 copies of the Biographical Sketches. There were also furnished gratuitously by the Tract Association of Friends, 312 juvenile and other small books and pamphlets, and 4,225 tracts; all of which have been distributed amongst the members of the committee in the different neighborhoods, from the most of whom we have definite reports, which show the following disposition of the books, viz:

Gratuitously disposed of to members,	130 vols.
Gratuitously disposed of to non-members,	172 "
Sold to members and others, principally the former,	171 "
Remaining in the hands of the committee,	295 "

FINANCIAL STATEMENT.

Amount in the hands of the Committee at last report,	$125 27
" appropriated by the Yearly Meeting,	150 00
" in Jacob Smedley's hands,	2 50
" received for books sold	71 68
Total,	$349 45
Paid bill of J. Smedley,	277 77
Balance in the hands of the committee,	$71 68

As a suitable conclusion to this, we quote the language of the report of that portion of the committee who reside in Iowa, viz:

"We think the distribution of books through the committee has tended to give many of our members an increasing interest in our Society; and we think non-members who have read them, manifest an increasing interest in our doctrines and testimonies, and we much desire that the distribution may be continued and further aided by the Yearly Meeting."

We propose that $150 be appropriated the present year, in addition to what is now in the hands of the committee, to further aid this interesting concern.

ISAAC MITCHELL,
ANN BRANSON.

9th mo. 30th, 1874.

Our Boarding School Committee made the following report, which was satisfactory. Asa Garretson was directed to hold the books, papers, and funds placed in his hands, subject to the direction of the School Committee. The committee were continued to exercise what care they may find needful to take, in relation to the subjects under their direction.

Amount charged for board and tuition for session ending 3rd mo. 11th, 1874, for an average of about 51 pupils,	$2,677 80
Income from other sources,	1,303 06
Making,	$3,980 86
Expenditures,	$3,967 98
Balance in favor of school for session,	12 88

Amount charged for board and tuition for session of fifteen weeks, ending 7th month 21st, 1874, for an average of about 26 pupils,	$834 00
Income from other sources,	1,062 02
Making,	$1,896 02
Expenditures,	$2,446 35
Showing a deficiency for session of	550 33
And for the year of	537 45

A considerable portion of the deficiency in the summer session, we believe may be satisfactorily accounted for by its termination before the regular time and the increased expenses connected therewith; also, that the amount realized from the disposal of the personal property falling much below the usual estimated value. It may, however, be proper to inform the Yearly Meeting that, after paying all debts and expenses, there remains in the hands of the committee the sum of $556 20, exclusive of interest on the benevolent fund.

Having been deprived of our Boarding School House and premises by decree of the Supreme Court and the school consequently discontinued, we have instructed the Superintendent to pay over to Asa Garretson, the Treasurer of the Boarding School, all the cash in his hands belonging to the School Committee, and deliver up all the books and papers in his possession, belonging to said committee to him, to be held subject to the direction of the Yearly Meeting.

BENJAMIN D. STRATTON,
Clerk for the year.

Reports on the subject of education were received from all the Quarterly Meetings, a summary whereof is as follows:

Nineteen schools have been taught during the year under the care of Monthly or Preparative Meetings, varying in time from two to seven months, and three family schools for terms of two, three and four months, respectively.

There are within our limits 843 children of a suitable age to attend school, 322 of whom have attended Friends' schools exclusively; 381 have attended District schools exclusively; 103 have attended Friends' and other schools; 33 have not attended school the past year, most of whom were reported as receiving instruction at home. Four remotely situated not definitely reported.

The subject is again recommended to the care of subordinate meetings, with desires that they may not relax their efforts and labors in endeavoring to induce Friends who patronize District schools to withdraw therefrom, and give their support and influence as much as possible to Friends' schools.

Quarterly Meetings are directed to bring up explicit reports as heretofore to this meeting next year.

The committee to settle with the Treasurer, propose a sum necessary to be raised, and the name of a Friend for Treasurer, made report, which was satisfactory to the meeting, and the Friend therein named was appointed Treasurer. Quarterly Meetings are directed to raise their respective proportions of $600 and forward to the Treasurer of this meeting in fifth month next.

* * * * * * * * *

The representatives from Short Creek Quarter reported they had conferred together and were united in proposing the name of John W. Smith as correspondent for Short Creek Monthly Meeting, address, Harrisville, Harrison county, Ohio, which was satisfactory, and he accordingly appointed to that station.

The following named Friends are appointed to have 1,000 copies of the minutes of this meeting printed, distribute them amongst the Quarterly Meetings, and call on the Treasurer for the amount of expense, viz: Josiah Fawcett, Benjamin D. Stratton and Abel H. Blackburn.

This meeting having brought its business to a close now solemnly concludes, to meet again next year, at the usual time and place, if consistent with the Divine Will.

WILSON HALL, Clerk.

SUMMARY OF EVENTS.

FOREIGN.—The Spanish ambassador, in London, recently made representations to Lord Derby, Minister of Foreign Affairs, that supplies of arms and other material of war, manufactured in England, were frequently shipped for the Carlists in Spain, and requested that vigilance be exercised by the British authorities to prevent such violations of neutrality. Lord Derby replied that the indefinite continuance of the war in Spain showed lack of patriotism and energy, and if the Spanish navy was vigilant the landing of arms for the Carlists would be impossible.

A correspondent of the London Times at Bombay, telegraphs that it is estimated two thousand persons were killed in the town and district of Midnapore during the late cyclone.

The Sepoy leader, Nana Sahib, who escaped when the Sepoy rebellion was put down, has been surrendered to the British by the Maharajah of Scinde. In his confession to the political agent, the prisoner declared that he was the famous Nana Sahib, admitted that he took a leading part in the mutiny, but denied that he had anything to do with the Cawnpore massacre. A surgeon who was in Cawnpore at the time of the revolt, and often saw Nana Sahib, failed to recognize the prisoner as the man, and physicians who have examined him express doubts as to his identity, because his appearance is too youthful.

The arbitrator to whom was referred the question in dispute between the striking cotton operatives at Bolton and their employers, has decided in favor of the masters and the proposed reduction of five per cent. in the operatives' wages. It goes into effect immediately.

London, 10th mo. 26th.—The rate of discount in the open market for three month's bills is 3-11.16 per cent, which is 5-16 below the Bank of England rate. U. S. 5 per cents, 103.

Liverpool.—Middling uplands cotton, 7¾*d.* Breadstuffs quiet.

Madrid advices mention the surrender of small bodies of Carlists. Murcia and Alicante are now free from Carlists. Don Carlos remains at Estella, and General Elio has the chief command of his forces.

A Paris dispatch says: Fifty-seven of the Councils-General have effected their organization, and twenty-three of them chose Republican Presidents.

The Mayor of Nice has been dismissed from office because he recommended for election to the Council-General candidates favorable to the separation of Nice from France.

Prince Charles Bonaparte has been elected President of the Council-General of Corsica.

Ex-President Thiers has written a letter indignantly denying that he ever represented that the French government was actuated by sentiments hostile to Italy. He maintains that, on the contrary, he has constantly affirmed that the country, government and Assembly disapproved of any movement against Italy.

France and Spain have determined to send one war vessel each to watch the river Bidassoa, which forms in part the boundary between the two countries, in order to prevent the crossing for the Carlists of contraband of war.

The German Emperor has written a reply to the Pope's last letter protesting against the persecution of German bishops. The Emperor says Germany has done all in her power to live at peace with the Church of Rome, but he is bound to protect the State against violent attacks and conspiracies of the clergy.

Special advices from Berlin represent that the public sympathy for Count Von Arnim is increasing on account of the harshness with which he is treated and the rigor of the domicilliary searches.

The Representative Assembly proposed for Alsace and Lorraine, will at first possess only deliberative character. Its functions will be to advise the Imperial government on all subjects of local legislation, and to examine the budget for the provinces.

General Garibaldi has accepted a nomination as candidate for Parliament from Rome, stipulating that he is to attend the Chamber only when he thinks his presence necessary.

Advices from the Argentine States represent the condition of affairs as gloomy. The main body of rebels, under command of General Mitre, are still encamped outside of the city. Both parties refrain from making aggressive movements. Col. Gonzales, of the government army, and 500 of his meu, have gone over to the insurgents.

A Vienna dispatch says: The Turks in Montenegro continue their outrages on the Christians. They have killed eight Montenegrins and some Saxon residents in the neighborhood of Podoriza, and burned a village. The Christians were compelled to flee to the mountains.

During the year 1873, 65,492 travellers crossed the St. Gothard pass, between Italy and Switzerland, 28,144, the Splugen, and 27,671 passed over the Simplon.

The Pacasmayo railroad in Peru, has just been finished from the Pacific to La Vina, a distance of 75 miles. The eastern termination is 3469 feet above the ocean. The most wonderful part of the road is the great iron mole which is to extend 2190 feet into the ocean.

UNITED STATES.—The crop report of the Department of Agriculture says, that no certain results can yet be predicted of the ungathered crop of cotton. An unfavorable closing season may reduce the yield to 3,000,000 bales or less, a favorable one may raise the aggregate to 3,500,000 bales.

The interments in Philadelphia last week numbered 281, including 92 children under two years.

The new post-office building for this city is expected to be a large and imposing structure. The lot on which it is to be built has 472 feet front on Ninth street, from Market to Chestnut, 190 feet front on Market street, and 176 feet front on Chestnut street. The principal front will be on Ninth street.

The grain fleet passing Detroit on the 13th instant numbered eighty-nine vessels, loaded with 1,648,134 bushels of grain, the largest cargo being one of 65,000 bushels wheat.

The Commissioners appointed by the government to ascertain whether the deficiencies in the construction of the Union Pacific Railroad have all been remedied, have made a report to the Department of the Interior. They state that the road has been completed and equipped at a total cost of $115,214,588, and that they consider the road, as built, a first class railroad, fully complying with its charter and all the requirements of the law; its locomotives and rolling stock ample and in excellent condition, and the arrangements for travel giving ample accommodation to the public. The company will now be entitled to twelve million acres more of the public land, which has been held in reserve for the railroad in accordance with the terms of its charter.

The Markets, &c.—The following were the quotations on the 26th inst. New York.—American gold 110. U. S. sixes, 1881, registered, 117⅝; do. coupons, 118½; do. 1868, registered, 117; coupons, 117½; U. S. 5 per cents, 111⅝ a 111⅞. Superfine flour, $4.30 a $4.55; State extra, $4.75 a $5.15; finer brands, $5.50 a $10.50. No. 2 Chicago spring wheat, $1.04; No. 3 do., $1.01; red western, $1.16 a $1.18; amber, $1.20 a $1.21; white Michigan, $1.30 a $1.37. Canada barley, $1.42; State do. $1.20. Oats, 56 a 60 cts. Rye, 96 cts. New mixed corn, 76 cts.; old, 97 a 98 cts. Philadelphia.—Uplands and New Orleans middlings cotton, 15 a 15½ cts. Superfine flour, $3.50 a $4; extras, $4 a $4.50; finer brands, $5.50 a $8. Red wheat, $1.15 a $1.20; amber, $1.20 a $1.23; white, $1.27 a $1.32. Rye, $1.03. Yellow and mixed corn, 84 a 86 cts. Oats, 57 a 60 cts. Smoked hams, 14 a 15 cts. Lard, 14 a 14½ cts. Clover seed, 9 a 9½ cts. About 4500 beef cattle sold at prices ranging from 3½ to 7½ cts. per lb. gross, extra at 7¼ a 7½ cts., and fair to common at lower rates. Sheep sold at 4½ a 5½ cts. per lb. gross. Receipts 14,000 head. Hogs, $9.50 a $10 per 100 lb. net for corn fed. Receipts, 6,500 head. St. Louis.—No. 2 winter red wheat, $1.08 a $1.09; No. 3 fall red, 95 cts. No. 2 mixed corn, 70 a 72 cts. No. 2 oats, 50 cts. Spring barley, $1.05 a $1.12. No. 2 rye, 80 cts. Lard, 12 cts. Indianapolis.—Wheat, 95 cts. a $1.10. New corn 60 cts.; old, 70 a 72 cts. Oats, 50 a 51 cts. Rye, 80 a 83 cts. Savannah.—Middlings cotton, 14⅛ a 14¼ cts. Galveston.—Middlings cotton, 14¼ cts.

WESTTOWN BOARDING SCHOOL.

The Winter Session commences on Second day, the 2nd of Eleventh month. As the School is not full, either in the Boys' or Girls' Department, parents and others intending to send pupils will please make early application to BENJAMIN W. PASSMORE, Sup't, (Address Street Road P. O., Chester Co., Pa.,) or to CHARLES J. ALLEN, Treasurer, No. 304 Arch Street, Philada.

Pupils who have been regularly entered and who go by the cars from Philadelphia, can obtain tickets at the depot of the West Chester and Philadelphia Railroad, corner of Thirty-first and Chestnut streets, by giving their names to the Ticket-agent there, who is furnished with a list of the pupils for that purpose. In such case the passage, including the stage fare from the Railroad Station, will be charged at the School, to be paid for with the other incidental charges at the close of the term. Tickets can also be procured of the Treasurer, 304 Arch street. Conveyances will be at the STREET ROAD STATION on Second and Third-days, the 2nd and 3rd of the month, to meet the trains that leave Philadelphia at 7.50 and 10 A. M., and 2.30 and 4.40 P. M.

☞ Baggage may be left either at Thirty-first and Chestnut streets or at Eighteenth and Market. If left at the latter place, it must be put under the care of H. Alexander & Sons, who will convey it thence to Thirty-first and Chestnut at a charge of 10 cents per trunk, to be paid to them. Those who prefer can have their baggage sent for to any place in the built-up part of the City, by sending word on the day previous (through the post-office or otherwise) to H. Alexander & Sons, N. E. corner of 18th and Market Sts. Their charge in such case for taking baggage to Thirty-first and Chestnut streets, will be 25 cents per trunk. For the same charge they will also collect baggage from the other railroad depots, if the checks are left at their office corner of 18th and Market Sts. Baggage put under their care, if properly marked, will not require any attention from the owners, either at the West Philadelphia depot, or at the Street Road Station, but will be forwarded direct to the School. It may not always go on the same train as the owner, but it will go on the same day, provided the notice to H. Alexander & Sons reaches them in time.

DURING THE SESSION, passengers for the School will be met at the Street Road Station, on the arrival of the first train from the City, every day except First-days; and small packages for the pupils, if left at Friends' Book Store, No. 304 Arch street, will be forwarded every Sixth-day at 12 o'clock, except on the last two Sixth-days in the Twelfth month, and the expense charged in their bills.

Tenth month 17th, 1874.

BIBLE ASSOCIATION OF FRIENDS.

The Annual Meeting of "The Bible Association of Friends in America," will be held in the Committee-room of the Arch Street Meeting-house, Philadelphia, on the evening of Fourth-day, the 4th of Eleventh month, at 8 o'clock.

The members of the Philadelphia Auxiliary, both men and women, and Friends generally, are invited to attend. WILLIAM EVANS, Secretary.

DIED, at the late residence of her son, Dr. Willet C. Dorland, Wellington, Prince Edward Co., Ont., on the 25th of 9th mo. 1874, PATTY C. DORLAND, widow of Gilbert Dorland, aged 90 years and 8 days, a member of West Lake Monthly Meeting of Friends. She was the daughter of Willet and Jane Casey, and was born at Stanford, Dutchess Co., N. Y., in the year 1784. In 1786 she removed with her parents to Adolphustown, Canada. They were among the first settlers at that place, and she frequently related many interesting circumstances in connection with their settlement in a new country. She distinctly remembered the first Friends' meeting held at Adolphustown in 1789, and also the establishment of a Monthly Meeting at that place. After the death of her only child, about nine months previous to her own, she frequently expressed her anxiety to be released from earth, and often remarked, "I am all ready." It might truly be said of her, as of Dorcas of old, "This woman was full of good works and alms-deeds which she did."

——, 9th mo. 24th, 1874, at his residence in Uwchlan Township, Chester Co., Pa., ENOS MORRIS, in the 87th year of his age, a member of Uwchlan Monthly and Uwchlan Particular Meeting.

——, at his residence in London Grove Township, Chester Co., Pa., after a short illness, THOMAS PASSMORE, in the 76th year of his age, an elder of New Garden Monthly Meeting.

——, on the 23d of 10th month, 1874, SAMUEL J. GUMMERE, in the 64th year of his age, a member of the Western District Monthly Meeting, Philadelphia. Having been for many years connected with Haverford College, as professor and President, he has been known and loved by a large number of young men and others, living in different parts of our country. An able mathematician and superior teacher, his integrity and unselfish fidelity to duty, made not only his instructions but his example of great value to all who were brought under his influence. He anticipated his end with much calmness, and passed away peacefully, sustained to the last by the power of that grace "which bringeth salvation."

THE FRIEND.

A RELIGIOUS AND LITERARY JOURNAL.

VOL. XLVIII. SEVENTH-DAY, ELEVENTH MONTH 7, 1874. NO. 12.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY.

Price Two Dollars per annum, if paid in advance. Two dollars and fifty cents, if not paid in advance.

Subscriptions and Payments received by

JOHN S. STOKES,

AT NO. 116 NORTH FOURTH STREET, UP STAIRS.

PHILADELPHIA.

Postage, when paid quarterly in advance, five cents.

For "The Friend."

Divine Interposition.

(Concluded from page 85.)

John Banks was a worthy minister of the Society of Friends, which he joined in the year 1654. His friends have left this testimony of him: that "he labored night and day for the gathering of people to God," and that "he was an incessant laborer in the Lord's work, both in body and mind." In a journal of his life, which he left behind him, is the following narrative. "About this time [1676] a pain struck into my shoulder, and gradually fell down into my arm and hand, so that I was wholly deprived of the use of it; the pain increased both day and night. For three months I could neither put my clothes on nor off, and my arm and hand began to wither, so that I applied to some physicians, but could get no cure by any of them. At last, as I was asleep upon my bed, in the night time, I saw in a vision that I was with dear George Fox, and I thought I said to him, 'George, my faith is such, that if thou seest thy way to lay thy hand upon my shoulder, my arm and hand shall be whole throughout.' This remained with me two days and nights, that the thing was a true vision, and that I must go to George Fox, until at last, through much exercise of mind, as a great trial of my faith, I was made willing to go to him, he being then at Swarthmore in Lancashire, when there was a meeting of Friends on the First-day of the week. Sometime after the meeting, I called him aside into the hall, and gave him a relation of my dream, showing him my arm and hand; and in a little time, we walking together silently, he turned about and looked upon me, and lifting up his hand, laid it upon my shoulder, saying, 'The Lord strengthen thee both within and without.' I went to Thomas Lower's, of Marsh Grange, that night; and when I was set down to supper, immediately before I was aware, my hand was lifted up to do its office, which it could not do for long before. This struck me with great admiration, and my heart was broken into tenderness before the Lord; and the next day I went home, with my hand and arm restored to its former use and strength, without any pain. The next time that George Fox and I met, he said, 'John, thou mended;' I answered, 'Yes, very well in a little time.'

"'Well,' said he, 'give God the glory;' to whom I was and still am bound in duty so to do, for that and all other His mercies and favors. He hath all power in His own hand, and can thereby bring to pass whatsoever seems good in His eyes; who, by the same, prepares instruments and makes use of them as pleaseth Him, who is alone worthy of all praise, honor and glory, both now and forevermore."

William Dewsbury was another of those remarkable men, who is the 17th century were raised up in England to proclaim the everlasting Gospel. Bold and unflinching in his testimony, he suffered patiently the persecutions which he encountered, and spent many years in different imprisonments on a religious account. During his last illness, about a week before his death, a few friends being in his chamber, he thus addressed them.

"My God hath put it into my heart to bear a testimony in His name and blessed Truth. I can never forget the day of His great power and blessed appearance, when He first sent me to preach His everlasting gospel, and to proclaim the day of the Lord to the people. And he confirmed the same by signs and wonders; and particularly by a lame woman who went on crutches, where I with my dear brethren, George Fox and Richard Farnsworth, were cast; and as I cried mightily unto the Lord in secret, that He would signally manifest himself at that time amongst us, and give witness of His power and presence with us, Richard Farnsworth, in the name of the Lord, took her by the hand, and George Fox after, spoke to her in the power of God, and bid her stand up and she did, and immediately walked straight, having no need of crutches any more. Therefore, Friends, be faithful, and trust in the Lord your God; for this I can say, I never since played the coward; but joyfully entered prisons as palaces, telling mine enemies to hold me there as long as they could. And in the prison house I sang praises to my God, and esteemed the bolts and locks put upon me as jewels; and in the name of the eternal God I always got the victory. For they could keep me no longer than the determined time of my God."

When George Fox on one occasion attempted to preach at Ulverstone, he was forcibly dragged out of the town, and then abused by a rude multitude; who, he says, "having furnished themselves with staves, hedge-stakes, palm or holly-bushes, fell upon me and beat me on my head, arms and shoulders, till they had deprived me of sense; so that I fell down upon the wet common. When I recovered again, and saw myself lying in a watery common, and the people standing about me, I lay still a little while, and the power of the Lord sprang through me, and the eternal refreshings revived me; so that I stood up again in the strengthening power of the eternal God, and stretching out my arms amongst them, I said, with a loud voice, 'Strike again; here are my arms, my head, and my cheeks.' There was in the company a mason, a professor but a rude fellow, who with his walking rule-staff gave me a blow with all his might just over the back of my hand, as it was stretched out; with which blow my hand was so bruised, and my arm so benumbed, that I could not draw it to me again; so that some of the people cried, 'He hath spoiled his hand for ever having the use of it any more.' But I looked at it in the love of God (for I was in the love of God to all that persecuted me) and after awhile the Lord's power sprang through me again, and through my hand and arm, so that in a moment I recovered strength in my hand and arm in the sight of them all."

In his journal, under date of 1653, he says, "I went to a meeting at Amside, where Richard Myer was, who had been long lame of one of his arms. I was moved of the Lord to say unto him amongst all the people, 'Stand up upon thy legs,' for he was sitting down; and he stood up and stretched out his arm that had been lame a long time, and said, 'Be it known unto you, all people, that this day I am healed.' Yet his parents could hardly believe it; but after the meeting was done, had him aside, took off his doublet, and then saw it was true. He came soon after to Swarthmore meeting and there declared how the Lord had healed him."

In 1649, he says, "After I was set at liberty from Nottingham gaol, where I had been kept prisoner a pretty long time, I travelled as before, in the work of the Lord. Coming to Mansfield Woodhouse, there was a distracted woman under a doctor's hand, with her hair loose about her ears. He was about to let her blood, she being first bound, and many people about her holding her by violence; but he could get no blood from her. I desired them to unbind her and let her alone, for they could not toueh the spirit in her by which she was tormented. So they did unbind her; and I was moved to speak to her, and in the name of the Lord to bid her be quiet and still; and she was so. The Lord's power settled her mind and she mended. Afterwards she received the truth and continued in it to her death; and the Lord's name was honored; to whom the glory of all His works belongs. Many great and wonderful things were wrought by the heavenly power in those days; for the Lord made bare His omnipotent arm, and manifested His power to the astonishment of many; by the healing virtue whereof many have been delivered from great infirmities, and the devils were made subject through His name; of which partieular instances might be given, beyond what this unbelieving age is able to receive or bear. Blessed forever be the name of the Lord, and everlastingly honored, and over all exalted and magnified be the arm of His glorious power, by which He hath wrought gloriously; let the honor and praise of all His works be ascribed to Him alone."

In the same year as he was travelling in Leicestershire, he came to Troy-Cross. He says: "There was in that town a great man that had long lain sick, and was given over by the physicians. Some friends in the town desired me to visit him. I went up to him in his chamber, and spake the word of life to him, and was moved to pray by him; and the Lord was entreated and restored him to health."

It is instructive to observe in these instances, drawn from the experiences of different individuals, how careful the actors therein were to disclaim any ability of their own. They attributed all the power, and the praise, to the Lord alone, to whom it truly belonged. For though He was pleased, as He ever has been and will be, to answer those prayers which He himself caused to spring up in the hearts of his faithful followers, yet it was utterly beyond their power to offer availing petitions when and as they pleased. It was only by the operation of Divine Grace that Thomas Story was enabled to wrestle mightily in spirit for the preservation of the ship and passengers, when exposed to the violence of a storm, and that William Dewsbury and his companions could cry mightily unto the Lord for the healing of the crippled woman. It was the power of the Lord, which George Fox felt to arise in him, that strengthened him after receiving such cruel abuse; and he had to feel the moving of the Lord before he could quiet the distracted woman, or pray for the restoration of the sick man.

Such was the case with the apostles of old. The Lord did at times enable them to heal those who were diseased, and yet Paul, who was not a whit behind the chiefest of them, was compelled to leave his companion Trophimus sick at Miletum—whom he doubtless would have healed if it had been in his power. Such instances serve to teach us that in the presence of the Lord no flesh can glory; but that all honor and power is to be ascribed to the one eternal source of good.

Lazy Collegians.—The four years that a young man is in college must be preceded by at least three years of laborious preparation. These seven years of mental work have, in a certain sense, taught him to forget how to toil with his hands. He is not fit physically "to dig" and to engage in those occupations which are half manual, half mental, into which he is thrust to establish, as in a sort of trial, his ability to aid in the stress and struggle of life. A man who has spent seven years at a trade knows precisely what to do in his calling and how to do it, but our graduate knows his books, which, alas! the hurried world don't want; he is familiar with Greece and Rome, but cannot keep accounts; he can tell you of Olympus, but cannot tell you the cost of fractional bushels at fractional prices. He is a boy yet; he must yet begin to learn the "art of living"—a trade of some kind he must have. Meanwhile he waits; he looks on; he stands in the market-place because no one has hired him, and so doing he has all the appearance of an idler. Again, many seek for an education, expecting thus to escape drudgery. They go into college that they may not work, and they avoid it while there if excuses will avail; and when they hold their diploma in their hands they are still resolute not to labor if possible. They are applicants for some place that has for its chief recommendation—a salary. This class is largely made up of spoiled boys, thought by aunts or grandmothers to be too delicate, too smart, or too handsome to drudge in the house, shop or on the farm; and it has many recruits from city households, because there is no work to be done, no wood to split, water to be drawn or garden to be tilled. For, with a large number of people, doing work is like chewing tobacco—a habit to be acquired, and when acquired followed as a habit.—New York School Journal.

For "The Friend."

A few Questions and Answers relative to some of the Doctrines and Testimonies of the Society of Friends.

(Continued from page 83.)

Question.—Do the fundamental doctrines of our Society greatly differ from those of other religious sects? And how is this difference defined?

Answer.—The doctrines of the Society of Friends do not so much differ from those of other Christian professors, as might at first be supposed. Thus, the great truths—the depravity of man, the atoning sacrifice of the Saviour, and the indispensable assistance of the Holy Spirit—are all with greater or less distinctness advocated by all who profess the testimony, the faith, and the religion of Jesus. The most distinguishing feature lies, in Friends having always given more prominence to the doctrine of the indwelling Spirit, or Light of Christ in the heart, as "God's gift for man's salvation." Or, agreeably to the testimony of the Redeemer himself when personally among men, "He that dwelleth with you (in the flesh), shall be in you (by the Spirit") as our guide into all truth.

Q.—What does William Penn remark respecting this?

A.—William Penn in his "Rise and Progress," is so clear and so much to the point on this highly important subject, that we shall quote somewhat lengthily from it. He says: "Their (the Society of Friends) fundamental principle, which is as the corner-stone of their fabric, and to speak eminently and properly, their characteristic, or main distinguishing point or principle, is, the Light of Christ within, as God's gift for man's salvation." And in another place, when treating on the same great doctrine of the light of Christ in man, he declares: "The glory of this day, and foundation of the hope that has not made us ashamed since we were a people, you know is that blessed principle of light and life of Christ, which we profess and direct all men to, as the great instrument and agent of man's conversion to God. It was by this we were first touched, and effectually enlightened, as to our inward state. * * * In the feeling of the motions of this we drew near to the Lord, and waited to be prepared by it, that we might feel those drawings and movings before we approached the Lord in prayer, or opened our mouths in ministry. And in our beginning and ending with this, stood our comfort, service and edification." "This I say is as the root of the goodly tree of doctrines, that grew and branched out from it, which I shall now mention in their natural and experimental order. First, repentance from dead works to serve the living God. Which comprehends three operations. First: A sight of sin. Secondly, A sense and godly sorrow for it. Thirdly, An amendment for the time to come. This was the repentance they preached and pressed, and a natural result from the principle they turned all men unto. For of light came sight; and of sight came sense and sorrow; and of sense and sorrow, came amendment of life: which doctrine of repentance leads to justification; that is, forgiveness of sins that are passed through Christ, the alone propitiation."

Q.—What do the Scriptures set forth respecting this light of Christ manifested within, even as a light that shineth in darkness?

A.—They are full and clear. Thus in treating of the Word made flesh, they represent that "In Him was life; and the life was the light of men." Again, "That was the true Light, which lighteth every man that cometh into the world." Again, "This is the condemnation, that light is come into the world, and men loved darkness rather than light, because their deeds were evil." Again, "All things that are reproved, are made manifest by the light; for whatsoever doth make manifest is light." Again, "If we walk in the light as he (God) is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin." Again, "God who commanded the light to shine out of darkness, hath shined in our hearts," &c. And lastly, through the tender mercy of our God, the day-spring from on high hath visited us, to give light to them that sit in darkness and in the shadow of death, to guide our feet into the way of peace." These, or similar quotations might be greatly extended, showing from Holy Scripture that where repentance, faith, and obedience are experienced by and through our willingness to allow the light, grace, and Spirit of the Lord Jesus to discover to us our fallen and depraved condition, it will so do; and, as we are passive under the leavening, transforming power thereof, it will work out for us the present peace and eternal salvation of the soul.

Q.—Does, or does not the Society believe that faith in the outward atoning sacrifice of the immaculate Lamb slain, precedes the operation of this illuminating Spirit from on high, and produces immediate justification and salvation?

A.—They believe that repentance and amendment of life, through unqualified obedience to the grace of God, brings salvation, and is the first step to peace. The early Friends, while they sincerely believed in that redemption accomplished by Christ for us in his crucified body without us, whereby we are so far justified as to be put into a capacity of salvation, and have a measure of the Holy Spirit conferred upon us, and that it is through the offering of Christ alone that remission of sins is obtained, yet they earnestly protested against the doctrine, that we are justified by faith in the precious blood of Christ before the obedience which is of faith in Him the Light of Life, and the Word quick and powerful in the heart had been realized. They assert in terms clear and decided that justification, or a being made just, cannot precede, but must follow repentance and amendment of life, that godly sorrow for sin, it being revealed and reproved through the light of Christ manifested in man, worketh repentance to salvation not to be repented of. Thus Robert Barclay in his great Apology for the true Christian Divinity, declares: "Let none be so bold as to mock God, supposing themselves justified and accepted in the sight of God, by virtue of Christ's death and sufferings, while they remain unsanctified and unjustified in their own hearts, and polluted in their sins, lest their hope prove that of the hypoerite, whieh perisheth." And again, "I do boldly affirm, and that not only from a notional knowledge, but from a real, inward, experimental feeling of the thing, that the immediate, nearest causc * * of man's justification in the sight of God, is, the revelation of Jesus Christ in the soul, changing, altering, and renewing the mind; by whom, (even the Author of this inward work) thus found and revealed, we are truly justified and accepted in the sight of God." George Fox is equally clear and outspoken that, by the propitiatory sacrifice of the Saviour on the cross, we, truly repenting and believing, are, through the merey and goodness of God, and the leavening operation of the Holy Ghost, justified from the sins and transgressions that are past. William Penn no less strongly represents: "That they who hold themselves in a justified state by the aetive and passive obedience of Christ, while they are not actively and passively obedient to the Spirit of Christ Jesus, are under a strong and dangerous delusion." And again, "They who knew Christ after the flesh, were to press after some more spiritual discovery of him; and it was expedient that they who almost doated upon his outward manifestation should be weaned from it, to the end [so far as that] his more interior, and indeed, beneficial revelation of himself, might be witnessed by the soul."

Q.—What is the testimony of Holy Scripture especially with regard to repentance unto justification or newness of life?

A.—Throughout the New Testament, "repentanee toward God, and faith toward our Lord Jesus Christ," connected with His wonderworking power within us, is prominently maintained. Thus, saith the Saviour, "Except ye repent, ye shall all likewise perish." The apostle Peter, "Repent ye therefore and be converted, that your sins may be blotted out when the times of refreshing shall come from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power." The apostle Paul to the Corinthian Church: "I rejoice * * that ye sorrowed to repentance." To the Athenians, "God now commandeth all men everywhere to repent." And who showed also unto many, "that they should repent and turn to God, and do works meet for repentance." Again, the apostle John declared to the church of Ephesus: "Remember therefore from whence thou art fallen; and repent, and do the first works; or else I will come unto thee quickly, and will remove thy candlestick out of his place, except thou repent." To the church of Pergamos, "Repent; or else I will come unto thee quickly, and will fight against them with the sword of my mouth." And to the chureh of Thyatira, "Behold I will cast her * * into great tribulation except they repent of their deeds." So that repentance, or, in other words, a being made sensible of our sins through the condescending mercy and illuminating grace of the Lord Jesus, followed by godly sorrow—a being grieved and humbled before God on account of it—is a primary duty, and indispensable to reconciliation and justification.

(To be continued.)

Do thou my soul, the destined period wait,
When God shall solve the dark decrees of fate,
His now unequal dispensations clear,
And make all wise and beautiful appear.
—Tickell.

A Christian Invitation.

Reader, whoever thou art, and whatever may be thy present circumstances, listen for a few moments to the invitation of a fellow-pilgrim, and, turning from all outward things, endeavor to have thy mind fixed upon the teaehings of the spirit of Christ in the seeret of thy heart. Thou art, perhaps, unaccustomed to this exercise of silent mental waiting upon God, who by His Spirit speaks to the children of men in the still chambers of the abstracted soul; but it is of more importance to thee than thou eanst well imagine, that the ear of thy mind should be turned in listening stillness to hear from day to day, and from hour to hour, the gentle admonitions of this heavenly Monitor. No situation in life, however humble or however exalted, no circumstances, however chequered with present joy or sorrow, can render this practice otherwise than salutary to the soul; for in either ease thou art coming to Him who alone knows the secrets of thy heart, and who will administer just that degree of encouragement, or of reproof, whieh is suited to thy condition.

Reader, dost thou doubt whether this is indeed the spirit of Christ which thus strives with thee; Turn then to thy Bible, and in the first chapter of the Gospel of John, and the 12th verse, thou wilt find that "The Word, which was with God, and which was God," and by whom "all things were made," is declared to be the "True Light which lighteth every man that cometh into the world;" and in the 14th verse of the same chapter, it is added, that "The Word was made flesh, and dwelt among us (and we beheld His glory, the glory as of the only begotten of the Father) full of grace and truth." Now, seeing that the Scriptures were written under the influence of divine inspiration, we have here a clear and indubitable proof that this Word, whieh "was God," and "became flesh," in the person of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, is also the "True Light which lighteth every man." Doubt no longer, therefore, candid reader, the essential divinity of this spiritual light, of whom it is said in the 12th verse, that "To as many as received Him He gave power to become the sons of God;" but in good earnest apply thyself every day of thy life, and even in the midst of thy outward and lawful cares, to this Divine, Omnipresent, and Omniscient Guide. Leaving, then, all dependence on inferior teachers, listen with reverence of soul to the gentlest whispers of this Blessed Spirit, wait for its manifestations with all humility and patience, and it will from time to time reveal to thee the will of thy heavenly Father—will show thee what things in thy eonduet and eonversation are displeasing to Him, and eontrary to that purity of soul which the Christian must possess before he can enter the kingdom of heaven; and if thou art attentive to its reproofs, and faithfully conformest thy life to its progressive discoveries, it will assuredly guide thee into all truth, as our holy Redeemer has declared in John xvi. 13. "Howbeit when He the Spirit of Truth is come, He will guide you into all Truth," &c. It will not, perhaps, reveal to thee, all at once, the whole designs of infinite wisdom concerning thee; yet, as thou art able to bear it, and art faithful to the light already received, thou wilt receive more light, and bringing thus all thy deeds and all thy opinions to this divine test, thou wilt be led into soundness both of doctrine and praetice. "If any man will do His will," said our Lord Jesus, speaking of the Father, John vii. 17, "he shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God," &e. Trouble not thyself, therefore, dear reader, with critical distinctions or verbal subtleties; only eome in true faith to this spiritual Instructor, and receive nothing implicitly as divine truth but that which is contained in holy writ, and is in accordance therewith, sealed upon thy conscience by this unerring witness for God. Thus shalt thou be gathered from the Lo here is Christ! or Lo He is there! which abound in the world; and sitting down under the immediate teaching of the Spirit, who still teaehes as never man taught, thou shalt know a progressive advancement in the way to Zion, until thy feet are established upon Him as the Rock of Ages, the only door of access to the true fold.

Continuing thus to walk before the Lord blameless, thou wilt be fed with the heavenly manna, and be privileged during the remainder of thy earthly pilgrimage to participate, with other disciples of our crueified and risen Saviour, in that gracious legacy which he bequeathed to his followers, "My peace I leave with you, my peace I give unto you, not as the world giveth give I unto you." Compared with this sweet, enriching peaee, all earthly pleasures are insignificant. Happy indeed are all those who obtain this blissful portion, which adds to the highest enjoyment of the life which now is, the promise also of "that which is to come."

Cholera and Birds.—The London Globe says: German naturalists have called attention to a new incident with regard to the outbreak of epidemies. It is on record that an extraordinary flight of birds had occurred simultaneously with the appearance of the disease. The occasions have been so numerous, and in so many eountries, that it is impossible to regard the coincidence as accidental. Thus, as far back as the year 1848 birds of all kinds deserted the town of St. Petersburgh and Rigi, and it was in that year that the cholera broke out. The epidemie proceeded in its westward course the following year, and the same phenomenon was observed in Western Prussia in 1846 and in Hanover in 1850. In all these cases the facts were ehronicled as having occurred at the time, but they were not supposed to have any relation mutually. But when these phenomena were more closely observed by men of science more accurate details were given. Thus, in the little town of Przemysl, in Galicia, all the jackdaws took flight from the streets into the country on the 26th of September, 1872, and that cholera broke out there two days afterward. On the 30th of November these birds returned from their spontaneous quarantine, and by that time the last ease of the disease had been recorded.

The same results had been observed in southern Germany last year. But Munich and Nuremberg were visited by this epidemic in the autumn; and in these towns it was observed not merely that the larger birds fled from the environs into the open country, but that sparrows and swallows deserted the town. It was a repetition of the article in every sailor's creed—that rats desert a sinking ship. The inhabitants of Nuremberg looked with joy for the return of the sparrows, who seemed to have arrived as soon as the danger disappeared. Foreign physicians seem to think the state of the atmosphere when the poison is in the air has a direct effect upon the birds, who instinctively fly from it. But the whole phenomenon seems capable of a much more simple solution.

It is well known that during the getting in of the harvest sparrows and the kind of birds that are found in the neighborhood of towns fly off to the fields. This may be tested much nearer home than Germany or western Russia. When the harvest has been reaped they would naturally return to the shelter of streets and houses. Even swallows, though they do not seek the corn-fields for grain, find the insects which they feed upon in the fields, and these birds also return to their town quarters to re-assemble for the winter flight. The simple people of Nuremberg and Bavaria probably accepted as an omen an event which happened to be coincident with the arrival of the dreadful epidemic, but which, in fact, was of annual occurrence and had no real connection with it.

Selected for "The Friend."

The same Divine principle of light and life, which led me out of the forms and ceremonies, to worship the Father in spirit and in truth, also led me, by its secret teachings, into a straight and narrow way, as to all superfluities in dress and address; and knowing in whom I had believed, the same hath preserved me in it to this day, and I trust will do so to the end, as there is no variableness with Him. Simplicity of dress and address, is becoming a humble follower of a crucified Saviour, whose garment or vesture was so unlike the fashions of that day, that they cast lots for it as a curiosity—for it was without seam. There is a cross to many among us, in these things, as the practice of them declares to the beholders, whose disciples we profess to be; and although all power in heaven and earth is given unto Him, yet, because the world in their foolish, vain hearts, despise the wisdom of God in these things, intended to crucify us to the spirit of the world, and the pomps and vanities of it, they are ashamed of the cross, and would rather enjoy the pleasures of a sinful world, which are only for a season, than to suffer affliction with the people of God in the scoffings of the world.

The change in my dress was a great cross, as I was always given to fashionable dresses, and at this time had sundry suits of apparel of this sort. I felt a solemn covering to come over my spirit, early one morning, whilst in bed, which drew me into deep silence and attention, when I felt it required of me to conform to the simple appearance of Christ's followers; His garment was all of a piece, so ought mine to be of a piece with my speech, my life and conversation. This felt to me a severe stroke; no shelter was now left for me, but I must appear as a fool to the world; my speech and then my garments would betray me, that I had been with Christ, and professed myself to be one of His disciples.

I wept bitterly and pleaded the cross it would be to me before my friends and acquaintance, with the loss it would be to me, in my present clothes; but all was silenced to my complaints, and the leaven worked in the lump till the whole man was leavened into submission, and then I ran the way of His commandments, with joy and alacrity of heart, so much so that I have heard in passing some people, say, they would give their oath I was a Quaker. Oh, said my spirit, that all the family were so conspicuous, even in the outside, that they might be known thereby, whose they are.—John Conran.

Selected.

TEARS.

It is raining, little flower,
Be glad of rain,
Too much sun would wither thee,
'Twill shine again;
The clouds are very black tis true,
But just behind them shines the blue.

Art thou weary, tender heart,
Be glad of pain,
In sorrow sweetest things will grow,
As flowers in rain;
God watches, and thou wilt have sun
When clouds their perfect work have done.

Selected.

CITY OF GOD.

My feet are worn and weary with the march
Over the rough road and up the steep hill-side;
O city of our God! I fain would see
Thy pastures green, where peaceful waters glide.

My hands are weary, toiling on,
Day after day for perishable meat;
O city of our God! I fain would rest—
I sigh to gain thy glorious mercy seat.

My garment, travel-worn and stained with dust,
Oft rent with briars and thorns that crowd my way,
Would fain be made, O Lord, my righteousness!
Spotless and white in heaven's unclouded ray.

My eyes are weary looking at the sin,
Impiety and scorn upon the earth;
O city of our God, within thy walls
All—all are clothed again with thy new birth.

My heart is weary of its own deep sin—
Sinning, repenting, sinning still again;
When shall my soul thy glorious presence feel,
And find, dear Saviour, it is free from stain?

Patience, poor soul! the Saviour's feet were worn;
The Saviour's heart and hand were weary too;
His garments stained and travel-worn and old;
His vision blinded with a pitying dew.

Love thou the path of sorrow that he trod;
Toil on, and wait in patience for thy rest;
O city of our God! we soon shall see
Thy glorious walls—home of the loved and blest.

For "The Friend."

Wayside Notes.

(Continued from page 82.)

We left Friends in the early part of 1658 in Boston Colony, struggling, but powerless to overcome the darkness of sectarian jealousy and prejudice, which had in a very limited space of time, outstripped the intolerance of British rule, and had culminated in the passage of a law more inhuman than any which had obtained favor in England. The violence of persecution did not deter Friends from coming into the Colony, or from following out whatever course the mind of Truth presented. Some were commanded to go and warn the people of the consequences of their hardness and disobedience, as the Lord entrusted Jonah with a message of warning to the inhabitants of Nineveh, on account of their great pride, luxury, and ungodliness. And when it became no longer possible for Friends to take passage direct for Boston, because of the penalties imposed on the masters and owners of vessels, for receiving them on board, Friends sailed for other points on the coast, and found their way overland; at that time an uncultivated region, densely wooded, with few or no laid out roads; inhabited by Indians, and overrun with wild beasts.

To know the path of duty, was to these christian pioneers, a paramount consideration; and having found it, is it not clear to the most careless reader of the events of those times, there has seldom been presented to the world a purer type of faithfulness; unselfish, patient, self-denying service in a righteous cause. Regardless of what should befall them, they sought to do the mind of Christ, and to exemplify in their teaching, and patience under suffering, the peaceable nature of His gospel. The testimony of the eminent Apostle of the Gentiles, was their testimony: "But none of these things move me, neither count I my life dear unto myself, so that I might finish my course with joy, and the ministry which I have received of the Lord Jesus, to testify the gosple of the grace of God."

In the 5th month of this year, Wm. Brend, in company with Wm. Leddra, (who with three of his fellow believers were afterwards condemned to death) arrived at Newbury. After having a conference with the priest, they were placed in charge of an officer and conducted to Salem; and being brought before the magistrates, and it appearing they were "Quakers," they were charged with "holding and promoting dangerous errors; that they not only denied that Christ at Jerusalem had suffered on the cross, but rejected the Holy Scriptures also." In reply it was clearly shown the charge was groundless; they acknowledging before their accusers, they owned no other Jesus, but He who suffered death at Jerusalem, and that they did fully own the scripture record. This was not sufficient to liberate them; and they were placed in the house of correction; but soon afterward were removed to Boston, and there put to hard labor; and the jailor who received his profit from the work of his prisoners, finding them unwilling to contribute their labor to maintain injustice, kept them without food for five days, and gave them each twenty blows with a three-corded whip. The next day, an officer came to W. B., a man much advanced in years, and bound him in irons, neck and heels drawn closely together; and in this most unnatural and painful situation he was kept for sixteen hours; and for refusing to work the following day, he was beaten in the most awful manner with a heavy pitched rope. The request was deemed unreasonable in the highest degree, as he had committed no wrong, but now the demand came with greater inhumanity, because compliance was impossible; five days without food, and cruel scourging, had rendered him unable for exertion. His declaration of innocence; his appeals to the purity of his motives and the justice of his cause; his bruised and bleeding body, wasting with pain and hunger, were enough to move the heart to compassion; but the inhumanity of this officer was not overcome. The rope-scourging was renewed, and with great violence a much larger number of blows than before, were now inflicted.

The awful condition in which this innocent victim of fiendish rage, in the character of a jail-keeper, was left, as described by a contemporaneous writer, is truly heart-rending. I have no desire to relate the particulars; and I would gladly blot them out of history that no such memory might attach to the ancestors of the intelligent, generous minded people, who now fill up the multiplied walks of life in the State, which was then the infant Colony of which we are writing. The case appears to have been one of shocking barbarity, and to have awakened tenderness, and a better conscience on the part of many. Although accustomed as the people were to look to the priests, and courts of law, for an infallible exposition of christian faith, from the one, and from the other, of the civil powers of the State; they could not longer remain indifferent spectators to a scene like this, so abhorent to every noble, manly impulse. He whose ways are unsearchable, permitted this flagrant breach of His moral government, perhaps, that the eyes of many might be opened. and their hearts warmed to receive the Light of His blessed Spirit. As we pursue the narrative of these persecutions further, it becomes evident, this and similar instances of cruelty, did a great work in bringing, as it were to life again, the deadened consciences of many who had been drinking all their lives, but never satisfied, of the impure streams issuing from an empty faith. It is stated the people became exasperated, and the magistrates, to prevent a tumult, put up notices along the highways, setting forth their dislike to such action on the part of the jailor, and that he should be dealt with at the next term of court; but to show the power of the clergy, it is said these were soon taken down, at the instigation of the "high-priest," John Norton, who it seems from the beginning had been a fierce promoter of the opposition to Friends. This man resolutely defended the conduct of the jailor, and said if necessary he would cheerfully appear as a witness in his behalf.

In the meanwhile, as the historian writes, it pleased God, even miraculously, to heal Wm. Brend, and to bring him back as it were from the very gate of death; but to show the hearts of these officials were not reached, and that they were resolved to be obedient followers of their priest-instructor, they made an order, commanding the jailor to "whip all Quakers in his custody," twice a week, who refused to work, the first with ten lashes, and to be increased, five to three strokes each, from time to time, until they would work. This was performed at this time on four Friends, among whom were Wm. Leddra and John Rouse. The "magistrates," under the colonial authority, appear to have been the judges of the courts, and to have exercised, not only the ordinary functions of such a tribunal, but in many instances they created the law, which they thus arbitrarily enforced. Their powers do not seem to have been judicial, or executive strictly, but in certain cases they were legislators also, and with the help of a supporting governor, and the military at his command, their authority for the time being, was almost absolute.

There was no testimony for which Friends suffered more in N. E., than their refusal to accord the ordinary compliments of the world to others; and especially was this obnoxious to those in authority. On one occasion when a number of Friends were brought into court, it was demanded by one of their number "by what rule were they to be known as Quakers?" to which one of the magistrates replied, "Thou art one, for coming in with thy hat on."* The reply of the magistrate led one of the Friends to say, it was a horrible thing to make such cruel laws as were then in existence, (reciting them briefly), because they could not put off the hat. They were then charged with holding forth at their meetings, doctrines that were blasphemous. To which Friends answered, that if such a thing could be shown they would indeed be convinced; and that they might really know intelligibly of the truth of this grave charge, they, their judges, ought to send a few authorized persons to sit with them in their meetings for worship. But, answered General Denison, "If ye meet together, and say any thing, we may conclude ye speak blasphemy." Thus Friends were the constant victims of a most unnatural prejudice, and the authorities presuming upon the hostile feeling in England towards Friends, and their own isolated position as a colony, with regard to any supervisory action on the part of Great Britain, they did not hesitate often to act without authority, using the most summary means to bring Friends to punishment, placing them with papists, in the character of heretics, and denying to them, their clear constitutional privilege, to be tried by a jury. And when the rulers dealt arbitrarily, it was surely not surprising the less cultivated and not so well informed keeper of the house of correction, should do likewise. The instability of the home government was another reason for the authorities feeling secure in what they did to drive Friends from among them: a commanding general stating in open court, words to this effect, "Before redress can be assured, the government will have changed."

John Rouse had left Boston, after having endured on several occasions cruel whippings. But having returned under a sense of duty, as had also John Copeland and C. Holder, who had previously been expelled; or to use their own language, the Lord having sent us, they were soon afterward shut up in prison. This occurred in the Sixth month, 1658.

In the 9th month they were brought into court, and informed that having come again to "seduce the people in contempt of the constituted authority, they were to understand, that whatever befell them, their blood would be upon their own heads." This these faithful men of God denied, saying, they were not there to do their own wills, but the will of Him who had called them. Being asked for proof how they were so commissioned, they answered, this was to be found in the entertainment they had received at the hands of their persecutors, being much like that Christ had told his disciples, would be meted out to them, for His name's sake. Governor Endicot now called for the reading of the law applicable to the case; this being done, they were sentenced, each to have the right ear cut off. On the day appointed for the execution of this cruel sentence, the marshal-general received the following order:

"To the marshal-general, or to his deputy: You are to take with you the executioner, and repair to the house of correction, and there see him cut off the right ears of John Copeland, Christopher Holder, and John Rouse, Quakers; in execution of the sentence of the Court of Assistants, for the breach of the law, entitled Quakers."

Signed EDW'D RAWSON, Sec.

This order was duly carried into execution; and after the bloody work had ended, these Friends who had just suffered, turning to the few present, said, "Those that do this ignorantly, we desire from our hearts, the Lord may forgive them; but for them who do it maliciously, our blood will be upon their heads; and such shall know in the day of account, that every drop thereof shall be as heavy upon them as a millstone."

It will be observed there were many upright-hearted men and women who abhorred sincerely this exhibition of religious hate, but few of this class were to be found among the church-men, who of all, were most vindictive; persistent in their movements, and ever restless. Having now accomplished the shedding of blood by authority of law, they felt themselves safe in urging a further step, which they deemed would be decisive, and effectual in driving Friends out, even the institution of a measure of banishment, on pain of death. The voice of opposition was raised feebly at first, but rapidly gained strength by the very means put forth to silence it. There were not a few whose consciences were now reached, who were indeed tendered under the convicting power of the Holy Spirit, and the wonderful display of Almighty goodness, in enabling His suffering people to endure all things in patience as good soldiers. A considerable number, occupying conspicuous positions, as well as many in the humbler walks of life, were not disposed to be led any longer by a selfish priesthood, and did all in their power to stay the downward tide of sin, and to save if possible the colony from the dark disgrace of being identified with the passage of a law so inhuman. But their efforts were not successful.

Norton, who was the head and front of the church party, assisted by his brother priests, petitioned the magistrates to cause the court to pass a law of the kind referred to. Great diversity of sentiment prevailed among the members of this body, consisting of twenty-five persons, when the subject was brought before it, and a strong opposition was developed; but finally on the 20th of 10th month, 1658, at a general court held at Boston, the iniquitous measure became a law, and Friends were to be deemed worthy of death, if they returned to the colony, after having been once tried under its provisions and banished.

This closes the legislative branch of these most sanguinary proceedings; more like the decrees of a Romish Inquisition, than the laws of a professedly reformed Christian people, of republican proclivities; that we can hardly separate them in spirit from some in primitive times, who under a reign of greater darkness, persecuted the disciples and followers of our Lord. P. B.

Philadelphia, 10th mo., 1874.

(To be continued.)

Comparative Warmth of Clothing.—The London Medical Record says that Dr. Von Pettenkofer, in a careful study of this subject recently published, has pointed out that the permeability of stuffs to air is a condition of their warmth. Of equal surfaces of the following materials, he found that they were permeated by the following relative quantities of air, the most porous, flannel, such as is used ordinarily for clothing being taken at a 100: Flannel, 100; linen of medium fineness, 58; silk, 40; buckskin, 58; tanned leather, 1; chamois leather, 51. Hence, if the warmth of clothing depend upon the degree in which it keeps out the air from our bodies, then glove-kid must be 100 times warmer than flannel, which every one knows is not the fact.

* It should be remembered the singular pronoun was at that time in common use by men in authority in addressing inferiors in rank.

The whole question then is resolved into that of ventilation. If several layers of the same material be placed together, and the air be allowed to permeate through them, the ventilation through the second layer is not much less than through the first, since the meshes of the two form a system of continuous tubes of uniform diameter, and the rapidity of the movement of the air through these is affected merely by the resulting friction. Through our clothing, then, passes a stream of air, the amount of which, as in ventilation, depends upon the size of the meshes, upon the difference of temperature between the external and internal atmosphere, and upon the velocity of the surrounding air. Our clothing, then, is required, not to prevent the admission of the air, but to regulate the same so that our nervous system shall be sensible of no movement in the air. Further, our clothes, at the same time, regulate the temperature of the contained air, as it passes through them, so that the temperature of the air between the clothing and the surface of our body averages 84° to 86° Fahr. The hygroscopic property of different material used for clothing essentially modifies their functions. This property varies with different materials; wool, for instance takes up more water than linen, while the latter takes up and gives off its watery contents more rapidly than the former. The more the air is displaced by water from the clothes, the less will be their power of retaining the heat; in other words, they conduct the heat more readily, and hence we are quickly chilled by wet garments.

For "The Friend."

John Finch Marsh.

(Continued from page 84.)

As a suitable appendage to the account of the life and death of this dear Friend, which has been laid before the readers of "The Friend," it is proposed to insert some extracts from his letters.

To his friend Hannah Evans

Ipswich, 10th Mo., 1811.

Ah my dear friend, how is my heart, yea all that is within me made to rejoice, when I see or hear of any of my young friends showing themselves to be the disciples of Christ, by taking up the cross daily and following him. O that the number of these may daily and hourly increase, is the sincere desire of my soul.

I was delighted with that portion of thy letter where thou says, "there are some in this city who have parted with considerable of this world's gratifications to get on in their journey." May none of us who are making a profession of religion fall short of the power thereof, but may we be diligent in the examining individually ourselves, in order to know how the work of religion goes on in our hearts; whether the day's work keeps pace with the day. Religion being an every day work, does not, will not allow any of us to remain idle; so that if we are truly desirous of making happy progress therein, we must not neglect to retire inwardly and examine ourselves. I often think of these words of the Psalmist, "Commune with your own heart upon your bed, and be still," and wish it was more my practice than it is; sensible how necessary it is for us all daily to examine ourselves,—to cast up our accounts and see how they stand between God and our immortal souls.

To his Cousin Joseph M.

Ipswich, 12th Mo., 1811.

Dear Joseph, On looking a little with an eye of concern at the situation in which thou art, perhaps, unavoidably placed, and considering how exposed a one it is, particularly for young persons,—I have been a little thoughtful for thee, with sincere desires for thy spiritual welfare, that thou mayest be preserved from the many temptations that may continually be presented to thee from the different companies thou art in; but remember it is no sin to be tempted, the sin lieth in yielding to the tempter. No doubt thou feels at times the delicacy of thy situation, when, after the business of the day is over, thou retires to some inn, where I expect thou generally meets with other travellers, and perhaps it is customary to take your refreshments together. Now it may be seldom thou meets on thy journey with a traveller that is a member of our society, so that being a good deal shut out from the company of Friends, thou may, if not very watchful, be drawn by degrees from that simplicity which I trust thou desires to walk in—even that sweet simplicity which Truth leads its followers into. Be concerned then, dear cousin, continually to watch over thyself,—watch over all thy thoughts, words and actions, sincerely desiring that what thou does, it may be to the glory of God. Now suffer me affectionately to advise thee to be particularly careful in the ordering of thy conversation, loving to use plainness of speech and behavior towards all men, keeping much silence; and then I believe thou wilt be favoured more clearly to behold the beauty of that simplicity, which all who walk in the path and way of self-denial rejoice in. Well may we rejoice in that which preserves us from following or seeking after the fashions, customs, and manners of the world,—well may we rejoice in those things which are truly excellent and lead to peace: "The ways of the Lord are ways of pleasantness, and all his paths are peace." I now feel desirous of reviving in thy remembrance, the sweet counsel thou received from thy dear mother, the evening previous to thy setting off on a journey of business into the west of England, in 1st mo., 1810, and may tell thee the desire of my mind then was, that thou might frequently call to mind her words, in that exposed situation of life; and it is now my sincere desire that what I have written may prove acceptable; and should what I write in the least degree encourage thee to persevere in the path of true humility, my end is answered. Be concerned to dwell low, for in the valley of humility there is peace and safety.

I think before I draw to a conclusion I shall feel most easy to say, Be diligent in attending meetings. It may so happen sometimes, when on thy journeys, that thou cannot reach a meeting on first day, yet I trust thy endeavours to spend thy first days among Friends is not small; but I feel desirous to say, Labor to attend meetings often; think it no hardship at times to ride a few miles out of thy way for that purpose; also on a week day thou wilt not find thy time so spent to be lost, but on the contrary, if thy endeavors are sincere, thou wilt feel these seasons to be refreshing, and often cause to acknowledge it was good for thee thy being there. "Wait on the Lord, be of good courage, and he shall strengthen thy heart; wait, I say, on the Lord."

I have not written this letter with a view to discourage thee at all in thy situation, only considering it to be more exposed than most, felt desirous of saying for thy encouragement thus much—Keep thy proper place, let thy conduct at all times be exemplary, remembering example speaks louder than words; then I believe, dear cousin, thou wilt be of service in encouraging others to persevere in the path of wisdom and virtue. With dear love, I remain thy affectionate cousin,

J. F. Marsh.

(To be continued.)

Taming the Humming-bird.—The ruby-throat has sometimes been tamed. Webber, in his "Wild Scenes and Song Birds," says, after several unsuccessful attempts, at last "I succeeded in securing an uninjured captive, which to my inexpressible delight proved to be one of the ruby-throated species, the most splendid and diminutive that comes north of Florida. It immediately suggested itself to me that a mixture of two parts of loaf sugar with one of fine honey, in ten of water, would make about the nearest approach to the nectar of flowers. While my sister ran to prepare it, I gradually opened my hand to look at my prisoner, and saw, to my no little amusement as well as suspicion, that it was actually "playing possum," feigning to be dead most skilfully. It lay on my open palm motionless for some minutes, during which I watched it in breathless curiosity. I saw it gradually open its bright little eyes to peep whether the way was clear, and then close them slowly as it caught my eye upon it. But when the manufactured nectar came, and a drop was touched upon the point of its bill, it came to life very suddenly, and in a moment was on its legs, drinking with eager gusto of the refreshing draught from a silver teaspoon. When sated it refused to take any more, and sat perched with the coolest self-composure on my finger, and plumed itself quite as artistically as if on its favorite spray. I was enchanted with the bold, innocent confidence with which it turned up its keen black eyes to survey us, as much as to say, "Well, good folks, who are you?" By the next day it would come from any part of either room, alight upon the side of a white China cup containing the mixture and drink eagerly, with its long bill thrust in to the very base. It would alight on by fingers, and seem to talk with us endearingly in its soft chirps." Mr. Webber afterwards succeeded in taming several of the same species. He gave them their liberty occasionally, and they returned regularly. At the time of migration they left for the winter; but the next spring they sought their old quarters, and accepted the delicious nectar kindly provided for them, and by degrees brought their mates.—Popular Science Monthly.

This morning before I rose, I was pondering in my mind, that divers in our Society are rich and full, as may be seen by their way of living and their clothing; and that though their garb is plain, yet it is costly, and various are the suits of apparel. I then recurred to my own low estate, not regretting that it was so; for it becomes a redeemed people to be exemplary, in eating, drinking, and apparel; in which revolvings my poor, weak body and low mind were thus satisfied: "I will clothe thee with salvation, and crown thy end with peace.—Jane Pearson.

For "The Friend."

The Kansas Sufferers.

Our readers may remember a reference in "The Friend," this autumn, to the great destruction of the growing crops in Kansas and Nebraska by locusts. Since that period an unusual drought accompanied by excessive heat, has added to the loss and destitution of the inhabitants, so that much need now exists and is accumulating with the advance of cold weather. The subjoined letter to a Friend in this city, from the Committee of Kansas Meeting for Sufferings, will indicate the condition of matters there among Friends, and also the mode of affording the assistance desired.

Lawrence, Kansas, Tenth month 19th, 1874.

We enclose herewith an extract from the minutes of our Meeting for Sufferings, showing officially the action of that meeting with a view to afford an efficient and reliable channel for the distribution of such means of relief for the destitute and suffering in the limits of this Yearly Meeting, in consequence of the failure of crops, as may be contributed by those in more favored circumstances.

Information and statistics before the Meeting for Sufferings, and now in possession of the committee, show conclusively that much destitution prevails, especially in the more newly settled portions of the State. Prompt and efficient measures are needed to prevent suffering. Some families are now almost entirely destitute of subsistence; many have only sufficient to last a few weeks, and nearly all in the new settlements will need assistance before the incoming of another crop. Both food and clothing are needed. Bulky articles of the former can best be purchased near the places when needed. Money contributions would be preferable, as all articles needed can be purchased here advantageously. Dry goods for clothing, shoes and clothing adapted to all classes and ages, also dried fruit, will be acceptable. Care should be taken to avoid sending articles too much worn to justify transportation.

Correspondence should be addressed to Francis A. Wright, Secretary Kansas Relief; remittances, by draft or money order, to W. Hadley, Treasurer, and shipments of goods to Jonathan Wilson, Agent,—all at Lawrence, Kansas. Duplicate lists of articles shipped and notices of remittances should also be sent to the Secretary.

We earnestly commend the subject, in the love of Christ, to the kind consideration of the charitable and humane wherever this may come.

On behalf of the Meeting for Sufferings of Kansas Yearly Meeting.

Washington Hadley,
Francis A. Wright,
Jonathan Wilson,
Executive Committee.

At a meeting of the Meeting for Sufferings of Kansas Yearly Meeting of Friends, held Tenth month 12th, 1874.

In accordance with a report of a committee appointed at a former sitting, on the subject of relief to those of our members who are in destitute and suffering condition, by reason of the failure and destruction of crops, Washington Hadley, Jonathan Wilson and Francis A. Wright are appointed an Executive Committee, to receive and supervise the distribution of such means of relief as may be contributed; Francis A. Wright to act as Secretary and Correspondent and Washington Hadley, Treasurer. The Executive Committee is authorized to fill any vacancies that may occur in their own body, and also to appoint a general agent, whose duty it shall be to personally inform himself of the condition and needs of such Friends as require aid in the different localities, and see to the proper distribution of such means of relief as may be placed at the disposal of the Committee.

Extracted from the minutes of the meeting.

W. Hadley, Clerk.

Selected.

Whoever accumulates learning or discipline or culture for selfish gratification alone, regardless of what he owes to Christ and humanity, has in him all the essential qualities of a miser. We talk of misers as if they were found among the commercial classes only. But the term is applicable to all who hoard up God's gifts in selfish carelessness of the duties which those possessions impose. It is the use of power for blessing, which alone can bring happiness to him who has it.

THE FRIEND.

ELEVENTH MONTH 7, 1874.

The substance of the experience of every truly born child of God, is expressed by George Fox, where, after reciting how all preaching, teaching or any other merely human means, fell short of reaching, or ministering to his condition as a lost child of Adam, sensible of the exceeding sinfulness of sin and his own inability to extricate himself from its galling thraldom, he says, "When all my hopes in them and in all men were gone, so that I had nothing outwardly to help me, nor could tell what to do, then, oh then, I heard a voice which said, 'There is one, even Christ Jesus, that can speak to thy condition.' When I heard it my heart did leap for joy. Then the Lord let me see, why there was none upon the earth that could speak to my condition, namely that I might give Him all the glory. For all are concluded under sin, and shut up in unbelief as I had been, that Jesus Christ might have the pre-eminence; who enlightens and gives grace, faith and power. Thus when God doth work, who shall let it? This I knew experimentally. My desires after the Lord grew stronger, and zeal in the pure knowledge of God, and of Christ alone, without the help of any man, book or writing. For though I read the Scriptures that spake of Christ and of God, yet I knew him not but by revelation, as He who hath the key did open, and as the Father of life drew me to his Son by his Spirit."

What a wretched condition is it for man to fall into, where he can bring himself to avow, as did E. Ash, "That nothing is anywhere said in Scripture, which implies that men are to look to anything in themselves for illumination and salvation," and who must consequently deny the declaration of the Apostle, even in reference to the heathen, that "That which may be known of God is manifest in them, for God hath showed it unto them. And also to assert that there is no warrant for speaking of—and consequently none for believing in "the Light of Christ." Truly "If thine eye be evil thy whole body shall be full of darkness. If therefore the light that is in thee be darkness, how great is that darkness."

We are altogether dependent upon Christ for salvation; for in us, that is in our carnal nature, inheriting the seed of sin from our first parents, there dwelleth no good thing. Every aspiration after good, every effort to become conformable to the Divine will, must spring from a Divine Source, and the strength to bring the soul out of the pit of corruption, must be supernatural. Christ alone can bring us up out of this horrible pit, place our feet upon himself, the Rock of Ages, and establish our goings in righteousness.

How could we know anything of this great change, this new birth, to take place in us; nay, how can we know that our deeds are evil, and that we must be born again, if we are not to look to anything in ourselves for illumination and salvation? If we are not to bring our deeds to the light in us, to see whether they are evil, or are wrought in God, how are we to know whether we are in the narrow way that leadeth to life eternal, or are walking in darkness, and know not whither we go. Were there no "continuance of direct or immediate revelation to Christ's followers," as E. Ash so confidently declares, how would they know when He stands at the door and knocks, or how could his followers—if under such circumstances He could have any followers—know Him to come in and sup with them?

Words, however true in themselves, and however important the truths they are designed to convey, cannot beget in the soul any true sense of divine things. The mystery of the first quickening of Divine life in the soul, must have a higher origin than language, written or spoken, and the growth of the new born babe in Christ, must depend on spiritual food administered by Christ himself, who is both the bread of life, and the Giver of it. The natural man may study deeply, may reason logically, and descant learnedly on the sacred truths contained in the Scriptures, but he receiveth them not, neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned. "God who commanded the light to shine out of darkness, hath shined in our hearts, to give the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ;" and it is only as we walk in this light as He is in the light, that the children of Light can have fellowship one with another, and know the blood of Jesus Christ to cleanse them from all sin. And unless they know this "Light of Christ," this "Christ in them the hope of glory," and walk in and by it, they can never come to the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ.

The command is "Awake thou that sleepest, and arise from the dead, and Christ shall give thee light." The apostle speaks of some, "of whom I travail in birth again, until Christ be formed in you;" and of himself he saith, "I live, yet not I, but Christ liveth in me." The offices of the Light of Christ, the Grace of God, and the necessity of obedience to it, were the great theme of George Fox and his worthy coadjutors. To these they called the people, and by the powerful operation of this Witness for God in the hearts of their hearers, thousands were delivered from the power of darkness, and translated into the kingdom of Christ Jesus. This was and always has been the great distinguishing feature in the faith of Friends. For while they fully owned all the cardinal truths of the coming, sufferings, death, atonement, resurrection and mediation of Christ, and the benefits resulting from them, as other orthodox professors held them, they saw that these might be held and taught, and when Friends first came forth were held and taught by great numbers, without effecting a change from a state of nature to a state of grace.

Not knowing the wonder working, transforming power of this Light or Grace, as its revelations in the soul are observed and obeyed, other professors naturally declared that man could not be freed from the power of sin; but must submit to it, for term of life, and trust to the imputed righteousness of Christ to cover the guilty soul, without ever knowing the law of the Spirit of Life in Christ Jesus, to set them free from the law of sin and death. They therefore hated Friends for declaring, that as greater is He who is, by his Spirit, in man, than he who is in the world, therefore He is able to bind the strong man, spoil all his goods and cast him out, and sanctify man wholly, body, soul and spirit. The same effect has followed the same cause in E. Ash, who denying that there is anything in man that he can look to for illumination and salvation, no "Light of Christ" in the soul, no direct revelation to Christ's followers, as Friends have always believed; has likewise —we might say necessarily—denied the doctrine of Perfection, held by Friends. And yet this is the man endorsed by London Yearly Meeting; declaring that all for whom memorials were read before it, were one in faith with him. Surely there must have been some mistake in this latter assertion.

SUMMARY OF EVENTS.

FOREIGN.—Sir Hercules Robinson, in a dispatch from the Fiji Islands, reports to the home government that he has imposed taxes, established a tariff based on that of New South Wales, and framed a code of laws. He retains the government in his own hands until further orders. The king has sent a message confiding the interests of his people to the justice and clemency of Queen Victoria.

The Times of India announces that Colonel Mobray Thompson, defender of Cawnpore, fails to identify the person who claimed to be Nana Sahib, though he says there is certainly a likeness. The prisoner declares he was drunk when he falsely confessed that he was Nana Sahib. He states that he was arrested by mistake in 1864, and subsequently released, and claims that he has relatives who will recognize him.

A London dispatch of the 29th says: The twin of the Castalia made a short trial trip in Dover Roads yesterday with satisfactory results. The speed of ten knots per hour was made. The engines, however, are still defective and further repairs and more experimental journeys will be necessary.

The brig Lophema, from Liverpool for Baltimore, picked up from a raft five persons belonging to the steamship Mary, which foundered while on a voyage from Glasgow to Trinidad. The Lophema transferred them to the bark Egyptian, which vessel landed them at Falmouth.

It is probable that with the exception of the five persons above mentioned, and two landed at Falmouth by the steamship Horseguards, all those who were on the Mary, including the captain, are lost.

A Bombay dispatch says, the cotton crop in the Presidency of Bombay, promises the largest yield ever recorded. The cotton picking had already commenced, being ten weeks earlier than usual.

Liverpool.—Uplands cotton, 7¾ a 7⅞*d.*; Orleans, 8⅛ a 8¼*d.* Breadstuffs quiet.

The British and Foreign Bible Society in London, since 1804, has issued 123,000,000 Bibles, in 130 different languages.

It is reported that there are 1500 persons sick with typhoid fever in the town of Darwen-Over, in the county of Lancaster, being more than one-sixth of the entire population.

A London dispatch of 11th mo. 2d says: The cable of the direct United States Company, which parted and was lost while being laid by the steamer Faraday, has been picked up by that vessel in lat. 50.31, long. 24.19, at a depth of 187 fathoms. The cable is in perfect condition. It was spliced to the portion that remained on the Faraday at 11 o'clock this A. M., and the work of paying out was again commenced.

A Paris dispatch of the 27th says: "The government has communicated to the papers an official note for the purpose of allaying the disquieting rumors which are current, on the Bourse and elsewhere, in connection with the Spanish memorandum. The note says that the memorandum refers more to the past than to the present matters, and that the attitude of none of the great Powers justifies the alarm felt by Spain, and which served as a pretext for sending the memorandum.

La Liberte is informed that Spain has withdrawn her demand for the extradition of the crew of the steamer Nieves as deserters.

The Italian, Trabucco, who was sentenced to death for an attempt upon the life of Napoleon and was afterward pardoned, has again been arrested in this city on the charge of threatening the life of Chevalier Nigra, the Italian Minister.

At an election held in Pas de Calais on the 1st inst., for Deputy in the National Assembly, Engrand, the Bonapartist candidate, was chosen by a decided majority.

Berlin advices state that after the preliminary examination of Count Von Arnim, he was released on bail upon the advice of his physicians, who reported that his health was failing from close confinement. He gave the required bail for his appearance for trial.

The Germania says the deputies from Lorraine will take their seats immediately upon the opening of the sessions of the Reichstag.

The German Parliament was opened on the 29th ult. by the Emperor William. The speech from the throne enumerates comprehensive measures to bring about uniformity in judicial proceedings. Steps have also been taken to secure kindred uniformity of civil rights. Projects of law making civil marriages obligatory, and introducing civil registration throughout the empire, will also be submitted. Various other matters were referred to in the speech, which appears to have been well received.

The trial of Kullman for the attempted assassination of Bismarck, commenced on the 29th and ended on the 30th ult. The prisoner fully admitted his guilt, but endeavored to justify the act on account of Bismark's hostility to the Catholic religion. He said he had first thought of killing Bismarck last Easter, and went to Berlin for that purpose, but was unable to find his residence until he learned from the newspapers that the Prince had gone into the country. On being asked how he reconciled such a crime with his religious profession, Kullman replied, "It serves the cause. Are not our bishops imprisoned." Kullman was found guilty and sentenced for fourteen years to the House of Correction, and ten years suspension of his civil rights with police surveillance.

A ministerial order has been issued to carry into effect the sentence against Kullman, at St. George prison, near Bayreuth.

The Turkish authorities have ordered the arrest of a number of persons implicated in the recent murder of Montenegrins.

Missionaries from Russia have opened a Greek Church in Japan, at which about 200 natives attend.

Spanish affairs remain without material change. Reinforcements to the Spanish army in Cuba were shipped on the 27th ult. No important military operations in the north of Spain are likely to occur immediately. It is asserted that several leading Carlists have waited on Don Carlos at Tolossa, and represented to him that it is useless to continue the war. The Iberia has intelligence that Don Carlos intends to hold an important conference on French territory, and expresses a hope that the French authorities will prevent it.

The municipality of Naples proposes to tender to Garibaldi an annuity of $6,000.

The latest advices from Hong Kong are to the effect that the difficulties between China and Japan will be peacefully settled.

In the first six months of 1874, bounties were paid for the destruction of 1109 wild beasts in the central provinces of India, viz: 185 tigers, 366 panthers and leopards, 227 bears, 84 wolves, and 247 hyenas.

UNITED STATES.—The War Department is now engaged in reducing the army to the number authorized by the last Congress—25,000 men. There are still about 2,000 men over that number.

There are six establishments, with an aggregate capital of $1,500,000, engaged in the manufacture of oil and oil-cake from cotton seed, in New Orleans.

An investigation in regard to manufacturing and business matters shows that the winter prospect for the laboring class in N. York is very unpromising. About one-third of the unskilled laborers in that city are idle. Many of them have had no employment for several months and are already in actual want.

It is stated that about 200,000 watches are made annually in the United States, and that the business represents a capital of nearly $5,000,000.

The interments in Philadelphia last week numbered 278, including 78 children under two years. There were 41 deaths of consumption and 10 of marasmus.

The mean temperature of the Tenth month, by the Pennsylvania Hospital record, was 58.62 deg.; the highest during the month 72 deg., and the lowest 39 deg. The amount of rain was 1.65 inches. The average of the mean temperature of the Tenth month for the past 85 years is given as 54.74 deg. The highest mean during that entire period was in 1793, 64 deg., the lowest in 1827, 46 deg. The amount of rain in the first ten months of 1874 has been 36.38 inches, against 51.48 inches in the corresponding period in 1873.

The Public Debt statement published on the first inst., shows a reduction in the total amount of $631,434 during the Tenth month, and a reduction of $4,026,470 since 6th mo. 30th last.

The Markets, &c.—The following were the quotations on the 2d inst. New York.—American gold 110¼ a 110⅜. U. S. sixes, 1881, registered, 118; do. coupons, 118⅜; do. 1868, registered, 117½; coupons, 117¾; do. 10-40 5 per cents, registered, 111¾; coupons, 112¼. Superfine flour, $4 a $4.30; State extra, $4.60 a $5; finer brands, $5.50 a $10.40. No. 2 Chicago spring wheat, $1.03 a $1.05; No. 3 do., $1.02; red western, $1.17 a $1.19; amber, $1.22; white Michigan, $1.27 a $1.36. French barley, $1.50; German, $1.40 a $1.45; Lake shore, $1.38. Oats, 59 a 61½ cts. Yellow corn, 92 cts.; new mixed, 80 a 84 cts. Philadelphia.—Middling uplands cotton, 14¾ cts.; New Orleans, 15½ cts. Clover seed, 8½ a 9 cts. Extra flour, $4.25 a $4.75; fancy brands, $7 a $8. White wheat, $1.30; amber, $1.26; red, $1.18. Rye, $1.05 a $1.07. Yellow corn, 90 cts.; new mixed, 73 cts. Oats, 58 a 63 cts. Sales of about 3500 beef cattle at 7⅛ a 7⅜ cts. per lb. gross for extra, and 4 a 7 cts. for common to good. Sheep 4¼ a 5½ cts. per lb. gross. Receipts 15,000 head. Corn fed hogs, $9.25 a $10 per 100 lb. net. Receipts, 6,500 head. Chicago.—Spring extra flour, $4 a $4.50. No. 1 Spring wheat, 88 cts.; No. 2 do., 84½ cts.; No. 3 do. 79½ cts. No. 2 mixed corn, 72 cts. Oats, 46 cts. Cincinnati.—Family flour, $4.90 a $5.16. Red wheat, $1.03 a $1.08. New corn, 60 a 62 cts. Oats, 53 a 56 cts. Rye, 93 cts.

A Stated Meeting of "The Female Society of Philadelphia for the Relief and Employment of the Poor," will be held at the House of Industry, No. 112 North Seventh St., on Seventh-day, 11th mo. 7th, at 12 o'clock.

JULIANNA RANDOLPH, Clerk.

"The Germantown Employment Society for Women" has for sale, at a low price, a large supply of substantial clothing for men, women and children, suitable to send to the Freedmen and Indians, &c. To those purchasing to the amount of $20.00 or over, we will make a deduction of 10 per cent.

Application may be made to SARAH ANN MATLACK, corner Shoemaker's Lane and Wakefield St., or META C. COLLINS, 147 School St.

DIED, on the 12th of Tenth month, 1874, WATSON NEWBOLD, in the seventy-third year of his age, a member of Upper Springfield Monthly Meeting, N. Jersey.

——, at her residence in this city, on the 31st of Tenth month, 1874, HENRIETTA, widow of the late Henry Troth, aged 81 years, a member of the Monthly Meeting of Friends of Philadelphia for the Western District.

——, on the 9th ult., at her residence in West Philadelphia, HANNAH BACON, in the 86th year of her age. Sincerely attached to the doctrines and testimonies of the gospel as held by Friends, her life was consistent therewith; and through the operation of Divine Grace she was clothed with the ornament of a meek and quiet spirit, which is, in the sight of God of great price.

WILLIAM H. PILE, PRINTER,
No. 422 Walnut Street.

THE FRIEND.

A RELIGIOUS AND LITERARY JOURNAL.

VOL. XLVIII. SEVENTH-DAY, ELEVENTH MONTH 14, 1874. NO. 13.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY.

Price Two Dollars per annum, if paid in advance. Two dollars and fifty cents, if not paid in advance.

Subscriptions and Payments received by

JOHN S. STOKES,

AT NO. 116 NORTH FOURTH STREET, UP STAIRS.

PHILADELPHIA.

Postage, when paid quarterly in advance, five cents.

For "The Friend."

Wayside Notes.

(Continued from page 93.)

"As gold is tried in the fire, so are acceptable men in the furnace of affliction;" and thus it hath pleased the Most High, in every age, in the administration of His moral and spiritual government, to prepare the heart of man, through chastisement, to receive it; breaking up the fallow ground, the unsubdued, carnal nature, that the seed of the kingdom might take root therein; bringing the axe of His righteous jealousy to the root of the unregenerate tree, and through the dispensation of the cross, crucifying the affections, and introducing the heart into a renewed life, with new desires, and higher objects to press after, and all looking to the one blessed hope of our calling. The Lord indeed "loveth whom he chasteneth, and scourgeth every son whom he receiveth." The heart must be unrobed of its own righteousness, before it can be spiritually clothed; must be humbled and dispossessed of its own strength, before it can be truly exalted, and equipped with spiritual power; and if any are to become qualified to administer consolation to others, they must have known of the operation of God's grace and Light in their own hearts, enabling them to speak of that their hands have handled, and to testify of that they have seen of the revelation of His power to heal the sin-sick soul. The Lord will have a people wholly dedicated to His work; and that those whom He would call into His harvest-field, might be well established and armed to meet every assault of the enemy, He, who knows the end from the beginning, and whereby the power of the arch-deceiver might overthrow the work of grace in their hearts, condescends in love to the whole human race, to try their faith as by fire, that they may have the seal of adoption engraven as upon the palms of their hands; that by example and doctrine, they may faithfully proclaim their allegiance. Polished shafts he would make of such, pillars in His house; instruments anointed, and bidden to preach the everlasting Gospel to the very ends of the earth. And in dwelling upon this deeply interesting subject, I have been led to take a view of this most significant connexion, every where written in the history of the visible church, between the suffering of Christian men and women on the one hand, and their devotion, zeal and consistency on the other; and that when in basket and in store they have been abundantly blessed, they have either turned their faces away and given themselves to serve the idols of this world, or in the lap of ease, and surrounded by whatever is calculated to enlist their affections, have settled down into apathy, and lukewarmness; their zeal hath grown cold, and as laborers for the Lord, have lost their efficiency, and the beauty and brightness of better days, wherein the Son of man, by His blessed Spirit, was truly magnified in them.

And why has the world such a benumbing influence? Is it not that its charms are ever present, active, moving in our midst, addressed to our senses and our nature. Hence this bond of sympathy; this close affinity between the world, and the world in us. And how is this link to be broken, and every false rest removed, unless it be through the interposing goodness of Almighty God, in teaching by many practical examples, that one after another every earthly prop will be taken away. Hereby He condescends to visit souls, and to enamor, warm and animate them with His love, leading them rather to exercise faith in things which are unseen, than in those which are seen. It is all in mercy that the unstable, wayward heart of man is thus dealt with.

The best lessons of wisdom are learned in the school of adversity, not when prosperity smiles, and every sensual gratification is within our reach; and yet while the obedient child of God in every generation has counted his sufferings for the Truth great gain, He who knows when and how to afflict, and the pressure that every soul can bear will, I fully believe, administer to each individual according to his separate need, and that he may best promote the welfare of the militant church. It is the privilege of the faithful to rejoice in tribulation, and to magnify his Holy Name that they are accounted worthy to suffer, neither will they become impatient under it, knowing it is the Father's good pleasure to give them the kingdom, and that when they have filled up their measure of service among the afflicted children in the Lamb's warfare, His face, which has been turned toward them in extremity, will not be turned away, when in love to their souls, and to the church universal He is pleased to say, "it is enough." Then do I believe such will be permitted to enjoy a foretaste of the life to come: to behold a measure of His exceeding glory, the glory of the only begotten of the Father full of grace and truth. Brighter skies, and a more radiant Light will be theirs, they shall know what it is to sit at the Lord's abundant table, and to have their souls replenished from day to day with spiritual bread. And when we turn our attention to the experience of that people, in a very remote age, before the dawn of christianity, who were a nation favored of the Lord; chosen for a light to the Gentiles, and to preach through their own fidelity, repentance toward God to a heathen world; we cannot fail to see in His patient dealing with them, that human nature was the same then as now, and needed, in the Divine counsel, the application of the same general law of discipline, in the administration of His spiritual government then, as individuals and nations experience in the present day. They were a living and most interesting type of His chastising love and mercy, His fatherly care and long-suffering forbearance; and the history of their unfaithfulness, and repeated backslidings, presents a sad and solemn picture of the waywardness of the human heart; and that when in captivity, and under oppression, they were spiritually blessed more than when in possession of the land promised to their fathers. And is not this a lesson taught in the life of every generation. The primitive church was born in the midst of suffering, and the death of many martyrs. Our Lord himself went up and down in the earth, during His short, but most eventful pilgrimage, a stranger and an outcast, despised and rejected of men, presenting in His own person a forecast of the trials and sharp buffetings that would attend the growth of the Christian church. And has this not been the experience of the real members of the Church of Christ? If they have not always undergone outward suffering, have they not often passed through many inward conflicts, and gone down as into spiritual Babylon; taking up the cross, denying themselves, and living in opposition to the prevailing practice and spirit of the worldly wise?

Was not this experience remarkably brought forth in the early life of our own Society, which was raised up for no other purpose than to revive the gospel in its ancient fulness? The trials and mocking that Friends underwent, to secure for themselves and posterity perfect Christian liberty, and the acknowledgment of Christ's headship in the church, can never fully be unfolded, as it would be impossible to convey to the present generation, a complete and definite expression, of the tortures and terrible wrongs inflicted by the church of Rome upon protestant believers.

And now this underlying truth in the religious life of the world, follows us into New England, and the interesting subject which has made up much the larger part of these "Notes," comes freshly before me. Had not Friends there enough to endure, and to try the foundation of their faith; whether they were serving their own passions, or striving to walk in the narrow, self-denying path cast up for all the Lord's people. Their zeal, love and faithfulness, were equal to their greatest extremity. Faith and courage outlived the shafts of envy; the sharpest, and the most flagrant abuse. No suffering could unsettle their allegiance, or disturb their confidence in God their Saviour; whose abounding love often flowed as a stream of gladness into their bleeding hearts.

(To be continued.)

Social Life among Animals.—The following amusing scraps are gleaned from a highly interesting paper read at a late public sitting of the Brussel's Academy of Sciences, by M. van Beneden, and published in the Revue Scientifique. There exists, he remarks, a great analogy between human society and that of animals. In the latter we find, quite as often as in our world, an honest set earning their livelihood by their industry; but there is another set of idlers and vagabonds that live entirely by their wits and at the expense of their thrifty neighbors. Some are parasites and feed on their vitals, others are content to sit at the same table and enjoy the good things before them. That there are masons, carpenters, miners and architects among the lower creation, is a well known fact; but we may be startled to find among them manufacturers of paper (a sort of South American wasp, the Chartergus chartarius), and shipbuilders (a sort of fish discovered by Agassiz, that builds itself a floating nest of seaweeds), &c. We have the cheat that leads the life of great gentlemen (the cukoo and pagurus), the humble pickpocket (the magpie), and the ruthless highwayman (the tiger, shark, &c.) But then there are some that cannot live without being a burden to others; such are certain crustacea, like the copepoda, that will stick to an ascidian and partake of its prey; or the fish called "remora," that will anchor itself to the body of a good swimmer, and let itself be conveyed along without any personal trouble, catching its prey from its snug berth.

Others there are that will do a friend a neighborly service; such is a sort of plover, that will enter a crocodile's mouth, and cleanse its teeth of the remnants of the last breakfast, a service the saurian cannot perform itself because of the stiffness of its tongue; so that it has the advantage of a living toothpick. This fact is mentioned by Aristotle, and has since been found true. Among parasites properly so called, there are many that do not take to their roguish mode of living till they get old; until then they will roam about in perfect liberty. Sometimes, like the hopryans, a sort of crustacea, both male and female, will seek together a refuge for their old age in another organism of their kind; at others, it is only the female that does so, while the male remains at large; this is the case of the worm filaria of Medina.

Eastern Method of Measuring Time.—The common people of the East measure time by the length of their shadow. Hence, if you ask a man what o'clock it is, he immediately goes into the sun, stands erect, then, looking where his shadow terminates, he measures his length with his feet, and tells you nearly the time. Thus, workmen earnestly desire the shadow which indicates the time for leaving their work. A person wishing to leave his toil says, "How long my shadow is in coming!" "Why did you not come sooner?" "Because I waited for my shadow." In Job vii. 2 we find it written, "As a servant earnestly desireth the shadow, and as an hireling looketh for the reward of his work."

For "The Friend."

John Finch Marsh.

(Continued from page 94.)

To his cousin Hannah Morris.

I was much pleased with that part of thy letter where thou reverted to those days of our childhood which we were favored to spend together, when in the simplicity of our minds, which were tenderly and preciously visited with the overshadowings of Divine love, we were led to delight ourselves in the most profitable way of retirement; that of sitting together in silence, or as we used to call it, and as I think it may be said, holding a meeting.

Those days we spent together, and those hours thus happily spent were made precious to us; the recollection of which will I think at all times prove profitable and instructive to our minds. I believe had I cherished more the tender impressions then made on my mind,—had I been more faithful in attending to the pointings of truth in my inward parts, as I grew in years, I should at the present day have experienced a greater progress in my spiritual journey than at this season is the case.

Deptford, 1st day evening, 6th mo. 27th, 1813.

To his friend Joseph Messer.

Colchester, 11th mo., 1813.

My dear Joseph,—Thou hast been the frequent companion of my thoughts by day, and at night on my bed have I remembered thee, and am thankful in continuing to have that feeling respecting thee, which when writing to thee before, think I expressed it was my desire to experience an increase of; a feeling which language can but faintly express, it being better felt than described in words or writing; yet by endeavoring sometimes to express something of this inward feeling, it not only affords relief and satisfaction to the mind or minds thus exercised, but often is permitted to afford encouragement, and prove a strength to those on whose account the heart is thus feelingly engaged; which while it breathes in secret for its own preservation, a language like that of David when he said, "Let the words of my mouth, and the meditation of my heart, be acceptable in thy sight, O Lord, my strength and my Redeemer," it also craves the preservation of others, and that the same language may in sincerity be theirs, yea, the daily desire of each of our hearts to be enabled so carefully to watch over our thoughts, words and actions, that what we think, speak, and do, may be to the glory of God. If this, my beloved young friend, be our happy experience, we shall exceedingly rejoice in being preserved in his fear.

How animating and encouraging is the language, "Whoso offereth praise glorifieth me; and to him that ordereth his conversation aright will I show the salvation of God."

Let us then be encouraged to become increasingly watchful and serious; for I do believe the more this becomes our experience, the more cheerful we shall feel in ourselves, and liberty to be so with others; and let us not be ashamed when we do not feel at liberty for conversation, to sit silently before men; for it is sometimes the case when in company, we feel ourselves so shut up as not to be able to enter much into conversation; and this may sometimes happen when we feel desirous to be conversant and to appear more cheerful. It may then be painful to us thus to appear, and difficult to withdraw ourselves from company yet I think it profitable for us thus to feel and that this stripped state is wisely ordered not only for our own instruction but also for the instruction of others. Such is at times the low stripped state of my mind, that I am more fit to be in the fields, or my chamber alone, than in company. The words of the prophet Jeremiah have been remembered by me, and think from degree of experience I may speak the same language.

"It is good for a man that he bear the yoke in his youth. He sitteth alone, and keepeth silence, because he hath borne it upon him. He putteth his mouth in the dust, if so be there may be hope." I do not understand this sitting alone and keeping silence, to be expressive of anything gloomy. No, no. But of sweet profitable retirement, wherein the mind becomes more and more weaned from earthly things, and inwardly seeks those that are heavenly; for nothing short of that which is of a pure and heavenly nature can satisfy the waiting mind. It is good for the sons and daughters of men to sit much alone, keeping silence; and for some of us frequently to sit solitary in families. Now my dear Joseph, to endeavor to express a little more of the feeling I have had on thy account, as mentioned in the early part of my letter; what if I say it seems to be accompanied with the belief that if thou faithfully attends to the pointings of truth in thy inward parts, minding the day of little things, of apparently small requirings, if thou art willing to bow with fear and humility under the forming hand of the Lord, fully resigning thyself wholly to his disposal, sincerely desiring to become what he would have thee to be; if thou stand faithful in all things, he would prepare and qualify thee for a laborer in his vineyard, in which there would be found employment for all, if there was but a willingness to enter in when the invitation is given; a willingness to obey the call. Though all are not made use of in the same way, yet there is something for each one to do; and happy are they who humbly and patiently wait to know the Master's will, and faithfully obey it. Their reward is indeed sweet peace of mind.

I sincerely hope to do no harm, or hurt thee in the least degree by thus writing; but I trust thou can clearly understand me, and see that I long to encourage thee to be faithful in that which appears to be required at thy hands, to mind and walk in that path clearly marked out for thee to walk in, whether it may be in a silent or a more public one. Far be it from me to say anything that would tend to bring forth anything like unripe fruit, or keep back that which is already ripe. How different is the feeling attending the mind after anything done in the will, &c., of the creature, from that which is done in apprehending it to be a divine requiring. The reward of the latter is sweet peaceful quiet of mind. My mind has been at times sweetly impressed and instructed with this language; "Except the Lord build the house, they labor in vain that build it: except the Lord keep the city, the watchman waketh but in vain."

(To be continued.)

"They that wait upon the Lord shall renew their strength; they shall mount up with wings as eagles; they shall run, and not be weary; and they shall walk, and not faint." Isaiah xl. 31.

A Singular Religious Sect.

The North China Herald publishes a letter respecting a much persecuted body of people residing in China. The writer says: "It has been remarked as a singular fact that of the sect of Nestorian Christians who flourished extensively in China during the thirteenth century, little or nothing is known at the present day. That they enjoyed the protection and received the fostering care of the Yuen dynasty, and were in turn cruelly persecuted and finally exterminated by the Mings, is all that we know of them. The few tablets and monuments erected by them which still survive stand as dumb witnesses to the fact that they existed at one time; but they give no trace of their devoted faith. There now exists, however, in the southern border of the province of Shantung a peculiar society or sect who profess to have received their doctrine originally from the west. They are known as the 'Nameless Sect,' and are unable to give the date of the introduction of their religion into China. They have a knowledge of an Invisible, Omnipresent, Almighty Being, whom they worship. This god whom they worship is known amongst them by three names—the Living Buddha of the West, the One not born of father or mother, and the Heavenly Father—all meaning and pointing to the one God, who is eternal. They do not worship idols. Each member of this sect repeats daily a hymn or moral discourse, in which such sentiments as the following occur: 'Do not injure others in order to benefit yourself;' 'Abstain from evil thoughts, words, or deeds;' 'Let none covet earth's pleasures, but set your hearts firmly on the Heavenly Paradise;' 'When the Saviour comes from the West, men will have peace.' These people believe in future rewards and punishments, but they have no clearly defined notions of the happiness which awaits the faithful. They speak of a Saviour to come from the West. They have no temples, but three times each day every one, in a sitting posture, with eyes closed, silently offers up prayers to God, and on the 1st and 15th of each moon they burn incense to him, but they have no altars, nor do they make use of paper money.

"Every member of the sect is expected to contribute money according to his ability, but there is no compulsion, and each one is left to determine for himself the amount of his contribution. These contributions are paid to the leader under whose guidance the members contributing may be at the time. These leaders or officers hold a position according to the number of converts or members each is able to gain to the sect. Each leader has a special oversight over his own converts, and spends much of his time in going about amongst his flock.

"Since the severe persecutions which this sect have encountered from the government, their religious rites and ceremonies, and all matters pertaining to their Church discipline, have been conducted in secret, so that those who are not members do not know what is done, or who are members of the sect. When the leader goes on his regular visits, the converts, like the early Christians in times of persecution, meet in the house of some brother, men and women together, where they join in silent solemn devotion. The leader then exhorts them to be faithful, admonishes and instructs them, and at the close of their religious ceremonies they all sit down together to a supper, of which wine and bread form the greater part. This singular religious sect exists in great numbers throughout the eastern and southern borders of Shantung. They have shown a uniform spirit of kindness and friendliness toward the American Protestant missionaries who have visited them, and who have succeeded in gaining their confidence, and great numbers of them have eagerly embraced the doctrines of the Christian religion."

For "The Friend."

A few Questions and Answers relative to some of the Doctrines and Testimonies of the Society of Friends.

(Continued from page 91.)

Question.—While fully satisfied concerning the necessity of repentance through obedience to the light of Christ as the first step to peace; what are Friends' views respecting the meritorious offering and atoning sacrifice of the dear Son and Sent of God, and also concerning faith?

Answer.—They believe that the fall of man incurred spiritual death; and that thereby he was cut off from access to the tree of life, and lost the Divine image in which he was created. That the coming, suffering, and death in the flesh of the Messiah has opened up a way whereby man becomes reconciled to the Father and is put into a capacity for salvation; or, in other words, enabled to become freely justified. That the serpent's head is hereby bruised; and "a new and living way" opened and "consecrated for us through the vail, that is to say Christ's flesh." For it is written of the immaculate Lamb, "Thou wast slain, and hast redeemed us to God by thy blood, out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation." But it is only through an entire surrender of ourselves to the grace, that saves any, and as man walks in the light, as God is in the light—as he is in measure capacitated to do—that the blood of Jesus Christ his Son purgeth his wicked heart and cleanseth from all sin. Thus the blood cleanseth, upon the washing of regeneration and the renewing of the Holy Ghost becoming our indispensable experience. The Apostle further says: "By grace are ye saved through faith," &c. Friends believe that we must have true faith in the Redeemer; and that this faith is a Divine gift producing obedience to the grace and truth that came and comes by Him. Moreover this true and living faith, which is the gift of God, through the revelation of the Holy Spirit of Christ Jesus in the soul, is so comprehensive that, as represented by the Apostle, it is "the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen;" a faith which endures "as seeing Him who is invisible;" a faith which overcomes the world, even all that is not of Him.

Q.—We hear now-a-days much about justification by faith: Can faith alone save any?

A.—No: works of righteousness by the Spirit of Christ Jesus and the birth of Christ in man, not Christ's death alone on the cross for man, are necessary to complete justification. The apostle James, as though he was addressing this very time, declares: "What doth it profit, my brethren, though a man saith he hath faith, and have not works, can faith save him? Faith if it have not works is dead, being alone. Yea, a man may say, Thou hast faith, and I have works; show me thy faith without thy works, and I will show thee my faith by my works." "Seest thou how faith wrought with his (Abraham's) works, and by works was faith made perfect." "Ye see then how that by works a man is justified, and not by faith only." "For as the body without the spirit is dead, so faith without works is dead also." Does any one need to be assured that the works here alluded to by the Apostle, are the fruits of obedience to the manifestations of the Lord's Holy Spirit in the secret of the heart? by and through which holy power and grace of God, we are enabled to overcome the world, the flesh, and the devil, and more and more to experience what it is to sit in heavenly places in Christ Jesus, to the peace and joy of the soul. Then faith without works is a dead faith. For God sent his Son to bless us, by turning us away every one from his iniquities. And unless this be experienced through submission to the power of an endless life, and receiving Christ Jesus into the heart where His kingdom must come, and His will be done, unto our becoming new creatures in Him, all that He hath done for us without us will not avail to our complete justification and salvation.

Q.—What does Joseph Phipps say in treating on true faith?

A.—"That faith which stands wholly upon hearsay, tradition, reading or imagination, is but a distant kind of ineffectual credence, which permits the soul to remain in the bondage of corruption. The wicked may go this length toward gospel faith; but the true faith lays hold of, is a part of, and cleaves to the Spirit of Truth in its inward manifestations; wherein it stands, and whereby it grows, till the heart is purified, the world overcome, and salvation obtained. This faith is as a flame of pure love in the heart to God."

Q.—And what says George Fox on the same?

A.—"They whose faith doth not stand in the power of God, cannot exalt His kingdom that stands in power."

Q.—What does the Society of Friends understand by that scripture, "As Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, even so must the Son of Man be lifted up; that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have eternal life?"

A.—They believe that, though of grave importance to the children of Israel under an imperfect covenant, it now represents another Jewish type ended in the Great Antitype. Yea, so short-lived was this type, that it is recorded of good king Hezekiah, that he brake in pieces the brazen serpent that Moses had made; which "Nehushtan" or piece of brass, the children of Israel, even in the days of the kings, burned incense to. But they do not understand it as giving any sanction in the Christian dispensation to a bare belief in the outward atoning sacrifice of the Saviour, precious as that atonement is, or still less to the modern enunciations, "Look and Live;" or, "Lord, I believe thou didst die, and I take thee to be mine; and so by faith we put off the old man," as being all that is necessary to salvation: else the devils, of whom it is written, they "also believe and tremble," might be saved. It is unquestionably true that, "He that cometh to God must believe that He is;" for again, "He that believeth not is condemned already," &c., but that by this lifting up of the Son of man was meant, not only as alluding to the death He should die, as the evangelist declares, but also His spiritual coming, power and government in the soul is plainly shown by what follows the portion of scripture just quoted from, viz: "And this is the condemnation, that light is come into the world (Christ Jesus was the true light, which lighteth every man, &c.,) and men loved darkness rather than light, because their deeds were evil. For every one that doeth evil, hateth the light, neither cometh to the light, lest his deeds should be reproved. But he that doeth truth cometh to the light, that his deeds may be made manifest that they are wrought in God."

Q.—In what does true worship consist?

A.—Christ Jesus the author and mediator of the new covenant testifies, that true worship is inward; being in spirit and in truth. Thus He said to the woman of Samaria, "But the hour cometh, and now is, when the true worshippers shall worship the Father in spirit and in truth: for the Father seeketh such to worship him. God is a spirit; and they that worship him must worship in spirit and in truth."

Q.—Then is there a difference between the worship performed under the old covenant, and that under the new?

A.—Yes: it is now no longer a worship consisting in outward observations; else it would not differ much from that instituted under the law. And hence the language from the lip of Truth, "The hour cometh and now is," &c., as of something in contradistinction to that worship which had been.

Q.—Is vocal ministry or prayer essential to true worship?

A.—No. For even therewith, or after these may have been exercised, there remains a work to do between our own souls and our Creator; waiting upon Him for the renewing of our spiritual strength, and watching unto the prayer which is in spirit with all perseverance. The teachings of others, under the qualifying power of the anointing, may, and should, invite and incite to this; the end and design of a gospel minister being to bring people to Christ; or, in the language of scripture, "To open their eyes, and to turn them from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan unto God; that they may receive forgiveness of sins, and inheritance among them that are sanctified," &c. But, as is also written, "No man can save his brother, or give to God a ransom for his soul." Such then, in the ability which the Truth gives, are helpful but not indispensable.

Q.—What does Isaac Penington say of the great work of the ministry?

A.—"This," says he, "is the great fundamental, that God is light, and in Him is no darkness at all. 1 John i. 5. And the great work of the ministry is to show men where this light is, and to turn men from the darkness, wherein is the power of Satan, unto this light, wherein is the power of God. * * To turn them from Satan's kingdom to this kingdom; from his large compass of dominion in the heart, to this narrow seed; from the great territories of darkness, to this little principle of light; from his great power of death, to this little weak thing of God; wherein the eternal power and godhead is made manifest, as this comes to be opened and increased by the Spirit." The great work of the ministry then, is to turn people from every thing outward to the kingdom of God which is within, and to His law written upon the heart. And the Psalmist, in speaking of the happiness of the godly, says: "His delight is in the law of the Lord; and in his law doth he meditate day and night." This is the Christian's privilege; and "there is," says a well known author, "in silent worship something so beautiful, so sublime, so consistent with the relation in which we stand to God, that it appears strange there should exist a single doubt of its propriety."

(To be continued.)

A Malthusian Calculation.—First Cost of a Man or Woman.—An economic journal enters into a curious calculation as to the actual cost, in dollars and cents, which a man or woman would be to the world and society by the time he or she got old enough to begin to "pay expenses," or return back to the country what thus far has been expended in rearing its population.

Every baby, it is fair to assume, when properly brought up, costs its parents at least fifty dollars a year, an expense which increases largely as food, clothing, the shelter of a warm home, education and spending money are required for the growing child. The actual cost up to the fifteenth year, of each child in this republic, is certainly not less than a thousand dollars. At that age its labor would be worth its subsistence. Not till it reaches the age of eighteen (and a great many not even then) does it really begin to be productive. For every 100,000 children the nation has to produce six or eight millions of dollars consumed without adding at all to production. To rear that number of children to a productive age certainly costs a hundred millions of dollars, without any profit whatever in return. Herein is the great value of immigration. This great republic receives into its bosom every day not less than one thousand emigrants from the old world. Of course two-thirds, perhaps seven-eighths, are adults, ready grown for us by Europe at her cost up to the productive point, when they come to our shores to give us the benefit of their toil. Annually does Europe labor industriously to produce and raise for our republic, free of cost, more than 300,000 persons, who we could not have furnished ourselves at an expense of $300,000,000. No wonder that we grow rich and prosperous, for the loss of the world is our gain, and all countries are nursing mothers for us.

Selected.

Anecdote of Mary Wright, formerly Mary Witchel, of England, who lived to be more than 100 years of age.

When Mary Witchel was quite young in the ministry, she felt an impression of duty at one time, in a large meeting, to bow the knee in supplication; this appeared very awful to her, particularly to cause such a large gathering to rise, and she covenanted with her Heavenly Father that if he would cause that the meeting should keep their seats, she would yield—she soon after appeared in this way and no one arose—after resuming her seat, the old enemy came in like a flood, persuading her that it was for want of unity with her service that they had retained their seats, and she became greatly discouraged. The meeting closed, and she went with a Friend to dine. After dinner she saw coming to the house that valuable friend, John Thorp, and supposed he had come to inform her of their disunity with her services. He did wish to see her, but with a very different feeling. He told her that when she first spoke they did not know it was supplication, and that afterward the solemnity was so great they did not wish to break it by rising. This put the enemy to flight and filled her heart with admiration of the condescending mercy of the Lord.

The above was related by an English Friend who was in this country some years since.

How a Lighthouse Was Built.

The mountain system of Brittany has a sort of continuation in a series of reefs and igneous rocks which jut out in a broken line westward of Finisterre. On one of these rocks, called L'Isle de Sein, there stands a lighthouse, but the real danger stands to the westward, and the rocks there have literally bristled with wrecks of vessels making for Brest. In 1869 the committee for lighting the coast of France decided to erect a lighthouse on the extreme end of the danger, and after a careful examination, Ploix the consulting engineer, decided on the Armen Rock as the best site. At the same time he did not attempt to depreciate the prodigious difficulty of the task, and characterized it as "nearly impracticable." The currents are so strong and the sea runs so high that neither Ploix nor the other engineers, nor the director of lighthouses was able to approach nearer than fifty feet. All they were able to ascertain was that the rock was gneiss, about eight yards across and twelve in length, and that it was just visible at low water. After setting their plan of operations, they applied to the fishermen of the neighboring island of Sein, as most familiar with the locality and the danger, to commence the necessary works. These men undertook the task, and, provided with life belts, began to watch regularly for the best opportunity of landing on the rock. As soon as they got their chance they crouched down on the rock, and clinging on with one hand, with the other worked away with a cold chisel so as to sink a sufficient number of sockets for the insertion of the iron clamps. Every now and then a wave would break over the rock, drenching them with foam and spray, and not unfrequently one of the party would be carried right off by the heavy sea, but would soon be picked up by a vessel kept purposely on the watch.

At the end of the first season (1867) seven landings had been effected and eight hours' work done, which sufficed for the sinking of fifteen sockets, while the following year the weather was more favorable, and forty new holes were pierced, some of which were below water. In 1869 the blocks of stone were first placed in iron clamps about a yard long, riveted into the sockets. The blocks were all hewn according to pattern and joined together with Parker-Medina cement. The work of drooping them into position was exceedingly laborious, owing to the violence of the sea; but two of the officials were constantly in attendance, urging on the workmen, and at the end of the season twenty-five blocks, each about a yard cube, had been successfully laid. In 1870 eight landings took place and eleven cubes were laid, and in 1871 as many as twenty-three, the work by this time becoming easier as further progress was made. A steam launch is now used for the conveyance of material, a sort of masonry scaffolding having been built, the builders have succeeded during the first half of this year's season in placing in position no less than eighty-seven blocks. The expense, however, as may be imagined, has hitherto proved considerable. Each of the forty-five holes pierced during the first two years cost upward of 2000 francs, and on December 31st last the charges had amounted to more than 189,000 francs. The light is to be a revolving one of the first order, and ninety-seven feet above high-water mark; there are to be seven stories in the house, and there will also be a steam whistle for use in foggy weather.—Academy.

The Hand that Saves us.—Two painters were employed to fresco the walls of a magnificent cathedral. Both stood on a rude scaffolding, constructed for the purpose, some forty feet from the floor.

One of them was so intent upon his work that he became wholly absorbed, and in admiration stood off from the picture, gazing at it with intense delight.

Forgetting where he was, he moved back slowly, surveying critically the work of his pencil, until he had neared the edge of the plank upon which he stood. At this critical moment his companion turned suddenly, and almost paralyzed with horor, beheld his imminent peril; another instant, and the enthusiast would be precipitated upon the pavement beneath. If he spoke to him, it was certain death; if he held his peace, death was equally sure. Suddenly he regained his presence of mind, and seizing a wet brush, flung it against the wall spattering the picture with unsightly blotches of coloring.

The painter flew forward and turned upon his friend with fierce upbraidings, but, startled at his ghastly face, he listened to his recital of danger, looked shuddering over the dread space below, and with tears of gratitude blessed the hand that saved him.

Just so we sometimes get absorbed upon the pictures of the world, and in contemplating them, step backwards, unconscious of our peril; when the Almighty in mercy dashes out the beautiful images, and draws us, at the time we are complaining of his dealings, into his outstretched arms of compassion and love.

That's How.—After a great snow-storm a little fellow began to shovel a path through a large snow-bank before his grandmother's door. He had nothing but a small shovel to work with.

"How do you expect to get through that drift?" asked a man passing along.

"By keeping at it," said the boy, cheerfully: "that's how!"

That is the secret of mastering almost every difficulty under the sun. If a hard task is before you, stick to it. Do not keep thinking how large or how hard it is, but go at it, and little by little it will grow smaller, until it is done.

If a hard lesson is to be learned, do not spend a moment in fretting; do not lose a breath in saying "I can't," or "I do not see how;" but go at it, and keep at it. Study! That is the only way to conquer it.

If you have entered your Master's service, and are trying to be good and do good, you will sometimes find hills of difficulty in the way. Things will often look discouraging, and you will not seem to make any progress at all; but keep at it. Never forget. "That's how!"

Selected.

LOW FLYING.

Low flies the summer swallow—scenting rain,
And low my heart from prescience of pain;
When the clouds scatter, both will meet again.

The summer swallow skims so low for flies,
And finds in cloudy, not in sunny skies;
So I, by being sad, may grow more wise.

Nor men nor swallows can soar every day,
And men and swallows should not, if they may,
And well for both that skies are sometimes gray.

For though this world is dull without the sun,
More sweetly shines he after showers are done,
And eyes are gladder when the tears have run.

Therefore to-day I would not, if I could,
Forego my grief and be of merry mood;
As well might swallows rise and miss their food.

Frazer's Magazine.

Selected.

GROWING UP.

Oh to keep them still around us, baby darlings, fresh and pure,
"Mother's" smile their pleasures crowning, "mother's" kiss their sorrows' cure;
Oh to keep the waxen touches, sunny curls, and radiant eyes,
Pattering feet, and eager prattle—all young life's lost Paradise!

One bright head above the other, tiny hands that clung and clasped,
Little forms, that close enfolding, all of Love's best gifts were grasped;
Sporting in the summer sunshine, glancing round the winter hearth,
Bidding all the bright world echo with their fearless, careless mirth.

Oh to keep them; how they gladdened all the path from day to day,
What gay dreams we fashioned of them, as in rosy sleep they lay;
How each broken word was welcomed, how each struggling thought was hailed.
As each bark went floating seaward, love-bedecked and fancy-sailed!

Gliding from our jealous watching, gliding from our clinging hold,
Lo! the brave leaves bloom and burgeon; lo! the shy sweet buds unfold;
Fast to lip, and cheek, and tresses steals the maiden's bashful joy;
Fast the frank, bold man's assertion tones the accents of the boy.

Neither love nor longing keeps them; soon in other shape than ours
Those young hands will seize their weapons, build their castles, plant their flowers;
Soon a fresher hope will brighten the dear eyes we trained to see;
Soon a closer love than ours in those wakening hearts will be.

So it is, and well it is so; fast the river nears the main,
Backward yearnings are but idle; dawning never glows again;
Slow and sure the distance deepens, slow and sure the links are rent;
Let us pluck our autumn roses, with their sober bloom content.

All The Year Round.

A Leaf of Penitentiary Life.

A few nights ago a pair of horses were driven up Fairmount avenue at a desperate gait, and from the carriage, which was stopped at the gate of the Eastern Penitentiary, there jumped a gentleman who made all haste to gain an entrance into the gloomy institution. He presently reappeared, bearing in his arms a wasted form, which he deposited with tender care in the carriage, which was driven away.

The occupants of the carriage were a heart-broken father and his dying son. The latter was committed to the Eastern Penitentiary some two years ago for larceny. His intelligence and amiability soon made him a general favorite. He was, at the time of his commitment, about eighteen years old, a tall, well-formed, handsome young man, without a single trace of the usual characteristics of the criminal. The prison authorities took a special interest in his case, but he was exceedingly reticent as to his antecedents, and would tell nothing of his history, excepting that he had fallen into bad company. About a year ago he began to show signs of the insidious complaint, consumption, which numbers many victims in prison.

He slowly wasted away until two or three weeks ago, the physician in charge, as he went through the hospital of the institution, stopped a moment beside the cot of this patient, and said to him gravely, that if he had anything to say to any person on earth he had better do so without delay, as he had but a short time to live. The remark seemed to impress the poor fellow deeply, for he shortly afterwards asked for a paper and pencil, and, obtaining them, wrote—"The son whom you have mourned as dead is in the Eastern Penitentiary, Philadelphia." He signed the brief note and sank back exhausted on his couch.

Being asked relative to the destination of the note he had written, he directed it to be addressed to a lady in a town in Massachusetts, which was complied with. A few days afterward a gentleman applied to one of the authorities for permission to see the youth, and when brought in his presence evinced the strongest emotion. He stated that he was the father of the dying boy, and that the latter's mother being at the White Mountains for her health, which is very delicate, he, the father, had opened the note sent from this city, and was very glad he had done so, as the declaration contained in it would surely have killed her. Their son had been considered dead for more than two years.

Being wealthy, the parents had given him a good education and designed him for a professional life, but, when about sixteen years of age, his mind became affected by the influence of sensational novels, and he formed an insatiable desire to roam through the Western wilds. He ran away with two sons of the Mayor of the town, but was traced to the place they had chosen for a temporary stay, and brought home. The two companions remained at home, but he very soon again ran off, and his parents had since heard nothing of him, except a report that he had been killed, which they believed.

The sight of this boy, stretched upon a bed of death within the foreboding walls of a prison, crushed the father's heart; but this only made his importunities the more effective, and he succeeded in procuring his son's pardon, with which he sped to prison, and doubtless, anxious that, even were it the last hour his son should live, it should be spent in pure, free air, he had him carried from the institution as above related. It was his intention, should the son live until he could be conveyed on board a steamship, to have him taken home in that way, otherwise he would let him die at a hotel, and then have the body taken on by rail to the home of his innocent and happy boyhood.

The weight of sorrow that awaited the mother in either case can easily be conceived. Whether the dying young man revived sufficiently to endure the sea trip or whether he died at the hotel his father brought him to, we did not learn. This narrative is a brief but painful one, and is not without a powerful lesson to youth.—Phila. Inquirer.

For "The Friend."

The following lively original letter from Eli Yarnall to his friend Abraham Pennell, afterward a valuable Elder, was written when about 23 years of age, and is instructive particularly as showing the humility of the former, as manifested by the expressions contained in the postscript. He subsequently became an eminent minister in the Society of Friends.

Edgt. ye 30th of ye 6th mo. 1776.

Highly esteemed friend and brother in the best relation, Abrm Pennell: Thine dated ye 23d, I received ye 28th when my mind as well as body was busily employed in things relating to this life, lawful in their places; which when I opened and beheld thy name, a sweet holy calm became the center of my mind, and before I began to read, being endued in some measure with the spirit thou wast favored with when writing, I had with a thankful heart to ascribe the praise to Him who inspired thy heart with desires for my good, and received it as a fresh blessing from His bountiful hand, through thee as an instrument, (to whom for every mercy may our souls deeply unite and bow in humble reverence, imploring His divine majesty that he may be pleased to abilitate us to make returns that may be acceptable before him;) and by reading it over and over I have witnessed it to increase my faith and answer the end desired. I could speak much in commendation of the particulars of it, but the Truth beareth witness in our spirits, and through mercy we are carried above compliments.

Dear Friend, I was surprised that thou should desire the prayers of such a poor unworthy creature as I am, but I must confess when I have been concerned to ask forgiveness of the Father of Mercies, and to pray with the Spirit of his dear Son, the Lamb who knows what we have need of before we ask him, I have been concerned to intercede for thee with thy dear companion, that you may be preserved in the faith and hold out with alacrity the race that you have begun, pressing daily forward towards the mark, and obtain the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus our Lord.

Dear Friend and fellow pilgrim, let us never forget to approach the throne of Divine Grace and intercede for one another, that we may be built up and established in the faith, that we may answer the great end for which we were created, (for no less a purpose than his own glory) that when the various causes of our allotments here may draw to a period, and it pleaseth the Lord to send his undeniable messenger to command a final separation from these bodies, we may depart in peace with man, and leave an example of holiness to our survivors, and an assurance to the world that we can render up our accounts with joy, and that we may meet and embrace one another in the glorious regions of eternal bliss; where, enjoying the company of saints and angels, we may with one heart and one voice join in singing praises and hallelujahs, and ascribing glory, honor, immortality, eternal dominion and everlasting renown to the Lord God in the highest, with his dear Son our Saviour, who is wholly and alone worthy forevermore, amen.

And finally, Dear friend, let us remember the gracious promise of the Lord spoken by the mouth of the royal psalmist, "Blessed is the man that standeth not in the counsel of the ungodly, nor walketh in the way of sinners, nor sitteth in the seat of the scornful, but his delight is in the Lord, and in his law doth he meditate day and night. Oh the gracious promise,—he shall be like a tree planted by the rivers of water, whose leaf shall not wither, but shall bring forth fruit in due season." Now here is a plain rule to try our hearts, whether we meditate in the Lord and delight in his precepts day and night, more than in things relating to this transitory world. I believe my dear friend it is the case with thee, and I have true faith to believe that thou art bringing forth fruits of humility, reverence and holy self denial, (which hath been made manifest by thy conduct,) and I hope the end will be everlasting life, which is the desire of thy affectionate friend and fellow believer, ELI YARNALL.

P. S. It hath been on my mind for some time past to communicate my thoughts to thee in writing, hoping it might create a correspondence between us that might increase the unity of our spirits, which the world is ignorant of, neither can man in his natural state know the mysteries of these things because they are spiritually discerned, but fearing I should intrude upon thy quiet I have neglected it until now.

I remain as above, E. Y.

Ratan.—Ratan comes from the Moluccas—principally from Singapore, Pedang, Penang, Samarang, and St. Simon's Bay. Of all the ratan collected in the east the United States consumes three-quarters of the total product, the imports amounting now to something more than 6,000,000 pounds. There are no less than ten different grades, which vary in price from two cents up to ten cents a pound. The first quality should be of a bright color, of a straw yellow, but in addition must be supple, and not sticky, a trade word, meaning dull and wanting in elasticity. It requires a great deal of experience to decide what is good ratan, or the kind which will work up best for particular sorts of goods. The very choicest ratan comes from Besjamassing. Both outside and inside have their special uses.

The calamus rotang belongs to that peculiar species of palm which secretes in its cuticle a very considerable amount of silica, while its inside is made up of tough and fibrous filaments. The outside, with the smooth natural varnish, when stripped off by particular machinery, is used for seating chairs. There is a single factory in the United States which turns out daily enough chair cane to cover 20,000 chairs. The inside of the ratan is shaped by machinery either round or flat, and so worked up into innumerable articles. Baskets, brooms, mats, matting, are all made from the inside of the ratan, and an immense quantity of it is worked around demijohns.

Both the inside and outside of the ratan are employed in the manufacture of furniture. This branch of industry we have undoubtedly copied with Chinese accuracy from India. Perhaps even with the addition of our numerous mechanical helps we have but very little improved on the models as to appearance or solidity. There is an exquisite comfort, a luxurious ease about a real ratan chaise longe, such as is made at Singapore, that we can hardly equal. Split ratan is made up into some half dozen different sizes, and is then sold by the 1000 feet. The finest qualities of ratan are also used by whip-makers. The large and constantly-increasing business may be estimated by the fact that one factory in New England alone employs one thousand operatives, and that the total number of people working in ratan is fully eighteen thousand. The capital used in the manufacture is about $2,000,000.—North American.

On "Going into Mourning."

It is cheering to know that in the present day there are Christians of various denominations, who see the uselessness, the hollowness, and the mischief of the general custom of "going into mourning" on the decease of relatives and friends; and who, in accordance with their convictions, do not adopt the practice themselves, and greatly desire to see others released from the thraldom which it imposes.

We cannot doubt there are many sincere-hearted Christians, who have felt, and yet deeply feel, the bondage of this custom, and yet who have been trained so to look upon it as an inseparable attendant of death and bereavement, that it may never occur to them how desirable it is, how consistent for them, as followers of the Lord Jesus, to break their bonds, and to enjoy the liberty wherewith Christ makes all His children free. When our Heavenly Father is pleased to call upon us to part with those near and dear to us, and to summon them to a fixed and eternal state of being, does He not design thereby to teach us deep and important lessons? Do these afflictions come at random? Surely not! They are permitted in mercy and in love, to bring home to our hearts the uncertainty and frailty of our own existence; to show us the emptiness and unsatisfying nature of all earth's joys and possessions, and to quicken us to greater diligence, in seeking after a state of preparation, through the merits and mediation of Him who died for us, for an entrance into the kingdom of purity and bliss. Can we, then, doubt that these gracious designs are often hindered, if not altogether frustrated, by the time and attention of the bereaved being taken up at these solemn seasons with preparing their "mourning;" by having to summon their draper, their dressmaker, their milliner, &c., &c., and in having to hasten the many preparations, that all may be ready by the day of interment? And we believe it is a fact that most dressmakers will allow, that on no occasion is more scrupulous attention required to all being thoroughly fashionable, than in the making of "mourning." Much injury is also often inflicted on the health of the makers of "mourning" dresses, from the long hours they are obliged to work, in order that the preparations may be completed in time; and the trial to the eye-sight is very great, from having to stitch on a black material hour after hour by artificial light.

And to what end is all this toil, this outlay, this bustle, this unseasonable distraction of thought and attention, when the mind should be occupied with serious reflections? when the greatest relief to the troubled and afflicted spirit would be, not in having the thoughts occupied with the trifles of dress and vanity, but in seeking communion with the Lord, and in striving after submission to His holy will. It is often pleaded that such dress is worn out of respect to the deceased; but can it benefit them? Such dress is also often worn merely as a matter of compliment, when the wearer does not profess really to mourn, and therefore acts a lie!

Oh! surely the true mourning of a bereaved and stricken heart for a beloved departed relative or friend, is of more value than all the funeral pageantry and dresses that money can purchase! and such a mourner is regarded with love and compassion by Him who wept at the grave of Lazarus. Such an one need not display any outward symbols of grief, but will be comforted by remembering that while "man looketh on the outward appearance, the Lord looketh on the heart."

To the poor also we believe this custom to be a very serious evil, and they are much to be felt for, in being taught by the example of the well informed, that such a usage, involving such an unprofitable occupation of the thoughts, and so much expense, is necessary on the decease of their friends. On those who have perhaps nursed a relative through a long illness, and have had great difficulty in getting them the comforts their afflicted state required, what an additional tax it must be, to feel compelled after their decease to obtain this useless "mourning!" Many of them, to procure it, are obliged to run into debt; and if they are upright and honest, this is an added burden to their poor minds, already pressed down with sorrow and bereavement.

Is it not time that professing Christians, and those who have had the advantages of education and mental culture, should by their influence and example, teach their poorer neighbors, that mourning consists not in the color of the dress, but in the state of the heart, —that black dress worn for such a purpose is unworthy the Christian, often betokening that which is not felt, and is therefore in addition to the other evils of the custom, a departure from that strict truthfulness, which in deed as well as in word, ought ever to mark the Christian character.

May we then who profess to be followers of the Lord Jesus, to whatever denomination we may belong, or whatever our condition or station in life may be, strive yet more and more to live up to the precepts of our holy religion, and not conform to the foolish fashions and vanities, the senseless customs and usages of the world, in this and other respects; but seek to live increasingly near unto the Spirit of Christ within us, whereby we "shall know the truth, and the truth shall make us free."

Wild Geese in the West.

Much cunning is exhibited by these birds in localities where they are frequently disturbed. We have often seen them in the great swamps of the Bureau valley, along the Illinois, come in about dark, when it was just too late to draw a sight, noiselessly stealing along, so as to evade the random shot of the hunter returning to camp after a hard day's work. So attached are they to their old grounds, and so liable to be pursued at night by reckless adventurers, that after a few warnings they baffle the most intelligent. Should their line of entry be discovered to night as they come across the marsh from the south, to-morrow night, if you watch, you may hear the vibration of their wings as they pass over the timber to the north, in their approach to the old rice pond, or open water of the big slough. Upon all other occasions, and also when disturbed, they exhibit their usual propensity to indulge in gabble and goose talk.

The most prominent among the varieties in the west is the Canada goose. The next, and existing in great numbers, is the white-fronted or laughing goose, called by many "brant." Of the regular brent-goose we have but few. We killed one out of a flock in the Illinois river, in 1860, on a sand bar, and believe it is the only flock we ever saw in that valley. The brent-goose is about half the size of the Canada variety, and is about two-thirds as large as the white-fronted, mottled, or laughing goose. But in the absence of the regular brent-goose, the mottled bird, known as the laughing goose, carries the name of brant. And brant it is, so far as the average shooter is informed; for few of them have ever seen a brent-goose, and this is the only bird, which, to their knowledge, ever bore the name. These same fellows call a partridge a pheasant, and an English snipe a woodcock.

It is amusing to watch a flock of laughing geese as they approach a favorite feeding ground or a resting place. They come first in the regular acute angle line of flight. Suddenly they break ranks, and with one accord the whole flock begins a series of evolutions, tumbling and turning high in air, and then descending in a most comical and irregular manner, to the amusement of the observer, all the while indulging in a jabber more resembling the merry laughter of a bevy of school girls than anything else, from which peculiarity they receive their name. As a table bird it is highly esteemed, and is generally preferred to the Canada goose. In point of numbers it exceeds the latter in this locality, while in other parts the ratio is reversed.

They visit the west in March and April, on their migration to the lakes and bays of northern Minnesota, the British possessions and Labrador, remaining with us sometimes as late as May in small detachments. Many are killed before they reach their northern breeding grounds. After raising the usual brood, and replenishing their thinned ranks, they gather for the autumnal return flight, and in October we see them wending their way to their old and favorite haunts, until the cold weather drives them southward to the great marshes of Arkansas and the lower Mississippi. As they pass north in March, generally before a southerly gale, which carries them along with little apparent effort, their coming is welcomed as a harbinger of returning spring. They come, too, in large numbers, accompanied by all the usual varieties of water-fowl in even greater profusion.—Harper's Magazine.

The Sanitary Condition of Water.—There is no more prolific source of disease than bad water; but to distinguish whether the fluid is unfit for consumption or not is somewhat difficult. Water from a certain river, spring or well, may be repulsive to the senses, and yet harmless to the stomach, in comparison with other water which has a much more attractive appearance. Perhaps the best mode of determining the question is to examine the condition of the organisms dwelling in the proposed source to be utilized. If, for example, an industrial establishment or a collection of dwellings empties refuse into the stream, and as a result fish disappear or are found dead upon the surface, it is certain that the water is strongly and injuriously affected. The gradual infection may be noted by the fish first rising to the top, apparently ill at ease, and subsequently dying. In vitiated water also mollusks perish, and their bodies decompose rapidly. In the air they merely seem to dry up and retain life, though torpid for some time, becoming revivified by return to water. Cresses cannot live in corrupt water, and their existence is a sign of purity in the fluid, while algæ, deprived of their green color, indicate absolute corruption. M. Geradin, in reference to this subject, in a recent note to the French Academy, states that the best method of measuring the degree of purity or of infection in the water is by determining the amount of oxygen in a given quantity. Water containing a large percentage of the gas is pure and good; but when little of the latter is present the water is decidedly deleterious to health.—Scientific American.

Remarkable Preservation.

The following interesting narrative is published in a late Norwegian newspaper: "The captain of the schooner Amazon, of Stavanger, recently arrived at Bergen with a cargo of salt, reports that in passing the British Channel he had the opportunity of saving a British lad of fifteen under very peculiar circumstances. The Amazon was about twelve geographical miles from the British shore, when the captain thought he observed through his telescope something floating on the water. He altered his course so as to get nearer, and soon discovered that it was a small boat, in which a lad was lying fast asleep. The shouting from the schooner did not awaken him, but when a small log was thrown over into the boat he awoke with a sudden start; an end of a line was thrown to him, and he was just able to fasten it when he swooned, and had to be carried on board the vessel. In the boat nothing was found but a pair of oars and a Bible. The lad, when brought back to life and strength by the tender care shown to him, gave the following account. He was sitting on the shore, reading his Bible, when some of his companions came down to him and teazed him with the manner in which he spent his leisure time. To escape from their banter he got into a boat, and kept on reading, when suddenly he discovered, to his great dismay, that his persecutors had cut the line and left his boat to the power of the quick-running ebb. He tried to use the oars, but struggled in vain against wind and water, and, as a dense fog set in, he soon lost sight of land. After several hours of alternate struggle and powerless despair he fell asleep, and sleep remained, in fact, his only comfort against hunger, cold, and the deep pangs of his isolation during the three days and two nights which he had spent in his frail boat when he was at last seen and saved. The name of the captain of the Amazon is Thomson."

The Colors of Bird's Wings.—It would be an error to suppose that all the exquisite metallic shades which diaper the feathers of birds and the wings of butterflies arise from pigments; it was a dream of the alchemists to try to extract them. The sole cause is the play of light, fugitive as the sparkles of the diamond. When the beautiful feathers on the breast of a humming bird are examined under the microscope it is astonishing to see none of the shades the mystery of which you would penetrate. They are simply made of a dark brown opaque substance, not unlike those of a black duck. There is, however, a remarkable arrangement; the barb of the feather, instead of being a fringed stem, offers a series of small squares of horny substance placed point to point. These plates, of infinitesimal size, are extremely thin, brown, and to all appearance, exactly alike, whatever may be the reflection they give. The brilliant large feathers of the peacock are the same; the plates are only at a greater distance, and of less brightness. They have been described as so many little mirrors, but that comparison is not correct, for then they would only give back light without coloring it. Neither do they act by decomposing the rays which pass through them, for then they would not lose their iris tints under the microscope. It is to metals alone that the metallic plumage of the humming birds can be compared; the effects of the plates in a feather are like tempered steel or crystalized bismuth. Certain specimens emit colors very variable under different angles, the same scarlet feather becoming, when turned to ninety degrees, a beautiful emerald green.—Popular Science Monthly.

THE FRIEND.

ELEVENTH MONTH 14, 1874.

SUMMARY OF EVENTS.

FOREIGN.—The British government has contracted for the building of two iron clads on the Clyde, each 5,000 tons, and of 6,000 horse power.

The London press comments on the defeat of the Republican party in the United States, at the election on the 3d inst. The Pall Mall Gazette says: The verdict is a protest against a third term for Grant; against the policy of the administration toward the South; against the salary bill, and the failure of fraud investigations. Similar views are expressed by other journals.

Another extensive strike of agricultural laborers in Lincolnshire is threatened. The farmers insist on a reduction of three shillings per week in the wages of farm hands. The union is arranging for the emigration of laborers on a large scale in the event of a prolonged cessation of labor.

Twelve thousand colliers who struck in Yorkshire, have resumed work, pending the settlement of their demands by arbitration.

The consumption of cotton in Europe has been nearly stationary for the past few years. During the past year American cotton constituted more than half the whole amount consumed in England, while on the Continent Indian cotton was used slightly in excess of the American. Of the total amount consumed in Europe the past year, 5,189,000 bales, America contributed 2,508,000, and India 1,532,000.

The discovery of beds of sulphur in Iceland bids fair to make a material change in the trade in that substance, the Italian mines, according to recent accounts, having become to a considerable degree exhausted. An Englishman has purchased six square miles in the region adjoining Lake Myvatn, in which are mountains of almost solid sulphur, the yellow color of which is visible at a great distance.

The twin steamer Castalia, after several unsatisfactory trial trips, has returned to the Thames. Important alterations are to be made in her engines, which it will take six weeks to complete.

It has been decided to hold a great international Catholic Congress in London, with the object of maintaining the doctrine of papal infallibility, reasserting the Pope's right to temporal as well as spiritual power, and proclaiming it the bounden duty of all Christians to return to allegiance to Rome. It is stated this determination is the result of direct instructions from the Vatican, and some of the highest dignitaries of the Church will attend the Congress. Archbishop Manning recently declared in a speech at Westminster that there was undoubtedly approaching one of the mightiest contests the religious world had ever seen. Therefore it was necessary to fearlessly assert through the free press of England the Pope's rights and his pretensions to world-wide allegiance.

Advices from Cape Town state that the gold fields were attracting more attention, larger nuggets being found daily. The crops throughout the country were in good condition. The rivers were swollen, causing delay in the transmission of the mails.

A dispatch has been received from the steamer Faraday, dated the 8th inst. at 6 P. M., which says a fault has been discovered in the cable, but too late to prevent its being passed overboard. We shall buoy the cable. When this interruption occurred 1461 miles of cable had been laid.

Liverpool, 11th mo. 9th.—Uplands cotton, 7⅝ a 7¾*d.* Breadstuffs quiet.

A Madrid dispatch of the 5th says: The government refuses to permit the publication of any intelligence touching military operations in the north. Bayonne dispatches state that the town and fortress of Irun, near the French frontier, are beseiged by the Carlists, who are subjecting the place to a severe bombardment. The garrison has been reinforced, and it was believed in Madrid that the Carlists would be obliged to retreat. Don Carlos was with the besieging force, which numbers about 15,000 men.

A Paris dispatch says: A number of Deputies have presented an address to the Minister of Foreign Affairs protesting against the arrest of Orlie Tounes by the Argentine man-of-war while en route for Patagonia. Tounes is a French lawyer, who had procured his election by the Patagonians as their king. When arrested he was returning to Patagonia from France, where he had been to negotiate a loan. The Argentine Republic, claiming jurisdiction over Patagonia, arrested Tounes as an usurper.

L'Univers says it is reported that Italy is about to issue a memorandum to the European Powers, calling attention to the dangers to Italy from the intrigues of the Vatican, declaring that the government can no longer tolerate a permanent conspiracy in its own capital, and urging the Powers to discontinue the custom of maintaining ambassadors at the Holy See.

An Imperial decree has been issued at Berlin, which establishes a representative Assembly of Alsace and Lorraine, and fixes its duties and powers. It will express its views upon the budget and upon bills not reserved for imperial legislation, and also upon bills which are not subject to discussion by district diets. The Assembly will be composed of ten delegates from each district. The diet to be elected for three years. The Emperor reserves the right to fix the time and place of sitting of the Assembly, which will be private.

The Berlin African Society are about to send another expedition to Central Africa. The expedition, which will be directed by Captain von Homeyer, leaves Berlin in six weeks.

A disastrous hurricane in Uruguay, South America, has caused great destruction to shipping in the harbor of Montevideo, and also to property in the interior of the country.

Mexican advices state that numerous deposits of silver, quicksilver and cinnabar, have been discovered in the State of Guerero. A rich gold placer has also been found near Mazatlan.

A Paris dispatch of the 9th says, that the Duke Demonchy (Bonapartist) has been elected to the Assembly from the Department of Oise, and Montgan (Republican) from the Department of Drome.

A special dispatch to the London Standard reports that 10,000 Republican troops have collected in the approaches to Irun for the relief of the town, but the Carlists occupy the intervening passes in great force.

A Constantinople dispatch states that famine continues in Asia Miner, notwithstanding the relief afforded by the government. The Khedive of Egypt has sent corn to the distressed districts.

UNITED STATES.—There were 535 interments in New York last week, and 266 in Philadelphia. The funded debt of the city of Philadelphia, 9th mo. 30th last, amounted to $59,692,782. The total number of votes polled in this city for the office of Lieutenant Governor at the late election was 105,578. The Republican candidate had a majority of 12,716.

The general election which was held in many States on the 3d inst., exhibited a surprising change in the political sentiments of the voters. In the present House of Representatives at Washington, the Republicans have a majority of one hundred and nine. So great has been the revolution that the Democrats will probably have a majority of 56 in the next House. The present Republican Governor of New York had a majority of 55,000 when he was elected; his Democratic competitor has now been chosen by about 40,000 majority. The Republicans will still have a small majority in the U. S. Senate.

A scientific report received by the War Department shows that the Black Hills country is well adapted for settlement. It abounds in grass and water, and is wonderfully fertile. Iron, gypsum and plumbago, with some indications of gold have been discovered.

During the first nine months of this year, the number of immigrants arrived at New York fell off 103,283, or nearly one-half, compared with the corresponding months in 1873.

The Markets, &c.—The following were the quotations on the 9th inst. New York.—American gold 110¼. U. S. sixes, 1881, registered, 118⅛; do. coupons, 118¾; do. 1868, registered, 117½; coupons, 118; do. 5 per cents, 111⅜. Superfine flour, $4 a $4.20; State extra, $4.75 a $5.05; Ohio extra trade brands, $5.20 a $5.50; finer brands, $6 a $10.40. No. 1 Chicago spring wheat, $1.14½; No. 2 do., $1.08; No. 3 do., $1.04 a $1.05; red western, $1.19 a $1.23; amber, do. $1.24 a $1.25; white Michigan, $1.28 a $1.37. State barley, $1.35; Canada do., $1.45 a $1.50. Oats, 62 a 66 cts. Western mixed corn, 92 cts.; new mixed, 84 a 87 cts. Philadelphia.—Middling uplands cotton, 14¾ cts.; New Orleans, 15½ cts. Superfine flour, $4 a $4.25; western extra, $5.50 a $5.75; finer brands, $6 a $7.50. Red wheat, $1.19 a $1.22; amber, $1.23 a $1.25; white, $1.27 a $1.32. Rye, $1.05 a $1.07. Yellow and mixed corn, 92 a 93 cts.; new, 75 a 80 cts. Oats, 60 a 64 cts. Rice, 7½ a 7¾ cts. Lard, 13¼ a 14¼ cts. The arrivals and sales of beef cattle reached 3300 head. Sales ranged from 3½ to 8½ cts. per lb. gross, generally between 5½ a 7 cts. Sheep sold at 4 a 5½ cts. per lb. gross, and hogs at $9 a $9.75 per 100 lb. net for corn fed. Chicago.—No. 1 Spring wheat, 91 cts.; No. 2 do., 86½ cts.; No. 3 do. 83 cts. New corn, 64 a 64½ cts.; old, 73½ a 75 cts. No. 2 oats, 48 cts. Lard, 12¾ cts. Baltimore.—No. 2 red wheat, $1.16. Western mixed corn, 85 cts.; white, 85 a 90 cts. Oats, 60 a 65 cts. Rye, 90 a 93 cts. Cincinnati.—Red wheat, $1.05 a $1.08. Corn, 64 cts. Oats, 53 a 56 cts.

"The Germantown Employment Society for Women" has for sale, at a low price, a large supply of substantial clothing for men, women and children, suitable to send to the Freedmen and Indians, &c. To those purchasing to the amount of $20.00 or over, we will make a deduction of 10 per cent.

Application may be made to SARAH ANN MATLACK, corner Shoemaker's Lane and Wakefield St., or META C. COLLINS, 147 School St.

DIED, at his residence in Philadelphia, on the 12th of 9th mo. 1874, SAMUEL CAREY, in the 84th year of his age. He was the son of James and Martha Carey, late of Baltimore, Maryland. When young he gave his heart to his Saviour, and during his long life was a decided Christian and Friend. After his marriage to Martha Evans, of Buffalo, New York, he removed to that city, and for many years an indulged meeting was held in their house; many Friends travelling in the ministry found a home there, and he often accompanied them, in his station as an elder, to the meetings in that section of the State. After the decease of his wife, his home was in the city of Philadelphia. Always self-denying in his habits, he was often ministering to the necessities of others. His solitary hours were many times seasons of rejoicing on the remembrance of the love of the Lord Jesus, and when the time of his departure drew near he was found ready. The following memorandum was made shortly before his death: "84 years of age 3rd mo. 2d next. I am waiting for my dismissal from infirmities, I long for a righteousness raised within me by surrendering myself to the government of Christ, and yielding submission to his heart-cleansing power, to fit me for an inheritance with the redeemed."

——, 10th mo. 19th, 1874, at her residence in this city, MARY HOLLINSHEAD, in the 79th year of her age, an exemplary member of the Monthly Meeting of Friends of Philadelphia for the Northern District.

WILLIAM H. PILE, PRINTER,
No. 422 Walnut Street.

THE FRIEND.

A RELIGIOUS AND LITERARY JOURNAL.

VOL. XLVIII. SEVENTH-DAY, ELEVENTH MONTH 21, 1874. NO. 14.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY.

Price Two Dollars per annum, if paid in advance. Two dollars and fifty cents, if not paid in advance.

Subscriptions and Payments received by

JOHN S. STOKES,

AT NO. 116 NORTH FOURTH STREET, UP STAIRS.

PHILADELPHIA.

Postage, when paid quarterly in advance, five cents.

For "The Friend."

A few Questions and Answers relative to some of the Doctrines and Testimonies of the Society of Friends.

(Continued from page 100.)

Question.—What is the first step in Christian worship?

Answer.—The first thing in this solemn duty is, to turn inward to the measure of grace and life which Christ hath purchased for, and promised to us; to cease, by and through this all-sufficient help, from our own thoughts and imaginations; and, feeling after the Lord, from whom are all our blessings, with deep, inward prostration of soul, suffer His Spirit to work in and through us after His own good pleasure.

Q.—Would it be consistent with the principles of the Society to read, in a formal manner, the Holy Scriptures in their meetings for worship?

A.—It would not. Such a formal and ceremonial step in, or as a part of worship, would seem to be a lapse toward the relinquishment of a very important vital testimony of the Society to the immediate teaching of the Holy Spirit as the foundation of all true worship; and ultimately, it may well be feared, to introduce a ministry less dependent upon the fresh openings of the Spirit of Christ in the heart, than upon priestly domination and prearranged forms: than which there is perhaps nothing more calculated to undermine the foundation of our Christian compact, and to render us a degenerate vine. A failure to recognize Christ Jesus as Head over all things in His church, and the absence of that patient waiting on Him for ability to perform true spiritual worship—consisting in retiring inward to the gift of God in ourselves—would have a powerful tendency to carry the Society back to the rudiments of the world, to lukewarmness and cold formality; out of which our forefathers were, by a powerful hand, so mercifully redeemed.

Q.—What was the language of a worthy minister of this Society on this subject?

A.—In a testimony concerning Samuel Spavold of Hitchin, England, it is stated that, notwithstanding he was at times large in testimony, he was a lover of silence; and had often to recommend a reverent, humble waiting on God, saying, "Oh, how I love this silent waiting, to feel my mind humbled before that Great Power. We want to be more inward; the 'Lord's people are an inward people.' And his life and conversation spake the same language."

Q.—Was not silent waiting upon the Lord for the renewal of spiritual strength, agreeably to the precept of the Prophet, one of the great testimonies which this Society was raised up to bear?

A.—Yes. "What is it," says Isaac Penington, "what is it to have a distinct name, or distinct meetings from the world, unless the power of the Lord be felt in our hearts, and his presence in our assemblies?" This Society was, in a remarkable manner, raised up and made use of in the Lord's hand to call the professors of the religion of Jesus from all undue reliance on the outward truths of the gospel, upon too exclusive dependence upon the letter which describes Truth, and to invite them to a christianity of life and saving virtue,—to the powerful inward guidance of the thing itself.

Q.—Will reading the scriptures, ministerial sacrifices, or any thing outward answer, instead of this solemn, inward waiting upon the Minister of ministers for the bread and water of life?

A.—No: nothing short of this will ease the seeking mind, or satisfy the cravings of an immortal spirit truly athirst for the living spring, which the Saviour told the woman of Samaria should "be in her a well of water springing up unto eternal life." The want of keeping to this well-spring, the teaching of the grace of God, or the testimony of Jesus in their own consciences—the one unerring, all-sufficient teacher and guide into all truth—has, it is believed, ever been the fruitful cause of the falling away from the doctrines and testimonies given to this Society to uphold before the world. May none, then, be either weary or ashamed of our ancient, noble testimony to the spirituality, the preciousness of silent, prayerful, diligent waiting upon God, which worship He has and yet will eminently own and bless.

Q.—In the all-important work of salvation, upon whom and what alone are we wholly dependent?

A.—Upon Christ Jesus; in whom are hid all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge; and upon the grace and Truth which come from Him. His own declaration is, "This is life eternal to know thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom thou hast sent." Moreover this knowledge can be no otherwise derived than by His own immediate communication of it, or by Divine revelation. Because again the Saviour declares, "No man knoweth the Son but the Father; neither knoweth any man the Father save the Son, and he to whomsoever the Son will reveal him." The apostle Peter enjoins: "Gird up the loins of your mind, be sober and hope to the end for the grace that is to be brought unto you at the revelation of Jesus Christ," &c. Applicable also are the precious scriptures: "That which is to be known of God is manifest in man," &c. And, the anointing which ye have received of Him abideth in you, and ye need not that any man teach you: but as the same anointing teacheth you of all things," &c. And again, "The kingdom of God cometh not with observation: * * for behold, the kingdom of God is within you."

Q.—What is Prayer?

A.—Prayer is the outpouring of the contrited soul under an immediate, humbling sense of its sorrows and spiritual wants, unto Him who seeth in secret, and who only can heal all our maladies produced by sin.

Q.—Must this necessarily be outward or spoken?

A.—It may be inward or outward. Inward, when through the awakening light of Christ in the heart, it is turned unto the God of knowledge, with breathing desires and aspirations toward Him. Outward, when in holy retirement these feelings arise powerfully in the soul, and strength and life, and also the command is given to offer them intercedingly for the consolation and edification of others.

Q.—Are many words either necessary or mostly helpful in this solemn duty?

A.—They are not. Our Heavenly Father looketh on the heart; to whom sighs are incense when it is sincere. The Saviour accepted the unpretending prayer of the Publican rather than the high sounding words of the Pharisee. It is not the words which man's wisdom teacheth that He will regard, but which the Holy Ghost teacheth; for "the kingdom of heaven standeth not in word but in power."

Q.—Are not these addresses sometimes shortcoming and unavailing from the want of a broken and contrite spirit, and that heart-humbled yet heart-speaking unction and life which can alone give power and efficacy to them in the ears of the Omniscient?

A.—It is declared that "the sacrifices of God are a broken and a contrite spirit." And it is these that induces the penitential prayer which, like incense, ascends with acceptance to the Lord of Sabaoth. Thus the Psalmist prayed when he uttered the appeal—written for all time—"Search me, O God, and know my heart: try me, and know my thoughts; and see if there be any wicked way in me, and lead me in the way everlasting." And, "Have mercy upon me, O God; * * wash me thoroughly from mine iniquity, and cleanse me from my sin." But there are, no doubt, offerings that go under the name of prayer, that are but the mere service of the lips; which influence not the heart nor the affections; and which, not being aided by the Holy Spirit of God, without whom we can do nothing to His praise, do not reach the Fountain opened for sin, nor obtain nourishment by the soul-sustaining balm of the sanctuary.

Q.—What saith the Apostle on the performance of this great duty?

A.—"Likewise the Spirit also helpeth our infirmities: for we know not what to pray for as we ought: but the Spirit itself maketh intercession for us with groanings that cannot be uttered."

Q.—Can we not then pray acceptably without the immediate, quickening power of the Holy Ghost?

A.—No. The Scriptures declare, "No man can say that Jesus is the Lord, but by the Holy Ghost." Again, "Praying always, with all prayer and supplication in the Spirit, and watching thereunto with all perseverance," &c. Moreover of the wicked it is written, "Though they say, the Lord liveth, surely they swear falsely."

Q.—What in reference to prayer is the testimony of William Penn concerning George Fox?

A.—"But above all he excelled in prayer. The inwardness and weight of his spirit, the reverence and solemnity of his address and behaviour, and the fewness and fulness of his words, have often struck even strangers with admiration, as they used to reach others with consolation. The most awful, living, reverend frame I ever felt or beheld, I must say was his in prayer. And truly it was a testimony he knew, and lived nearer to the Lord than other men; for they that know Him most will see most reason to approach Him with reverence and fear."

(To be continued.)

Touching Incident.—A late number of the New York Evening Post says: "One Sunday evening an incident occurred at the Rivington street lodging-house which shows that some of these homeless wanderers are keenly alive with religious feeling. When the boys had assembled in the reception room after supper, the superintendent proposed that they should join him in reading a chapter of the Bible, and asked if any one had a passage to suggest. A lad fourteen years old called out 'the eleventh chapter of the Gospel of St. John,' which was read by the boys in unison and with much apparent interest. At the close of the meeting the superintendent asked the lad why he preferred that particular chapter. The poor fellow unbuttoned his vest and drew forth a Testament, worn almost to shreds, and with tears in his eyes said: 'Three years ago my mother gave me this Testament on her dying bed, and made me promise to carry it always, and read it as often as I could. I have done so, and somehow I get most comfort out of this eleventh chapter of St. John, because I think that if Jesus wept from sympathy with the sisters of Lazarus, he can feel for a poor bootblack like me, and enable me to love him and keep his commandments.'"

The Post observes of these poor neglected street boys, who are found in New York in great numbers, that many of them are enterprising, affectionate and susceptible to the noblest influences. Hundreds of them toil early and late in order to support a mother or younger brothers and sisters, and instead of being jostled, frowned upon and even kicked, as they sometimes are—especially, within our observation, by street-car conductors—they ought always to receive from us a kindly word and a helping hand.

"I waited patiently for the Lord; and He inclined unto me and heard my cry." Psalm xl. 1.

Selected.

A Letter of William Penn's to the persecuted Countess of Falkenstein and Bruck, at Mulheim, Germany.

My Dear Friend,—Jesus, the immaculate Lamb of God, grieved and crucified by all the workers of iniquity, illuminate thy understanding, bless and be with thy spirit forever.

Though unknown, yet art thou much beloved, for the sake of thy desires and breathings of soul after the living God; the report whereof, from some in the same state, hath made deep impression of true kindness upon my spirit, and raised in me a very singular and fervent inclination to visit thee; and the rather, because of that suffering and tribulation thou hast begun to endure for the sake of thy zeal towards God, myself having from my childhood been both a seeker after the Lord, and a great sufferer for that cause from parents, relations, companions, and the magistrates of this world. The remembrance whereof hath so much the more endeared thy condition unto me; and my soul hath often, in the sweet sense and feeling of the holy presence of God, and the precious life of his dear Son in my heart, with great tenderness implored his Divine assistance unto thee, that thou mayst both be illuminated to do, and made willing to suffer for His name's sake; that the Spirit of God and of glory may rest upon thy soul.

And truly I can say, I felt the goodwill of God, his holy care and heavenly visitation of love to extend unto thee. But one thing more especially lay upon my spirit to have communicated to thee, which made me the more pressing for an opportunity to speak with thee, and that was this: that thou shouldst have a true, right, and distinct knowledge of thy own state, and what that is which hath visited thee; in what thy faith, patience, hope, and salvation stand; where to wait, and how to find the Lord; and to distinguish between that which is born of God and that which is not, both with respect to thyself in all the motions and conceptions of thy heart, and with respect to others in their religious worship and performances; to the end, that thou mayst not be deceived about things relating to God's kingdom, and thy eternal peace: this is of the greatest weight.

Now, know certainly, that which hath discovered unto thee the vanities of this world, the emptiness and the fading of all earthly glory, the blessedness of the righteous, and the joy of the world that is to come, is the light of Christ Jesus, wherewith He hath enlightened thy soul: for in Him was life, and that life is the light of mankind.' Thus God promised by the prophet Isaiah, to give Him "for a light, to lighten the Gentiles, and for his salvation to the ends of the earth." So that Christ, the Light, is God's gift, and eternal life is hid in Him, yea, all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge; who is the light of the Gospel temple, even true believers. And all who receive this light into their hearts, and bring their deeds to it, to see in what ground they are wrought, whether in God, or in the evil one, and make this blessed light the guide of their life; fearing, with a holy fear, to do any thing that this light manifests to be evil; waiting and watching with a godly care, to be preserved blameless before the Lord, I say all such become children of light, and witnesses of the life of Jesus. Oh! blessed wilt thou be forever, if in the way of this holy light thy mind walks to the end!

Let this that hath visited thee, lead thee; this seed of light and life, which is the seed of the kingdom. Yea, it is Christ, the true and only seed of God, that visited my soul, even in my young years; that spread my sins in order before me, reproved me, and brought godly sorrow upon me; making me often to weep in solitary places, and say within my soul, "Oh that I knew the Lord as I ought to know him! Oh, that I served him as I ought to serve him!" Yea, often was there a great concern upon my spirit about my eternal state, mournfully desiring that the Lord would give my soul rest in the great day of trouble. Now was all the glory of the world as a bubble; yea, nothing was dear to me that I might win Christ; for the love, friendship, and pleasure of this world were a burden unto my soul. And in this seeking state, I was directed to the testimony of Jesus in my own conscience, as the true shining light, given me to discern the thoughts and intents of my own heart. And no sooner was I turned unto it, but I found it to be that which from my childhood had visited me, though I distinctly knew it not. And when I received it in the love of it, it showed me all that ever I had done, and reproved all the unfruitful works of darkness; judging me as a man in the flesh, and laying judgment to the line, and righteousness to the plummet in me. And as by the brightness of his coming into my soul, He discovered the man of sin there upon his throne, so by the breath of his mouth, which is the two-edged sword of His Spirit, he destroyeth his power and kingdom. And having made me a witness of the death of the cross, He hath also made me a witness of his resurrection. So that in good measure my soul can now say, I am justified in the Spirit; and though the state of condemnation unto death was glorious, yet justification unto life was and is more glorious.

In this state of the new man, all is new; behold, new heavens and a new earth! Old things come to be done away; the old man with his deeds put off. Now, new thoughts, new desires, new affections, new love, new friendship, new society, new kindred, new faith; even that which overcometh this world through many tribulations; and new hope, even that living hope that is founded upon true experience, which holds out all storms, and can see to the glory that is invisible to carnal eyes, in the midst of the greatest tempest.

It is the same blessed seed of light, life and grace, which from God the Father is sown in thy heart, and which hath moved and wrought there the change which thou hast witnessed from the spirit of this world. Turn to it, watch in it, that by it thou mayst be kept from all that it discovers to be contrary to God; especially from thyself, from thy own runnings, willings, and strivings. For whatsoever is not born of the spirit is flesh, and that inherits not the kingdom of God; but all that sow to it shall inherit corruption. By this thou wilt come to feel, not only all sin to be a burden, but all thy own righteousness, yea, all men's righteousness, to be a burden. Thou wilt see the difference between the duties and prayers which thou begettest, and the duties and prayers which, in thy true silence from all self-activity of mind, the Lord begets in thee.

Oh, that thou mightest know the mystery of the new birth, and what that is that can truly eall God, Father; even that which is begotten of him, which liveth, and breatheth, and hath its beginning and being in that life which is hid with Christ in God, and by which it hath been quickened to the knowledge and worship of Christ and God. And this thou shalt not fail to know and enjoy, as thou patiently sufferest the Lord to work his own work in thee by his own blessed Spirit. And that whieh will give thee to savor and discern the right motions and eoneeptions, duties and performances in thyself, from the false, will give thee to savor and discern that whieh is right from that whieh is false in others; that which is of God, from that whieh is of man.

Have a care of gathering sticks, and kindling a fire of thy own, and then compassing thyself about with the sparks of the fire whieh thou hast kindled, for the end of this state is to lie down in sorrow, because the heavenly fire is absent, which maketh the saerifiee acceptable; yea, the Lord may stir in thy heart, but thou mayst bring forth; but He that gives to coneeive, He brings to the birth, and He giveth power to bring forth acceptably; for without Christ we can do nothing; and blessed are they that stir not, before the angel moveth the waters, and go not before Christ, but are led by him; and that awaken not their Beloved till He please; in whose hands the times and seasons are. Oh, blessed are they whose eyes are opened to see Him always present, a God always nigh at hand; whose hearts are stayed upon his holy appearanee in them, and are thereby translated into his likeness; whose faith and hope are in Christ in them, the hope of glory.

My dear friend, weigh these things with a serious, retired, sweet and tender frame of spirit; and God, who hath ealled thee and me, by the light of his dear Son, open thy understanding to perceive the Truth as it is in Jesus, and what is the mystery of the fellowship of the saints in light. To the Lord I reeommend thee, the Watehman and Keeper of Israel. The Lord be thy strength and holy comfort, and speak peace to thee, and never leave thee nor forsake thee till He hath eonducted thee, through all tribulations, to his everlasting kingdom of rest and glory.

O dear heart! be valiant, and stay thyself upon Christ Jesus, the everlasting rock, and feel him a fountain in thy soul; feel his blood to cleanse, and his blood to drink, and his flesh to eat: feed upon him, for God hath given Him for the life of the world.

I had seen thee, had not thy father's strange sort of severity hindered. I eonfess I do not so use to be treated in my own country, where the Lord has raised up many thousands of witnesses, that He hath gathered, out of all sects and professions, to worship Him, not in their spirits or wills, but in his will, Spirit, and Truth. And we are generally, after much affliction and suffering, in good esteem, even with the great ones of this world. And this let me add for thy particular comfort, that though I have been a man of great anguish and sorrow, because of the scorn and reproach that hath attended my separation from the world (having been taught of Jesus to turn my back upon all, for the sake of that glory that shall be revealed;) yet to God's honor I can say it, I have a hundred friends for one; yea, God hath turned the hearts of my enemies towards me; He hath fulfilled his promise, to turn the hearts of the parents unto the children. For my parents, that once disowned me for this blessed testimony's sake, (of the Jew, Christian, eireumcision, and baptism inward, against the fleshly Christian,) have come to love me above all, and have left me all; thinking they could never do and leave enough for me. Oh, how good is the Lord! yea, the ways of his mercy are even past finding out.

Wherefore, my dear friend, trust in the Lord forever; and the God of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, the God of the prophets and of the apostles, the God of all the holy martyrs of Jesus, illuminate, fortify, and preserve thee steadfast; that in the end thou mayst reeeive the reward of life and eternal salvation; to whom be glory, and to the Lamb that sits upon the throne, one God and one Lord, blessed and magnified forever and ever, amen!

Thy great and faithful lover for the blessed and holy Truth's sake,

William Penn.

Duysburg, the 13th of 7th month, 1677.

P. S. The inelosed I reeeived from a religious young woman at Frankfort. We have had a blessed opportunity in this town with some that have a desire after the Lord, in whieh we are abundantly comforted. We have just now reeeived thy message and salutation from H. V., whieh hath exceedingly refreshed and revived us; for our trouble was not for ourselves, but for thee; and we hope our love will not turn to thy disadvantage, for we mentioned nothing of thy name, nor the name of any other person, only that we desired to speak with the minister of Mulheim, and that was only to the soldier. The Lord made us a good bed in the fields, and we were very well satisfied. We are going this afternoon out of the town towards Wesel, from thenee to Cleve, and thenee to Herwerden, (the Lord willing;) so farewell in the Lord.

[Here follows a letter to her father, the Graef of Bruck and Falkenstein.]

An Intelligent Sheep Dog.—An instance of extraordinary intelligence in a dog is given by a eorrespondent of Land and Water. The gentleman who witnessed the event was a short time since on a visit to Scotland, and during one of his walks he came aeross some men who were washing sheep. Close to the water where the operations were being earried on was a small pen, in which a detachment of ten sheep were placed handy to the men for washing. While watching the performance his attention was called to a sheep dog lying down close by. This animal on the pen becoming nearly empty, without a word from any one, started off to the main body of the flock and brought back ten of their number, and drove them into the empty washing pens. The faet of the dog bringing exaetly the same number of sheep as had vaeated it, he looked upon at first as a strange coineidenee, a mere chance. But he continued looking on, and, much to his surprise, as soon as the men had redueed the number to three sheep, the dog started off again and brought back ten more; and so on he continued throughout the afternoon, never bringing one more nor one less, and always going for a fresh lot when only three were left in the pen, evidently being aware that during the time the last three were washing he would be able to bring up a fresh detaehment.

The luxury of luxuries is that of doing good.

Why do "The Friends" Meet in Silence, without any Pre-arranged Service?

Because they believe that, by assembling in silenee, the most favorable opportunity is afforded for that direct personal communion with God whieh is the substanee of all true worship. Public worship can only be performed by an assemblage of individual worshippers; and just in proportion to the spiritual aequaintance of eaeh with our ever-living Redeemer will be the life and vigor of the whole congregation. Outward forms of worship may engage the attention of the intellect without feeding the immortal soul.

If, under a sense of our need, we truly draw near to God in spirit, He will also draw near unto us. By His Holy Spirit He will enlighten us to see our true state, and give us to feel our need of pardoning mercy: or, if we have already found forgiveness through faith in the Saviour's blood, He will, as we keep near unto Him, sanctify our hearts, renew our strength, and enable us more and more to serve and honor Him.

The Society of Friends highly value the preaehing of the Gospel when under Divine anointing:—they regard it as one of the most influential of the appointed means for communicating the knowledge of Gospel Truth; and they rejoiee when any are called by Christ, and anointed by His Spirit to proelaim it, and stir up the people to repentance, faith and good works, or to offer voeal prayer and praise. But believing that ministry ought not to be engaged in without the fresh putting forth of the Holy Spirit, whose power alone ean seal Divine Truth upon the hearts of the hearers, they do not feel at liberty to plan beforehand what they will speak, or who shall speak in the eongregation; but endeavor, in silenee, to wait upon God, seeking for a sense of His presenee, and for that ability which He alone ean give, rightly to minister to the wants of the assembly.

The eall and appointment of ministers are the prerogatives of God,—not of man; and the work of the ministry may therefore be entered into by learned or unlearned, young or old, male or female; if the eall to it be of God. And, seeing that the spiritual eondition and eapacity of the persons constituting a religious assembly, are widely varied, so that the sermon of a single individual may not be applicable to the state of every hearer alike, the Society of Friends object to the praetice of limiting ministerial labor to one person in the congregation; believing that this custom not only involves an unscriptural limitation of Gospel liberty, but materially interferes with the well-being of the flock. The Apostle Paul says "Ye may all prophesy one by one, that all may learn, and all may be eomforted." And if no voiee break the outward silenee, yet is the Great Head of the Church ever near to the true worshipper to own and to bless him.

A Gentleman.—There is a prevalent fallacy that to be a gentleman it is essential to follow a gentlemanly occupation, from which category is, of course, excluded anything so degrading as trade or manual labor. One result of this is that the learned professions are overstoeked, the gentlemanly-labor market is glutted, and there is, as an inevitable result, a great and growing amount of genteel poverty, whieh is often sorely pressed to satisfy the vulgar necessity of living. England daily increases in wealth, and they who mainly contribute to and share in her growing prosperity are in the despised pursuits of commerce and manufactures. On the other hand we have an array of poor curates and lieutenants on half-pay, a host of briefless barristers and gray-haired civil servants starving in their dignity and too proud to own it, "who cannot dig and are ashamed to beg;" while on the other there are our shrewd and energetic sons of toil amassing fortunes, buying estates, getting into Parliament, efficiently performing the duties of members of local boards and municipal councils, and otherwise making their mark on society, and so influencing their generation as to suggest that there may be a more extensive application of the term "gentleman" than many have been willing to admit.

There is among us so much surface gentility and assumption of superiority that self-assertion is at a premium; and we "follow my leader" in paying homage to the tinsel of a showy exterior, and in bowing the knee before "success in life," as the great golden calf of modern days. Only let a man have money and it matters not how he became possessed of it. There are not a few who hold their heads high, and who look with disdain on all in an inferior station, whose fingers all the gold in the mint cannot wash from the slime of the mean and dishonest transactions whereby they have amassed their wealth. "Nothing is missing but conscience—nothing lost but honor." Boldly tell one of this shoddy aristocracy that he is not a gentleman, and he will certainly sue you for libel.—Tinsley's Magazine.

Selected.

Richard Baker.

The following account of this faithful Friend is abridged from the fuller narrative in the 3d vol. of Piety Promoted.

He was born at Sandwich in Kent, in the year 1734, and resided most of his life in the city of Dover. His parents were Presbyterians, and appear to have been anxious for the religious education of their children. About the eighteenth year of his age his mind was closely exercised in regard to his spiritual welfare, and in this state he joined the society called Methodists, among whom he was held in great esteem. During his connection with the Methodists he was preserved in great humility, and was earnest to press forward to the true rest. Thus he became weaned from all dependence on external help, experienced something of the true silence of all flesh, and was gradually drawn into the simplicity of truth.

He joined Friends about the twenty-third year of his age, and was an exemplary member of our Society. He was careful not to exceed the limitations of truth in his trade and outward concerns, and was solicitous that his moderation should appear to others. Living in a town where there were often advantageous contracts to be had from government, and orders for the use of its establishments in that quarter, he believed it best to decline one of which he might have partaken, lest he should seem to weaken his testimony against war, by seeking the profits arising from it. Indeed his mind was filled with hopes superior to those of gain; and the animation of his very countenance, when engaged in religious service, demonstrated his genuine devotion to the Lord's cause. Nevertheless he conducted a considerable business and conducted it with reputation.

About the year 1780, and the forty-sixth year of his age, he came forth in the work of the ministry, in which service he seemed clothed with universal love; and as his deep experience was the means of enabling him to say with the beloved disciple, "That which we have seen and heard declare we unto you," his labors were often consolatory to the spiritual traveller. His service was chiefly confined to the limits of his own Quarterly Meeting, and the neighboring ones, he however made two visits to Friends in Wales, one to the North of England, and another to the West.

He lived in that part of Dover which is built near the foot of the Cliff; which seems almost to overhang the street, and suggests the idea of ruin should any considerable part give way. On this cliff, accessible by numerous steps, his garden was formed; and as he was on the stairs leading to it, on the last day of the year 1803, a part of the chalky cliff fell, with a quantity of earth and some timber, hurrying him along with them and overwhelming him. It seems wonderful that he was not immediately killed; but he received injuries irremediable by human skill, and in the end resulting fatally. Paralysis also ensued from the bruises occasioned by the tremendous fall; but his mind remained unimpaired; and its faculties, calmed by resignation, and brightened by love, were still employed in thanksgiving and praise.

On the evening of the fall, he expressed the quietness of his mind; and desired that the 32d Psalm might be read to him; repeating the 2d verse, "Blessed is the man unto whom the Lord imputeth not iniquity, and in whose spirit there is no guile." The whole of that and the following Psalm being read, he said, "This poor man cried, and the Lord heard him and saved him out of all his troubles." The 34th being also read, he said, with great tenderness, "I have felt much refreshed from some of these passages. I have neither fear nor terror. I feel quite easy respecting my situation. My mind is centred in God. I ask for patience and resignation under this trial. Surely goodness and mercy have followed me all the days of my life."

The next morning, First-day, and the first of the year 1804, being asked if he lay comfortably, "My body," said he, "is as comfortable as you can make it; and my mind is comforted in a well-grounded confidence in the mercy of God in Christ Jesus." After this he said, "I have yesterday and to-day been looking over Friends in several places, and think I never felt greater love than at the present time. I wish they may be preserved in the truth; and I have earnestly desired, whatever I suffer, I may not dishonor the great name. My mind is carried above outward things. I desire not to boast; but at present I feel no cloud in the way. It is a great favor to be so comfortable and feel the Divine presence. When this is withdrawn, then am I troubled." Several times he exclaimed, I rejoice in tribulation.

On Second-day morning, under sensations of great weakness of body, his mind seemed so strengthened, enlarged and centred in divine life, that like the good scribe he brought out of his treasury things new and old. In the latter part of this day he said, "How sweet it is to feel that charity that thinketh no evil, but puts the best construction upon all things. I look over Friends with much sweetness and love: never more so. I feel the greatest confirmation that 'God is love,' and they that dwell in him dwell in love."

His suffering was at times very great during the last few days of his life, yet his mind continued centred in that holy power which enabled him to bear all with composure. He sent a message to an absent Friend to whom his daughter was writing a letter. "Perhaps," said he, "it may be an encouragement to tell him to hold on in well doing. The prize is sure to them that hold out to the end. Tell him I am carried above all trouble, out of the reach of that which is troubled about a future state." He desired one of his daughters to pray for his release; and he said to his children standing by, "I have done what I could for you; and my prayers have been heard. I have watched over you with a fatherly care. My blessing is with you. It is pleasant to see tenderness prevail, I love to see you all about me, my sweet family."

On another occasion he observed, "I have often thought of late on the words of the apostle, 'I beheld, and lo a great multitude, which no man could number, of all nations, and kindreds, and people and tongues, stood before the throne." "You," addressing some present, "are likely to be the support of this little meeting. Be faithful, and your labors of love will be blessed."

Early on Sixth-day morning, the 6th of the First month, 1804, he gently and peacefully passed away, having reached the seventieth year of his age.

Don't.—Don't tell the little one, who may be slightly wilful, that "the black man will come out of the dark cellar and carry it off if it does not mind." Don't create a needless fear to go with the child through all the stages of its existence.

Don't tell the little, five year-old Jimmy "the school ma'am will cut off his ears"—"pull out his teeth"—"tie him up," or any of the horrible stories that are so commonly presented to the childish imagination. Think you the little one will believe anything you tell him after he becomes acquainted with the gentle teacher who has not the least idea of putting any of those terrible threats into execution?

Don't tell the children they must not drink tea because it will make them black, while you continue the use of it daily. Your example is more to them than precept; and while your own face is fair they will scarcely credit the oft-told tale. Either give up drinking the pleasant beverage or give your children a better reason for its non use.

Don't tell the sick one that the medicine is not bad to take, when you can hardly keep your own stomach from turning "inside out" at the smell of it. Better by far tell him the simple truth, that it is disagreeable, but necessary to his health, and you desire him to take it and at once. Ten to one he will swallow it with half the trouble of coaxing and worry of words, and love you better for your firm, decided manner.

Don't teach the children by example to tell white lies to each other and to their neighbors. Guard your lips and bridle your tongue if you desire to have the coming generation truthful. Truthfulness is one of the foundation stones of heaven. Remember the old, old book says "no liar" shall enter within the gates of the beautiful city. There is no distinction made between white lies and those of a darker hue. A falsehood is an untruth whether the matter be great or small.—Rural New Yorker.

For "The Friend."

Wayside Notes.

(Continued from page 98.)

The cruelties sustained by Friends in New England already mentioned in previous numbers, were chiefly gathered from Sewell's history, and embrace a very small part, as he says, of the "manifold whippings and extortion of fines that were inflicted." In pursuing the narrative we had reached the passage of a law, under which Friends were to be expelled, and for non-conformity to its oppressive requirements, they were to be treated as capital offenders.

Wm. Robinson, a merchant of London, Marmaduke Stevenson, Mary Dyer, who had returned to the Colony, and Nicholas Davis, were the first Friends to whom this law was applied. Arriving at Boston in the Ninth month, 1659, they were thrown into prison, and by order of the Court and Council of Assistants, were sentenced to banishment, or suffer death; but W. R. being regarded as a public teacher of the doctrines so bitterly misrepresented and denounced in the preamble to the law, he was condemned to be also severely whipped, "and the constable was commanded to find an able man to do it." It is stated he was brought into the open street, and stripped, and his hands placed through the holes of the carriage of a large gun, where he was held, while the executioner gave him twenty stripes with a three corded whip. It appears Mary Dyer, and N. D. submitted to the decree of the court, but W. R. and M. S. though they left Boston, were not free in their minds to leave the Colony, but feeling a duty devolving upon them to build up others in the same faith, went to Salem, where they were soon arrested, and returned to Boston prison. In the following month Mary returned also, and was taken into custody. There were now three Friends in the hands of the authorities who, by the terms of the law, were worthy of death.

On the 20th of Tenth month they were brought into court, where Governor Endicot and others were assembled. Being called to the bar, Endicot commanded the keeper to pull off their hats; and with very little ceremony he directed them to "Give ear, and hearken to your sentence of death." W. R. then desired to be permitted to read a paper, in which the reasons were given why he had not conformed to the order of the court; but the Governor would not suffer it to be read, and replied, "You shall not read it, nor will the court hear it read." Wm. Sewel writes; he had written this paper the day before, and a part of the contents were, that he being in Rhode Island, the Lord had commanded him to go to Boston, and to lay down his life there. That he also felt an assurance his soul would enter into everlasting peace, and eternal rest: that he durst not but obey; believing it became him as a child, to show obedience to the Lord, without any unwillingness: and that now with sincerity of heart he could say, "Blessed be the Lord, the God of my life, who hath called me hereunto, and counted me worthy to testify against wicked and unjust men." The sentence of death was now pronounced, and W. R. was remanded to his cell. M. Stevenson was then called, and a like sentence read to him. An opportunity being now given M. S. to speak, he made the following solemn declaration in the presence of some of the principal rulers of the Province. "Give ear, ye magistrates, and all who are guilty; for this the Lord hath said concerning you, and will perform his word upon you, that the same day ye put his servants to death, shall the day of your visitation pass over your heads, and you shall be cursed for evermore. The mouth of the Lord of hosts hath spoken it. Therefore in love to you all, I exhort you to take warning before it be too late, that so the curse may be removed. For assuredly, if you put us to death, you will bring innocent blood upon your own heads, and swift destruction will come upon you." He was then returned to prison. Mary was now called. After receiving her sentence of death from Endicot, she meekly responded: "The will of the Lord be done." As the marshal returned her to prison, she was heard often by the way uttering words of praise to the Lord.

After being retained in prison about a week, they were led out to the place of execution on the day appointed, the 27th day of the Tenth month, under an escort of 200 armed men, besides many horsemen. They were attended by several officers, and a notoriously harsh, bitter priest, named Wilson, who had behaved in the court-room, when their cause was under consideration, in the most undignified, cruel manner possible. These Friends as they passed along on their way to the gallows, several times attempted to speak, but the drums were beaten, and their voices seldom heard. It is stated glorious signs of heavenly joy and gladness were beheld in their faces, as they walked hand in hand. Mary was heard to say: "No eye can see, nor ear can hear, no tongue can utter, and no heart can understand, the sweet incomes, and the refreshings of the Spirit of the Lord, which now I feel." Great was their cheerfulness, going as if to a wedding-feast; and rejoicing that they were accounted worthy to suffer for His blessed name. As they came to the place, where their lives were to be offered up, they took leave of each other, with tender embraces. Then W. R. went cheerfully up to the platform, and turning to the people, he thus addressed them, "This is the day of your visitation, wherein the Lord hath visited you; this is the day the Lord is risen in his mighty power, to be avenged on all his adversaries." He also desired the spectators to mind the light that was in them; to wit, the Light of Christ, of which he testified, and was now about to seal it with his blood. This so incensed the envious priest, that he said, "Hold thy tongue." His person, and the rope, being now adjusted, he used these last words: "I suffer for Christ, in whom I live, and for whom I die." He was then launched into eternity. M. S. with a few solemn parting words, immediately followed his companion to the same triumphant end.

Mary seeing her friends dead before her, also stepped up the ladder, without hesitation, and just as the bloody work was about to be enacted in her case, a reprieve was handed the officer. She was ordered to come down, but she whose mind was already as it were in heaven, stood still, saying, "she was there willing to suffer as her brethren had, unless they would annul their wicked law." This favor was obtained at the intercession of her son.

The execution of W. Robinson and M. Stevenson, causing much uneasiness among many of the people, it was deemed best to send Mary out of the Province. She was accordingly carried on horseback into Rhode Island. Not long after we find her in Long Island, where she spent most of the following winter; but having returned to her home, she was moved of the Lord to return to Boston, where she arrived the 21st of Third month, 1660. On the 31st she was apprehended, and brought before Governor Endicot. Being identified as the same person that was sentenced at the last general court, she was ordered to go to prison, and to be taken to the place of execution the following day at 9 o'clock.

On coming to the gallows, she was desired to retract, but her blessed Lord did not forsake her, and her righteous courage did not fail. Her words were, "I came to do the will of my Father, and in obedience to his will, I stand even unto death." She was desired to have the elders present pray for her, by some one or more of the people; to which she answered, "I desire the prayers of all the people of God; the elders I do not know." It was suggested again that one of the elders should pray. Her significant and faithful reply was, "Nay, first a child, then a young man, then a strong man, before an elder in Christ Jesus." Surely a stronger answer, and a wiser reproof, could not have been given in as many words. Thus this valiant woman finished her days, a martyr for her Lord, being twice led to death; accepting the result of her obedience, with Christian fortitude; and with joy and thankfulness upon her lips, yielding her body to the executioner, a most willing sacrifice; pouring out her life, that the "plant of renown" might be watered and fed, even in the midst of an untoward generation. P. B.

Philadelphia, 11th mo. 6th, 1874.

(To be continued.)

Tobacco.

All habits that have a tendency to depress the vital powers must be regarded as destructive to life. That the use of tobacco, in any form, is highly detrimental to health, all who have ever used it must certainly be aware.

The use of tobacco causes dyspepsia, tremulousness, irregularity of the heart's action, derangement of the nervous system, depression of spirits, and a hundred other ills often ascribed to other causes.

The abandonment of the habit of smoking or chewing tobacco is generally quickly followed by an increase of strength of nerve and of muscle, and a general improvement of health.

Of the terrible power of the habit when once established, and of the disgusting phase of the vice, we need not speak. Prof. Draper publishes an article in the Galaxy, containing many interesting facts concerning the properties, preparation, and adulteration of tobacco, in which he remarks that tobacco, according to botanists, belongs to the natural order which includes the egg-plant, tomato, potato, capsicum, and a number of genera that furnish narcotic principles; among which we may mention hyoscyamus, stramonium and belladona. The genus Nicotiana derives its name from Nicot, the author of its introduction into Europe; and the word tobacco from Tobago, an island from whence it was first imported into Europe. There are but three creatures that use tobacco in any form, a worm, the rock-goat of Africa, and man. The manufacture of tobacco for the purposes of chewing and smoking consists chiefly in the removal of the mid ribs or stalks of the leaves, and the subsequent pressing, cutting or rolling of the leaves, according to the demands of the market.

In snuff-making, the process varies with the character of the product.

The adulteration of tobacco varies greatly with the character of the preparation. In that intended for chewing it consist chiefly of molasses, or common salt; rarely of leaves of other plants. In cigars and cut tobacco for smoking it is by no means uncommon, and consists usually of hay, paper, or leaves of the dock, rhubarb, cabbage, elm, and oak, all of which are comparatively harmless.

In snuff adulteration is very common, and the substances used are, in many cases, exceedingly injurious, including such articles as chromate of lead, bichromate of potash, powdered glass, and different kinds of ochres, or oxides of iron. The latter are nearly always found in the Scotch snuffs, and rarely occur in the Welsh and Irish. According to Hassall, out of forty-three specimens, chromate of lead occurred in nine, nearly all of which were Scotch; red lead or oxide of lead in three, and bi-chromate of potash, which is very poisonous, in three, two of which were Scotch. The presence of the lead compounds has frequently produced lead palsy in those who have used them.

The substances that give its active properties to tobacco are nicotine and nicotianine. The first is a colorless liquid alkaloid, soluble in water, ether, alcohol, and many oils, and possessing an offensive odor and an acrid burning taste.

"It is a dangerous poison, being almost as active as prussic acid, and destroying life in equally small doses, a few drops sufficing to cause death in about five minutes. Nicotianine is a concrete, volatile oil, obtained by the distillation of the leaves, six pounds yielding about eleven grains of the oil. It has a bitter taste, and the odor of tobacco, and produces the same effect upon the throat and tongue as does tobacco smoke. It is almost as deadly when applied externally as nicotine is when taken internally. It is said that this oil does not exist in the fresh leaves, but is probably formed by the action of the air in the process of drying, and of course, the plant is always dried before it reaches the consumer."

Tobacco smoke is the most common form under which the system is exposed to the action of this plant. Analysis shows that while the alkaloid disappears almost entirely in the smoke the oil is increased. It therefore follows that in chewing, the effects will be chiefly those produced by nicotine; while in smoking nicotianine will be the more active ingredient. In addition to the oil it has been stated that prussic or hydrocyanic acid exists in tobacco smoke.

The very large amount of mineral matter, and especially of the salts of potassa, in tobacco, causes it to remove these ingredients of the soil so rapidly that even the lands of the Southern and Western States are soon exhausted, and will only support low vegetation thereafter. In the same way the immoderate use of the prepared leaves slowly but surely exhausts the nervous energy in man, until at last it saps the strongest constitution, and often induces palsy, or so dulls the memory and blunts his other faculties as to reduce him to a condition little better than an imbecile.

In its anti-spasmodic and narcotic, or anodyne effects, it resembles lobelia, while its action on the heart is somewhat like digitalis. It sometimes causes a permanent irregularity of the heart's action. In its action on the pupil of the eye, it resembles opium, causing it to contract, being in this respect opposite to the effect of belladonna, stramonium, and hyoscyamus. The effect of its introduction into the digestive apparatus is to cause so complete a relaxation of the muscular system that physicians sometimes employ it to produce this result when it is desired to reduce dislocations.

It is possible that since tobacco reduces the sensibility of the system it renders it less liable to attacks of contagious diseases, but if the disease does attack, the reduction of its tone would render it less liable to resist the attack. Tobacco is an anti-aphrodisiac, and the statistics of European countries show that since its general introduction the annual increase in population has undergone a steady diminution.

Among snuffers the continued irritation of the Schneiderian membrane, which lines the cavity of the nose, causes it to thicken, until finally the sense of smell is destroyed, memory is blunted and seriously impaired. Snuff-taking consumes more time than chewing or smoking. A curious calculation is, that an average snuff-taker occupies over two hours out of every sixteen in this process.

When employed for chewing and smoking, tobacco stimulates the salivary glands and greatly increases the amount of saliva. The copious expectoration which is thus produced diminishes the amount of this fluid available for digestion, and as a consequence indigestion is one of the commonest of the inflictions to which the chewer and smoker are obliged to submit. Another evil is the liability to the development of cancer. The smoke acts as an exciting cause, cancer is developed, and death ensues. The tongue is sometimes eaten down to its very base. Tobacco and drunkenness induce a large proportion of cases of insanity.

The breath, clothing, and perspiration of those who use tobacco soon become redolent of its noxious odors. Many persons smoke in their bed-rooms. The walls, hangings, and bed-clothing soon become impregnated with poisonous oil, and while the smoker is exposed to its action for only a few hours at night, his wife usually spends nearly all the time in the confined air of the room or rooms which have been thus poisoned. This continued exposure and the reduction of the vital powers soon produce their effect. Even where the smoking is done in other apartments and not in the bed room, the smoker's clothing and his breath have become corrupted.

Not only does tobacco cause the evils enumerated, but the continued inhalation of the fumes of tobacco tends, sooner or later, to develop tuberculization in persons of tubercular tendency.

There is only one benefit that I know of in the use of tobacco, and it is but fair that I should state it; cannibals won't eat a tobacco user!—The Wellspring.

For "The Friend."

John Finch Marsh.

(Continued from page 98.)

To his wife, while visiting her mother at Tottenham, for a few days.

142 Whitechapel, 2nd of 9th mo., 1819.

My dear Hannah,—* * * I wish thee to partake as largely of the refreshing breezes, by walking out, as thy strength will allow. How much I should enjoy to share them with thee: even here the air is very reviving, mornings and evenings cool and bracing. Don't be too anxious about me, so as to interrupt any intervals of retirement, or moments of peaceful quiet that may be afforded for instruction, and the renewal of thy spiritual strength.

It will be comforting to thee to know that yesterday was a cheering day in two senses. In the morning, little or nothing to do in the shop, but my mind permitted to enjoy a feeling of sweet quiet, free from anxiety. Such seasons are indeed favored ones, and ought to be rightly valued and improved by us:—seasons wherein the mind may be rightly encouraged, strengthened, and afresh animated to hold on our way in the path of required duty, and lay hold of the consoling language, "Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace, whose mind is stayed on thee; because he trusteth in thee." In the afternoon and evening had a succession of customers, which rendered the afternoon scene very lively.

Croydon, 31st of 7th mo., 1834.

My beloved daughter Hannah,—Thy recent welcome letters have been comforting and interesting to us, and much do we hope thou may continue to derive benefit from the privileged opportunity of being under the very kind care of thy aunt E. Whitehead. It is pleasant to us to believe thou art sensible of thy many advantages, and that the secret desire lives in thy heart to be made thankful and grateful therefor, and that there is at times (and oh! may it be daily, yea hourly) a feeling after strength and ability to be a very good girl; this is what thy beloved parents so much crave for thee and thy sister, and if happily with increasing days or years, this endeavor to be good becomes your favored experience, and we favored to be spared to you, our hearts would from time to time have abundant occasion to feel thankful unto our Heavenly Father, for this His rich blessing, yea, to leap within us for very joy. What a choice gift to be endowed with, is a grateful spirit, a thankful, humble heart and mind; and how needful it is that we watch and cherish the tender buddings thereof, especially in very early life, for none can be too young, or begin too soon to be made sensible of how much we owe, and are indebted unto Him who created us; and to be led very frequently in a similar inquiry with that of the Psalmist, "What shall I render unto the Lord for all his benefits towards me?"

Croydon, 23rd of 3rd mo., 1839.

My beloved Priscilla,—As thy dear mother and sister will now be writing, I seem to have little more to pen than the insertion of my very dear love, which I do in this way, hoping it may meet thee well, and comfortable and happy, and in the continued endeavor to be a good girl [at school]. Remember it is a favorite motto of mine, "To be good is to be happy," and I trust it is also of my dear P.'s, and that she does at times strive her very best to be so, and that good desires are often raised in thy mind; may these be strengthened and encouraged; and in proportion, my dear girl, as thou keeps near to, and makes way for, that which visits in secret, reproving for that which is evil, and inclining to that which is good, wilt thou come to experience preservation on every hand, and strength to overcome and resist temptation, and know thy heart to be made clean, and to be kept clean, by continually living in the divine fear—the fear to offend thy Heavenly Father in thought, word, or deed.

"Grace is a plant where'er it grows,
Of pure and heavenly root;
But fairest in the youngest shows
And yields the sweetest fruit."

To a Friend.

11th mo., 1837.

Thou continuest to have a place in our affectionate remembrance, and we trust the feeling of love and sympathy still flows towards thee as one of the true mourners, and may we not say tribulated followers of the Lamb, and of which blessed company we desire to be counted worthy to be numbered; and to whom the language of the dear Redeemer may be not frequently applicable, for their encouragement and strengthening—"Fear not, little flook, for it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom." Ah! it is indeed a day and time of sadness with many of us who are favored to see and feel the low state of things amongst us as a people; and how can it well be otherwise, if we are rightly led into feeling and suffering for and with the suffering seed:—but some might be ready to say—Why so cast down? Why go so mourning on your way? Hope for better days, for brighter times. And so I hope we do, and are at times enabled to lift up our heads in hope; but we are not prepared, neither have we any desire to exchange our mourning for any false joy, but rather to seek for ability "in patience to possess our souls," and for strength patiently to endure the exercises and tribulations of our day:—not shrinking from suffering, but endeavoring to be found in pure resignation, standing in our right and proper allotment.

If this be the engagement of our minds, may we not believe, and humbly trust, that preservation will be experienced even to a hair's breadth? What encouragement then there is for us to continue to hold on our way, nothing doubting,—endeavoring in childlike simplicity to do in the present strength and ability given, what our hands may find to do; not looking out to others, but simply minding and doing our own business. And now, dear friend, it seems with me to say, (and as time is swiftly passing away,) Use all diligence in endeavoring to complete the work of thy day. My wish is simply to encourage thee to faithfulness in that, which to thy own mind, may be made clear; yet believing the prospect of visiting Friends in Ireland has long been before thee, and having myself recently returned from that land, where I was over ten weeks, I think I may say that there is room for such laborers as thyself, and if the concern continues to rest weightily with thee, do not seek to put it aside: there may be some other few debts of love to be paid off in our own land, as an evening sacrifice. Dear S. F., of Clonmel, united with me as companion in this engagement, a very precious minded young man; we were remarkably drawn towards each other during our last Y. M., which he attended, though we had but little of each other's company, so as to get much personal acquaintance; but a short time before my leaving home, I received a letter from him, expressing his feelings as to accompanying me. We met in Dublin, and parted there, and on board the packet. I believe his dedication of heart to the work was accepted of the Lord, and that it will be blessed to him. We were at all the meetings in that nation, with the exception of one very small one, (Tullamore,) but we called and sat a little time with two young men who reside there. In passing along, many were the seasons of proving, of conflict, and exercise, yet I trust we were, from time to time, made sensible of the renewing and fresh extension of heavenly love, and mercifully favored to experience the good Shepherd to be near to comfort, to strengthen and support in the time of need. We met with great kindness from Friends. I am ready to think that, perhaps few who have visited that nation, have left more with the flowing of love and affectionate desire for their present and future happiness than myself. On my return home, the feeling of a peaceful poverty and quietude of mind has been, and is, my favored portion. Since then, which was on the 5th of last month, I have only appeared once in testimony in our own meeting—my mind too, since my return, seems at times in heaviness under the sense and feeling of the low state of things in our own land. O! the mixture, the mixture we seem to be in!—when will this people be redeemed from and out of all mixture? I trust many more shall be strengthened and enabled to bear a faithful and noble testimony to the preciousness of the truth as it is in Jesus.

(To be continued.)

For "The Friend."

There is no Religion in Dress.

This expression has received a currency and credit that is somewhat remarkable, considering how inconsistent it is with well known facts. It may be contradicted by an expression that very many do (and all may) know to be correct, viz: that there is no one who becomes deeply and decidedly religious, without making some manifest change in dress. Provided that previously his dress was what is called fashionable and worldly.

In reading the biographies of those whose religion was of a character so decided as to make them remarkable among men, we find, if the subject of dress is touched upon at all, that they felt constrained to lay aside, to a greater or less extent, the fashionable attire of the world, and make an approach, greater or less, to the simple garments of our Saviour that had no seam. And this is so invariable, and so well understood, that it scarcely attracts attention, and is not looked upon as a subject of doubt or discussion. And it is strongly doubted by the writer that any contrary sentiment can be found in the autobiography of any truly and markedly religious individual.

There are some who, with more or less deliberation, put aside the religious life, and will have none of it. And others, it may be, whose convictions are not sufficiently decided to affect their dress. But, on the other hand, there are some whose convictions are so decided and pervading, as to affect and govern their whole life; and it may be (among other things) shows itself by even a peculiarity in their dress, that separates them manifestly from the world, openly proclaiming to all beholders whose servants they are, and that they are not ashamed of Him.

And if there are many who profess to be religious (or even very religious), who do not make any change in their dress, it is because many (and very many) are trying to be heirs, or citizens, of two kingdoms. Although the Lip of Truth has declared that "No man can serve two masters," they wish to call the Pearl their own, but wish also to keep back part of the price. But it is to be feared that some of such will not receive the penny at last, for this holding back in dress, often accompanies a holding back in other indulgences of the world.

These views, as to dress, are not merely theoretical, nor a mere contradiction of one assertion by another. But this is an appeal to facts. Neither are the facts obscure or difficult to verify. The reader can readily bring them to the test by reading the autobiographies of remarkably religious men. And if he has the advantage of being acquainted with markedly religious persons, a proper enquiry as to their experience will confirm the correctness of these remarks.

In all ages, in all countries, and in every form of religion, the priesthood appear to have been, as a rule, distinguished or separated from all other men by some peculiarities of dress. Showing that, in the deeper recesses of the human heart, there is instinctively and universally felt to be some connexion between the two things.

If we would know the Divine mind, concerning this subject, we have but to turn to the Levitical law to find that peculiarities of dress are prescribed for the priesthood, with a minuteness which manifests clearly that, according to the Divine mind, there is some connexion between the two.

And as the Temple, and its surroundings, were pronounced holy, so were the dresses of the priests, as in Ezekiel xlii. 13, 14. "The place is holy, there they shall lay their garments wherein they minister; for they are holy; and shall put on other garments," &c.

There is no religion in dress. It is true that coats and pantaloons have no souls to be saved. And in that childish and trivial sense the remark is true, but in no other. C.

THE FRIEND.

ELEVENTH MONTH 21, 1874.

Frequent retirement of mind to seek after the presence of the Lord in our own souls, is a duty which is indispensable to our growth and establishment in the Truth. Were all the members of the professing church more fully and earnestly engaged therein, the day would be hastened when the ancient declaration would be fulfilled, "All thy children shall be taught of the Lord, and great shall be the peace of thy children." Especially does it become the members of our own religious Society thus to seek for that life-giving virtue which comes only from Christ, our adorable Head, to enable them rightly to discharge their various duties, and to walk with acceptance before Him.

As the exercise is maintained frequently to draw near in spirit to the place where prayer is wont to be made, we shall become a more inward and spiritual people, and shall find ourselves drawn to avoid an undue attention even to the lawful things of this life, in accordance with the following excellent admonitions contained in our Book of Discipline:

"Frequent waiting in stillness on the Lord for the renewal of strength, keeps the mind at home in its proper place and duty, and out of all unprofitable association and converse, whether amongst those of our own, or other professions. Much hurt may accrue to the religious mind, by long and frequent conversation on temporal matters, especially by interesting ourselves in them; for there is a leaven in that propensity, which being suffered to prevail, indisposes and benumbs the soul, and prevents its frequent ascendings in loving aspirations towards the Fountain of eternal life."

The Journal of Thomas Scattergood originally appeared in print in the year 1844, forming part of the Eighth volume of the "Friends' Library," then in the course of publication by our late friends William and Thomas Evans A new edition of this valuable journal has recently been issued by the Meeting for Sufferings of Philadelphia Yearly Meeting, containing considerable additional matter of an interesting character. It forms an octavo volume of 496 pages, and is published at $1.25 per copy, bound in muslin, and $1.75 in half morocco binding. For sale at Friends' Bookstore, No. 304 Arch St.

Thomas Scattergood was for many years engaged at intervals in public labor as a minister of the gospel, and he was often brought under unusually deep exercise of mind, as the necessary preliminary baptisms to enable him to perform the important services required of him. He travelled in religious visits at various times in different parts of this country, both in the Northern and Southern States, and was led across the ocean to visit the inhabitants of Great Britain, on a similar account. We trust the perusal of this record of his Christian experiences, will prove refreshing and instructive to many.

SUMMARY OF EVENTS.

Foreign.—The Carlists, under the command of Don Carlos, have been defeated before Irun, and compelled to raise the siege of that town. Don Carlos and his troops retreated into the mountains. The final engagement was sanguinary. The Carlists lost heavily, but succeeded in carrying off their guns. It is believed they will return to Estella. The Republican forces will return to the line of the Ebro after leaving a strong garrison in Irun. During the retreat of the Carlists from Irun fifty or sixty men were frozen to death in the snow. A heavy snow covers the mountains around Irun. There is great distress in that region, the Republican soldiers having burned hundreds of houses and driven the inhabitants from their homes. The country is covered with homeless women and children, exposed to the inclemency of the weather.

Though defeated at Irun, the Carlists persevere in the struggle. Their forces have invaded the province of Barcelona and threaten various places with attack.

A Berlin dispatch says, Count von Arnim was again arrested on the 12th inst., and conveyed to a police station. It is reported that the Count has received a copy of his indictment, and the only charge brought against him is for the suppression of official documents.

The Prussian Court of Ratibar recently fined the Archbishop of Olmutz, Austria, for illegally appointing priests in the Prussian part of his diocese. The Austrian government refused to surrender the archbishop on demand of the Prussian authorities for his extradition. The court has accordingly issued a warrant against him, and confiscated all his revenues and estates in Prussia.

The Municipal Tribunal of Berlin has requested the Provincial Court of Vienna to insist by coercive measures upon the editors of the Presse giving evidence as to the source from which the Von Arnim dispatches published in that paper were obtained. The Vienna Court, however, declined to interfere, observing that although the matter might be important to Prussia, it was not so to Austria.

A St. Petersburg dispatch of the 12th says: The Russian government has sent out orders for the speedy completion of fortresses on Khivan frontiers. The Goloss says: The government has resolved to introduce a system of compulsory elementary education. The trial is to be made at St. Petersburg of the Berlin system. It is thought the new schools will be opened by the 15th inst.

The Khan of Khiva has informed Colonel Ivanoff, commander of the Russian garrison on the Oxus, that he has neither soldiers nor money with which to overcome his rebellious Turcoman subjects, and he asks for the aid of the Russians.

The results of the late International Conference at Brussels form the subject of fresh negotiations between some of the governments represented thereat. Russia asks that the conclusions of the Conference be embodied in a regular treaty between the nations whose representatives signed the agreement.

Thirty-three members of the Council General of the Seine have adopted a resolution recommending the establishment of a system of gratuitous secular schools for primary instruction in the city of Paris, the attendance upon which shall be obligatory. The resolution has been presented to the Permanent Committee of the Assembly for consideration. The Council General of the Seine has rejected the proposition recommending the National Assembly to pass a bill granting amnesty for political offences.

A conference of the Yorkshire, England, Chamber of Commerce has unanimously adopted a memorial to the government condemning the proposed reciprocity treaty between Canada and the United States, and deprecating the imposition of lower duties in Canada than in England.

Upwards of four millions sterling was expended for the construction of railways in India during 1873. There are now open in India 5,872 miles of railway, which have cost £97,000,000, giving an average cost of £16,536 a mile. A further extent of 1850 miles is now in course of execution. The net revenue derived from the railways amounted to £3,185,000.

London, 11th mo. 14th.—Consols, 93⅞. U. S. 5 per cents 104½.

Liverpool.—Uplands cotton, 7⅝*d.* a 7¾*d.*; Orleans, 8⅛ a 8¼*d.* Breadstuffs firm; red western spring wheat, 8*s.* a 8*s.* 6*d.* per 100 lbs.

The Austrian and Russian governments have agreed to appoint a joint commission to define their boundaries.

Advices from Buenos Ayres represent that the insurrection is on the decline. No serious collision had occurred between the contending parties.

The weather has been unusually cold in England. On the 11th inst. snow fell in the southern part of the country. The root crop which at one time seemed hopeless, now gives promise of a better yield.

A Times special from Calcutta announces that the Viceroy of India has ordered the suspension of formal proceedings against the person supposed to be Nana Sahib until more mature consideration can be had of the case. The difficulties of identification are increasing and opinions are divided.

Sir Stafford Northcote, Chancellor of the Exchequer, in replying to a communication from the Chairman of the Board of Directors of the Direct United States Cable Company, says the government has no intention of purchasing the direct cable or any other of the ocean telegraph lines.

It is said that Count Von Beust, Austrian Minister in England, has been recalled to Vienna and is to be reinstated as premier in the government.

United States.—General Sherman's annual report to the Secretary of War, shows the total number of enlisted men in the army on the 15th ult. to have been 26,441. He estimates that this number will soon be reduced through natural causes, to the 25,000 allowed by law. An army of that size is declared to be inadequate for the demands of so large an area of territory as it has to be scattered over.

The annual statement of the U. S. Treasurer for the year ending 6th mo. 30th last, compared with that of the preceding year, shows a falling off of receipts from customs of $24,985,689, and of $11,319,529 on account of internal revenue. The decrease of receipts from the latter source is due to changes in the law, while the falling off in the customs duties seems to have been caused by the commercial panic, the effects of which continued till a recent period.

The following table shows the growth of the Postal service during a period of 83 years:

Year,	Post-offices.	Post roads, miles.
1790, . . .	75	1,875
1800, . . .	903	20,817
1810, . . .	2,300	36,070
1820, . . .	4,500	72,492
1830, . . .	8,450	115,176
1840, . . .	13,486	155,739
1850, . . .	18,417	178,672
1860, . . .	28,498	240,594
1870, . . .	28,492	231,232
1873, . . .	32,244	256,210

The Postal revenues of the year 1790 were $37,935, and those of 1873, $22,996,741.

The Exhibition of domestic manufactures in Philadelphia under the auspices of the Franklin Institute, closed on the 12th inst. It was the most extensive exhibition of the kind ever made in Philadelphia, and contained, it is said, the finest display of machinery ever brought together at one time in this country. It was also financially successful, the total receipts from tickets, &c., having exceeded $90,000. About 3000 tickets were issued to members, exhibitors and others, and 276,000 were sold.

The official returns of the election in Philadelphia show that the Republican vote numbered 59,850, and the Democratic 46,887: total 106,737.

The official returns of the election in the State of Pennsylvania show that 554,339 votes were given, of which Latta, Democratic candidate for Lieutenant Governor, received 277,195, and Olmstead, Republican, 272,516. The Temperance or Prohibition ticket received 4628 votes. There are 66 counties in the State. The smallest of which, Forest, polled only 695 votes; Allegheny, which comes next to Philadelphia, polled 28,793 votes.

There were 543 interments in New York last week.

The Markets, &c.—The following were the quotations on the 14th inst. New York.—American gold 110¾. U. S. sixes, 1881, registered, 118½; do. coupons, 119¼; do. 1868, registered, 118; coupons, 118½; do. 5 per cents, 112. Superfine flour, $4.15 a $4.40; State extra, $4.80 a $5.10; finer brands, $5.50 a $10.50. No. 2 Chicago spring wheat, $1.10 a $1.11; No. 3 do. $1.07 a $1.08; red western, $1.26 a $1.28; amber, $1.29; white Michigan, $1.40. State barley, $1.38. Oats, 65 a 67 cts. Rye, 95 cts. Western mixed corn, 93 cts.; new mixed, 88 a 89 cts.; old yellow, 95 cts. Philadelphia.—Uplands middlings cotton, 14¾ cts.; New Orleans, 15½ cts. Superfine flour, $4 a $4.25; extras, $4.50 a $5.75; finer brands, $6.50 a $7.50. Red wheat, $1.20 a $1.25; amber, $1.25 a $1.30; white, $1.32 a $1.37. Rye, $1. New corn, 75 a 85 cts.; old, 92 a 93 cts. Oats, 61 a 64 cts. Smoked hams, 14 a 15 cts. Lard, 14½ a 15 cts. Chicago.—No. 1 spring wheat, 95 cts.; No. 2 do., 89 cts.; No. 3 do., 84 a 85 cts. No. 2 mixed corn, 74¾ cts. No. 2 oats, 49½ cts. No. 2 barley, $1. 30. Lard, $12.45 per 100 lbs. Cincinnati.—Corn, 64 a 65 cts. Oats, 55 a 58 cts. Rye, 96 cts. Lard, 13¾ cts. St. Louis.—No. 2 winter red wheat, $1.04; No. 3 fall red, 95 cts. No. 2 mixed corn, 68 cts. No. 2 oats, 55 cts. Milwaukie.—No. 1 spring wheat, $1.01; No. 2 do., 92½ cts. No. 2 corn, 76 cts. Oats, 48¾ cts. Lard, 13¾ a 14 cts.

WANTED.

A Friend to teach London-Britain Preparative Meeting School. Apply to Joel Thompson, Jr., Strikerville P. O., Chester Co., Pa.

Died, 8th mo. 21st, 1874, at her residence, near Harrisville, Belmont Co., Ohio, Deborah Hall, widow of the late Nathan Hall, an elder of Short Creek Monthly Meeting, in the 72d year of her age.

——, 10th mo. 4th, 1874, at her residence in this city, Elizabeth W. Price, a member of the Monthly Meeting of Friends of Philadelphia for the Western District.

——, on Third-day, 10th mo. 20th, 1874, at his residence, Chester Co., Pa., Jonathan C. Baldwin, in the 83d year of his age, a member of Downingtown Particular and Uwchlan Monthly Meeting. This dear Friend bore a long confinement to his house without a murmur, and we have a lively hope that he has been safely gathered with the faithful of all generations.

THE FRIEND.

A RELIGIOUS AND LITERARY JOURNAL.

VOL. XLVIII. SEVENTH-DAY, ELEVENTH MONTH 28, 1874. NO. 15.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY.

Price Two Dollars per annum, if paid in advance. Two dollars and fifty cents, if not paid in advance.

Subscriptions and Payments received by

JOHN S. STOKES,

AT NO. 116 NORTH FOURTH STREET, UP STAIRS.

PHILADELPHIA.

Postage, when paid quarterly in advance, five cents.

For "The Friend."

A few Questions and Answers relative to some of the Doctrines and Testimonies of the Society of Friends.

(Continued from page 106.)

Question.—What are the views of the Society respecting Ministry?

Answer.—The Society holds that the authority and qualification for the ministry of the gospel are the immediate gift of Christ Jesus, the ever adorable Head of His church, bestowed upon whom He will, irrespective of sex, of talent, of rank, or of influence. The exercise of this gift depending altogether upon the fresh opening of the Spirit of our Holy Redeemer, and deriving its sanction in no wise from human learning or ordination, is fairly embraced within the command of our Saviour to those immediately sent forth by Him, and which is of lasting obligation upon all His anointed ministers: "Freely ye have received, freely give." No forced maintenance is recognized here under any pretence whatever; it being wholly inconsistent with the benevolence and purity of the gospel, which holds forth the mercy and salvation of God to "whosoever will," without money and without price. Neither is the one-man system, neither a man-made or a college-taught education recognized in the precepts or in the example of our Divine Lawgiver. In speaking, before His betrayal and crucifixion, of the authority and power of the Comforter, which is the Holy Ghost, whom, said He, "the Father will send in my name," He adds, "He shall teach you all things, and bring all things to your remembrance, whatsoever I have said unto you." Again, "He shall testify of me;" "He shall receive of mine, and shall show it unto you;" "He will guide you into all truth;" "He dwelleth with you, and shall be in you"—"another Comforter, that he may abide with you forever." Now what more than the fulfilment of these promises, can any one ask or want? Moreover, the apostle Paul in speaking of his ministry declares: "I neither received it from man, neither was I taught it, but by the revelation of Jesus Christ." The exercise of it, he further states, was "not in the words which man's wisdom teacheth, but which the Holy Ghost teacheth; and that his speech and his preaching was not in the enticing words of man's wisdom, but in the demonstration of the Spirit and of power; that the faith of his hearers might not stand in the wisdom of men, but in the power of God."

Q.—What is the recorded testimony of John Selden, touching this subject?

A.—It is related of the learned and famous John Selden, when on the bed of death, that he could not recollect one single passage in all the books and manuscripts he had ever read, from which he could derive one ray of consolation, except some that he had met with in the Holy Scriptures; and among these the most remarkable, and that had made the deepest impression on his mind was, "For the grace of God that bringeth salvation, hath appeared unto all men; teaching us," &c. See Titus ii. 11, 12. He further said that "All those fine literary accomplishments which feed the pride of the scholar * * frequently prove very great impediments to a spiritual knowledge of God. The most towering genius on earth can never gain admittance into the kingdom of heaven till he condescends to the simplicity of a little child, and, with faith and humility opens his heart to his Heavenly Father for that true wisdom, which can only come immediately from Him."

Q.—What is the belief of the Society of Friends on the subject of baptism?

A.—They believe that there is but one true and saving baptism, as there is but one Lord, and one faith; for the language of the Apostle is, "One Lord, one faith, one baptism." This "one," then, must be heart-cleansing and effectual to salvation. Few of the advocates of water-baptism contend that it is a saving ordinance; but the self-abasing and indispensable baptism of Christ must be saving. The Forerunner of our blessed Lord, in allusion to the baptism of the latter as contrasted with his own, declared: "He must increase, but I must decrease." And again, "I indeed baptize you with water unto repentance; but He that cometh after me is mightier than I, whose shoes I am not worthy to bear: He shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost, and with fire: whose fan is in his hand, and he will thoroughly cleanse his floor," &c. From which it follows that the true spiritual baptism of Christ works godly sorrow unto true repentance, and that change and conversion of the heart which is followed by remission of sins and the greater out-pouring of power from on high. These transforming and consolatory effects follow not because of the rite of water-baptism; for if so, then Simon Magus the sorcerer, and all the wicked amongst men that have received it, would have remission and the gift of the Holy Ghost. This refining baptism is more than the putting away of the filth of the flesh, being the answer of a good conscience towards God. The one is easy to the flesh, the other crucifies it: as saith the Apostle, "They that are Christ's have crucified the flesh with the affections and the lusts." Water baptism, as a sign, typified the washing of regeneration, through the renewing of the Holy Ghost; and this must ever be a cross to the fleshly part. Moreover, discipleship with the Lord Jesus, through His one saving baptism, cannot be an easy thing to the carnal mind; the conditions are thus conveyed from His own blessed lips: "If any man will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his daily cross and follow me." And again, "Whosoever doth not bear his cross and come after me, cannot be my disciple." Hence it is clear that the baptism which now saves, humbles and contrites the heart, bringing it into sweet and willing subjection to the leavening operation of the Holy Spirit, until the floor thereof becomes thoroughly cleansed. Whereby also we become born again unto the state of new creatures; for "If any man be in Christ, he is a new creature: old things are passed away; behold, all things are become new." The Society of Friends, then, believe that John's elementary baptism was to cease when He came of whom John himself thus bore witness: "Behold the Lamb of God, who taketh away the sin of the world!" Which is also confirmed by the voice from heaven at the transfiguration, when Moses and Elias, with their dispensations had passed away, and Jesus—in whom all types were finished—only left: "This is my beloved Son, hear ye Him."

Q.—What are the views of the Society as to the "ordinance" of "the Supper," or a partaking of the body and blood of Christ?

A.—They believe that as Christ Jesus is the anti-type and substance of all types and shadows, that when He, the great High Priest and Mediator of the new covenant or rule and law of grace, was offered upon the cross, that the Jewish sacrifices and offerings were ended. They believe that the Saviour's language, "As often as ye eat this bread and drink this cup, ye do show the Lord's death till he come," alludes to the Messiah's second, inward and spiritual coming in the heart as the fulfilment of the new covenant of light and life, wherein all are to be taught of God, in the soul. That the promise was thenceforth to have place: "He that is with you (in the flesh), shall be in you (by his Spirit), to teach all things, to lead into all truth, and to abide with His disciples forever. They also believe that this is strengthened and confirmed by another testimony of our divine Lawgiver: "It is the Spirit that quickeneth, the flesh profiteth nothing," &c.; and that as we admit Him whose words are spirit and life into our hearts, at the door of which He stands and knocks, that He will, agreeably to His promise, come into us, and will sup with us, and will set up His glorious kingdom, and, taking the government thereof on His own shoulders, will reign to the exceeding spiritual refreshment of all His, by giving to eat of His flesh and to drink of His blood unto living communion and union with Him in the heavenly banquet of soul-sustaining manna from the paradise of God.

Q.—Why do Friends not encourage places of amusement, music, singing, &c.?

A.—Because this life was given, and the dear Saviour died for a far different purpose than for us to spend our short span in vain amusements and corrupting pleasures, which the apostle Paul has said, She who liveth in them "is dead while she liveth;" and who in another place, when describing the enemies of Truth terms them, "Lovers of pleasure, more than lovers of God." Because these do not feed or satisfy the cravings of an immortal spirit; but, on the contrary, tend to dissipate its relish for true religion and virtue—the only safe reliance for the soul; and, in the end, to yield little else than anxiety, sorrow and remorse. Finally, because of the solemn responsibilities of a life granted for the great work of repentance and salvation; a life, though spent with the giddy and the gay in idleness and dissipation, is still followed by that all-seeing Eye that sleeps not, and listened to by that all-hearing Ear that is ever open. How then can any dare thus to sacrifice, for such fleeting, unsatisfying, and corrupting amusements, their time, their talents, their peace, their lives, their souls, their hope of a joyful eternity? The religion which we profess has ever been, and is designed ever to be, a self-denying religion. We cannot fail to see around us liberties indulged in, which we are satisfied are utterly inconsistent with the requisitions of the gospel of Jesus. How needful then to endeavor by the grace of God to come out from all these things, and to walk more worthy of the vocation wherewith we are called.

Q.—What is the language of the Discipline with regard to Gaming and Diversions?

A.—"As our time passeth swiftly away, and our delight ought to be in the law of the Lord, it is advised that a watchful care be exercised over our youth and others to prevent their going to stage-plays, horse-races, music, dancing, or any such vain sports and pastimes," &c. And if any of our members fall into either of these practices, and are not prevailed with by private labor to decline them, the monthly meetings to which the offenders belong should be informed thereof, and, if they be not reclaimed by further labor, so as to condemn their misconduct to the satisfaction of the meeting, it should proceed to testify our disunity with them."

(To be continued.)

Feeding the Pigeons.—How eagerly I listened, when my grandfather pointed out to me the deep attachment of the carrier pigeon to her home; of the quest to her nest; of the turtle-dove to her mate. That they could only flourish upon corn; and all their food seasoned with salt. He also showed me their beautiful but sober plumage, and pointed out, when they soared up aloft, how bright their iridescent colors appeared in the sun. I loved to learn all these particulars concerning the Columbidæ in my childhood; but how many years after was it, when, in a different phase of mind and under a different teaching, I felt the force and beauty of the Christian symbol, that pure and holy dove-like spirit which wanders not from its home, the heart of her Lord—and can never be separated in affection from Him to whom her heart is consecrated; who feeds on the living bread, the corn of the kingdom, whose thirst can be assuaged only by the living waters, and whose food is seasoned with salt; and finally, whose eternal garb and bearing, modest, sober, and unobtrusive, is yet radiant with a heavenly light caught from a beam of that Sun of righteousness in whom her heart delights.—M. A. Schimmelpennick.

For "The Friend."

Where is Krisheim?

BY OSWALD SEIDENSTICKER.

Cresheim street and the Cresham creek, in Germantown, time honored names, are, so to say, speaking witnesses of the fact, that some of the first settlers of Germantown hailed from Krisheim, in Germany, where, in spite of scorn and persecution, the doctrine of the Friends at a very early period had found warm and unwavering adherents.

The first Friend who lighted on that little village in the Palatinate, was William Ames. Sewel says: Whilst William Ames was in the Palatinate he got acquaintance with the Baptists (Mennonites?) of Kriesheim, a town not far from Worms, and among those people he found such entrance that some families, receiving the doctrine he preached, bore a public testimony for it there, and so continued till the settlement of Pennsylvania, in America. when they unanimously went thither, not as it seemed without a singular direction of Providence; for, not long after, a war ensued in Germany, where the Palatinate was altogether laid waste by the French, and thousands of people bereft of their possessions and reduced to poverty. (Philada. edition, 1826, I. p. 260.)

The next who has to tell something of Krisheim is Stephen Crisp. He says in his journal, speaking of the year 1669: "The Lord preserved me and brought me upon the 14th day of the 4th mo. to Griesham, near Worms, where I found divers who had received the everlasting Truth, and had stood in a testimony for God about ten years in great sufferings and tribulations, who received me as a servant of God, and my testimony was as a dew upon the tender grass to them. I had five good meetings among them, and divers heard the truth and several were reached and convinced, and Friends established in the faith." (London edition, 1694, p. 29.)

William Penn, when taking up the missionary work in Holland and Germany, did not fail to see and to comfort these isolated converts to his faith. His entry into his journal on 23d day of 6th mo. 1677, is as follows: "The 5 day we arrived by way of Worms, at Crisheim in the Paltzgrave's country, where we found to our great joy a meeting of tender and faithful people, but it seems the inspector of the Calvinists had enjoyned the Vaught or chief officer not to suffer any preaching to be amongst them, lest he should be turned out of his place. To whom we desired Friends to say, that if he pleased he might apprehend us and carry us to the Prince, before whom we should give an account of our testimony. But blessed be the Lord, we enjoyed our meeting quietly and comfortably, of which a coachful from Worms made a part." (Collections of the Works of Wm. Penn, 2 vols. fol. London, 1726, vol. I., p. 72.)

Wm. Penn then went to Manheim, where he expected to find the Prince, and stopped there till the 26th. "We returned," he continued, "that night by the Rhine to Worms, from whence we the next morning (being the first day of the week) walked on foot to Crisheim, which is about 6 English miles from Worms. We had a good meeting from the tenth to the third hour, &c. The Vaught or chief officer himself stood at the door of the barn, where he could hear and not be seen, &c. Poor hearts, a little handful surrounded with great and mighty countries of darkness. They were most of them gathered by dear William Ames."

Not many years after Wm. Penn had thus stood before the peasants of Krisheim, preaching to them and praying with them in a barn, he became the proprietor of Pennsylvania, on the area of which the whole Palatinate would have been a mere patch. The invitation that he extended to the downtrodden and intolerantly used of all lands, reached also the ears of his friends in Krisheim, many of whom left their native homes and joined the settlement which Pastorius, agent of the Frankfurt Company, called Germantown. There came from Krisheim Peter Schumacher, Isaac Thomas Williams. John Krey, John and Arnold Cassel, several of the Hendricks family, and others. German Township was, in 1689, laid out in four places, called Germantown, Krisheim, Sommerhausen and Crefeld. The two latter names have been entirely blotted out, but Krisheim survives, as afore mentioned, in the name of a street and a creek.

When travelling last summer through Germany, I had a strong desire to see the town where fully two hundred years ago German Quakers had dwelled, stoutly braving the buffets of power and prejudice, and from whence they had removed to their American Patmos. I was also anxious to ascertain whether any reminiscences or traditions of old Quaker times were still clinging to the place; whether the name of William Penn was still in the mouth of the people, &c., &c.

A curious and unexpected difficulty met me at the outset. No such name as Krisheim, Crisheim or Kriesheim is to be found on any map, and in vain did I enquire at Worms after the town, which Wm. Penn had reached from there by a six miles' walk. But there is a Kriegsheim, people told me, not far from Monsheim, and a Griesheim on the last railroad station, when you go to Darmstadt. I was not prepared for this perplexity, and asked the Lutheran clergyman at Worms, whether he could inform me at which of those places there had formerly existed Quakers, known and visited by Wm. Penn. He was not aware of either fact, that there had been Quakers in the vicinity, and that Penn had ever been there on a missionary tour, though one of his predecessors, as we learn from Penn's Journal, had actually come from Worms to attend the Krisheim meeting on the 26th of August, 1677. As to spelling, Griesheim seemed to come nearer than Kriegsheim, because G and K are often interchanged; Stephen Crisp even calls the place in question Griesham. But, on the other hand, no Griesheim, of which name there are several villages, is at the proper distance of Worms, to agree with William Penn's measure, nor within the bounds of the Palatinate, while Kriegsheim answers both requisites. So I concluded to make some inquiries at that place, and went by rail to Monsheim, whence Kriegsheim is only half a mile distant. When the place was shown to me at the station of Monsheim, my thoughts wandered back to the year 1677, and I tried to realize that William Penn, the founder of our commonwealth, had on yonder path winding through grainfields and potatoe patches, come all the distance from Worms on a Sunday morning, to comfort and edify the poor German peasants, who were his brethren in faith. Such things we are slow and almost reluctant to realize. So it is with the memory of Luther's undying words before the Imperial Diet of Worms, and with the tradition of Queen Krimhild's love and sorrow at the time when the Nibelungen, under Siegfried, came to the same city. The palpable present always appears common place and prosy when our imagination resuscitates voices of the past.

Thus occupied in mind I entered Kriegsheim, which consists mainly of two rows of humble dwellings lining the road, and betook myself to the clergyman of the place, as the most likely person to help me to information. The Rev. Mr. Keller, to whom I stated the object of my errand, was quite surprised at what I told him. He had never heard that people of that village were of the Quaker persuasion; that William Penn had paid them a visit, and that they had been the pioneers of the German emigration to America. "Do you know," he asked me, "the names of any persons who joined the sect of the Quakers?" I was prepared for this question, and read to him from my memorandum book the names above given, as well as those which I had gathered from "Besse's Sufferings of the Quakers," viz: Johann Hendricks, Jacob Jansen, Johann Phil Laubeck, Christian Moret, Henrich Gerrits, George Schumacher, Peter Schumacher, inhabitants of Krisheim, that had been fined and harassed on account of their attachment to the views of the Friends. I was rather disappointed to learn from Mr. Keller, that no such families now reside in Kriegsheim. The only name that tallies is that of Jansen. But I was assured that the two persons who bear that name have no family traditions that would connect them with a Quaker ancestry.

There was then no prospect of finding a clew that would guide me further. Moreover the discrepancy in the name of the place threw a shade of doubt on the presumption, that this was really Wm. Penn's Crisheim. But this difficulty was unexpectedly and completely removed. The worthy clergyman, who had become quite warmed, aye and interested by my own zeal, invited me to his study, where he produced a manuscript volume of the middle of last century, recording the assessment of real estate, in which the name of his place was spelled Kriesheim, so that Kriegsheim appears to be a mere innovation. This was again encouraging, but the names of the people whose property was registered threw no further light on the question. I now placed my last reliance on the records of births, deaths and marriages, so scrupulously kept in all parishes of Germany. I stated to Rev. Mr. Keller my wish to inspect these old records, say between the years 1670 and 1690, with the view of discovering there the names of some of the old Quaker families.

But my curiosity was not to be gratified. The books were missing. About the year 1848, they had been in keeping of a civil officer, a miller, if I remember right, who found it exceedingly inconvenient and annoying to consult the records in order to answer questions on dates frequently put to him by the descendants of deceased persons. Information of that kind was wanted far too often and unnecessarily, he thought, and so, to escape all further annoyance, he gave out, that the records were missing. And missing they have been ever since; popular report says, the miller kindled a fire with them.

Was I too harsh, when I inwardly called that benighted person a stupid brute? His act has destroyed the directest and most conclusive way of proving the identity of old Krisheim with the present Kriegsheim, and of tracing the line of the Germantown settlers to their native home. The minister sympathized with my disappointment, and proposed to call on the schoolmaster, an older man than he, who might know something of the old traditions of the place. We went, but to no purpose. The schoolmaster knew well enough that the English Quaker, William Penn, had, under king Charles II,, founded Pennsylvania, but that so famous a personage should have walked through this very village, and preached in a barn to the people—German Quakers too!—seemed passing strange to him. He had never heard of such a thing and thought no one else had.

And so I had to leave with a rather negative result of my search. I afterwards visited Griesheim, and there instituted similar inquiries, but I might have saved myself the trouble. The old church records were here in existence and laid before me; no such names as Besse mentions could be found. I think, the distance so distinctly stated by William Penn as intervening between Worms and Krisheim, settles the question where the old German Quaker home was in favor of the present Kriegsheim. It is certainly strange that all reminiscence, knowledge and tradition of so remarkable a fact, should have completely vanished; but we must bear in mind, that probably all Quakers of Krisheim emigrated to Pennsylvania; also that the atrocious war, waged by Louis the Fourteenth in the Palatinate, singed out cities and villages, and scattered the inhabitants. Worms with the surrounding country was most severely smitten during that war. O. S.

Diseases of the Eye Contagious.—Dr. Reuling, of the Maryland Eye and Ear Institute, one of our eminent oculists, writes that the disease known as Egyptian or granular inflammation at the eyes is spreading rapidly through the United States. It sometimes causes blindness, and is very contagious. He adds: "I have in many, and I may say in the majority of cases, been able to trace the disease to the use of the so-called rolling towels. Such towels are generally found in our country hotels and the sleeping apartments of the working classes, and being thus used by nearly every one, are made the carriers of one of the most dangerous, and as regards its symptoms, most troublesome diseases of the eye. I therefore would strongly recommend that the use of the rolling towel be abolished, for thereby we will discard one of the great instruments for the spread of such a dangerous disease to the eye, by which thousands of workmen are annually deprived of their means of support."—Baltimore Gazette.

Be strong to bear, O heart!
Nothing is vain;
Strive not, for life is care,
And God sends pain;
Heaven is above, and there
Rest will remain!

Adelaide A. Proctor.

For "The Friend."

John Finch Marsh.

(Continued from page 111.)

30th of 8th mo., 1838.

My beloved friend, S. F.—Some of us have indeed sustained a great loss in the removal of our late dearly beloved friend and brother in the Truth, John Barclay. I seem incapable of setting forth his loss, to me, as an individual, whose sweet society it was my privilege richly to enjoy for many years; and by whose pious example, watchful deportment and humble walking, my heart was often deeply instructed; perhaps I go not too far if I say, it was impossible (at least one's own fault if it were so) to be in his company without being instructed in some way, either by his conversation or otherwise. He was one with whom I had shared no common intimacy, and often did we take sweet counsel together, and walk unto the house of the Lord in company; yea, and knew what it was at times "to sit together in heavenly places in Christ Jesus." Had I the pen of a ready writer, how feelingly might I bear my testimony in writing, to the memory of this beloved brother, similar to the many borne by the cotemporaries of Isaac Penington, viz., by George Fox and others, as prefixed to the 1st vol, of I. P.'s works. But oh! how is the loss made up! how fully the mind satisfied in the consoling belief "that he is well in the Lord, and in peace with him through the Lord Jesus Christ,—that through redeeming love and mercy he is now entered into the joy of his Lord, and into his Master's rest." The Church too, how great her loss in this our day, by the removal, may I not say, of one of her most upright pillars and brightest ornaments. What I have written is by no means intended as in any way to extol the creature, far otherwise,—but with reference to that Power who made him what he was, and which same divine Power is at work, and will continue to work, in the hearts of thousands. The date of thy last letter is memorable as being that on which he died, 11th of 5th mo., having about three days previous entered his 42nd year, near the age of the notable Apologist [Robert Barclay], who died also in the 42nd year of his age.

My beloved young friend, W. H.—How tenderly do I feel for those, who in the day of the Lord's power, are made willing to yield obedience to his requirings—to bow the neck to the yoke of Christ, deny self, take up the cross daily and follow him. And how do I desire the safe progress of these, that nothing may be permitted to stumble them, or induce them to seek an easier way,—"For the way of righteousness is life, and in the pathway thereof there is no death."

Warwick, 2nd of 12th mo., 1843.

My beloved friend, W. M.—Although I have not earlier acknowledged thy acceptable lines, dated the 8th ult., which were forwarded to me here in due course, I have not felt the less interested about thee, or unmindful of thy important movements in prospect. It was comforting to know, and kind of thee so early to inform me, that thou wast made willing to spread thy concern before Friends, and that thou wast so freely liberated by them, believing as I do that it is a right concern, a work whereunto the Great Master has called thee, and who will, I believe, as faithfulness is abode in, strengthen to perform that which He may require at thy hands. O how great the privilege to be employed in His service, and of being in any way made use of in the promotion of the cause of truth and righteousness in the earth, and what cause of rejoicing when a brother here and a brother there is raised up in this our low day, who, in the day of the Lord's power, are made willing and obedient in answering His call, resigning their hearts to follow on to know Him in the way of His leadings and requirings. O then beloved friend, may'st thou be strengthened to hold on thy way and continue to experience that preservation and safe guidance which I believe thou hast hitherto known, and which will not be withheld while thou seeks to be kept humble and watchful, little and lowly, having thine eye single unto the Lord, and thine heart simple, trusting in Him, not seeking or wanting great things for thyself, but be content with such manifestation of His power and strength as He may see best to furnish thee with from day to day, and from hour to hour; thus wilt thou be prepared both to do and to suffer His will.

O the need, the especial need there is for those who go forth on the Lord's errands, to wait for clearness, to know when to speak and when to keep silence, believing that the service of the poor instrument is often to example in silence. Ah! this is sometimes humbling to the creaturely part that would be active and doing something, as well as disappointing to that in some whose expectations may be much outward. But do not misunderstand me, I would have none keep silence when the command is to speak, neither have any to speak when commanded to be silent, but would have each one wait on their gift, and be careful day by day to use in faith, the present offered strength, though at times it may seem to be in weakness; then I believe the strength of such will be increased, for true it is that to use strength is to gain strength. But why write thus to thee, dear William, I am not anticipating thee as one going before thy guide, or running without being sent, but to one young in the ministry and much favored of the Lord, much desiring in the love I have for thee, and the unity I have in the exercise of thy gift, thy safety and preservation every way, and that thou mayest indeed be valiant for the Truth in this thy day, wholly devoted and given up in heart to serve Him who in the riches of His love and mercy has given thee to see and follow the things that belong to thy peace, and engaged thy heart to invite others in His name to come, taste and see for themselves, how good He the Lord is.

(To be continued.)

Setting a young man afloat with money left him by his relatives, is like tying a bladder under the arms of one who cannot swim; ten chances to one he will lose his bladder and go to the bottom. Teach him to swim and he will not need bladders. Give your child a sound education. See to it that his morals are pure, his mind cultivated, and his whole nature made subservient to the laws which govern man, and you have given him what will be of more value than the wealth of the Indies. (You have given him a start which no misfortune can deprive him of.) The earlier you teach him to depend upon his own resources and the blessing of God the better. —Late Paper.

Selected.

THE TONGUE INSTRUCTED.

"He that keepeth his mouth, keepeth his life."—Prov. xiii. 3.

Guard well thy lips; none, none can know
What evils from the tongue may flow;
What guilt, what grief may be incurr'd
By one incautious, hasty wood.

Be "slow to speak;" look well within,
To check what there may lead to sin;
And pray unceasingly for aid,
Lest, unawares, thou be betrayed.

"Condemn not, judge not,"—not to man
Is given his brother's faults to scan;
One task is thine, and one alone,—
To search out and subdue thine own.

Indulge no murmurings; oh, restrain
Those lips so ready to complain;
And, if they can be numbered, count
Of one day's mercies the amount.

Shun vain discussions, trifling themes;
Dwell not on earthly hopes or schemes;
Let words of wisdom, meekness, love,
Thy heart's true renovation prove.

Set God before thee; every word
Thy lips pronounce, by Him is heard;
Oh couldst thou realize this thought,
What care, what caution would be taught!

Think on thy parting hour: ere long
The approach of death may chain thy tongue,
And powerless all attempts be found,
To articulate one meaning sound.

"The time is short,"—this day may be
The very last assigned to thee:
So speak, that should'st thou ne'er speak more,
Thou mayst not this day's words deplore.

Selected.

"BLESSED ARE THEY THAT MOURN."

O, Night is sad and lonely,
And the morning fair to see;
Yet who would ask that only
The day might ever be.
Though darkness chills the spirit,
And the heart is cheered by mirth,
Yet blessings they inherit—
The mourning ones of earth.

O Day is bright and cheerful,
But the stars are fair to see;
Joys greet the tried and tearful,
Unknown to laughing glee.
Oft fairest are not purest,
Earth's pleasures soon will cloy—
Who faithful, life endurest,
Shall share eternal joy.

How to Return a Favor.—An old Scotchman was taking his grist to mill in sacks thrown across the back of his horse, when the horse stumbled and the grain fell to the ground. He had not strength to raise it, being an aged man, but he saw a horseman riding along, and thought he would appeal to him for help. But the horseman proved to be a nobleman who lived in the castle hard by, and the farmer could not muster courage to ask a favor of him. But the nobleman was a gentleman also, and not waiting to be asked, he quickly dismounted, and between them they lifted the grain to the horse's back. John—for he was a gentleman too—lifted his Kilmarnock bonnet and said, "My lord, how shall I ever thank you for your kindness?" "Very easily, John," replied the nobleman, "Whenever you see another man in the same plight as you were in just now help him, and that will be thanking me."—Late Paper.

"And the Lord direct your hearts into the love of God, and into the patient waiting for Christ." 2 Thess. iii. 5.

"Charge It."

A simple little sentence is this, to be sure, and yet it may be considered as one of the most insidious enemies with which people have to deal. It is very pleasant to have all the little commodities offered for sale in the market, and it is sometimes hard to deny one's self of the same when they can be obtained by saying "charge it." But this habit of getting articles, however small the charge may be, without paying for them, keeps one's funds in a low state most of the time.

"I have no money to-day but should like the article much," says a young man who happens to go into a store, and sees something which strikes his fancy.

"Never mind," says the gentlemanly clerk, "you are good for it."

"Well, I will take it, and you may charge it."

And so it is that little accounts are opened at one place and another, till the young man is surprised at his liabilities; which, though small in detail, are sufficiently large in the aggregate to reduce his cash materially when settling day comes.

In many instances, if the cash were required, the purchase would not be made even had the person the money by him; but to some, getting an article charged does not seem like parting with an equivalent.

Still, when pay-day comes, as always it does, this illusion vanishes, and a feeling is experienced of parting with money and receiving nothing in return.

If there is an actual necessity of making a purchase, and the means are not at hand, there is a reasonable excuse for obtaining the same on credit; but when the article can be dispensed with until payment can be made, it is much to the advantage of the purchaser to do so.

"We must have a nice set of furniture," say a young couple about to be united in marriage, "but we have not the means; however, we will get it and have it charged."

And so they start in life with a debt hanging over them for which there is no occasion.

The habit once formed is difficult to break away from, and whenever anything is wished for, it is purchased without considering that circumstances may arise which will render the payment impossible.

When there is a certainty of health and a supply of labor, it would place rather a different construction upon the matter. But considering the fluctuating character of business, making it possible that a mechanic may be thrown out of employment at any time, it is certainly better to be prepared for such emergencies by keeping clear of debt.

Sickness may also overtake one at any time, and the thought that numerous charges are standing against us, aggravates the disease, and renders the misfortune harder to bear.

Taking this view of the matter, is it not better to forego the pleasure of possessing articles which our taste may prompt us to purchase until the means are in hand? It is very easy to say "charge it," but not always so easy to pay it.

And this is always the ultimatum. If payment is deferred too long the very one who politely tells the purchaser that it will make no difference about the money, will say he had no business to buy fine feathers if he had no prospect of paying.

And in a measure this is true. By pursuing such a course, a person is never independent; the host of little debts are ever ready to perplex and worry him, when that for which they were incurred has been used. Hence it may be said that the custom of charging is unjust both to purchaser and seller, as the one loses his peace of mind and the other oftentimes loses his money. Getting in debt is easy, but getting out is just the reverse; and for that reason it would be well for people to ask when about to make a purchase in the manner alluded to, is it not best for me to wait until I have the money, and then not have to order the seller to "charge it?"—Selected.

For "The Friend."

Circumstances Alter Cases.

An occasional drowsiness, and often sleeping, during the time purposely set apart for meeting in His name, may perhaps be treated a little by this rule. Persons advanced in years, whose powers of mind and body are on the wane; some of these deeply regret such a moment of weakness should ever overtake them: using every exertion to watch, sensible how it appears to others and of their own loss; and above all, a lively sense for the cause sake.* For these, if now and then efforts are unsuccessful, there is the truest sympathy, that we feel unwilling even to let on it had been noticed; knowing of ourselves the same may creep over us so softly at times, and take us unawares. But for the young and vigorous, who make it a common practice, and can sleep even when a loud voice is speaking solemn truths, pity and charity may be felt, but pleasant sympathy is not just all these need. When any habit is given way to till it becomes every day practice, it is not easy to cure; there must be a conflict, a sincere looking up and craving better strength than our own. I remember when young, commencing to attend meeting, after having been deprived of the opportunity for some time to do so, to find the head bending over, a kind of doze, with the eye not quite shut. Quickly sensible of the unseemliness for the place and occasion, I was ashamed of myself, which helped to cure better than sympathy from others would have done. The resolve was, such unbecoming behaviour should not be mine. Seeking to look up to the Source of strength, I found help; and for nearly a half of a century when thus assembled, no matter how many previous nights of wakefulness, the tempter had no ground to approach, for there was a guard set; and I would it had been thus to every other avenue, he cometh, to lay waste good intentions. Of late I find a little return of the failing; if it gain ground by any indifference to the ever watchful Eye, may Himself be present with the whip of small cords; but if it is in debility of diseased flesh, may He pity and spare. It was observable at a late Quarterly Meeting, three of the four Monthly Meetings were mostly clear in this particular; but for one the summary must needs be, time after time, to the effect, some sleepers still. May those whom this subject concerns, struggle hard for the victory. Some of us are aware of the many other infirmities the willing or the careless spirit must contend with; wandering and inconsistent thoughts, eyes gazing at others; the easy and careless manner of some, as though it were forgotten in whose name we profess to come, or that He might be in the midst. May we be humbled under a sense of these things, yet happy are they who the Lord, when He cometh, may find watching.

An ancient writer of the history of the Jews, speaking of the finishing of the Tabernacle says, after they had consecrated it God did not permit their labors to be in vain, nor did He disdain to make use of what they had made; but He came and sojourned with them, pitching His tabernacle in the place prepared: and in this way He came to it: The sky was clear, and there was a mist over the tabernacle, only encompassing it; but with not such a deep cloud as is seen in the winter season, nor yet so thin a one as men to be able to see any thing through it. But from it there dropped a sweet dew, such a one as showed the presence of God to those that desired and believed in it. If in the heart a place was acceptably dedicated, nothing but mist around the sweet refreshing dew, such as manifests His presence, might be felt, and again be the life of all our assemblies, and crown our every day labors with peace, though winter clouds tarry long. "They that wait for Him shall never be ashamed."

* Human weakness, even under such circumstances, may be overcome by the assistance of Divine Grace.—Eds.

E. P. Smith, Commissioner of Indian Affairs, at Washington, after devoting three or more closely printed columns of his Annual Report to Indian Affairs, winds up with the following:

"In conclusion, I desire to reiterate my conviction of the entire feasibility of Indian civilization, and that the difficulty of its problem is not inherent in the race, character, and disposition of the Indian, great as these obstacles are, as in their anomalous relation to the government, and their surroundings, affected by the influences and interests of white people. The main difficulty, so far as government is concerned, lies in the fact that the Indian's deepest need is that which the government, through its political organization and operations, cannot well bestow. The first help which a man in barbarism requires is not that which can be afforded through a political party, but that which is offered by a fellow man, wiser than himself, coming personally and extending a hand of sympathy and truth. No amount of appropriations and no governmental machinery can do much toward lifting an ignorant and degraded people, except as it works through the willing hands of men made strong and constant by their love for their fellow men. If, therefore, it should be possible to continue the sympathy and aid of the religious people of the land in this work, and to rally for its prosecution the enthusiam and zeal which belong to religion, and also if it shall be possible to procure the enactment of such laws as will recognize the essential manhood and consequent capabilities and necessities of the Indian, and provide reasonably adequate appropriations, which shall be expended both honestly and wisely for their benefit, and hold steadily to a well-defined and carefully prepared method of treatment, every year will witness a steady decrease of barbarism and its consequent danger and annoyance, and a constant accession to the number of peaceful and intelligent Indians who shall take their place and part as subjects of the United States. Surely this cannot be too much to ask and expect of the people of the great Republic. The record of the past is not pleasant to recall, and it cannot be re-written. Much of administrative mistake, neglect and injustice is beyond repair. But for those now living much of protection and elevation and salvation is still not only possible, but feasible and highly promising; and well will it be, if we are wise enough to make the most of the opportunity left, to deal justly and humanely with these remnants of the first American people."

The Danger of Partial Statements of Truth.

A half truth is often more pernicious than an entire falsehood, because it is the portion of truth in any statement which gives it plausibility. The public teacher, whether of religion, law, or science, who gives his pupils one-sided views of his theme, as if they were full statements of the truth concerned, does a wrong to truth itself, and injures his pupils in proportion to his influence over them, and in proportion to the vital nature of the theme discussed.

When a preacher, with powers of oratory to impress himself upon his hearers, presents the truth in relation to God and his plan of saving men in an imperfect and distorted form, leaving out of view certain attributes of God and certain elements in the nature of man, he does not teach simply defectively, but falsely, because the impression left is an entirely false one, and it were better, if he preach not the whole gospel, that he preach not at all.

Precisely here is the defect of some noted errorists of the day, and of former days in the history of the church. They take strong impressions and give graphic descriptions of some of God's attributes and some of man's characteristics, and on these build their system and shape their teachings, ignoring other equally essential attributes, and thus make their whole system of instruction false and pernicious.

The defective views may relate either to the character of God or man, or to both. If to both, so much the worse.

The conception a man has of God will give form to his whole system of theology, and his mode of life, for this lies at the foundation of religion, and shapes the entire character. Let a preacher conceive of God, and ever speak of him in his public ministry, as a being only of infinite love; let him magnify, as he rightly may, the amazing manifestation of that love in the redemption of man, but exclude from all his teachings the inflexible justice of God's character, and he does not exhibit to his hearers the God of the Bible, that God who once swept away the race by a deluge for its wickedness, who sent fire and brimstone upon the cities of the plain for their vileness, who prepared chains and darkness for the devil and his angels for their rebellion. He conceals the fact that God must be just, while he only may be merciful.

If, then, this preacher join to his false, because defective, teaching of the character of God, equally partial views of the nature of man, his influence is doubly pernicious. Let him present only the nobility of human nature, the grand elements it contains, its capabilities for vast and glorious achievement; let him draw with a master's hand the traits of the noblest manhood, and claim that under the highest culture these may all be evolved and man become more and more godlike; but ignore the depravity of the heart, the meanness, vileness, malignity of sin, and the desperate wickedness of human nature when unrestrained, and he presents an utterly false exhibition of the facts. His partial statement is more surely misleading than would be a blankly erroneous one. A ministry which knows only a God of tenderheartedness and pity, and only men of godlike qualities a little deranged and undeveloped, may exhibit the most brilliant talent, the highest style of oratory, the most perfect control of its hearers, and the most skilful management of all church machinery, but it cannot make men holy, hating sin, and living soberly, righteously, and godly in the midst of a corrupt and wicked generation; and it fails because it preaches not the whole truth of God.—American Messenger.

Chameleons.

There is a curious little lizard, the name of which is so coupled with fable, that many believe it has never even existed. We mean the chameleon. It is generally imagined that the reptile is capable of changing its color at will to the brighest of rainbow hues, and there is a wide-spread popular belief that it lives on air, both of which ideas, though naturally arising from the peculiar appearance and habits of the animal, are far from the truth. Some years since we captured a pair of these lizards among some ruins in Asia Minor, and for the three months during which they lived very comfortably in a wooden bird cage, we were enabled to study their strange peculiarities, and notably the phenomena for which Paul Bert, a member of the French Biological Society, has recently suggested some interesting explanations, which to us seem more in accordance with appearances than any yet adduced. The chameleon measures from five to eight inches in length, and has a curious pyramidal-shaped head, apparently separated from the neck. Its body is short and thick and ends in a prehensile tail of medium length. The ears are concealed under the skin, the mouth is large, and the eyes which are very prominent and full, are closely covered with a circular lid, in which is a small round perforation just in front of the pupil. The legs are long and slender, and terminate in a hand formed of five toes, divided into two bundles, so as to resemble one broad finger and a thumb. By the aid of these members, and winding their tails around the branches, the lizards climb about shrubs and trees in search of insects. Their motions are, however, very slow, and their habits sluggish in the extreme. They will cling to the bars of their cages for days at a time, giving not the slightest sign of life, except perhaps the occasional twinkle of one eye. Handling them does not seem to disturb their equanimity, as they rarely struggle as long as they are permitted to cling to a finger, while they are perfectly harmless.

The strange peculiarity of the animal, however, is its faculty of changing its color, not in bright tints, but from a pale gray to a light green, yellow, brown, reddish and violet shades, all, however, dusky and undecided. These changes sometimes occur very rapidly, and are apparently provoked by anger and fear. In handling the lizard we have noticed that although it would, as we have already intimated, show no symptoms of uneasiness, the clear, light tint which covered its whole body would give place to dark brown blotches, some of which shaded curiously into black, resembling in form the spots of a leopard. The cause of the phenomenon has generally been considered to be soft granules under the skin, and of different colors, which are more or less extended according to the quantity of blood which reaches them; but the recent investigations of P. Bert show clearly that the nervous system acts directly without the intermediation of the blood.

Another curious feature of the chameleon is the independence of its eyes. It moves them separately; and, when the animal sleeps, it seems as if but one-half of it were awakened at a time. If a light be placed before one eye the half of the corresponding side of the body becomes of a different color from the other side; but the tint becomes uniform all over when the light is carried before the other organ. It would seem from this that the reptile has two distinct luminous perceptions.

So sluggish a creature, it might be supposed, would be hardly suited for catching insects, and such indeed would be the case were chasing the latter the only way of entrapping them. The chameleon, however, resorts to strategy, and takes its prey from a distance over which the unsuspecting fly or bug hardly deems it possible that its enemy can reach. The lizard's mode of seizing the insect is not only peculiar, but also gives further proof of the dull nature of its perception. It never uses but one eye, and, while its body is perfectly motionless, will follow the movements of its prey with intense attention until it comes within about three inches of its nose; and then a tongue will dart out, more like a streak of pink lightning than anything else, strike the insect, and carry it back into the mouth.

This tongue, which is out of all proportion to the size of the animal (sometimes twice its entire length), is a hollow tube terminated by a fleshy knob which has a cup-like cavity on its anterior surface, always covered with a viscid fluid. It shoots out a perfectly straight rod, and strikes the insect with unerring accuracy.

P. Bert, who has dissected the operating mechanism, says that the tongue is squeezed out, just as a cherry stone can be forced out by pressing the fruit between the fingers. Strong bands of muscles surrounding the tongue serve to apply the necessary pressure. —N. American.

A Pleasing Incident.

Sitting in a station the other day, I had a little sermon preached in the way I like. It taught one of the lessons which we all should learn, and taught it in such a natural, simple way that no one could forget it. It was a bleak, snowy day; the train was late; the ladies' room dark and smoky; and the dozen women, old and young, who sat waiting impatiently, all looked cross, low-spirited, or stupid. I felt all three; and thought as I looked around, that my fellow-beings were a very unamiable, uninteresting set.

Just then a forlorn old woman, shaking with palsy, came in with a basket of wares for sale, and went about mutely offering them to the sitters. Nobody bought any thing, and the poor old soul stood blinking at the door a minute, as if reluctant to go out into the bitter storm again. She turned presently, and poked about the room, as if trying to find something; and then a pale lady in black, who lay as if asleep on a sofa, opened her eyes, saw the old woman, and instantly asked, in a kind tone, "Have you lost anything, ma'am?"

"No, dear. I'm looking for the heatin' place, to have a warm 'fore I goes out again. My eyes is poor, and I don't seem to find the furnace nowheres."

"Here it is," and the lady led her to the steam radiator, placed a chair, and showed her how to warm her feet.

"Well, now, ain't that nice!" spreading her ragged mittens to dry. "Thanks, dear, this is proper comfortable, ain't it? I'm most froze to-day, bein' lame and wimbly; and not selling much makes me kind of down-hearted."

The lady smiled, went to the counter, bought a cup of tea and some sort of food, carried it herself to the old woman, and said as respectfully and kindly as if the poor woman had been dressed in silk and fur, "Won't you have a cup of hot tea?" It's very comforting such a day as this.

"Sakes alive! do they give tea to this depot?" cried the old lady, in a tone of innocent surprise that made a smile go round the room, touching the glummest faces like a streak of sunshine. "Well, now, this is just lovely," added the old lady, sipping away with a relish. "This does warm the cockles of my heart."

While she refreshed herself, telling her story meanwhile, the lady looked over the poor little wares in the basket, bought soap and pins, shoe-strings and tape, and cheered the old soul by paying well for them.

As I watched her doing this, I thought what a sweet face she had, though I'd considered her rather plain before. I felt dreadfully ashamed of myself that I had grimly shaken my head when the basket was offered to me; and as I saw the look of interest, sympathy, and kindliness come into the dismal faces around me, I did wish that I had been the magician to call it out. It was only a kind word and a friendly act, but somehow it brightened that dingy room wonderfully. It changed the faces of a dozen women, and I think it touched a dozen hearts, for I saw many eyes follow the plain, pale lady with sudden respect; and when the old woman got up to go, several persons beckoned to her and bought something, as if they wanted to repair their first negligence.

Old beggar-women are not romantic; neither are cups of tea, boot-laces, and colored soap. There were no gentlemen present to be impressed with the lady's kind act, so it wasn't done for effect, and no possible reward could be received for it except the ungrammatical thanks of a ragged old woman. But that simple little charity was as good as a sermon to those who saw it, and I think each traveller went on her way better for that half hour in the dreary station. I can testify that one of them did, and nothing but the emptiness of her purse prevented her from "comforting the cockles of the heart" of every forlorn old woman she met for a week after.—Louisa M. Alcott.

It was one of my greatest pleasures to be taken to the Friends' meetings, either on the Sunday or week-days, and scarcely knowing it, I felt the influence of that holy presence of God visibly recognized by so many persons whose garb marked them, as withdrawn from the world, and whose countenances, for the most part, bore the impress of love and peace. I felt as one entering an overshadowing summer cloud where the presence of light is felt, though no distinct object is seen; and I well remember when my own childish "meeting" was over, as I used to watch the progress of the sunbeam as it successively illuminated the countenances of those on the benches before me, how often did I say to myself, "Oh that a ray of light from God, like that sunbeam would come to me, and teach me truly to know Him!" And though this was not vouchsafed to me at that time, yet never can I sufficiently express my deep obligations to the Friends I met. They did not indeed bring forward dogmatic truth, as I have heard so many do since; possibly there was not enough of this; but still further were they removed from the irreverent habit of bandying about the most sacred truths, as subjects of superficial and colloquial discussion. Deep and reverent was their feeling, that the truth of God can only be taught to the heart of man by the Spirit of God; hence they lived the truth instead of talking about it. Their habitual recollection, if it did not announce the dogma, inspired a living sense of the Divine omnipresence and omniscience. Their chastened language and voice, and peaceful placidity of manner, spoke a sense of their accountability to that Supreme Power in whom they confided. The caution and guardedness, and yet definite correctness with which they declared their sentiments, bore with it an impress of a humble consciousness of fallibility, and a feeling of the preciousness of truth. Their seasons of silence, seemed to utter with a silent tongue, "Acquaint thyself with God, and be at peace." The indefatigable industry and zeal with which they pursued plans of benevolence, told that their hearts recognized that God had indeed made of one blood all the children of men.—M. A. Schimmelpennick.

In the museum of Cassel, Germany, is a library made from five hundred European trees. The back of each volume is formed of the bark of a tree, the sides of the perfect wood, the top of young wood and the bottom of old. When opened, the book is found to be a box, containing the flower, seed, fruit, and leaves of the tree, either dried or imitated in wax. At the Melbourne Colonial Exibition of 1866, Col. Clamp exhibited specimens of Victorian wood converted into small boxes of book form, according to a design suggested by that gentleman at the Victorian Exhibition of 1851, and then suggested by Baron Ferd Mueller. Nothing could be more convenient and more interesting than a library (to speak allegorically) of such imitation books, representing the different timber of various countries, which could be systematically or geographically arranged. Australia could alone furnish of such a collection more than a thousand volumes. At the Paris Exhibition of 1867, Russia showed a similar collection of wooden works, cleverly designed, showing the bark as the back binding, and lettered with the popular and scientific names of the wood. Each book contained samples of the leaves, and fruit of the tree, and a section and shaving, or veneer of the wood.—Printer's Circular.

I have experienced that the habit of taking out of the hand of the Lord every little blessing and brightness on our path, confirms us, in an especial manner, in communion with His love.

God is the rest of the heart, and the feeling that God remembers in love, is the true and potent cordial for every sorrow.

THE FRIEND.

ELEVENTH MONTH 28, 1874.

We are firm believers that the Holy Scriptures were written under the inspiration of Him who seeth the end from the beginning, and therefore that the prophecy will be fulfilled that "The earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord as the waters cover the sea;" also that "He shall judge among the nations, and shall rebuke many people; and they shall beat their swords into plough-shares, and their spears into pruning-hooks: nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more." But man is such a thoroughly selfish being, and "the lusts that war in our members" are so readily excited and so potent, that, unless some extraordinary interposition of Divine providence should take place, it will be long before the people generally will be set free from the anti-christian effects of those lusts, through submission to the law of the Spirit of Life in Christ Jesus.

The hopeful though sorrowing disciple of Him who came to save men's lives, may however draw encouragement, from seeing that nations professing christianity, are so far alive to the folly, the iniquity and the horrors of war, as to entertain propositions for bringing into active operation some system that will prevent the occurrence of this dreadful crime and scourge; and also to enter into council respecting the best measures to lessen its barbarous evils, when it shall take place. These are cheering indications that the plain and imperative principles of christianity, are becoming less obscured and restrained by the policy of those who are entrusted with administering the government of nations; arising partly, it may be, from a suspicion, that the people are becoming too enlightened to submit much longer to the illy compensated privation and suffering which war always entails on both parties engaged in hostilities.

But whatever good may result from applying the doctrine of expediency to the consideration of war, by either governments or the people, the only solid ground on which the hope of general and perpetual peace can rest, is a conviction, wrought in the minds of the community, that war, with all its inseparable miseries, is altogether irreconcilable with the pure and benign principles of the gospel of Christ, and therefore that no spiritually minded follower of his, can engage in, or show countenance to it. That this may become the decision of a corrected judgment, and not the mere impulse of prevalent excitement or acquired habit, the people must be brought under the government of Christ, by obedience to the dictates of the Holy Spirit in the heart, and thus be able to adopt in sincerity the declaration of the primitive believers, "I am a Christian and therefore I cannot fight."

There is, perhaps, no more deplorable and effective obstacle to the more rapid introduction of this blessed triumph of true christianity,—foretold by the Lord's prophets to come in the last days,—than for the professed ministers of Christ, the Prince of Peace, to make use of the position they hold, and the influence that position enables them to exert, to sanction war in the abstract, or to veil its inherent inhumanity and atrocious enormities with tinsel rhetoric and glittering fictions. There are few things more lowering to the character and claims of the christian religion of which these profess to be exponents, and which requires meekness, patience, love and forgiveness of enemies; in short walking in the footsteps of Him who laid down his life that man might be saved, than to see them extolling or conniving at a system, as much opposed to that religion as darkness is to light; which not only destroys every right estimate of human life, and sets at naught the infinite value of the immortal soul, but cherishes the worst passions of the unregenerate heart, and spreads moral contamination throughout the community.

How then can ambassadors for Christ be engaged in passing eulogiums on those who have made themselves conspicuous, by engaging in the murderous policy and practice of war; practically disregarding the injunctions and precepts of the Saviour of men, and checking the extension of his kingdom, in which nothing can hurt or destroy, by encouraging conformity to the promptings of the anti-christian "lusts that war in the members" of the unregenerate, from whence come wars and fightings. This has been recently witnessed in our city, on the occasion of celebrating the "centennial" of a military troop, said to be marked for the proficiency with which its members are trained for the slaughter of their fellow men, and the alacrity with which they hold themselves prepared to engage in it. What a humiliating spectacle in a professed christian community! What a comment on a man-made ministry!

The advent of the Christian's Divine Lawgiver, was heralded by the angelic host, proclaiming "Glory to God in the highest, peace on earth, goodwill to men," and He has made it a duty of that Lawgiver's disciples, under every circumstance, so to speak and act, as to promote the accomplishment of the heavenly announcement.

Viewed in connection with the requirements of the religion we profess, what excuse can there be for bestowing the meed of applause on a system which, as R. Hall says, reverses, with respect to its objects, all the rules of morality, repeals all the principles of virtue, and incorporates all the phases of vice; or on a company of men designed and drilled, when called to the work by a totally worldly-minded government, to shed the life-blood of those they have never known, but whom they are told are their enemies; to expose themselves to be suddenly sent to the judgment seat of Christ, with "the lusts warring in their members," excited to the deadliest pitch, and their hands reeking with the blood of their fellow men: among the fruits of whose "gallantry," are the breaking up of connubial happiness in countless families, and filling them with heart-stricken widows and sorrowing, fatherless children. Pompous eulogiums on so-called "heroism," and on the "honor" attached to the ensanguined trophies of martial valor, if examined in the light that makes all things manifest, both good and evil, may be found nothing more than glorification of brutal courage, and commendation of so many harbingers of desolation and misery.

What a degradation to manhood,—which implies free agency and responsibility,—that all this reckless destructiveness, this positive wickedness, must be undertaken at the bidding of another; and that the dictates of humanity, or the whisperings of conscience, must be silenced or disregarded, under obedience to an oath that binds to unquestioning submission to a military superior! What can be more belittleing, more destructive of rational independence, or the free exercise of the intellectual powers conferred upon us, to say nothing of the relinquishment of the rights and privileges of a responsible being, than the slavish subjection of body and mind exacted from a soldier. Yet all this meanness and absurdity, are the necessary concomitants of a system that is as incompatible with the dictates of common sense, as with the principles and precepts of the religion of Christ. And this is the system and these the men on whom lavish encomiums are passed by professed ministers of Christ.

SUMMARY OF EVENTS.

FOREIGN.—A London dispatch of the 23d states that a dense fog enveloped the south of England on the two previous days, and many casualties occurred in consequence. The navigation of the Thames was dangerous, and the steamboats suspended their trips for two days. At Liverpool, also, boats ceased plying between the ferries. Railroad collisions and other accidents were numerous.

The Bank of England rate of discount has been advanced to 5 per cent., but loans are taken in the open market at lower rates.

A delegation of Roman Catholic bishops is about to visit Rome in order to obtain permission to pursue an independent course in case the British government should seek to restrict liberty of action of the Catholic clergy. They will represent to the Pope that they wish to respect the laws of England, and cannot blindly accept such regulations as are imposed on Continental bishops.

A boat belonging to an English war vessel was run down in the Clyde on the 19th inst., and seventeen men were drowned.

An explosion occurred in the Warren Vale colliery, Yorkshire, on the 20th inst., by which twenty-five men were killed and others injured.

The British government, in consequence of the representations of the Royal Geographical Society and other learned bodies, has determined to organize a polar exploring expedition without delay.

A dispatch to the Pall Mall Gazette, from St. Petersburg, says Russia has issued another circular note to the European powers requesting to be informed of the points of the protocol signed at the Brussels Conference, which they desire to be revised, amended, or omitted. The Russian government also suggests that another international conference be held next year.

A special dispatch to the Pall Mall Gazette from Berlin says, it is stated there that the British government declines to comply with the proposal of Russia for an international code on the bases of the negotiations of the Brussels Conference.

The decrease of emigration has rendered the reduction of the fleets of the German transatlantic steamship companies unavoidable. The Chairman of the North German Lloyds Company is now in England, seeking to dispose of the superfluous vessels of that line.

London, 11th mo. 21st.—Consols, 93¼. U. S. sixes, 1862, 97½.

Liverpool.—Uplands cotton, 7¾*d.*; Orleans, 8⅛*d.* a 8¼*d.*.

At the late municipal elections in France, the Republican candidates have been generally successful, indicating growing strength in that party. It appears that the number of electors who recently voted for republican candidates for the Council-General in France was 1,561,139. The anti-republican votes, divided among legitimists, Orleanists, Bonapartists and septennalists, were 1,447,831. Thus the majority for the republicans was 113,308.

The local authorities on the border complain that the Spaniards do not attempt to guard the frontier. Bazaine, who sailed from Southampton on the 9th inst. on the steamer, has landed at Lisbon. It is understood that his destination is Madrid, where he intends to reside as a private individual.

Louis Blanc, who sits in the Assembly for the department of the Seine, has issued a manifesto, in which he denies the right of the present Assembly to form a constitution for France, as it was not elected for that purpose. It is absurd to ask a monarchist majority for republican institutions. The republican members of the Assembly are advised to a close reunion instead of forming coalitions with other parties.

Dispatches from Spain to the Standard state that large reinforcements are going forward to Miranda, where the Republican army is massing for active operations in Navarre and for the relief of Pampeluna.

The Carlists are concentrating around Estella, under command of Mendiri Basque. The battalions with Don Carlos and General Elio are on the point of leaving Vera for Puente la Reyna.

The Carlists have again occupied positions around Irun have retaken Oyarziun and cut the railway and wagon road to San Sebastian.

Several bands of Carlists in the northeastern provinces have solicited amnesty.

A St. Petersburg dispatch of the 19th says: Navigation of the Neva is nearly closed for the winter. Ice is flowing into the river from Lake Ladoga, and the Bay of Cronstadt is frozen over, and communication by water with this city is interrupted.

The report that the Khan of Khiva had solicited the aid of Russia for the suppression of disorder in his dominions is denied.

A Berlin dispatch of the 20th says: Prince Gortschakoff, the Russian Foreign Minister, who has been sojourning here for several days, had a long and final interview with Prince Bismarck, after which he took his departure for St. Petersburg. During Prince Gortschakoff's stay here, in private conversation he expressed his confidence in the maintenance of peace in Europe for many years.

The trial of Count Von Arnim has been postponed to the 9th of next month. He is now permitted to take exercise by walking in the open air.

A Berlin dispatch to the Times gives a letter from Prince Henri Reuss, German Ambassador at St. Petersburg, on the policy of Germany toward Russia, as among the documents which Arnim is required to surrender. Its disappearance adds to the mystery of the affair.

Riots have recently occurred at several points in Poland on account of the forcible introduction by the government of church reform and the appointment of priests by imperial authority. A number of newly appointed priests have been maltreated by mobs. The local government at the points of disturbance have been reinforced by the troops from Warsaw, and a number of the ringleaders of the riots have been arrested and imprisoned.

Thirty-two of the Turks charged with the late murders of Montenegrins in the Province of Albania, have each been sentenced to twenty years imprisonment.

A violent storm has swept over the sea of Marmora, causing the wreck of many vessels.

Peace prevails throughout Mexico. The Congress has decreed that the Senate shall consist of two members from each State or Federal district of the Republic. Shocks of earthquake had been felt along the route from Vera Cruz to Guanajusto, threatening, it was thought, the approach of some extraordinary volcanic eruptions.

UNITED STATES.—The Dead Letter Division of the Postal service received during the last fiscal year 4,601,773 letters, representing an actual or nominal value of $4,637,429, exclusive of jewelry and other property. About 2,600,000 letters were destroyed as worthless, and 1,392,224 representing $3,909,868 were returned to the owners or writers.

The number of miles of narrow gauge railroads thus far built in the United States is 1,677, and the number of miles of projected road 5,461. The longest of these narrow roads in actual operation skirts the foot hills of the Rocky Mountains, in Colorado, for about 150 miles.

The annual report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs states that there are evidences of advancing civilization among nearly all the different tribes of Indians, and that no year in the history of the government has, in his opinion witnessed such general improvement. There are still about 90,000 Indians who are wild and scarcely tractable to any extent beyond that of coming to the agencies to receive rations and blankets; and from 12,000 to 14,000 more who are vagrants and roamers, without settled habitations. These last are found in all stages of degradation produced by idleness, intemperance, poverty and vice, without land and unwilling to leave their haunts for a home on a reservation.

During the year ending 6th mo. 30th last, 271,000,000 gallons of refined petroleum were exported from the United States, of the aggregate value of $37,561,513, beside which crude petroleum was shipped to a large amount.

The assessed value of real estate in Philadelphia, for the taxation of 1875, is $565,819,995. In 1870 it was $470,851,800.

There were 521 deaths in New York last week.

The Markets, &c.—The following were the quotations on the 21st inst. New York.—American gold 111¼. U. S. sixes, 1881, registered, 118⅜; do. coupons, 119⅝; do. 1868, registered, 118½; coupons, 119; five per cents of 1881, registered and coupons, 112½. Superfine flour, $4.10 a $4.50; State extra, $4.80 a $5.10; finer brands, $5.50 a $10.50. No. 2 Chicago spring wheat, $1.08; No. 3 do. $1.06; red western, $1.26 a $1.27; amber, $1.28; white Michigan, $1.37 a $1.40. State barley, $1.42. Oats, 66 a 68 cts. Rye, 97½ cts. Southern white corn, 97 a 99 cts.; western yellow, 92½ a 93 cts.; new mixed corn, 80 a 85 cts. Refined petroleum, 10½ a 10¾ cts. per gallon. Philadelphia.—Uplands and New Orleans middlings cotton, 14¾ a 15½ cts. Superfine flour, $4 a $4.25; extra, $4.50; finer brands, $5 a $7.50. Red wheat, $1.20 a $1.25; amber, $1.25 a $1.30; white, $1.30 a $1.37. Rye, $1. Old corn, 94 a 95 cts.; new, 85 a 90 cts. Oats, 62 a 65 cts. Smoked hams, 14 a 15 cts. Lard, 15 a 15¼ cts. Prime western cheese, 14 a 15 cts.; New York, 14½ a 15½ cts. Chicago.—No. 1 spring wheat, 92 cts.; No. 2 do., 88¾ cts.; No. 3 do., 85 cts. No. 2 mixed corn, 81¾ cts. No. 2 oats, 55 cts. Rye, 90 a 92 cts. No. 2 spring barley, $1.30. Lard, 13 cts. Cincinnati.—Red wheat, $1.05 a $1.08. Corn, ears, 68 a 69 cts. Oats, 65 a 66 cts. Baltimore.—Amber and red western wheat, $1.16 a $1.28. Yellow corn, 78 a 81 cts. Oats, 62 a 65 cts. St. Louis.—No. 3 fall red wheat, $1.20. No. 2 mixed corn, 72 a 74 cts. No. 2 oats, 57 cts. Lard, 13 cts. Indianapolis.—Corn, 64 a 66 cts.; do. in ears, 58 a 60 cts. Oats, 53 a 55 cts. Rye, 85 cts. Barley, $1.20 a $1.25.

RECEIPTS.

Received from Joseph Armfield, Agent, England, 10 shillings, vol. 48, and for R. M. Ashby, J. G. Armfield, Joshua Ashby, Samuel Alexander, Samuel J. Alexander, Samuel Bradburn, John Edward Baker, William L. Bellows, John Bottomley, James Boorne, Robert Clark, John Cheal, William Graham, Abraham Green, Forster Green, Susanna Grubb, Enoch Halden, John Hodgkin, Samuel Hope, John Horniman, Henry Horsnaill, William Irwin, Susanna Kirkham, James Kenway, Isaac Lloyd, William James Le Tall, Hannah Marsh, Manchester Friends' Institute, Thomas Marsden, Samuel Moorhouse, William R. Nash, Samuel Pickard, Daniel Pickard, Rachel Rickman, Thomson Sharp, Holman Shephard, Ann Swishenbank, John Sykes, Elizabeth Thwaite, Lucy W. Walker, Edward Watkins, and William Wright, 10 shillings each, vol. 48, for David Burley, 6s. 3d., to No. 52, vol. 47, for William Bingham, £1 10s., vol. 48, 3 copies, for Charles Elcock, John Hickes, and William Wilson, £1 each, vols. 47 and 48, for James Hobson, 16s. 6d., to No. 52, vol. 48, and 3s. 3d., for odd numbers to Charles Thompson.

WANTED.

A Governess for Westtown Boarding School, to enter on her duties at the opening of the next Session.

Apply to

Elizabeth C. Scattergood, West Chester, Pa.
Hannah Richardson, Wilmington, Del.
Hannah Evans, No. 322 Union St., Philada.
Lydia L. Walton, Moorestown, N. J.

WANTED.

A Friend to teach London-Britain Preparative Meeting School. Apply to Joel Thompson, Jr., Strikerville P. O., Chester Co., Pa.

FRIENDS' ASYLUM FOR THE INSANE.

Near Frankford, (Twenty-third Ward,) Philadelphia.

Physician and Superintendent—JOSHUA H. WORTHINGTON, M. D.

Applications for the Admission of Patients may be made to the Superintendent, or to any of the Board of Managers.

WILLIAM H. PILE, PRINTER,
No. 422 Walnut Street.

THE FRIEND.

A RELIGIOUS AND LITERARY JOURNAL.

VOL. XLVIII. SEVENTH-DAY, TWELFTH MONTH 5, 1874. NO. 16.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY.

Price Two Dollars per annum, if paid in advance. Two dollars and fifty cents, if not paid in advance.

Subscriptions and Payments received by

JOHN S. STOKES,

AT NO. 116 NORTH FOURTH STREET, UP STAIRS.

PHILADELPHIA.

Postage, when paid quarterly in advance, five cents.

For "The Friend."

A few Questions and Answers relative to some of the Doctrines and Testimonies of the Society of Friends.

(Continued from page 114.)

Question.—What is the ground of the Society's testimony to plainness of speech, behaviour, and apparel?

Answer.—Primarily because the grace of God, which brings salvation to all who submit to it, teaches to deny all ungodliness and worldly lusts; in which lusts, the changeable fashions and customs of the world have their origin. It is also because the Apostles of our blessed Lord, who were imbued with His Spirit, have strictly forbidden being "conformed to this world;" forbidden also "that outward adorning of broidered hair, or gold, or pearls, or costly array," with "the putting on of (needless) apparel." But instead thereof, the lovely adorning of "the hidden man of the heart, in that which is not corruptible, even the ornament of a meek and quiet spirit, which is in the sight of God of great price." "For after this manner," continues the Apostle, "in the old time, the holy women who trusted in God adorned themselves," &c. Moreover the example of the dear Redeemer, together with the whole spirit of the heart-changing, transforming religion which He introduced, are wholly opposed to this complicity with the spirit of a world that lieth in wickedness, and that crucified the Lord of glory.

Q.—What is the language of the Discipline of the Society touching the leadings of the Spirit of Truth in this matter?

A.—"The Spirit of Truth, which led our ancients to lay aside every thing unbecoming the followers of Christ, still leads in the same path all who submit to its guidance; we therefore earnestly entreat all Friends, to watch over themselves in this respect. The example of our blessed Saviour, his immediate followers, and of virtuous and holy men of all ages, ought to make a due impression on every considerate mind; and especially on such as have had the advantage of a guarded education."

Q.—What further saith the Discipline?

A.—"We tenderly exhort all seriously to consider the plainness and simplicity which the gospel enjoins, and to manifest an adherence to this testimony, in their speech, apparel, furniture, business, salutations and conversation; into which our forefathers were led by the Spirit of Christ, and in conformity with these precepts and example, they patiently suffered long imprisonments, and great persecutions; being convinced that it was their duty thus to bear a testimony against the vain, corrupt spirit of the world."

Q.—Have the consistent members of this Society always been known by their dress?

A.—Yes. From the rise of the Society this has been uniformly the case. The early Friends no doubt, avoiding superfluity, adopted the dress worn by the sober-minded people of that day. Adhering to this, and avoiding, as commanded by the Apostle, conformity to the world in their dress and address—its vanity, fashion and folly—they, as must necessarily be the case, became peculiar from the simple, conscientious rejection of the continual changes taking place around them. Hence it was no affectation of singularity that caused the faithful in that day to differ in their appearance and conduct from those about them; but from beholding the vanity and insincerity of the salutations, customs and corruptions that had obtained in the world: thus heeding the exhortation of the Apostle to the Corinthians:—"I fear, lest by any means as the serpent beguiled Eve through his subtilty, so your minds should be corrupted from the simplicity that is in Christ." From that day to this time Friends have ever been known by their plain dress, plain language, and simplicity of manners.

Q.—Is the testimony relative to dress any more peculiar than other of the Society's testimonies?

A.—No. It is the spirit and corrupt propensities and fashions of this world, either in little things or in great things, that true Friends have ever felt bound to bear testimony against. And what to a Christian mind, it may well be queried, should be the force of customs which originate in the lusts of the flesh, and in the unrenewed, worldly heart of fallen man, when the Saviour has said, "If ye live after the flesh ye shall die," &c., and, "If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in Him!" It is believed that the doctrines and testimonies of this religious Society have their inception from the same root; it therefore almost invariably follows then where the one is ignored or abandoned, the other, as an effect succeeds its cause, is soon relinquished. Hence how frequent and painful have been the instances where giving up this one testimony to plainness of speech, behavior, and apparel, has been followed by increased thirst after other and greater changes, until worldly compliance as a mighty torrent setting in, has carried all before it. And this, primarily, because of disobedience in the day of small things; whereby also the Saviour's warning words have been sorrowfully realized: "If the light that is in thee be darkness how great is that darkness."

Q.—Can a Christian avoid peculiarity of dress and manners?

A.—No. The consistent carrying out of the Apostolic precept, "Be not conformed to this world," must involve this: while the singularity and simplicity of the way of the cross also involves it. This is strongly represented in that striking passage setting forth the language of the ungodly respecting the righteous: "He is not for our turn, he is clean contrary to our doings; he was made to reprove our thoughts; he is grievous unto us even to behold; for his life is not like other men's, his ways are of another fashion." Is it not clear that should any one leave off, or avoid putting on a plain dress because of the dreaded peculiarity, and meanwhile should keep to the kind of dress he already wears, avoiding at the same time conformity to the spirit and customs, and "changeable suits of apparel" of a vain world, that he must necessarily soon become peculiar? For the unchanging tide of fashion must then leave him in the very position he seems now so much to deprecate. The dress of a Friend is as comfortable and inexpensive as any other; how much more consistent, then, for our members to keep to the plain attire and language which the Truth and our Discipline calls for; and which has ever marked the faithful Friend. That it is the Divine will our religious Society should continue to bear these outward evidences of non-conformity to the fashions of the world, the writer has no doubt. It was the testimony of one who had to acknowledge his Saviour in this respect before men, that though he had given up all that seemed called for, except to appear in the simple, distinguishing costume of the Friends, he could make no progress in the narrow way unto salvation till he had brought this required tithe also into the treasury of his Lord.

Q.—Do not some, in order to excuse departures in these respects, speak of them as "little things," and hence as not worthy of regard in the great work of salvation?

A.—Yes: and thereby they practically lower the standard set before us in the Holy Scriptures; and which the Witness for Truth in the heart of each one of us, calls us still to uphold. We believe that as respects our duty to the omniscient Holy One there is nothing that can be called little. It is a declaration of the Saviour himself, "He that is faithful in that which is least, is faithful also in much," &c. And it has been well said to the effect, that many persons approve the principle of self-denial in general, but condemn it in all its particular applications as too minute, too scrupulous, and too severe. Satan is well aware that if he can get the minute units, the sum total will be his own; hence there is nothing small that has a bearing upon the kingdom of Christ, or upon the destinies of a never-dying soul. The disposition in any of our members to lessen these testimonies, together with the unwillingness to comply with them, arises no doubt from the unsubjected and unmortified will and pride of the unrenewed heart, that shrinks from the pain and offence of the cross of Christ.

Q.—Has not the Christian care and concern of the Church for its members extended to true moderation and simplicity in their dwellings, their families, and their manner of living?

A.—Friends as a Society, have ever maintained a testimony against very expensive things, and things superfluous; endeavoring, after the precept of John Woolman, to "appropriate all the gifts of Divine Providence to the purposes for which they were intended." The same pious author also affirms, that "the superfluities of our own houses are against us." A testimony has ever been borne by this Society against display in the adorning of their bodies, in the sumptuousness of their tables, and in the furniture of their dwellings; as well as in the style and costliness of these, beyond what need and convenience call for. The good old way of simplicity and self-denial—the narrow path the Saviour consecrated, and which the righteous in all ages have trodden, leaving us an example that we should follow their steps—is that alone which will secure solid peace and serenity of mind throughout a life wherein we are called to be "strangers and pilgrims" seeking another and a better country; and most especially at its close, when the world with the lusts thereof must forever be parted from.

Q.—What does "Philadelphia Yearly Meeting Advices" set forth on this subject?

A.—"Some who are themselves consistent in their personal appearance and deportment, have gone out into greater show and expense in the furniture of their houses and their style of living, than the proper sphere of the humble follower of Christ will justify. Besides the inconsistency of these departures, we would invite our dear friends to a serious consideration of the effects which such a course of life will be likely to have upon their beloved offspring. If they see the parents gratifying a vain mind in these things, can it reasonably be expected that the children will be disposed to submit to the restraints of the cross in their dress and language; or will they not rather conclude, that if the other is allowed by the parents, the latter cannot be more inconsistent for them. * * * We mourn over the effects which are already apparent in some places and families, and believe that it is highly necessary that a living concern should be raised amongst us, to make a firm stand against the inroads of a worldly spirit in these respects. Copying after others in these things, and pleading the example of others to justify their own departures, or to silence the secret uneasiness raised in the mind, has been, we believe, a fruitful source of weakness and wrong compliance. The day calls loudly upon us to gather home into our own hearts, and consult the divine monitor there, which we have no doubt will bear a faithful testimony for Truth, and lead us to put away every thing which is unbecoming the simplicity, moderation and humility of the self-denying Christian."

(To be continued.)

"God is a spirit; and they that worship Him must worship Him in spirit and in truth." John iv. 24.

For "The Friend."

The Earthquake of 1868.

The following account of the effect produced at Arica, in Peru, by the earthquake of 1868, is taken from Hutchinson's "Two Years in Peru." The British Consul, G. H. Nugent, who lost $60,000 worth of property by the occurrence, and with his wife and children had a narrow escape of ther lives, published a description shortly after in the Panama Star and Herald. He says: "I had hardly time to get my wife and children into the street when the whole of the walls of my house fell. 'Fell' is hardly the word, for they were blown out as if they had been spat at me. At the same time the earth opened probably two or three inches, and belched out dust, accompanied with a terrible stench as of powder. The air became darkened, and I could not see my wife, who was within two feet of me with the children. If this had lasted any time, so to speak, we must have been suffocated; but in about a couple of minutes it cleared off. Collecting my household together, we started for the hills. How we passed through falling houses, when we saw men struck down—some stone dead, others maimed—is to me a mystery; but a merciful Providence was over us. We wended our sad way as well as we could towards the hills, with the earth shaking, making us stagger like drunken people, when a great cry went up to heaven from all the town, 'The sea has retired!' I hurried on, but before I got to the outskirts I looked back, and saw all the vessels in the bay carried out irresistibly to sea, probably with a speed of ten miles an hour. In a few minutes the great onter current stopped; then arose a mighty wave—I should judge about fifty feet high—which swept in with a resistless rush, carrying everything with it in its awful majesty. It brought back all of the shipping, some of the latter turning in circles, but the whole speeding on to an inevitable doom. Meanwhile, the wave had passed in, crushed the mole into atoms, swallowed up my office as a bit in its giant mouth, gulped down the Custom-house, and, rushing along the same street, carried everything before it in its irresistible force. The whole of these things were done quicker than the changes in a Christmas pantomine."

In the same short space of time the Peruvian war-steamer "America" lost about eighty-five hands. The United States steamer "Wateree" escaped with the loss of one life. Having a small draft of water, she was carried bodily on the top of the sea, and landed about a quarter of a mile in-shore of the railway track, distant at the spot more than a quarter of a mile from the sea. The "Fridoma," United States store-ship, was turned bottom upwards. Every soul perished except the captain, surgeon, and paymaster, who were fortunately on shore at the moment. An American barque, laden with guano, was swallowed up along with all her crew, and not a vestige left to tell of her fate. "For nearly two days," adds G. H. Nugent, "we lay on the hills, without covering and without food (his wife, himself, and seven children,) in a constant state of alarm, as the shocks of earthquake were for some days incessant."

One of the most remarkable incidents of this earthquake was the heaving up, in some place not very far from Arica, of a number of bodies, buried in the usual style of interment along this coast—namely, the squatting posture, in which the legs are flexed on the pelvis, and the knees bent in to the chin. They were covered, as usual, with cloth, and padded with cotton flock. They had, as elsewhere, one-half of a bivalve, about the ordinary size of an oyster, attached to the palm of each hand. The usual style of funereal accessories in heads of Indian corn, beans, fishing-nets, needles for making the same, and bits of cloth, were likewise thrown up. From some of the skulls the eyes had been extracted and fishes' eyes put in their place. Of these latter—the eyes of the cuttle-fish—a number were given to me by Bracey R. Wilson, our vice-consul at Callao, who had been many years resident at Arica, and was intimate with all its bearings. This putting of the fish-eyes into the orbits, from which their original eye-balls had been extracted, may perhaps be considered as a symbol of their fish worship.

As soon as it was possible to be despatched, after the earthquake, the United States war-steamer "Powhattan" went from Callao to Arica, being the bearer from the Peruvian Government of funds and stores to relieve the sufferers. Henry Meiggs and Calderon of Lima each contributed 50,000 soles (10,000*l.*) in behalf of the families left destitute by the terrible calamity.

For "The Friend."

John Finch Marsh.

(Continued from page 116.)

Croydon, 7th of 9th mo. 1846.

My dear Friend L. W.—I believe that in writing as well as in speaking, the watch is alike needful, that our words be few. Some more than others have the talent or gift this way, as well as for conversation. I do not consider that I have either, but for the most part feel myself to be under the restraining influence in these particulars, so that oftener than has been the case with me, I believe I ought to have sat in company as one dumb, as it were, with silence—also in writing I cannot at any time and any how take the pen and converse that way. So many are the claims on me, that I cannot attempt a continued correspondence with many that I love and feel interested in, and should be glad at times to salute in this way. Yet, whether at home or abroad, alone or in company, I trust I am not altogether an idle spectator, or indifferent to mark what is passing around me, and especially is my mind involved in the feeling of deep interest on account of our poor Society, yet still a highly favored and interesting People, notwithstanding our degeneracy.

In the quietness of the Tent in these troublous times, there seems to me peculiar safety; not that thereby a shrinking should be encouraged, from showing ourselves and openly confessing on whose side we are; but rather that in the stillness, in quietness and in confidence, a renewal of strength may be experienced—that away from the noise, tumult and activity of the people, we may the more clearly see and know our own individual state and standing, as also to have some clear sense of the real state and condition of things, and distinctly understand the word of command to us as individuals, to do or to leave undone. In this way strength will be given us for whatsoever the hand findeth to do; yea, and not only to do, but also to suffer for the precious cause sake; and patience granted to endure with meekness such portion of fiery trial as may be permitted to come upon us.

It seems to me especially important that those who are given to see and feel deeply the state of things, that they keep as it were a double watch over themselves, that so they may be preserved from doing anything in the haste and zeal of their own spirits, in putting forth their hands in the desire to help the good cause, and for the bettering of things. But rather may these seek in patience to possess their souls. Then I believe deliverance will be wrought for them by that same divine Power which hath already overturned, and will yet overturn, overturn: and oh! that it may continue to be so, until all that may be comparable to the dross and the tin, and the reprobate silver be purely purged away from among this people. Ah! then let us seek to be found watchful, minding the stepping stones, then shall we be enabled to step more, and act as the needs for it may be seen and felt.

I think I can, dear friend, a little enter into feeling with thee, and with thy dear brothers, under the varied conflicts and exercises that attend your path. I believe it is not all that can understand you, nor how it is that you should seem to be so led in this and the other particular. Yet it is not for you to be perplexed in mind as to what may be said and thought about you by others, but your present and future duty and business is, in simplicity and faith, to obey that still small voice which intelligibly speaks in your hearts, saying "Follow me." May you each be strengthened to obey its gentle leadings and guidings in all things.

To E. M.,—It is good to consider and feel ourselves only as day laborers,—as those who must give an account for the work of each day, and for the right occupation of the gift of Time. Surely the due consideration of this is calculated to lead to the feeling of the importance of doing the day's work in the daytime, and of spending each day as though it were to be our last day. So should we experience a sweet and wholesome rest both to mind and body, realizing spiritually and naturally the scripture text, "The sleep of a laboring man is sweet, whether he eat little or much." Also when the head is resting on the pillow at night, how precious to feel the language of the heart to be on this wise, "I will both lay me down in peace and sleep, for thou Lord only makest me to dwell in safety." While thus writing, I am sensible of many short-comings, and far from ranking myself among the number of the diligent laborers; yet I trust a willingness attends my mind to do that little my feeble hands may find to do, and the desire to be strengthened both to do and to suffer the will of our Heavenly Father. We may also be instructed and treasure up as a profitable watchword, the belief that "They also serve who only stand and wait."

(To be continued.)

Service Required.—If we are God's children we are to serve him. It is not enough that we come into his family, sit at his board, enjoy his protection and countenance and call him "Our Father;" but we must prove our filial relation by showing a willingness to engage in his work. "A son that serveth him"—such an one must he be who is a real child.

For "The Friend."

The following extracts from a letter from a valued Friend, are offered for insertion in "The Friend."

William E. Udderzook.

11th mo. 20th, 1874.

The individual who here suffered the extreme penalty of a violated law on the 12th inst., was no ordinary character. Of fine personal appearance, polite manners, more than ordinary intellect, cleanly and neat in habit, and in the prime of life, he was qualified for usefulness in the world, had he not yielded in an evil moment to the voice of the tempter, and fallen to the darkest abyss of human crime.

It was my province to visit him five times in his cell, three times in company with our valued friend E. W., once with R. B., and once with P. W. R. and her sister A. On the first visit with E. W., we thought there was some tenderness of manner shown, as he sat and listened attentively; thanked us for our visit, invited us to come again, and wept much. On the 2d and 3d visits, repeated after some weeks interval, there was less evidence of sensibility, and we concluded but little good could be done so long as there was any hopes of pardon.

At one of the interviews he appeared to be somewhat affected; it was after a very close and pointed communication from our friend R. B. On rising to take our leave, he held on to my hand and said with considerable earnestness of manner in substance as follows, "that he had, at an earlier period of life, been a professor of religion among the Methodists, was a member in full standing, and had known what peace was, but by yielding to temptation had been drawn aside from the path of uprightness," and it is believed, step by step, had descended to the condition he was then in. My feelings at this period were much drawn out towards him, for I fully believe that in this acknowledgment, there was an evident degree of sincerity, and that in the commission of the awful crime with which he stood charged, and of which he was generally believed to be guilty, he had been drawn on from one scene and stage of sin to another, until it became necessary, in order to conceal previous attempted deceptions, that the life of his victim should be taken. I cannot believe that any such result was had in view in the first conception of the scheme of fraud that was designed to be practised on the Life Insurance Companies.

The sequel however was sad—very sad indeed to the feeling mind. The day previous to his execution our dear and valued friends P. and A., yielding to an impression of duty that was no longer to be delayed, in company with I. H. called for me to accompany them on a last visit to the poor man. We went, accompanied by his aged mother, and after sitting down in the narrow cell, I said to him that our dear friends feeling a concern and sympathy for him in his present situation, had called to spend a little time with him. He expressed his thankfulness for the visit, and P. very soon commenced to relieve her heavily burdened mind by telling him plainly, though kindly, of the fears she had entertained for him, and which subsequently proved to be too true. Her communication was unusually searching for her, leaving him no hope but in deep repentance, confession and amendment of life. She was followed by A. in a brief and lively testimony of the same character, but which appeared to have little or no effect on the condemned man. He sat close to me, almost touching, and I was pained to perceive his self-possession and composure. He finally told us that he had been informed by his spiritual advisers, "that if he believed he would be saved;" and "that he now did believe," therefore he would be saved—that the "word of God told him so, and that he believed in that," &c. He was told that a mere assent of the understanding or mind, without a confession and renunciation of the sins of the past life would not, in our opinion, be sufficient for him. He replied that he thought it would, that his spiritual advisers who had been with him daily for a long time had so told him, and he believed them. P. W. R. said to him "that she believed he was under a fearful delusion," and urged repentance upon him before it was too late. Other friends spoke to him in the same strain, but he steadily maintained the position first assumed, saying again "his spiritual advisers had so told him." His manner was self-confident and fearless, indeed the smile of self-assurance was plainly visible on his countenance. We parted from him with sad feelings, and as a last salutation he was desired "Not to give sleep to his eyes nor slumber to his eyelids," &c. In this self-confident manner he next day met death; going on the scaffold with a rose-bud and a sprig of geranium in the button-hole of his coat. No evidence of repentance; no acknowledgment of any particular sin; no signs of contrition—such as was recommended to his attention in the case of the poor publican. His last words being, "All I have to say is, I am a sinner saved by grace, and am accepted of God."

Two lessons of instruction, it appears, may be drawn from this sorrowful case. First, the danger of yielding to the first temptation of going astray from the narrow but safe path of duty. Secondly, the great danger there is of substituting for real repentance and amendment of life, that of a mere nominal belief of what has been done for us, without us—separating the one from the other—which appears to me to be fraught with imminent danger, and setting at naught the Scripture declaration, "Except ye repent ye shall all likewise perish."

How is the influence of others blest to us? not by the brilliance, or even wisdom, of what they say, but by the power of what they themselves are, sent home to the heart by the Divine Spirit!

Thus it is our Heavenly Father in His good providence sends us blessings, sometimes by one, sometimes by another and very differently gifted servant. Let us remember that there were twelve distinct tribes in Israel, each bearing a different standard, each inheriting a different blessing; nor could he who belonged to one transfer himself to another, yet all formed one army, all looked to one sacrifice of atonement; all had the same ark, over which was the same mercy seat, in which was laid up the same holy law, the same sweet manna of promise, and the rod of the same High Priest; and while each stood in his own division, all were united in one great body under one Lawgiver and one Captain of their salvation. Our blessed Lord made the multitude that followed Him through the desert, sit down in their respective companies, and the same food which had one blessing and consecration from Him, was divided by twelve disciples amongst the various companies, and each company seems to have had enough and to spare, for there were twelve baskets left, one to each different disciple. Again, our Lord says, "In my Father's house are many mansions." In the temple, which probably was the outward house referred to, there were above a hundred different apartments, each having its distinct appropriation, uses and privileges. O may we then rejoice in Him, and rejoice in each other; value as most precious His gift to us, without thinking that less precious which His wisdom has bestowed as more appropriate to another. Only let it be our concern that we be indeed of the trees of righteousness, whose twelve manner of fruits our Lord has equally recognized, that we be planted by the rivers of water, that each may bear its own fruit in its season, that our leaf may not wither, but that it may rather be for the healing of those around us. —M. A. Schimmelpennick.

Night Life in the Tropics.

Thomas Belt, a very interesting writer, has published observations he made during a residence in Nicaragua, under the title of "The Naturalist in Nicaragua," from which we make the following extract:

"The fallen trunks of trees were a likely place for beetles, and as I had brought a lantern with me, I stayed to examine them whilst Valasquez rode on to get some food ready. At night many species of beetles, especially longicorns, are to be found running over the trunks, that lie closely hidden in the day time. The night-world is very different from that of the day. Things that blink and hide from the light, are all awake and astir when the sun goes down. Great spiders and scorpions prowl about, or take up advantageous positions where they expect their prey to pass. Cockroaches of all sizes, from that of one's finger to that of one's finger-nail, stand with long quivering antennæ, pictures of alert outlook, watching for their numerous foes, or scurry away as fast as their long legs can carry them; but if they come within reach of the great spider they are pounced upon in an instant, and with one convulsive kick give up the hopeless struggle. Centipedes, wood-lice, and all kinds of creeping things, come out of cracks and crevices; even the pools are alive with water-beetles that have been hiding in the ooze all day, excepting when they came up with a dash to the surface for a bubble of fresh air. Owls and night-jars make strange unearthly cries. The timid deer comes out of its close covert, to feed on the grassy clearings. Jaguars, ocelots, and opossums slink about in the gloom. The skunk goes leisurely along, holding up his white tail as a danger-flag for none to come within range of his nauseous artillery. Bats and large moths flitter around, whilst all the day-world is at rest and asleep. The night speeds on; the stars that rose in the east are sinking behind the western hills; a faint tinge of dawn lights the eastern sky; loud and shrill rings out the awakening shout of chanticleer; the grey dawn comes on apace; a hundred birds salute the cheerful morn, and the night-world hurries to its gloomy dens and hiding-places, like the sprites and fairy elves of our nursery days. It was very dark when I started to return, excepting that flashes of lightning now and then illumined the path; but I left my mule to herself and she carried me safely into Juigalpa, where I found dinner awaiting me."

Selected.

LEAVE ME NOT.

Leave me not, thou guiding Saviour,
Lest my wayward footsteps stray;
Pits and quicksands are around me,
Doubts and fears obstruct the way;
Through the paths so dark and wild
Lead me as a little child.

Leave me not, thou blessed Saviour;
Let me cling to thee for rest;
Oft my feet grow faint and weary;
Oft a sadness fills my breast;
Speak to me in accents mild,
Teach me as a little child.

Leave me not, thou loving Saviour,
Cheer me to my journey's end;
When cold Jordan's breaking o'er me,
Thou wilt be my only friend;
When the waves roll dark and wild,
Hold me as a little child.

Leave me not, dear Friend and Saviour,
As upon the shore I land;
Till within the courts of heaven
Faint and travel-worn I stand;
Let me hear thine accents mild,
Naming me thy ransomed child.

Selected.

AMELIA OPIE'S FAREWELL TO MUSIC.

I have loved thee, O Music, I have tasted thy powers,
And have praised thy sweet song, that has robbed me of hours;
I have said thou couldst lull every feeling of strife,
And counted thee one of the blessings of life.

I have thought that thy anthems of holy delight,
Brought the dawning of day, 'mid the shadows of night;
That the spirit oppressed with unspeakable grief,
Could at least find one refuge, one certain relief.

Ah! thou lily-white wand, and thou rose-bedecked thorn,
Thou betrayest the heart, and then leaves it to mourn;
For thou hast not one comfort, one boon to bestow;
From thy high-mounting anthems, what deep meanings flow.

Then I'll leave thee, I'll shun thee, I'll bid thee farewell,
Nor shall reason nor conscience, henceforward rebel;
Thou shalt rob me no more of sweet silence and rest,
For I have proved thee a trap, a seducer at best.

Yes, thou spirit of darkness transformed out of light,
Thou voluptuous form clad in raiment of white;
It is thine when our passions seem conquered and fled,
But to raise up and cherish the evils we dread.

Then go where vice haunts the thoughtless and gay,
Where the midnight of folly sends reason away;
Where the mind draws its sorrows, its pleasures from thence,
And the heart pants alone for the raptures of sense.

But, Oh! enter thou not where devotion has trod,
To beguile the poor soul from its duty to God;
For the well-springs of life, and the bread of the day,
It is thine not to give but to barter away.

Then may each son of folly, and each daughter of care,
Hear the whisper that bids others reflect and beware;
And ere sin shall seduce them from peace and from rest,
Fly thy arrow whose point would envenom their breast.

For while sin, open sin, leads its thousands astray,
Tens of thousands are borne by false pleasure away;
Let the Christian in heart redeemed and set free,
Never dare to return, Oh! Music to thee.

Rice Culture in America.—A Governor of South Carolina, it is related, had been in Madagascar, and seen the plant cultivated in its hot swamps. He lived in Charleston, on the bay, and it struck him that a marshy spot in his garden might well serve for a plantation of rice. Just then (1694) a vessel put in from Madagascar in distress, whose commander the Governor had formerly known. Her wants were liberally relieved. In gratitude for the kindness he received, the master gave the Governor a bag of rice. It was sown, and produced abundantly. The soil proved singularly favorable for its culture. The marshes of Georgia and South Carolina were soon covered with rice plantations. A large part of the crop was exported to England. In 1724, 100,000 barrels were sent out from South Carolina alone. In 1761, the value of its rice crop was more than $1 500,000. Its white population could not then have been more than forty-five thousand, and it is easy to conceive the tide of wealth that was distributed annually among its small band of planters. They built costly mansions on the coasts and bays, lived in fatal luxury, were noted for their wild excesses, and often fell speedy victims to the fevers of the malarious soil. Indigo, sugar, molasses, tar, pitch, and a great variety of valuable productions added to the wealth of the South. But cotton, which has grown through many vicissitudes to be the chief staple of British and American trade, was, at this period, only cultivated in small quantities for the use of the farmers. It was spun into coarse cloths. But it was not until Whitney's invention, in 1793, that it could be readily prepared for commerce, and to the inventive genius of Connecticut the Southern States owe the larger part of their wealth and political importance.

—Harper's Magazine.

For "The Friend."

Selected from the memorandums of Hannah Williams, dated 12th mo. 30th, 1838:

"I have just copied the account of Isaac Shoemaker from my printed account for our aged friend, Job Haines, at his request, and understanding some time since they were nearly out of print, and feeling much interest in the contents * * * could they not be again printed either in pamphlet form * * or let it enter the columns of "The Friend?"

It seemed to me as I traced word by word those lines, that their use was not at an end: dear Elizabeth, thou knowest they are not 'cunningly devised fables,' but realities, seen and felt in an awful moment, when they were opened and laid on him to declare, as he says, 'at the peril of his soul.' 'That God had opened his mouth on their account, that they might declare it to others.'

* * * Most of the subjects are of importance and general concern to us, as a Society, and would be received afresh, I should hope, not only with deep interest but with gratitude by some poor souls, to believe that a kind Providence so miraculously favored him; and be strengthened thereby to pursue the path of duty."

Some account of Isaac Shoemaker, of the township of Cheltenham, in the county of Philadelphia (son of John Shoemaker of the same place) who departed this life on the 31st day of the Seventh month, 1779, in the twenty-fifth year of his age.

He was a young man of an active disposition and vigorous constitution, who in the general tenor of his conduct and conversation was preserved from what in the world's estimation is accounted gross or immoral; yet in his company, dress and deportment evidenced a leaning to levity, and fondness for things in their nature vain and unsubstantial; of the emptiness and corrupting tendency whereof he was at times made sensible, by the faithful admonitions of the Divine Monitor in his own mind, as appears from some of his expressions near his departure out of time; when through the renewed extendings of heavenly favor, he was mercifully visited and awakened from a state of insensibility; under the quickening influences whereof, he had to warn and admonish his former associates and others, against indulging themselves in the vanities and follies of a perishing world; some of whom having been measurably reached thereby, have signified a desire that the weighty expressions uttered by him in that solemn season, might be communicated and diffused for the benefit of the youth of his acquaintance and others; which if weighed with becoming seriousness and depth of attention, might minister profitable instruction, and tend to lasting edification. This instance of heavenly condescension and divine regard affording renewed cause in humble admiration to say, "Great and marvellous are thy works, Lord God Almighty! just and true are thy ways, thou King of Saints!" Rev. xv. 3.

About ten days before his decease, between the hours of eight and nine in the evening he fell into a state of silence, became speechless and incapable of bodily action, his mouth being open, and his jaws set; thus he lay nearly three hours. After which appearing like one raised from the dead, under great concern and exercise of mind he began to speak with a strong voice, to the astonishment of those in company; saying, "Oh! that I could tell you what I have seen and underwent, it would pierce the hardest heart amongst you; perhaps some may think there is no hell, but I have to tell you there is a hell, and a dreadful one too. And there is a heaven, and a sweet one too, where angels clothed in white robes sit at the right hand of God singing praises to his great name; I have to declare it unto you at the peril of my soul; but some will not believe though an Apostle should rise from the dead. You may think I am not in my senses, but I knew you all as you came into the room, am perfectly in my senses, and God hath opened my mouth on your account, and that you might declare it unto others. Narrow is the way that leads to life, and few there be that find it; but broad is the way that leads to destruction, and many are going in that way." (Proceeding in a bemoaning accent) "I have lived to this age without knowing what God really is until this night. I have been often visited, but did kick and rebel. Three years ago I had a sight that I should be brought to the brink of the grave, but it was not shown me whether I should recover or not; but if I do, am desirous that I might be made an instrument to convert thousands into the right way. I wonder (continued he) that I should undertake to be the head of a family and not capable to teach them their duty towards God; there is a necessity for parents and heads of families to bring up their children and others under their care in plainness of speech and apparel, keeping humble, endeavoring to impress their tender minds with a sense of their duty towards God. Many let their children run about the streets, hearing (which is often used in this land) the holy name of Jesus taken in vain. My parents when I was young, were drawn so much into the cumbering things of this world that they did not teach me, as they ought to have done, my duty towards God!" To his wife he uttered himself thus: "My dear consort, my bosom friend, mourn not for me, there are many difficulties and trials to be met with in our passing through this world: retire to thy father's house, live a sober, virtuous life: If it should please God to take me out of the world this night, I would have none to lay it to heart, no, not to shed a tear."

He was divers times drawn forth in fervent supplication; and expressed himself on this wise, "Oh! Lord Jesus, be pleased to look down with an eye of pity upon me; on my father; be with him and comfort him in his old age under the afflictions and trials that may be suffered to come upon him: On my aged mother; be her strength and support all the days of her life; who has been a kind and tender mother to me all my days; and hath since my sickness, in my distress, pointed out the right path for me to turn into, when I was ready to fall into despair, under a sense of my manifold transgressions, directing me to look forward toward my dear Redeemer, whose blood is sufficient to wash away all our sins, which I have experienced the truth of. Be pleased, if it be thy will, look down upon mankind universally, reconcile all men to one another and to thyself, that there may be no more blood spilt in this land, if it be thy blessed will; not my will but thine be done." Also singing praises to God for his many great mercies to him.

Being desirous of seeing divers of his acquaintance not present, he said, "They know not what God really is; some of them have in their breasts the spirit of envy and bitterness." Under much concern that they might be redeemed from that wrathful spirit, he earnestly besought the Almighty to turn their hearts to love and good will. "I wonder (said he) that God hath not sent his just judgments and destroyed this place, for wickedness and hardness of heart." He desired to be made subject to the divine will, and said, "I have no will of my own, not my will but thine be done." To his brothers he said, "Remember your Creator in the days of your youth, dress plain and walk humbly before the Lord; never mind what your comrades say, for we must all become fools for Christ's sake that we may be made wise. Make him your standard, keep the world under your feet; attend meetings with your father and mother, both on first and other days of the week; when met, turn your minds inward and solidly think what you came about, and endeavor to know God for yourselves; do not as I have done; I often went to meetings and sometimes did think on those things, but soon let them slip, letting my mind out at fine clothes and gay dress, contriving how to exceed in grandeur." To his apprentice boy he said, "I have heard thee use many idle words and passed it by without proper notice, I beg thee may break thyself of them, or God will pronounce his judgments against thee." Desiring the company to withdraw out of the room and to be left alone in stillness, he said, "I think I have done with flesh, I have said all that I have to say unto you;" then lifting up his hands he said, "Oh! holy Jesus how sweet I feel thee!" All being gone out of the room, he devoutly and loudly desired (in the hearing of some friends in the adjoining room) that God might be pleased to stop the effusion of blood.*

* This was during the revolutionary war.

After which he appeared like one whose mind was redeemed from the earth, and much swallowed up in a sense of that sweetness he had been so marvellously favored with; continuing in this frame of spirit to the close of his time; and we doubt not but he now rests in peace and quiet with the Lord.

The Foliage of Autumn.

Autumnal Coloring.–Trees of the Middle States.–Indian Summer.–Mission of the Leaves.

There is more romance than reality in the popular supposition that the frost, by some subtle alchemy, transmutes the emerald beauty of summer into the golden splendor of autumn; on the contrary, its early appearance mars the lovely processes of dissolution in the vegetable kingdom, foliage in times of its severe visitation never assuming the brilliancy that characterizes it in seasons of prolonged mildness, but dropping off a withered, rusty brown. Witness the superb coloring of the present season, so remarkable for its balmy, soft weather. Never was Nature more royally apparelled! The beech, ash, elm, birch, hickory and tulip trees have become luminous centres, from which flow streams of yellow glory lighting up the inmost recesses of the forests which all summer have been hidden in twilight gloom. The maples burn with a rose-red glow, as if sudden flames consumed them; or flicker in leaves of gold dappled with green, and streaked with crimson veins. Even the sober old apple trees have put on a ruddy dress, and the wild cherry appears in pale yellow and green. The horse-chestnuts are pyramids of russet gold deepening into vivid orange; the dogwoods show a rich purple; and the sturdy old oaks wear a bronze coat of mail glittering in the sunlight like some mighty, ancient warriors. Vines trail over the hedges like creeping fires, and the sumachs are regally purple from velvety cone to root. Here and there a streak of tawny yellow, a stain of russet brown, darkens the pure gold and scarlet of the foliage that else would dazzle and weary the eye, giving also that variety which is ever pleasing. In addition also, each separate color has its different shades, so that one may discover in autumn leaves every tint from the palest gold to the most vivid orange and scarlet, from the faintest rose to the richest purple, from tawny yellow to chocolate brown.

At this time of the year the leaves have almost fulfilled their mission (in many senses quite), and death comes to them, not as to shuddering humanity, wrapped in icy terrors, but gently and lovingly, till leaf after leaf flutters softly down, exhaling its spirit in balmy odors to the air that gave it, and returning its substance to its mother Earth. In soberer words, the leaf has absorbed carbonic acid from the air, has taken up its carbon by the aid of heat and light to cause first its own growth, then the addition of woody fibre to the twig and branch, and lastly the production of nutriment for flowers, fruit and seed, in the mean time breathing out pure oxygen, accomplishing a fourfold work. When the seed of a plant or a tree ripens, the leaf has fulfilled its mission, decay sets in, the quality of the leaf changes, and various colors are reflected according to species, location and weather.

Strangely enough, the leaf in its slow death presents the very same hues that characterize its earliest stages when budding in the spring-time of the year; a vernal forest showing the same purples, reds, yellows and browns, in softened shades, however, that lend the charm to autumn scenery. A close observer and lover of Nature readily distinguishes the different species of trees, even before the leaves have quite appeared, by the various tints of their budding and blossoming. Where a crimson color prevails in the spring time it will be found to proceed from woods where maples predominate; where a solemn purple, from clumps of elm trees; where a silvery lustre intershaded with lilac and crimson, from forests of red oak; and so on. Many trees producing yellow leaves never show a single red one; but trees producing red leaves frequently exhibit more or less yellow and orange—for example, the many varieties of maple flaunting, in one specimen, scarlet, crimson, pink, yellow and orange spotted with brown.

The gradations of color in autumnal foliage are always in the order of those of sunrise, being in every case from dark to lighter hues. Warm days hasten this gradation by fading the rich tints to paler, uncertain ones, being in degree almost as destructive to their beauty as early frost. Both agencies drying the leaf, cause it to drop from the tree before the beautiful processes of decay are accomplished. By a wise provision of Nature these leaves, so lovely in life and death, having performed their mission on earth—namely, the production of woody fibre, flowers, fruit and seed, and the exhalation of moisture and oxygen—now proceed to their last and not least uses, the restoration to the earth of certain salts drawn from it; and in their further decay the giving out of carbonic acid to be taken up by the rain and held in solution, trickling down to aid in dissolving many of the constituents of the soil, preparing them for assimilation by the roots of the trees during the coming season. Some years ago the middle States, after the fall of the leaves, regularly enjoyed a season of delicious weather, varying in length, and denominated Indian Summer. According to authentic accounts it did not arrive until November frosts had stripped the leaves entirely from the trees, and then it reigned uninterruptedly from ten to fifteen days, and sometimes longer, undisturbed by wind or rain, a silvery haze veiling the landscape, and fruity odors perfuming the air. This lovely visitor rarely if ever appears among us at the present day. A counterfeit, or rather a phantom of its past beauty, robed in mists, sojourns with us a few days, and we call it Indian Summer. The causes of its disappearance are not precisely known, remaining a matter of much conjecture; but certain it is that the occasional short periods of mild weather we experience in our present autumns are not the true Indian Summer, as mild days occur in spring, autumn, and even winter every year, but without any regularity, whereas that peculiar season came punctually after the fall of the leaf in November. The most probable cause of its non-appearance is the wholesale destruction of our forests, allowing strong winds to sweep freely over the continent, and thus counteracting any influence that might tend to produce an Indian Summer in any locality. We must bid farewell to our cherished yearly anticipations of the coming of that beautiful, dreamy season, and be thankful for the lovely, mist-veiled days that "come like angel visits, few and far between," in this age of prosaic improvement, to remind us somewhat of the poetic past of tradition.—N. Y. Evening Post.

For "The Friend."

Extract of a letter, written by a young man of Chester county (not a member among Friends) a short time previous to his last illness, to D. J. H., of Philadelphia, and found among his papers.

"Dear D.:—I could give a long list of pleasures derived from a letter; I hope the principal one proceeds from the injunction, "Love one another"—that should be foremost. The days that are passed, have been too much devoted to sense; of course their pleasing recollection savors much of looking back to Egypt, and has a tendency to retard the journey through the wilderness. And pride, I am confident, is not consistent with the Christian character; but to love one another, is to obey a command from one who loves us more than we love ourselves—who has been emphatically and truly called "Love." My moralizing, you say, is in unison with your own thoughts; this I was truly pleased to hear, for I would wish to write to my friends and do not wish to offend them, by forcing that upon their notice of which they were not desirous; nor do I wish to write in my former light manner. I derive much real solid happiness in placing my thoughts on paper, when the thoughts are such as I feel are not displeasing to my Maker. Writing, concentrates my ideas; they do not fly so fast by me; and from some of my thoughts I derive improvement. I want them all to be of such a cast, that will tend to keep my eye single to that Almighty Being who has bestowed so much love on me, and who permits me to have a hope, that He will not cast me off forever. May I be a willing instrument in His hand to work out my salvation; to realize that hope, with His love, His strength, all things can be done; without it we can do nothing. My good friend, permit me to advise you to encourage all such reflections as have a tendency to direct your mind to the Most High. How much more noble is it for those who are possessed of health and a capacity to enjoy the pleasures of this world, to forsake these vain pleasures and become passive children of their Heavenly Creator, than for one like me. I can no longer enjoy the pleasures of time and sense, and have but little merit for abstinence. I feel much ashamed of myself. When health was mine, I floated carelessly on the stream of time, amusing myself with the bubbles within my reach, nor cast a thought of thankfulness to Him who in His wisdom had created me, and in His mercy had been my stay, and whose love was over me. When He afflicted me I repined, nor thought myself deserving of the affliction. With the promise of returning health my desires turned to all my former follies, and if I had in mind consented to do better, I willingly forgot it. Desirable as health is, I would not have it, nor wish it granted me unless strength to withstand temptation was mercifully granted with it. I know I am weak, miserably weak and sinful, and am thankful that the chastening hand of the Almighty, in mercy restrained me. It has made me seriously reflect on my past life and on my future prospects; upon neither could I dwell with satisfaction. Could I, who had during all my previous life been absorbed by the things of this world, expect "to reap where I had not sown?" Could I expect to find treasure where I had not laid it up? Dreary indeed was the prospect before me, but not without hope; that, still was mercifully left me. Often indeed am I reminded of the necessity of watchfulness; "watch and pray," was indeed a necessary injunction. We are so liable to enter into temptation, being beset on every side, and unless the Lord is our strength, we must inevitably become transgressors. In our sinful states, we fancy that if no heinous crimes are laid to our charge, if we are not murderers, and act strictly as the world calls honest, go to meetings, &c., we are doing well, are in fact Christians; this is but tithing, mint, anise and cummin; there must be something more; we must become the willing instruments of the Lord; we must forego our own wills: "Not my will, but thine be done," we must be willing to say at all times, and to feel too that the worship of the lip is nothing; the heart is seen, and if the heart and lips are not in accordance, it is worse than vanity; I am not sure it is not blasphemy. You have known much of life; you would say I had been an orderly, civil kind of personage, and that such as me were to be accounted tolerably good Christians; I wronged no man willingly, if I did I regretted it, and on reflection was willing to acknowledge my error; I cannot account myself guilty of what the world would call a crime of any moment, this you know; yet, my dear fellow, I feel, and feel it strongly, that I have much to answer for. I have trifled with time; I have accounted as things of course, the mercies of the Most High, and never felt whilst experiencing his unbounded mercies, that I was an ungrateful, thankless wretch. Mercies and blessings could not win me to Him—I contemned them all. In the pride of my heart, I thought I had nothing but my due. It was reserved for affliction to cause me to see myself in my true colors, and I think I feel truly thankful to the Almighty for not withholding his chastening hand, and sincerely hope that He will make known to me His will, and grant me strength to do it: that He may soften and bow down my stubborn heart, until it shall become such an one as shall be an acceptable offering to Him. A broken and a contrite heart, O God, thou wilt not despise.

ELIPHAZ D. CHEYNEY."

A Pregnant Gift.—Sometimes a gift is so wisely conditioned that its value is incalculably enhanced. Alfred Cope's munificent offer of $25,000 to the Zoological Society of Philadelphia is an illustration. In accepting it, as they have just done by an almost unanimous vote, the Society are pledged to exclude forever from the premises, all malt, vinous or spirituous liquors, and to prohibit any questionable or illegitimate exhibition or performance by persons or animals. These provisions are to be embodied in the Constitution, together with a clause forbidding their repeal unless with the consent of the trustees of the fund. The Zoological Garden has already become a favorite resort, being at once a means of amusement and of education; and the guarantee now afforded that it will continue to be a place which none need shrink from visiting, is grateful to the feelings of a very large class.—Nat. Baptist.

Guizot's Will.

A passage from the will of Guizot contains the following beautiful and elevating religious sentiments:

"I die," he writes, "in the bosom of the Christian Reformed Church of France, in which I was born, and in which I congratulate myself upon having been born. But whilst remaining always within the union of that Church, I have made use of the liberty of conscience which it accords to its members in their relations with God, and which it invokes itself as the authority for its own foundation. I have examined and I have doubted. I once believed in the sufficiency of the powers of the human mind for the solution of the problems presented to it by the universe and by man, and in the sufficiency of the powers of the human will for the regulation of the life of man in accordance with its laws and the end of its moral being.

"But after a long life and much action and reflection, I became and remain convinced that neither man nor the universe suffice to explain themselves nor to regulate themselves naturally and of themselves, by virtue alone either of the permanent laws to which they are here subjected, or of the powers of the human will which there find their legitimate field of action. It is my firm conviction that God, who created man and the universe, governs, preserves and modifies them both by these general laws which we call natural, and by those special acts which we call supernatural—emanations, like the general laws, of His own perfect free will and wisdom and infinite power, and which we are permitted to recognize in their effects, but interdicted from understanding in their essence and their design.

"I become, then, as it were a child again; remaining, indeed, ever firmly attached to that reason and liberty which I received from God, and which constitute my highest honor and privilege upon this earth, but returning to think myself a little child under the hand of God and sincerely resigned to accept my own large share of ignorance and weakness.

"I believe in God, and I adore him without seeking to understand Him. I see Him present and acting, not only in the permanent regulation of the universe and in the inner life of souls, but in the history of human associations, and especially in the Old and New Testaments, monuments of the Divine revelation and action through the mediation and sacrifice of our Saviour Jesus Christ for the salvation of mankind.

"I bow before the mysteries of the Bible and the Gospel, and hold myself aloof from the scientific discussions and solutions by which men have attempted to explain them.

"I feel confident that God permits me to call myself a Christian, and I am convinced that, amidst that light upon which it cannot now be long before I enter, we shall discern clearly the purely human origin and vanity of the greater part of our discussions here below respecting things divine."

Spider Killers.—By general observation spider are considered by entomologists to have a specific office, viz.: to keep down the dangerous multiplication of winged insects. They occasionally seize a worm or stray caterpillar, if they happen to encroach upon their webbed territory. But entrapping flies is their forte. Insignificant and solitary as they are, we could not dispense with their quiet services. Let spiders strike, and for a single month in summer refuse to set their traps, we could hardly defend ourselves against armies of noxious insects that would take possession of our dwelling. But useful as they are, unobtrusive and vigilant as sentinels in cellars, garrets, under the floor, in the hiding places of straying bugs, moths and creeping things, they have their enemies, and are subject to the rigorous demands of the same law under which they act.

Just in the busy season of spider activity, when they are slaughtering their thousands, a peculiar fly is let loose by nature to limit their multiplication. It is about the size of a wasp. In fair weather they may be seen constructing their cells of mud against walls and sunny dry places. They are really prison dungeons. In company or alone they hunt wherever spiders are found, seizing them adroitly, and away they fly with their prisoners, which are forced into the cells, sometimes three or four in one. When secure, they drop in an egg and then plaster over the top securely. When the egg hatches, the young worm has an ample supply of food all ready for consumption.

The above puts us in mind of an incident that happened twenty-five years ago. When a boy, hunting bird's nests, we observed a wasp (yellow jacket) drop into the web of a large spider. As this was something new, we watched the movements of both very closely. The wasp lay perfectly still. The spider came out and apparently bound him fast, and as he was turning to enter his den as usual in such cases, the wasp turned and took hold of the spider, cut his legs off, took him in his mouth, and flew away with him to his nest. The whole was the work of a moment.—Farmers' Journal.

Giving in Secret.—When thine alms must be public, let thy intention be secret. Take no delight in having the eyes of men on thee, yea, rather count it a pain, and still eye God alone, for He eyes thee. And remember it, even in public acts of charity, and other such like, "He sees in secret." Though the action be no secret, the spring, the source of it is, and He sees by what weights the wheels go, and He still looks upon that; views thy heart, the hidden bent and intention of it, which man cannot see. So, then, though in some cases thou must be seen to do, yet in no cases do to be seen; that differs much, and where that is, even the other will be as little as may be. Thou wilt desire rather, and, where it can be, still choose to do unseen, that others should know as little of thy charity, as may be, besides the party that receives it; yea, if it might be, that even the party might not know; as he that stole in money under his sick friend's pillow; yea, to let thy very self know as little as possible, as our Saviour expresses it, "Let not thy left hand know what thy right hand doeth." An excellent word! Reflect not on it as thy action, with self-pleasing; that is the left hand in view; but look on God's goodness to thee; that thou art not in the receiver's room, and he in thine; that He makes thee able to relieve another, which many are not, and, being able, makes thee willing, which far fewer are. For both thou art to bless Him, and be the humbler the more thou dost. Take the very giving to thy distressed brother as a gift from God, a further obligation on thee. Though He is pleased to become thy debtor for a further reward, yet, truly the thing itself is His gift, and a great one, as David acknowledges excellently in their offering to the temple. "But who am I, and what is my people, that we should be able to offer so willingly after this sort? For all things come of Thee, and of Thine own have we given Thee." Not only the power, but the will is from God—both "of Thine own which we give Thee."—Leighton.

The Greatness of London.—In few cities are there more than half a dozen railway stations. In London there at least 150. Some of the railways never pass beyond the limits, and of one, the Tottenham and Hampstead, Punch says: "No one ever travels by, as no one knows where it begins or where it ends. The Metropolitan and other intramural railways run trains every three or five minutes, and convey from twenty to fifty millions of passengers annually. Clapham is the great south-western junction, and through it 700 trains pass every day. Its platforms are so numerous, and its underground passages and overground bridges so perplexing, that to find the right train is a difficult thing." As a proof of the expansive nature of London traffic, it was supposed that, when the Metropolitan Railway was opened, all the city to Paddington omnibusses would be run off the ground, but, although it carried forty-three millions of passengers last year, it has been found necessary to increase the number of omnibusses on the southern route, and they yield one per cent. more revenue than before the opening of the railway.

Besides the railways, there are some fourteen or fifteen thousand tram-cars, omnibusses and cabs traversing the streets; there are lines of omnibusses known only to the inhabitants of their own localities—such as those across the Isle of Dogs, from Poplar to Milwall; from London bridge, along Tooley street to Dockhead, &c. The London Omnibus Company have 563 omnibusses, which carry fifty millions of passengers annually.

It is more dangerous to walk the streets of London than to travel by railway or cross the Atlantic. Last year 125 persons were killed, and 2,513 injured by vehicles in the streets.

Other instances of the immensity of the population of London, are that three-quarters of a million of business men enter the city in the morning and leave it in the evening for their suburban residences. There are 10,000 policemen, as many cab drivers, and the same number of persons connected with the post-office, each of whom, with their families, would make a large town. When London makes a holiday, there are several places of resort, such as the Crystal Palace, the Zoological Garden, Kew Garden, &c, which absorb from thirty thousand to fifty thousand visitors each. The cost of gas for lighting is £2,500,000 annually; the water supply is 100,000,000 of gallons per diem.

What London will eventually become it is idle to predict. It already stands in four counties; and is striding onward to a fifth (Herts). The probability is that by the end of the century the population will exceed five millions, and will have quintupled itself in the century. Should it progress at an equal rate in the next it will in the year 2000 amount to the enormous aggregate of twenty-five millions; and the question that naturally arises is how could such a multitude be supplied with food. But the fact is that the more its population increases the better they are fed. In the Plantagenet days, when the population was not a third of a million, famines were of frequent occurrence, but now, with the command of the pastures, the harvests and the fisheries of the world, starvation becomes an almost impossible eventuality even with twenty-five millions of mouths to feed. —London City Press.

The Scripture speaks of the church as clear as the sun, fair as the moon, terrible as an army with banners. The persons to whom I now allude, on the contrary always tried to avoid speaking of Christianity (as though they were ashamed of it), professing a sort of belief in the whole, yet denying it piecemeal. It seemed as if their only study was to agree as far as possible with its enemies, as far as possible to modify its practices, running down and ridiculing those who were Christians in deed and in truth. This gradually inspired me with a deep feeling that Christianity could not be true, since even those who professed its doctrines were ashamed of it. I record this because I wish that all who name the name of Christ may be indeed aware that those who do not confess do virtually deny Him. Woe be to those who think they are servants of the king, and yet wear the colors of the usurper! "Whosoever shall confess me before men, him will I confess before my Father which is in Heaven. But whosoever shall deny me before men, him will I also deny before my Father which is in Heaven."—M. A. Schimmelpennick.

Selfishness.—Teachers cannot too watchfully direct their efforts against the growth of selfishness in the hearts of their children. We often see things which are good in themselves, done in such a way as seriously to injure the doer. A child is encouraged to memorize the Scripture, or to maintain a punctual attendance in class, or at church, or to render some service to the school or the church; the chief motive kept before it being to excel others, and secure applause.

Unconsciously teachers often vitiate the motives, and so mar the character of their pupils, by emphasizing the lower and slighting the higher and nobler aims which should be set and kept before the young.

"Wait on the Lord; be of good courage, and He shall strengthen thine heart; wait, I say, on the Lord." Psalm xxvii. 14.

THE FRIEND.

TWELFTH MONTH 5, 1874.

SUMMARY OF EVENTS.

FOREIGN.—A storm of great violence prevailed the 29th ult. on the east coast of England and Scotland. A number of vessels were wrecked with heavy loss of life.

A London dispatch of the 30th says: A circular letter from Archbishop Manning was read in all the Catholic churches of this diocese yesterday, declaring that all persons who do not accept the dogma of Papal Infallibility cease to be Catholics.

The Pall Mall Gazette has a special dispatch from St. Petersburg stating that Russia is desirous of enlarging the scope of the new conference on the international usages of war by making the resolutions applicable to a wider territory. The South American States will be invited to participate in the deliberations. It is also hoped that the United States of North America will be represented at the conference.

In view of the Arctic expedition about to be fitted out by the British government, Lady Franklin has renewed her offer of a reward of $10,000 for the recovery of official records of Sir John Franklin's expedition.

On the 30th ult. the Bank of England made a further advance in the rate of interest. It is now six per cent.

London, 11th mo. 30th.—Consols, 93. U. S. new five per cents, 103¼.

Liverpool.—Middling uplands cotton, 7 9-16*d.*

Municipal elections were held in Paris on the 29th ult., with the following result: the Radicals elected 53 of their candidates, the moderate Republicans 10, and the Conservatives 11. Second ballots will be required in six districts.

Ex-President Thiers declares that Italian unity has been irrevocably accomplished, and that if France wishes to preserve the friendship of Italy, she must recognize this fact, and not adopt the clerical policy toward that country. President MacMahon must also recognize the fact that France is neither Bonapartist nor monarchical, but republican.

The National Assembly met on the 30th, and held a brief sitting. Political parties have been busy preparing for this event, and some time will be required to show what has been the effect of all the negotiations and caucuses. The Count de Chambord exhorts his supporters to do nothing which may delay the restoration of the monarchy.

The civil war in Spain continues with no prospect of its early termination. The Carlists have again appeared with a strong force before Irun, and resumed the bombardment of the place. Another detachment of the Carlist army has made an attack on San Marcial, but were repulsed. A Madrid dispatch of the 29th says: President Serrano leaves for the north this week, where vigorous operations are anticipated. The weather has been very stormy, delaying the movements of the army. It is officially announced that General Saballa, the Marquis Villadarso and other prominent persons, have abandoned the cause of Don Carlos.

A Berlin dispatch of the 29th says: Mass was celebrated to-day for the first time in this city by a priest of the "Old Catholic" church. The congregation numbered about three hundred.

The largest German University at the present time is that of Vienna, with 3,615 students and 227 professors. The University of Berlin has 2,980 students and 187 professors, that of Leipzig 2,800 students and 140 professors. At Halle there are 1,055 students, at Breslau 1,036, and at Munich 1,031. There are 22 other German Universities, the largest of which is Tubingen with 921 students.

In the new Swiss penal code, capital punishment is entirely abolished. Voluntary homicide only is classed as murder and punishable with ten to twenty years' solitary confinement. Premeditated murder is classed as assassination and punishable with solitary confinement for life. Poisoning is punished with the latter penalty, whether death is caused at once or by slow poison.

The session of the Italian Parliament was opened in Rome on the 23rd ult., by King Victor Emanual. His speech related mainly to the re-organization of the financial system of the country. He urged on Parliament zealous prosecution of the work of reorganization. Grants would be required only for such expenditures as were evidently necessary. As for foreign relations, they were on an excellent footing. Italy at present was friendly with all the Powers. Their friendship was a recompense for the firmness and moderation shown by Italians. The king concluded with an expression of gratitude for Divine assistance.

Civil war continues in the Argentine republic. The insurgent chief, Arredendo, has defeated the government forces under General Rocca, capturing his artillery and taking many prisoners.

The religious excitement growing out of the conflict between the Catholic clergy and civil authorities, has created serious disturbances in the Brazilian provinces of Pernambuco and Parahiba. The sympathizers with the Bishops of Para and Pernambuco, who were recently sentenced for violations of the laws of the empire, have made riotous demonstrations and bid defiance to the local authorities.

The Ballarat (Australia) Star mentions that a nugget of gold weighing 11 oz. 4 dwt., had been picked up in Macarthur street by a poor laboring man who accidentally struck his foot against the lump of gold as it lay partially buried in the ground.

UNITED STATES.—During the year ending 6th mo. 30th, 1874, 9,530,872 acres of the public lands were disposed of, a quantity less by 3,499,733 acres than that disposed of the preceding year.

The interments in New York last week numbered 521.

In Philadelphia there were 266 interments in the week ending the 21st ult., and 291 in that ending on the 28th ult.

The total expenses of the city of New York for 1875, as reported by the Board of Apportionment, will be $25,644,676. The expenses of Philadelphia, as estimated by the Comptroller, will be $13,947,435. In New York the annual cost of the Fire Department is $1,320,000, in Philadelphia $506,900. Education in New York $3,303,000, Philadelphia $1,708,750.

According to the report of the Commissioner of Pensions, there were on the 30th of 6th mo. last, 102,457 army invalid pensioners on the roll. The aggregate annual pay of this class was $10,058,377.

The population of Michigan, according to a State census taken this year, numbers 1,366,808, being an increase of 152,526 since the census of 1870. Ten of the oldest agricultural counties had lost population, and it was found the increase had been chiefly in the cities and towns.

The Markets, &c.—The following were the quotations on 11th mo. 30th. New York.—American gold 112⅛. U. S. sixes, 1881, registered, 119⅞; do. coupons, 120⅛; do. 1868, registered, 119; coupons, 119¾; five per cents 1881, 112⅞. Superfine flour, $4.10 a $4.50; State extra, $5.05 a $5.25; finer brands, $5.50 a $10.50. No. 2 Chicago spring wheat, $1.12; No. 3 do. $1.08 a $1.10; red western, $1.25; amber do., $1.28 a $1.29; white Michigan, $1.31 a $1.40. State barley, $1.25 a $1.43. Oats, 67 a 72 cts. Western mixed corn, 92 a 94 cts.; new yellow, 88 a 91 cts. Philadelphia.—Uplands and New Orleans cotton, 14¾ a 15½ cts. Superfine flour, $4 a $4.25; extras, $4.50 a $5; higher grades, $6.50 a $7.50. Red wheat, $1.20 a $1.24; amber, $1.25 a $1.28; white, $1.30 a $1.37. Rye, 97 cts. a $1. Old corn, 94 a 95 cts.; new, 80 a 88 cts. Oats, 64 a 67 cts. Lard, 14¼ a 14½ cts. Sales of 2800 beef cattle at 7 a 7½ cts. per lb. gross for extra, and 5½ a 6¾ cts. for fair to good, and 4 a 5 cts. for common. About 15,000 sheep sold at 4 a 6½ cts. per lb. gross, and 5,000 hogs at $10 a $10.25 per 100 lb. net for corn fed. Chicago.—No. 1 spring wheat, 94 cts.; No. 2 do., 92¼ cts. No. 2 mixed corn, 70½ cts. No. 2 oats, 52½ cts. Lard, $13.40 per 100 lbs. St. Louis.—No. 2 winter red wheat, $1.08 a $1.09; No. 3 fall red, $1.02 a $1.03. No. 2 mixed corn, 68 a 70 cts. Oats, 55 a 56 cts.

WANTED.

A Governess for Westtown Boarding School, to enter on her duties at the opening of the next Session.

Apply to

Elizabeth C. Scattergood, West Chester, Pa.
Hannah Richardson, Wilmington, Del.
Hannah Evans, No. 322 Union St., Philada.
Lydia L. Walton, Moorestown, N. J.

WANTED.

A Friend to teach London-Britain Preparative Meeting School. Apply to Joel Thompson, Jr., Strikerville P. O., Chester Co., Pa.

FRIENDS' ASYLUM FOR THE INSANE.

Near Frankford, (Twenty-third Ward,) Philadelphia.

Physician and Superintendent—JOSHUA H. WORTHINGTON, M. D.

Applications for the Admission of Patients may be made to the Superintendent, or to any of the Board of Managers.

DIED, after a few hours painful illness, on the morning of the 18th of 10th month, 1874, RACHEL C., wife of Job Huestis, a member of Middletown Monthly Meeting, Ohio, in the 36th year of her age. After it was apparent her end was near, the power of articulation was so far suspended little could be learned through that channel, but for several months before she had at different times expressed doubts about remaining here long, and towards the latter part of the time frequently alluded to it; and a few days before her death, with calmness and composure said, "I do not expect to stay here long."

——, in this city, at the residence of his daughter Mary L. Smedley, on the 18th of 11th month, SAMUEL LARGE, in the 75th year of his age, a member of New York Monthly Meeting. "Blessed are those servants, whom the Lord when he cometh, shall find watching."

WILLIAM H. PILE, PRINTER,
No. 422 Walnut Street.

THE FRIEND.

A RELIGIOUS AND LITERARY JOURNAL.

VOL. XLVIII. SEVENTH-DAY, TWELFTH MONTH 12, 1874. NO. 17.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY.

Price Two Dollars per annum, if paid in advance. Two dollars and fifty cents, if not paid in advance.

Subscriptions and Payments received by

JOHN S. STOKES,

AT NO. 116 NORTH FOURTH STREET, UP STAIRS.

PHILADELPHIA.

Postage, when paid quarterly in advance, five cents.

For "The Friend."

John Griffith.

"The memory of the just is blessed." In reading again lately "The Journal of John Griffith," I have thought it might be acceptable as well as profitable to the readers of "The Friend," to have thus revived some of the early experiences—the precious, tendering visitations, the withstanding, through Holy Help, closely besetting temptations, the covenant of love and espousal, with the blessing of the Lord on his early seeking Him—as well as the lively evidence of the more mature faith and faithfulness, in humility and watchfulness, unto the perfection of holiness in the fear of God; both of which are so refreshingly and instructively represented in this good man's life. Changes and vicissitudes, disobedience and repentings, sin resisting grace, and grace striving against sin, marked, with that of many others, John Griffith's youthful path and pilgrimage; but through the tender mercy and compassion of Him who called him out of darkness into His marvellous light, he was enabled to grow from the state of a child, to that of a young man, and then a strong man in the ever blessed Truth—to grow in grace and the experimental knowledge of the Son of God unto his measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ.

This journal affords another example, that amid all the changes, the discoveries, the improvements in the arts and sciences, and in the material condition of mankind that are having place around us, the requisitions of the gospel of Jesus remain unchanged as does their Holy Author—the way, the truth, and the life—the same yesterday, to-day, and forever. How important it is for us, in this boasted epoch of the march of refinement, and of advancing science and intellect, not to forget that the despised Babe in Bethlehem's manger—"the root out of dry ground"—is the same Child born and Son given, the same Saviour and "Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world," in these days, in all days, as in that of His first advent; and that His "second coming" as the Spirit of Truth, or "another Comforter" in the heart, in the place of the crucified yet risen and glorified Lord Jesus, is the same little seed of the kingdom or plant of renown, which, believed in and heeded, nourished and obeyed, will grow up into authority and power, and bear fruit unto life eternal. "The kingdom of God," saith the Saviour, "cometh not with observation: neither shall they say, Lo here! or, Lo there! for, behold, the kingdom of God is within you." It is this kingdom of God within, likened to "a grain of mustard-seed, which, when it is sown is less than all the seeds that be in the earth," that we are so especially called to regard and to turn to, as that which will then, under the Divine blessing, grow up to fruitfulness, yielding with some thirty, with some sixty, and with some an hundred fold, to the praise of the Redeemer's all-sufficient grace.

John Griffith's conversation, life and ministry pointed to the inculcation and promotion of these great truths. And though, as is written in a testimony from the Monthly Meeting of Witham, in Essex, England, concerning him, "Few were his companions, zealously concerned for the restoration of good order, which rendered the task more arduous:" yet it is believed that the baptisms and exercises of spirit he went through for the church's sake, were not only as acceptable incense before the throne of the Omniscient, but tended, together with his varied gospel labors, to the help and edification, after the power of an endless life, of those whom he labored amongst, and who were witnesses of his zeal for that ever glorious cause which is dignified with immortality and crowned with eternal life. He thus prefaces his journal:

"It hath been much upon my mind to write something by way of journal, of my life, travels, and experience in the gracious and merciful dealings of the Lord with me, through the course of my pilgrimage in this world; together with some remarks on the state of our Society in my time, interspersed with divers observations relating to our conduct in various stations in life, but chiefly in a religious sense; to remain, when my body is laid in the dust, a lasting memorial and testimony to the Truth. And as the Lord shall be pleased to open my understanding, I may also afford profitable way-marks to some weary travellers, who are seeking a city that hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God.

"I was born on the 21st day of the Fifth month, 1713, in Radnorshire, South Wales; being favored with parents who had the substance of religion in themselves, and were conscientiously concerned to train up their children in the fear of God.

"I was favored with the heart-melting visitations of God's love, I think, when about seven or eight years old; and frequently experienced his name to be in the assemblies of his people as precious ointment poured forth; whereby my desires were greatly raised to attend meetings for Divine worship. For although, like Samuel of old, I was as yet unacquainted with the voice of God, neither did I clearly understand from whence that precious consolation, which I felt, came; yet, I well remember something working powerfully in my tender, weak mind, by way of opposition to that sweet, heavenly enjoyment, in order to deprive me thereof, by presenting to my view some transitory delight, and by filling my mind with vain, unprofitable, and sometimes wicked and blasphemous thoughts, which were a great affliction to me. Then he, who was a liar from the beginning, would suggest to my weak mind, that the only way to get over such uneasiness, was to give way to those thoughts, and to be utterly regardless of what passed through my mind. I found the flesh wanted ease, and, to save itself, willingly joined herein with the temptations of Satan, whereby I got a kind of present ease; but it was by such gratifications as tended to heap up wrath against the day of wrath, and the revelation of the righteous judgments of God. So that, notwithstanding the false ease contrived by my soul's enemy, I did, at times, very sensibly feel, as I grew up, this peace disturbed and broken by a sense of God's wrath, revealed from heaven against my unrighteousness; and great bitterness of spirit I was often in, when the chastening of the Lord was upon me for sin. I would, at such times, enter into covenant with the Lord, promising amendment; but as those promises were made much in my own will, they were soon broken, and that would increase the weight of my horror and distress: the Lord, in infinite mercy, being pleased to find me out, and to plead with me as in the valley of decision. In writing this, my mind is greatly moved with pity and bowels of compassion towards inconsiderate youth; who for the sake of trifling vanities, slighting their own mercies, are subjected to distress of mind: and the case is still worse, when by repeated disobedience and rebellion against God's unmerited grace, they have almost stifled his Divine witness in their own hearts, and go on with impunity; for an awakening time will come, soon or late, which must strike all such with horror and amazement. May it be in mercy.

"My godly parents were very careful to prevent my falling into evil company; notwithstanding which, I frequently, without their knowledge, found such, and joined them in those vanities which are incident to youth; and perhaps was not a whit behind any of them therein; yet in the cool of the day, I was sharply reproved for the same; nay sometimes, in the very midst of my folly. But by this time I wanted to silence that pure witness against evil in my heart. Oh! I have often since, with deep reverence, thankfully admired the long-suffering of a gracious God, in that he did not cut me off, when I wilfully resisted the reproof of his instruction, which is the way to life, because I wanted to live in the vain pleasures of this perishing world."

(To be continued.)

Do Your Work Well.

"Are you going to let that pass?" said one workman to another, a shade of surprise in his voice.

"Why not?" was the answer. "It will never be seen."

"Would you buy the article, if you knew just how it was made?"

"No."

"Why not?"

"Because it might give out in a year, instead of lasting five years."

"And are you going to let the job pass, when you know that whoever buys it will be cheated?" said the fellow workmen.

"Oh, you're more nice than wise," returned the other with a toss of the head. "You draw things too fine."

"Suppose Mr. Gray, down at the store, were to sell you stuff for pants that he knew would drop to pieces in less than six months? Wouldn't you call him a swindler?"

"Perhaps I would."

"Is there really any difference in the cases? Whoever buys this article that you are making will be cheated out of his money. You will not deny that. As much cheated as you would be if Gray sold you rotten cloth."

The journeyman shrugged his shoulders and arched his eyebrows.

"We must draw things fine," resumed the other, "if we would be fair and honest. Morality has no special bearing, but applies to all men's dealings with their fellow-men. To wrong another for gain to ourselves, is dishonest. Is not that so?

"You slight this job, that you may get it done in a shorter time than would be possible if you made it stronger in every part. Thus in order to gain a dollar or two more than honest work will give, you let an article leave your hands that will prove a cheat to the man that buys it. I tell you, it is not right! We must do as we would be done by in our work, as in everything else. There are not two codes of honesty—one for shopkeepers and one for workmen. Whoever wrongs his neighbor out of his money, cheats him."

The other journeyman turned away from his monitor, looked half offended and bent over his work-bench. At first he went on finishing his job; but after awhile his fellow-workman saw him take out a defective piece of wood, and then remove another which had not been properly squared and jointed. Observing him still, he saw him detach a piece which had simply been driven into place, and which gave no real strength, and after selecting another, three or four inches longer, set it by mortice and tenon firmly into the article he was making.

All this was done at an expenditure of time not exceeding an hour and a half.

"There," said he, in a tone of satisfaction, speaking to his fellow-workman. "If that does not last forever, it will be no fault of mine."

"A good honest job," remarked the other.

"As ever was done."

"And you feel better about it than you would have done had it left your hands to cheat the purchaser out of his money?"

"Yes, I do." The answer came frankly.

"How much more time has it cost you to do this work well?" was asked.

"Oh, not over an hour or two."

"And the thing is worth ten dollars more to the buyer. In other words it is a well made article, as it should be, and will cheat nobody. Now you have done as you would be done by; have kept your conscience clear; have acted as a Christian man should."

"Oh, as to that, I don't profess to be a Christian," said the other. I'm no hypocrite."

"A Christian profession is one thing, and a Christian life another," answered the fellow workman. "All professors are not Christians. Religion is a thing of daily life, and unless it comes down into a man's work and business, is not worth a copper. No amount of church going, or praying or singing, will save a man, if he is not honest in his dealings. He must do as he would be done by—must begin just as you have begun, by refusing to wrong his neighbor, though tempted to do so that he may get an advantage for himself.

"A new kind of religion that," remarked the journeyman.

"As old as Christianity," said the other, "and the only kind that will save men. 'As ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them, for this is the law and the prophets.' He who said this knew all about it. And I am sure that if we begin to be just to our neighbor, to try all things, to do as we would be done by, our feet will have entered the way that leads Heavenward—and though we may be a long way from that happy country, if we keep walking on we shall surely get there in the end."

An English gentleman thus records his observations on an interesting, though not generally appreciated, member of the genus rana:

"The fact that the common frog is capable of crying out lustily when he feels himself in danger, does not seem to have been frequently remarked. In my small walled garden there is a common frog who is persecuted by three cats. His residence is a heap of slates at the foot of an ivied wall, and here he is safe. But if he ventures far abroad his tormentors soon espy him, and, though they seem nearly as much terrified as himself, they cannot resist the temptation to touch him with their paws. He immediately opens his mouth and utters a prolonged cry, which appears to be very surprising to the cats, who draw back for a few moments, and then pat him again, apparently out of mere curiosity, to be again scared by the same unusual sound. This sound is a shrill and rather sibilant wail, like the note of a small penny trumpet or the cry of a newborn infant. There can be no mistake about it, as I have repeatedly touched the frog with my own hand after driving the cats away, and the same cry has immediately followed, the lower jaw being dropped so that the mouth stands open about a quarter of an inch at the tip.—Late Paper.

France, Germany and Austria are vieing with each other in astronomical activity. In the grounds of the Paris Observatory a four-foot Foucault mirror is in process of erection, and M. Le Verrier has already obtained a grant for a thirty inch refractor. The Vienna Observatory is also making arrangements for the reception of a telescope of similar aperture. Messrs. Merz have nearly completed a lens of twenty-inch aperture for the University of Strasburg. In France, the newly-created Ecole Speciale des Hautes Etudes is to be taken advantage of to form a school of astronomy; in Germany many such schools exist already.—Late Paper.

For "The Friend."

A few Questions and Answers relative to some of the Doctrines and Testimonies of the Society of Friends

(Concluded from page 122.)

Question.—If it was the Holy Spirit of Christ Jesus that in the beginning led Friends out of the vain fashions, customs, manners, and needless ceremonies of the world, can it be that the same Heavenly Guidance would now lead them back again into them?

Answer.—No: it cannot so be. And we are thence impelled to the belief that the reason why any of our members ignore, and are not willing to keep up these outward marks of distinction, is from want of faithful obedience to the law of the Spirit of Life in Christ Jesus, which did so marvellously work for our forefathers; and, as respects fidelity in little things or in great things, would no less preserve us; and so settle on the unchangeable foundation that no divination or enchantment would be permitted to prevail against us. We are moreover assured that the existence of our religious Society as a distinct body of professors—and which is every day becoming more manifest—greatly depends upon the faithful, unfaltering adherence of our members, second only to their adherence to the Life and Light of the everliving and eternal Word manifested in the heart to those testimonies of Truth, inseparable from the doctrines, both of which being committed as a sacred trust to us.

Q.—Why do some Friends object to First-day schools as now set up and conducted?

A.—Perhaps very few if any of our members object to First-day schools set up and kept by religiously minded teachers, for the instruction and help of the poor and neglected children of their respective neighborhoods; which may be, under the Divine blessing a great advantage to such scholars. Their objection lies to the manner of conducting these schools both as regards the too formal, if not irreverent offerings of what is called prayer, which solemnly devotional act should only be entered upon under the immediate constraining influence of the Holy Spirit; together with the attempted instruction in religious truths before the teachers have experienced these themselves, so as to have their own life and conversation leavened into consistency therewith; and also before the alone qualifying Power from on high, it is to be feared, has been witnessed. Nothing is more true than that worldly-minded parents or teachers cannot train youth in the pure, humble fear and love of God; because the natural or unrenewed man cannot understand the things of the Spirit of God. Then is there not in these truly responsible positions much room for the Poet's admonition:—

"God known to thee, not notionally, not Traditionally, or according to
The strained conceivings of a human brain,
As shown in this or that man's commentary,
But God revealed to thee internally,
When best he speaks, and thou dost need him most."

Q.—What is the conscientious belief of these Friends, and what the great duty of parents in this matter?

A.—It is moreover the conscientious belief of those Friends who feel restrained from joining in this popular movement, that no substitute of this kind—no casting the burden upon others—can absolve Friends who are parents, as delegated under shepherds of their respective families, from the responsible obligation of instructing and training their dear children in the doctrines and testimonies of the Christian religion as held by us as a people. What is so much wanting is, that these should experience a deep religious concern, and be fully alive to the important duty devolving upon them as helpers of the present and of the future well-being of their beloved offspring. Then would they not trust to others, the never to be ignored christian duty of training their children in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. A failure in which, it is believed, will add greatly to the accountability of this class in the solemnly approaching period of judgment to come. Did parents dwell under and feel the religious concern alluded to, they could not but seek after a right qualification frequently to gather their children for religious retirement and serious reading of the Holy Scriptures with other religious books; and before all, how would the exercised spirit of such parents, and their earnest prayers from broken and contrite and pleading hearts, go up as acceptable incense before the throne of our tender, pitying Father. O! did parents but duly feel the grave responsibility resting upon them, how would they seek in the first place to yield themselves as obedient children to the one only true Teacher; that thus through the qualifying power—the leadings and teachings of the Saviour's grace in the heart—they might, in their measure, be enabled from living experience to invite the precious lambs committed to their charge in the words of a great apostle: "Be ye followers of me, even as I also am of Christ." And, "Be ye followers of God as dear children."

Q.—What does that worthy Friend and minister, John Griffith, say in relation to the means by which the Scriptures are to be understood?

A.—He says, "I am well assured, by certain experience, that the mysteries couched in these holy writings cannot be profitably understood, but by the same Spirit which inspired the penmen of them; therefore it is vain presumption for fallen and unregenerate man, by his earthly wisdom and human learning, to attempt the unfolding of heavenly mysteries. The lip of Truth hath signified that these are hid from the wise and prudent of this world, and revealed unto the humble, dependent babes and sucklings, who sensibly experience their sufficiency for every good word and work to proceed immediately from God alone, and that Christ is made unto them wisdom and righteousness, sanctification and redemption."

Q.—In conclusion?

A.—In conclusion, we would convey the earnest, heart-felt breathing and solicitude, that He who raised up this Society, called its members from the lo-here's and the lo-there's of creaturely activity, into inward stillness and communion with himself, and who has so signally watered and blessed it with the dew of heaven—the outpouring of his Holy Spirit—may, notwithstanding its Christian reputation has been somewhat eclipsed by the disaffection of nominal, lukewarm professors, again bring us to the teachableness, the self-denial, the simplicity, the fidelity and faithfulness of early espousals, and of former years; again turn our captivity as the streams of the south; again restore judges and counsellors as at the beginning; who, as they did, shall stand nobly and unflinchingly for the support of the principles and testimonies of the gospel of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ.

Deciphering Burnt Documents.—Rathelot, an officer of the Paris law courts, has succeeded in an ingenious manner in transcribing a number of the registers which were burnt during the Commune. These registers had remained so long in the fire that each of them seemed to have become a homogeneous block, more like a slab of charcoal than anything else, and when an attempt was made to detach a leaf it fell away into powder. Many scientific men had examined these unpromising black blocks, when Rathelot hit upon the following method of operation:—In the first place he cut off the back of the book so as to leave nothing but the mass of leaves which the fire had caused to adhere to each other; he then steeped the book in water, and afterwards exposed it, all wet as it was, to the heat at the mouth of a calorifere; the water, as it evaporated, raised the leaves one by one, and they could be separated, but with extraordinary precautions. Each sheet was then deciphered and transcribed, and the copy certified by a legal officer. In this way the records of nearly 70,000 official acts have been saved. The appearance of the pages was very curious; the writing appeared of a dull black, while the paper was of a lustrous black, something like velvet decorations on a black satin ground, so that the entries were not difficult to read.

For "The Friend."

Many a young face do I see, wearing the indescribable Martha-look, "troubled about many things," whom I would fain remind of the anecdote of the ambassador in China. To him, tossing sleepless on his bed, his old servant said:

"Sir, may I put to you, and will you answer three questions? First, did not the Almighty govern this world very well before you came into it?"

"Of course."

"And will He not also do the same when you are gone out of it?"

"I know that."

"Then do you not think, sir, that He is able to govern it while you are in it?" The ambassador smiled assent, turned round, and slept calmly.

Alas! it is the slowest and most painful lesson that Faith has to learn—Faith, not Indifference—to do steadfastly and patiently, all that lies in her hand, and then leave it, believing that the Almighty is able to govern His own world.

Strong Men.—Strength of character consists of two things: power of will and power of self-restraint. It requires two things, therefore, for its existence: strong feelings and strong command over them. Now we all very often mistake strong feelings for character. A man who bears all before him, before whose wild bursts of fury the children of the household quake, because he has his own way in all things, we call him a strong man. The truth is, he is a weak man; it is his passions that are strong, he, mastered by them, is weak.

You must measure the strength of a man by the power of the feeling he subdues, not by the power of those that subdue him. And hence composure is often the highest result of strength. Did we ever see a man receive a flagrant injury and then reply calmly? That man is morally strong. Or did we ever see a man in anguish stand as if carved out of solid rock, mastering himself? Or one bearing a hopeless daily trial remain silent, and never tell the world what cankered his home peace? That is strength. He, who with strong passions remains chaste; he who, indignation within him, can be provoked and yet restrain himself and forgive, those are strong men, the moral heroes.—Late Paper.

For "The Friend."

John Finch Marsh.

(Continued from page 123.)

Croydon, 5th of 8th mo. 1850.

My beloved friend, R. B. B.—Love is indeed the badge of discipleship, and how strengthening are the words of our blessed Saviour, "By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another." And again, the testimony of a beloved Apostle, "We know that we have passed from death unto life, because we love the brethren." Ah how precious is that love which flows one towards the other in the hearts of those who love the Lord Jesus in sincerity. How sweet the fellowship those enjoy who seek to follow Him in the regeneration, and walk in newness of life; who by obedience to the teachings of His grace and good Spirit, evidence that they do aspire after unsullied purity of life,—these as they keep near to, and follow the pure leadings of Truth, are given to see eye to eye, and understand what it is to walk by the same rule, and to mind the same thing,—these hold sweet communion in spirit together, being also permitted at times to sit together as in heavenly places in Christ Jesus,—their minds thus clothed with love and sweetness, they cannot well do other than endeavor to encourage one another to persevere on their pilgrimage journey, for out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh forth the praises of Him who hath called, and in mercy still calls out of darkness into His marvellous light; and in the overflowing of their cup, and under the constraining influence of His love, are engaged to invite others to come, taste and see that the Lord is good; and as liberty is felt for it, to tell of what He hath done for their souls.

Thy allusion to our outward parting when I saw thee off in the railway carriage from Croydon, was a comfort to me. It was a trial to my feelings, the parting from one I so dearly love, especially so, as the time of our being together by ourselves was so short and limited, that my heart and mind did not get that vent, did not obtain that full relief desired. But the excitement, &c., of attending a Yearly Meeting, does in measure deprive of that quiet enjoyment of the company of one's friends, and which those of one heart, and one mind, seem so to require. Had time allowed us a season of quiet alone before we separated, it might have afforded me some relief to have bent the knee in vocal supplication and thanksgiving.

To an acknowledged Minister.

1854.

* * * * I think I may further say that mine eye often affecteth my heart, in beholding how for the most part, the children of this people turn aside, apparently slighting their many privileges; and how especially does it appear amongst the children of those in the station of minister and elder; that when some such are liberated to travel on Truth's account, I seem ready to query how far their own hands are sufficiently clear of their dear children, and of their houses and homes, as to go forth on the solemn errand of visiting the Churches,—for surely I think the hands of such must feel weakened by their dear children, and in many instances by the undue and unrestrained liberty they themselves allow in their children and families, so as not to be prepared with that honesty and acceptanee to counsel others in the way of the cross, the path of self-denial. I might add more, but now conclude, and in that love in which I have written, I remain thy affectionate friend, JOHN F. MARSH.

To his medical attendant.

Dear friend,—As absence from home prevented my seeing thee when thou last ealled, I am best satisfied to express my feeling of thankfulness, for thy kind, judicious treatment in my recent indisposition, which under the Divine blessing has been the means of my regaining a comfortable share of bodily health and strength.

I may also say that during thy little visits at my bedside and ehamber, the feeling of mueh brotherly love seemed to flow in my heart towards thee; and in the eontinued feeling thereof my desire is, that if consistent with the will of our Heavenly Father, thy useful life may be prolonged, not only for the help and relief of thy fellow mortals from bodily pain, disease and suffering, but especially [that] through submission to the powerful operation and workings of saving grace in the secret of the heart, thou mayest be made instrumental in winning souls to Christ.

O the sweetness and preciousness of the Saviour's love shed abroad in the heart, which His believing and obedient children do indeed know, yea realize in their experience that in His presence is fullness of joy, and with the eye of faith are given to see something of those pleasures which are at his right hand for evermore. Then blessed and happy are all those who love His inward appearing, and obey the teaching of His graee and good Spirit in the secret of their hearts, being faithful unto death.

Such as these, when their little day of twelve hours is over, are by grace prepared to say, they have fought a good fight, have finished their course, and kept the faith; then comes the blessed assurance of obtaining a crown of righteousness, laid up for all the faithful followers of the Lamb. The nearer these are brought to their heavenly home, the more methinks they must be clothed with a sense of their own nothingness, and unworthiness, and nothing of their own to trust to. Not by works of righteousness we (as men and creatures have done or can do) but as saith the Apostle, "aecording to his mercy he saved us, by the washing of regeneration, and renewing of the Holy Ghost;—which he shed on us abundantly through Jesus Christ our Saviour;" &c.

In desire that the Divine blessing may rest upon thee and thine.

I remain, with love affectionately, thy friend,

JOHN F. MARSH.

(To be continued.)

"Draw nigh unto God, and He will draw nigh unto you." James iv. 8.

Selected.

GUESTS OF THE HEART.

Soft falls through the gathering twilight,
The rain from the dripping eaves,
And stirs with a tremulous rustle,
The dead and the dying leaves;
While afar, in the midst of the shadows,
I hear the sweet voices of bells;
Come borne on the wind of the autumn,
That fitfully rises and swells.

They call and they answer each other—
They answer and mingle again—
As the deep and the shrill in an anthem
Make harmony still in their strain;
As the voices of sentinels mingle
In mountainous regions of snow,
Till from hill-top to hill-top a chorus
Floats down to the valleys below.

The shadows, the fire-light of even,
The sound of the rain's distant chime,
Come bringing, with rain softly dropping,
Sweet thoughts of a shadowy time;
The slumberous sense of seclusion,
From storm and intruders aloof,
We feel when we hear in the midnight
The patter of rain on the roof.

When the spirit goes forth in its yearnings
To take all its wanderers home;
Or afar in the regions of fancy,
Delights on swift pinions to roam,
I quietly sit by the fire-light—
The fire-light so bright and so warm—
For I know that those only who love me
Will seek me through shadow and storm.

But should they he absent this evening,
Should even the household depart—
Deserted, I should not be lonely;
There still would be guests in my heart,
The faces of friends that I cherish,
The smile, and the glance, and the tone,
Will haunt me wherever I wander,
And thus I am never alone.

With those who have left far behind them
The joys and the sorrows of time—
Who sing the sweet song of the angels
In a purer and holier clime!
Then darkly, O evening of autumn,
Your rain and your shadows may fall:
My loved and my lost ones you bring me,
My heart holds a feast with them all.—

Chambers' Journal.

Selected.

FROM "THE ARM CHAIR;"

A LITTLE POEM BY THE LATE JOSEPH KITE.

"Tell me, my old Arm Chair, when thou wert young,
Were Quaker parlors with gilt pictures hung?
Did any Quaker to his image fall,
A household idol, placed against the wall?
Ah, well might honest Catharine* cry to pride,
'Abomination!' as she turned aside.
—But times are altered; splendid mansions glow,
And gilded mirrors humble Quakers show.
With Turkey carpets are their parlors spread,
While silken curtains hang about their bed!
What contradiction!—grave the dame and sire;
Gorgeous their dwelling,—simple their attire!
Their children moulding to the place they dwell,
In London fashions, Paris manners, swell,—
While parents scarcely wish to set them free—
For what they won't restrain they love to see."

* * * * *

"Faith, give me power to see a brighter day,
When all these 'letting things' shall pass away;
When the convulsion which has now begun,
Shall pause in silence, all its purpose done;
When the oppressors of the seed, shall wear
The mask no longer, all their acts laid bare;
When chaff and cheat shall to the wind be doomed,
And dross and stubble be by fire consumed;
When to the world the worldly part is given;
When the redeemed shall closer walk with Heaven;
When to our Zion shall the weary come,
Like 'doves to windows', pressing to their home.
Oh haste the day, when through his power divine,
The Father's light around his church shall shine!
Many there are whose prayers arise for this;
Whose greatest joy would be in Zion's bliss;
Whose morning breathing and whose evening prayer
Is that the Lord would place his glory there.
—What though a worldly spirit has crept in,
That fain the kingdom through new ways would win,
Scorning the narrow path our fathers trod,
And circling round would pass the cross and rod—
Yet they who look from Pisgah's height can see,
Such by-paths lead away from Calvary—
While they who seek in empty forms for bliss,
Will grasp at shadows and the substance miss."

* Catharine Sheppard, an elder of the Northern District Monthly Meeting, Philadelphia, died the 16th of Twelfth month, 1842, aged 80 years.

For "The Friend."

Legal Opinions in the Ohio Case.

By the kindness of a Friend in the West we have received a pamphlet, containing the legal opinions of the Judges in the Supreme Court of Ohio, in relation to the disposal of the Boarding School Property at Mount Pleasant. The suit was brought by the trustees appointed by the Binns' Meeting, against the trustees holding the premises for Ohio Yearly Meeting. Our readers will remember that the decision in favor of the plaintiffs was noticed by us some time ago.

We are aware that when accustomed to look upon a series of events from one stand point, especially if our feelings are much interested in the merits of those events, it requires no little effort to dispossess ourselves of preconceived opinions, so as to view with fairness and clearness the points presented by another, who has looked upon the same events from a different point and in a different light than ourselves. In closely perusing the opinions of the three Judges who have decided in favor of the plaintiffs, we have therefore striven to keep the mind open, to receive with all the force they command, the statements made and the arguments adduced for the conclusions arrived at; but while we do not call in question the integrity of the high officials, or the sincerity with which they give their judgment,—knowing the difficulty for other than Friends, to understand the peculiar organization and principles of church government existing in the Society of Friends—we are surprised at many of the flimsy and erroneous bases on which the legal decision is founded, and the singularly illogical reasoning with which it is worked out.

We however prefer to give our readers the principal part of Judge McIlvaine's opinion, leaving out nothing—we believe—that is necessary to exhibit the points taken by him, nor in the least interfere with the scope and strength of his argument. With him Judge Day concurred. Judge West gives his own opinion, which contains fewer facts and arguments, but much special pleading on behalf of the plaintiffs, and arrives at the same judgment.

We have italicised some portions in order to draw the attention of our readers to them. There is much more that might be refuted, than is indicated by the few notes made.

The opinion of the Chief Justice, with which Judge White concurred, will be given after that now published.

"It is admitted by all parties to this action, that there is, and can be, but one 'Ohio Yearly Meeting of the Society of Friends;' and, it is further conceded, that one or the other of the bodies, which resulted from the separation referred to, is the true and legitimate Ohio Yearly Meeting, entitled to the use and benefit of the property and charity above mentioned."

"Counsel for defendants claim the controlling question in the case to be as follows: 'Was Jonathan Binns duly chosen clerk of the Ohio Yearly Meeting of the Society of Friends, in 1854, according to the rules, discipline, and usages of the meeting and society?'

"A majority of the court are of opinion that the proposition contained in this claim of defendants is too narrow. Although it may be said to be within the issue, it does not embrace the whole of it. For it may be that Binns and his associates are the true beneficiaries of this charity, though it appear that some irregularity intervened in the mode and manner in which Binns was chosen clerk in 1854; or even though the rules, discipline, and usages of the meeting and of the Society of Friends did not provide at all for the emergency which arose in the matter of choosing a clerk for the meeting at its session in that year.

"It is quite certain, as it will hereafter appear, that the separation did not take place until Binns assumed to exercise the office of clerk, and it is equally certain that immediately upon the separation Binns became clerk of one of the resultant bodies, and Hoyle of the other. Now, suppose that after the separation neither Binns nor Hoyle was invested with the office of clerk of the Ohio Yearly Meeting, in conformity to the rules, discipline, or usages of the meeting or the society, it would not follow that neither of the resultant bodies was the true successor of the Ohio Yearly Meeting, or that this trust failed for want of a beneficiary. Or suppose, as the fact is claimed to be, that Hoyle's term of office had not expired at the time of the separation, and that he continued to act as the clerk of one of the resultant bodies, still, we think it might be made to appear, that he and his associates were the separatists, and ceased not only to be the 'Ohio Yearly Meeting,' but also ceased to be members of the 'Society of Friends;' and, in either event, it could not be said that they are entitled to the benefits of a trust created in favor of the 'Ohio Yearly Meeting of the Society of Friends,' as against the other resultant body, which, according to the principles of the Society, might prove itself to be the only true Ohio Yearly Meeting of the Society."

The points to be examined and determined are stated to be

"1. The history and polity of the Society of Friends.

2. The history and polity of the Ohio Yearly Meeting.

3. The causes which produced the separation in the Ohio Yearly Meeting.

4. The immediate circumstances of the separation.

5. The action and judgment of the 'Society of Friends' in relation thereto.

6. The subsequent relations of the resultant bodies to the Society at large."

"Meetings for discipline or business, however, whether convened for the consideration of secular or spiritual matters, *are required to be kept 'select,' by which order it is meant that all persons other than members of the Society in unity are excluded, not only from participation in the deliberations of the meetings, but also from being present at their sittings."

"In gathering the sense of the meeting, the clerk takes into consideration the number, age, intelligence, experience, piety, &c., of those uniting with and of those opposing the measure. If the minute so made be acquiesced in by the members, so that substantial unanimity is secured, it is recorded as the action of the meeting; but if it be not so acquiesced in, the measure is lost, or postponed for further consideration."*

"The testimony does not fully show what preliminary steps are necessary in the establishment of a new Yearly Meeting, but it is quite certain that no new Yearly Meeting can be set up in the regular order of the Society, until it is recognized and acknowledged as such by all pre-existing Yearly Meetings; and without such recognition and acknowledgment, it is not in unity with, or a part of, the Society of Friends."†

"The regular order of the Society requires each Yearly Meeting to communicate with every other Yearly Meeting by an annual epistle in relation to the general concerns of the Society."‡

"Such is the system of government adopted by this peculiar sect of Christians; and we think, in view of the history and nature of its organization, it would be a gross mistake to hold that each Yearly Meeting is a distinct and wholy independent body or society. On the other hand, we are forced to the conclusion that there is but one Society of Friends in the world; that the unity of the Society, as it existed when the London Yearly Meeting exercised exclusive jurisdiction over all the subordinate meetings, has not been destroyed; that the establishment of other Yearly Meetings of co-ordinate powers was for the purpose of convenience in the administration of local discipline, without any intent to impair the integrity of the Society as it existed before the multiplicity of Yearly Meetings.

"It is true that the judgment of each Yearly Meeting, touching matters of discipline arising within its limits, is conclusive as to all other Yearly Meetings and the Society at large, because such judgment is, in theory and in fact, the judgment of the Society.§ All members of the Society are concluded, because, if not present participating in the action of the meeting, their absence was voluntary, and hence there is no ground for complaint. The true theory of the system seems to be that the several Yearly Meetings were organized by the Society as organs through which the Society, as such, might pronounce its judgments and maintain its order and integrity. It may be conceded that such a system of government would be of doubtful utility were its rules and judgments to be enforced by coercive measures. But when we consider its operation for nearly two centuries, and view it in the light of the faith in which it was founded—a religious faith that obedience to its precepts and acquiescence in its judgments would be secured through the influence of the Spirit which leads to peace, harmony, and unity—we can neither deny nor doubt its sufficiency to preserve the integrity of an organization whose chief aim and purpose is the maintenance of Christian fellowship and a common faith."

"As members of the Yearly Meeting, the only special duty or power of the representatives is declared in the book of discipline as follows: 'The representatives from the Quarterly Meetings, both men and women, are annually to choose a clerk and assistant at the close of the first sitting for discipline, whose names are to be reported at the opening of the next sitting.' The disposition to be made of the report of the representatives is not prescribed in the book of discipline; but the testimony shows that it is the usage of the meetings to act upon the reports—that is, the men's and women's meetings respectively act upon their separate reports. If the choice of the representatives be unanimous and the report be approved by the meeting, the persons so chosen become clerk and assistant for the ensuing year. If, however, the meeting refuse to approve the persons chosen by the representatives, or if no names be reported, the old officers hold over for another year until the meeting otherwise directs. There is no rule or usage of the Society for the guidance of a meeting in the matter of selecting its clerk and assistant other than as above stated. There is no doubt, however, that the meeting may, for the preservation of its organization, select a clerk and assistant in any other emergency, though not provided for in the book of discipline, and that its action in such cases, if not in violation of the principles of the Society, would be binding upon all its members.

"It is claimed on behalf of the defendants, that the order and usage of the Society require the continuance in office of the old clerk and assistant, in all cases where the representatives are unable to agree upon names to be reported to the meeting. We think the testimony does not support this claim. It is true that it has been usual, in cases where the representatives failed to agree upon names, for them to make a unanimous report of that fact; and it has been usual in such cases for the old clerks to hold over by consent. But in all cases, as we understand the weight of the testimony, the subject is under the control of the meeting. It is within the power

---

* That the presence of those not members, in meetings for discipline is contrary to the good order of the Society, is true; but their exclusion was never made so essential, as to prevent a meeting proceeding with its business, if an intruder persisted in remaining. The Binns meeting have allowed others than members to attend their Yearly Meeting, and so have several of the Western Yearly Meetings.—Ed.

* According to the admission of the Binns' party, more than half (nearly or quite two-thirds) of the meeting was opposed to the appointment of I. Binns as Clerk. This large portion of the meeting, convinced that a separation from Ohio Yearly Meeting was being consumated, refrained from expressing any opinion respecting the nomination of I. B.; so that there was neither "substantial unanimity," nor acquiescence in the revolutionary step.—Ed.

† This would cut off from being "part of the Society" not only the Binns meeting, but all those Yearly Meetings in the West which have not been acknowledged by Philadelphia Yearly Meeting.—Ed.

‡ This is altogether incorrect. For many years before the Hicksite secession, Dublin Yearly Meeting did not correspond with Philadelphia Yearly Meeting. Writing epistles to other bodies is no necessary duty appertaining to Yearly Meetings.—Ed.

§ Is it not surprising that a Judge giving a legal opinion, should blunder so egregiously on this plain and important point? On some points the discipline of very many Yearly Meetings differ; are opposed to each other; yet according to the Judge these opposite rules, are each the judgment of the whole Society. Were that the case, it would follow, that a member of one part of the Society might be tried by the discipline of another part; his objection thereto, being overruled by the fact that if he choose he might have been present "participating in the action of the meeting making the discipline, and hence there is no ground of complaint." Had the Judge really understood the organization of the Society he would have seen that such an opinion was preposterous.—Ed.

of the meeting to approve or disapprove the report of the representatives, whatever that report may be. *And in any case where the meeting fails to secure new clerks, through the nomination of the representatives, it may act upon the nomination of any member; and if such nomination be acceptable to the meeting, it has the right to unite therein."

(To be continued.)

Carnivorous Plants.

A recent observer (Mary Treat, of Vineland, N. J.,) reports some curious experiments performed with the vegetable fly catcher, Dronœa muscipula, which is abundant in some of our Southern States. In the Fifth month of this year she received 30 plants of this species from North Carolina, which, she says, reached me looking none the worse for their journey, and began capturing prey the next day after their arrival. The upper part of the leaf reminds me of the open jaws of an old-fashioned steel-trap, and when any insect alights on the inner surface of this leaf-trap, and touches one or more of the six bristles on its surface, if the leaf is healthy and vigorous, it closes almost as quickly as the steel-trap when anything touches its spring."

Some of the experiments tried, were intended to determine how many insects one leaf would entrap and digest. With cultivated plants it had been noticed in England, that when a leaf has once caught a good sized insect, though it will open and remain so for a considerable time yet it has so little power of movement that it is rarely able to catch a second insect or close over any object. A considerable number of the leaves of these native plants, however, took three flies each, but most of them were not able wholly to digest them. Five leaves digested three flies each, and opened apparently healthy and ready for another meal, while some leaves died without being able to dispose of a single one. Among the insects entrapped were two-winged flies, beetles, spiders, and millipedes. She remarks, "If I liberated a prisoner in two or three hours after it was incarcerated, it did not seem to be injured at all, but would look about a moment as if astonished, and then speed away as fast as it could. But if I let one remain 24 hours, although often alive, yet it never recovered. By this time the insect was enveloped in a mucilaginous substance which was fatal to it; if I washed it off with the utmost care it made no difference, but was sure to die. The average time that it took for a leaf to digest soft-bodied insects, such as flies, spiders, and small larvæ, was seven days, but with bugs and beetles it took longer." "If I opened a leaf in two or three days after an insect was caught, I found it enveloped in a copious slimy secretion; but when the leaf was ready to open of itself—had digested its victim—all this secretion had disappeared, no doubt gone through the circulation to the bulbous-like root of the plant, to help nourish it, and to enable it to throw up other leaf-traps."

* This is a mistake. The representatives are the only source through which a nomination for clerk of a Yearly Meeting can be made; except in a case where the clerk of the former year cannot be present to open the meeting, when the discipline provides that the Meeting for Sufferings shall appoint a clerk for the opening session. When the representatives cannot agree the old clerk holds over.—Ed.

Live Stock and Population.—Prof. Thorold Rogers, of Oxford University, England, has made up a curious return of the proportion of domesticated live stock to population in the most prominent countries in the world. It shows the following results:

Great Britain has one cow to every twelve persons, a sheep for everybody, and one pig for every six.

France has a like proportion of sheep, a double share, comparatively, of cows, but only one pig to six persons.

The Swedes have a cow between three and one-half of them, a sheep between two and three-quarters, and a pig to a baker's dozen.

There are as many sheep as there are Norwegians in Norway, when they are all at home, and two and one-half of them—the Norwegians—are entitled to a cow. They can have only one-eighteenth of a pig each.

Denmark has a cow for three persons, as many sheep as persons, and a pig for four and three-quarters persons.

Prussia, with her usual uniformity, has an equal number of cows and pigs, one to every five inhabitants, besides a sheep apiece all round.

Wurtemburg has a quarter as many cows as people, a sheep to two and three-quarters, and a pig to seven.

Bavaria rates the same as Wurtemburg, as to cows and sheep, and is as much better off for pigs, as one-fifth is better than one-seventh.

Saxony has a sheep and a pig for every eight persons, and a cow for every six.

Holland has a cow to four, a sheep to four, and a pig to twelve persons.

Belgium, a cow to six, a sheep to nine, and a pig to eight.

Austria has a cow to six persons, and a sheep and a pig to every five.

Switzerland runs up to the Swedish standard on cows, one to three and one-half persons, and has a sheep for five, and a pig for seven and one-half persons.

We Americans close the list with a cow for every four of us, a sheep apiece, one pig to every one and one-half.—Rural New Yorker.

For "The Friend."

In examining some manuscripts lately, the following Epistle was met with, addressed to women Friends of Philadelphia Yearly Meeting by their sisters of London, at the time of great anxiety and exercise to Friends in this country, attending the outbreak of the Revolutionary war. The evidence of true religious concern, and seasonable counsel it contains, gives it an interest and value at the present day.

From the Yearly Meeting of women Friends, held in London by adjournments from the 5th to the 8th of the Sixth month, 1775, to the Yearly Meeting of women Friends to be held at Philadelphia, for Pennsylvania and New Jersey.

Dear friends,—

We salute you in the love and fellowship of the gospel, which speaks the same language in all its faithful votaries, peace on earth and good will towards men, desiring your growth and establishment in the ever blessed Truth, which, as it prevails in the mind, becomes as a safe anchor in storms and tempests.

It is when we are the most deeply bowed under an awful sense of our own insufficiency, and utter inability to perform any acceptable service without superior aid, that we become objects of Divine compassion, and are in any degree likely so to impart our feelings of love and sympathy with our beloved Friends, as to afford them consolation: in such a disposition we wish to address you at this time, a time we doubt not of deep suffering to the faithful amongst you; but remember, dear Friends, "The Captain of our salvation, was made perfect through sufferings," and He is also able to succor them that are tried. He knows the way which his servants take, and as one formerly expressed (who was deeply taught in the school of affliction), so may they hope, "when He hath tried them, they shall come forth as gold."

"The Lord," said David, "is my light and my salvation," "though an host should encamp against me, my heart shall not fear, though war should rise against me, in this will I be confident; one thing have I desired of the Lord, that will I seek after, that I may dwell in the house of the Lord all the days of my life, to behold the beauty of the Lord, and to enquire in his temple, for in the time of trouble He shall hide me in his pavilion, in the secret of his tabernacle shall He hide me, He shall set me up upon a rock." May this, dear Friends, be your experience, so will all afflictions be sanctified unto you, and your "Heads being again lifted up," in a sense of his preserving, delivering Hand having wrought mightily for you, you may have to offer the sacrifice of joy and praise unto Him who is worthy forever.

You have long been favored with a season of outward ease, prosperity, and tranquillity, wherein, it is to be feared, some have deeply revolted from the God of all their mercies, and being joined in spirit unto idols, are incapable of performing that pure worship which He requires, and if He now see meet to vary the dispensations of his wisdom, may such be awakened thereby to a solemn consideration of their ways, and turning at the "reproofs of instruction, which are the way to life," in them may be fulfilled the prophet's testimony, that "when the Lord's judgments are in the earth, the inhabitants of the world will learn righteousness."

Time calls for diligence on various accounts, its continuance to individuals very uncertain, trials and temptations many, the harvest great, and the faithful laborers few, seeing it hath pleased the Lord, in his unerring wisdom, to call many home, who, in their day, were made willing to give up all to follow him. These, we doubt not, are through his abundant mercy, centered in everlasting rest; amongst which number we have a recent instance in the removal of our beloved friend Rachel Wilson, whose unwearied and affectionate labors both amongst you and us, will, we hope, be long remembered; and that these strokes of the Divine hand may excite us who remain, to come forward in our respective lots, is our earnest desire, that by taking heed to the righteous witness in ourselves we may be followers of those who through "faith and patience inherit the promises."

Dear young Friends, such of you who have known the Heavenly Father's call, and have in any measure given up your hearts in obedience thereto, look not back, lest ye be not counted worthy to fill the vacant places of those faithful servants, who, agreeable to the example of their great Master, did esteem it as it were, their meat and drink to do the will of Him who sent them.

Your Epistle of the Ninth month, 1773, coming too late for our last Yearly Meeting, was read in this, together with the renewed proof of continued regard from your meeting in the Ninth month, 1774. In both we observe your affectionate concern for the promotion of piety in the several stations of parents, heads of families, and the beloved youth. Nothwithstanding the painful deviations of some from the path of rectitude, we trust others are endeavoring according to ability, to discharge the trust reposed in them. A concern for the revival of ancient discipline is raised in some minds, and we have cause thankfully to acknowledge that a gracious visitation of Divine love, is still extended to a rising generation, some of whom we hope, in the Lord's time, will be prepared for service in His church, having washed their hands in innocency, we trust they will be permitted to compass the Lord's holy altar.

We have renewed cause of thankfulness, in that most of the meetings during this our annual assembly, have been favored with a good degree of solemnity, the gospel preached to the refreshment of the weary traveller, to the reproof of the rebellious, who have asked counsel and not of God, and the minds of the people very earnestly recommended to the all-sufficent Teacher, which cannot be removed into a corner.

This Epistle is designed to be conveyed to you by our ancient and much esteemed friend Thomas Gawthrop, whose fourth visit to Friends in your continent, may well be considered as strongly evidencing the Heavenly Father's continued love. We do not yet hear of the arrival of our valued friends Robert Walker, Elizabeth Robinson and Mary Leaver.

With much affection, we wish to revive in your remembrance, that the name of the Lord is a strong tower, to which the righteous fleeing will find safety. His power is above every opposite power, and is over all worthy of adoration, and praise, through time and in eternity. Amen.

Signed on behalf of the Meeting by the Clerk, for the following Friends, viz.;

Catharine Phillips, Tabitha Marriott, Esther Tuke, Mary Prior, Ann Fothergill, and others (sixty-six in all).

Dr. Lincecum gives us in the American Naturalist a further account of the habits of the agricultural ant of Texas. It seems that this ant actually cultivates and stores up the seeds of a grass called ant rice. In beginning their nests they conceal the entrance with little bits of sticks, little balls of soil, &c., until the colony is large and strong enough to compete with the others around. They are then seen to clear out and pave a large space around the nest. Some old settlements have a pavement fifteen feet in diameter, and a mound in the centre a foot high. These ants live mostly on seeds, great quantities of which they store away in their granaries as food for the winter. During rainy seasons in the autumnal months, when the ground becomes saturated, the water penetrates their nests and causes the seeds to swell and sprout. In this emergency they bring out damaged grain on the first fair day, and, exposing it to the sun until near night, they take in all that is not actually sprouted. Dr. Lincecum saw them place as much as a gallon of seeds in the sun, and in the evening again saw the ants carry them back out of sight in five minutes. He says that certain individuals possess great intellectual superiority to the common workers, manifested in the fact that they assume the leadership in all their important public works and military expeditions.—Late Paper.

If the beneficence of the ever blessed God is known by His mighty benefactions, His love is surely brought home to the heart by the minuteness of His care. Those who have experienced the very little circumstances which can raise the heart, or cheer the sunken spirit in an hour of need, should surely learn that nothing is little by which they can show kindness to others; it is not the intrinsic value of the gift, but the love from which it emanates which constitutes its living power, and nothing is too small to convey the spirit of love from a heart overflowing with the love of God and man.

Neglecting the Occasion. — Dr. Chalmers, when suddenly called to stand over the dead body of a nobleman with whom he had spent the evening at a brilliant party gathered for social and literary converse, said; "Had I known that my friend was so near the eternal world, I would not have negleeted the occasion to say something to him about a preparation for death. But now it is too late."

THE FRIEND.

TWELFTH MONTH 12, 1874.

Through the kindness of a Friend, we have been furnished with a copy of the printed minutes of Indiana Yearly Meeting, held in the 9th and 10th months of this year. They occupy, with the reports, over eighty closely printed pages.

As there have been contradictory statements, relative to the action of that meeting, relative to Philadelphia Yearly Meeting, we give the minutes respecting it.

"The condition of many members of our religious Society within the limits of Philadelphia Yearly Meeting having been brought before the Meeting, the subject has claimed serious consideration, and the following Friends are appointed (in conjunction with women Friends), to consider it more fully and report to a future sitting, and to make such suggestions in reference thereto as may seem to them proper: Levi Jessup, Daniel Hill, David Douglas, Elkanah Beard, Levi Coffin, Rufus King, William T. Haydock, John Henry Douglas, Jonathan Baldwin, Timothy Nicholson, Charles S. Hubbard, Luke Woodard, Walter T. Carpenter, and Thomas Hunnicutt."

"The committee appointed at a previous sitting, in reference to the condition of some of our Friends in Philadelphia, make the following report, which, having been considered, it is the judgment of this Meeting that way does not open to make the proposed appointment at the present time.

"To the Yearly Meeting:—The committee to whom was referred the subject of the condition of Friends of Philadelphia Yearly Meeting, would suggest that a small committee be appointed by this Meeting, to whom the whole subject shall be referred; and that all the other Yearly Meetings be invited to appoint similar committees, to confer and unite with our committee, in the Christian effort to extend a helping hand to our brethren and sisters of that Yearly Meeting.

On behalf of the committee.

TIMOTHY NICHOLSON,
HARRIET STEER.

Tenth mo. 1st, 1874."

It is understood that the conclusion come to, is only a suspension of the efforts to bring about a separation of some of the members from Philadelphia Yearly Meeting. Those active in the movement, will probably work in their individual capacity, to prepare the way for future action.

From the following minute, it looks probable that another Yearly Meeting will, ere long, be set up:

"By the reports from Northern, Wabash, and Mississinewa Quarterly Meetings, we are informed that those Quarterly Meetings have united with Honey Creek Quarterly Meeting, of Western Yearly Meeting, in requesting the establishment of a new Yearly Meeting at Marion, Grant Co., Indiana, to be known by the name of "Northern Indiana Yearly Meeting," to be held commencing on the Sixth day preceding the first Seventh day in the Sixth month of each year, at 10 o'clock A. M., the Meeting for Ministers and Elders to be held the day previous at 2 P. M.

"The subject having claimed the full consideration of this Meeting, with a feeling of warm sympathy and love for our dear friends of those meetings, the Meeting unites in judgment in appointing the following-named Friends (in conjunction with women Friends), to unite with a similar committee of Western Yearly Meeting, in visiting the Meetings making the request, and report their judgment thereon to our next Yearly Meeting."

A change is made in the old practice of the Yearly Meeting recording the death of ministers and elders.

"It is the conclusion of this Meeting, that our Quarterly Meetings hereafter do not report to this Meeting the decease of ministers and elders as heretofore."

From the following letter to "The Friends' Foreign Mission Association,"—which is now taken in charge by the Yearly Meeting—it appears that the two men and two women "missionaries," in Mexico, are empowered to receive into membership of Indiana Yearly Meeting whosoever (adults) they may deem suitable.

"Dear Friends:—On entering into a serious consideration of the subject of establishing a regular meeting of the Society of Friends in Matamoras, we have, after prayerful deliberation, personal examination of the persons desiring to unite with us, and a personal acquaintance with their Christian conduct, fully united in accepting as members the following persons:

"Julian Mireles and Mariana Villanueva de Mireles, his wife; Jesus Mireles and Getrudis Mireles, children of the above, received on their own application; Pedro Mireles and Carmel Mireles de Mireles, his wife, Silvestra Mendoza de Jimenez, widow of Miguel Jimenez, and Andrea Jimenez, daughter of Miguel Jimenez, both received by their own request.

"Pedro and Carmel Mireles desire that their minor children, Geronimo, Feligresa and Aurelia, be received under the parental care and Christian instruction of the Society of Friends.

"Silvestra Mendoza de Jimenez makes the same request for her three sons, Chonito, Pedro and Gregorio.

"The subject of receiving minors not being included in the instructions sent us, we can only recommend the subject of their reception to your prayerful deliberation, asking that you may be rightly guided in this important matter."

The "Home Mission Association," after stating the labor in jails, midnight missions, &c., states:

"The channel in which much of our Christian activity has flowed, has been that opened up by the Women's Temperance Movement. Saloons have been visited, prayer meetings and open-air meetings held, where the gospel has been preached to many who never enter churches, families visited, the drunkards reclaimed, and a variety of work for the suppression of intemperance has been done, upon which the blessing of the Lord has rested."

SUMMARY OF EVENTS.

FOREIGN.—The steamer La Platte, from Gravesend for Rio Grande del Sud, chartered to repair a telegraph cable, foundered off Ushant, on the 29th ult., and sixty persons were drowned. Fourteen survivors were rescued by the Gareloch, of Glasgow, from a boat in which they had been floating twenty-three hours. The loss of the steamer is attributed to the shifting of the heavy grappling apparatus.

The mail steamer from Cape Town, Africa, brings news that Grigna Land has been annexed by the British authorities, completing the territorial connections between Cape Colony and Natal.

Capt. George C. Nares, now in command of the English war ship Challenger, has been selected to command the expedition to be fitted out by Great Britain for explorations in the Arctic regions.

On the 3d inst. Queen Victoria gave audience at Windsor Castle to a deputation of citizens of France, who presented four volumes of addresses thanking the people of Great Britain for their services to the sick and wounded during the late war. The Queen replied that the recognition of such services could not fail to increase the friendly and cordial feeling between the two nations.

The total steamboat tonnage of the world is stated to be 5,244,888 tons, of which 3,015,783 tons belong to Great Britain.

The London Times states that England in reply to Russia's invitation to attend the International Law Conference, to be resumed at St. Petersburg, has declared her willingness to do so, but regrets that she is unable to anticipate any practical result from its deliberations.

The French National Assembly has re-elected Buffet its President, by a vote of 348 to 3. The Left remained neutral and did not vote. The message of President MacMahon was delivered to the Assembly the 3d inst. The President says: "Order has been maintained throughout the country. The relations with foreign governments are on excellent footing; France has shown a firm determination to respect treaties and has gained increased confidence of her neighbors. No foreign Power now doubts her desire to maintain pacific relations with all nations. The financial position of the country has sensibly improved. At home, thanks to a good harvest, the agricultural production has reached an unprecedented figure. The export trade has never been so considerable as during the last four months. Everything favors the expectation that these most satisfactory results will be at least equalled in 1876."

The President insists strongly on the necessity of definite legislation with regard to the constitutional powers.

The bill for freeing the University from the control of the State, caused an exciting debate on the 4th and 5th inst. It was supported by the clerical deputies, and finally passed by a vote of 553 against 133.

The idea of a partial renewal of the Assembly by periodical elections is gaining ground among all parties, and a motion to that effect will probably soon be laid before the chamber.

A telegram from Carlist sources says General Despujols, commanding a large body of government troops in Valencia, had been totally defeated by the Carlists, and forced to retreat to Murillo with the loss of 600 killed and wounded and 450 prisoners.

The Carlists have laid siege to Berga, fifty miles from Barcelona.

Ex-President Castelar has been appointed a Commissioner to represent Spain at the Centennial Exhibition in Philadelphia.

The Bishop of Urgal, until lately a warm adherent of Don Carlos, has written a letter announcing his abandonment of the Carlist cause, and stating that he has advised Don Alphonso to take the same course.

The Italian Chamber of Deputies has unanimously passed a resolution in favor of granting an annuity to Garibaldi.

In the German Parliament the affairs of Alsace-Lorraine have been under discussion. The Deputies from Alsace and Lorraine declared that they were opposed to high endowment of the University of Strasbourg, and to other educational grants for the provinces, because they were made in the interest of the Empire and not of the provinces themselves. Bismarck replied that this was not a question of Alsace and Lorraine, that the University was for imperial purposes, and it was for the German empire that those provinces were conquered and annexed. We have other grounds for action than those people whose past leads to Paris and whose present leads to Rome. We may expect a better discernment in the rising generation, and must therefore see that good schools are provided for Alsace and Lorraine. Since becoming acquainted with the attitude of the Deputies of those provinces, he was satisfied that the creation of a local Parliament for them would be unwise; it would lead to continual agitation, and perhaps endanger the peace of the empire.

The Prussian government has issued a circular to provincial authorities, instructing them to most urgently caution the people against the false representation of Brazillian emigration agents, stating that emigrants who went out under their representations continue to return to Germany in the most abject condition.

A St. Petersburg dispatch says: The Russian government has sent notes to various Powers, inviting them to participate in the conference to be held here for the resumption of the discussion of the questions submitted to the conference lately held at Brussels.

A dispatch of the 2d from Bahia, Brazil, says: Intelligence has been received here of the conclusion of peace between the Argentine government and General Mitre, who, with his officers and soldiers, have been granted amnesty.

It is reported that a revolution has broken out in the Republic of Uruguay.

UNITED STATES.—The public debt statement issued on the first inst., showed a decrease during the past month of $123,428; the coin balance was $83,043,376, and currency $16,699,311.

The interments in Philadelphia last week numbered 288. The average of the mean temperature of the 11th month, by the Pennsylvania Hospital record, was 45.20 deg., the highest during the month 61 deg., and the lowest 26 deg. The amount of rain for the month was 2.22 inches. The average of the mean temperature of the Eleventh month for the past 85 years, is stated to have been 43.33 deg.; the highest during that entire period was 50.50 deg., in 1849, and the lowest in 1793, 38 deg. The mean temperature of the three fall months of 1874 has been 57.98 deg., which is nearly four deg. above the average of the past 85 years. The rain fall this year has thus far been 38.60 inches, against 56.47 inches in the corresponding portion of 1873.

The Secretary of War, in his annual report, states that the expenses of his department for the year ending 6th mo. 30th last, including river and harbor improvements, were $43,326,305, which is $3,998,993 less than in the previous year.

Congress met in Washington on the 7th inst., and the President's annual message was received and read. The President remarks that since the convening of Congress one year ago, the nation has undergone a prostration in business and industries such as has not been witnessed in this country for many years. One of the first steps towards a revival and the re-establishment of trade and business on solid foundations, is the restoration of a sound currency, which, in the President's opinion, can only be one of equal value with gold and silver, which are the recognized mediums of exchange all over the civilized world. The question of an early resumption of specie payments is therefore earnestly urged on the attention of Congress. The repeal of the legal tender clause of the Currency act is recommended, to take effect as to contracts made after the day which may be fixed by law for its repeal, and the Secretary of the Treasury should be provided with the means of accumulating sufficient gold in the Treasury to sustain redemption. The President thinks that with resumption free banking may be authorized with entire safety and great benefit to the public.

The rules adopted to improve the Civil Service of the government have been adhered to as closely as has been practicable with the opposition with which they are met. The effect is believed to have been beneficial on the whole, and has tended to elevate the service, but the rules cannot be maintained without the direct and positive support of Congress.

The policy adopted for the management of Indian affairs, known as the peace policy, has been adhered to with most beneficial results. It is confidently hoped that a few years will relieve the frontiers from all danger of Indian depredations. Some sort of territorial government for the Indian Territory is recommended, and also the extension of the Homestead laws to the Indians.

Many other subjects are referred to in the message in a clear and concise manner.

The total net receipts of the U. S. Treasury the last fiscal year, exclusive of loans, were $289,478,756, and the payments $287,133,875. Interest on the public debt was $107,119,812; expenses of the army and navy $73,246,515; pensions $29,038,415; Indians $6,692,463.

The Markets, &c.—The following were the quotations on the 7th inst. Philadelphia—American gold, 111¼. Uplands and New Orleans cotton, 14¾ a 15½ cts. Superfine and extra flour, $4 a $4.50; finer brands, $5 a $7.50. Red wheat, $1.20 a $1.24; amber, $1.25 a $1.28; white, $1.37 a $1.42. Rye, 97 a 98 cts. New corn, 80 a 84 cts.; old yellow and mixed, 92 a 93 cts. Oats, 64 a 68 cts. Lard, 14 a 14½ cts. Extra beef cattle sold at 7 a 7½ cts. per lb. gross; fair to good, 5½ a 6½ cts. and common 3¾ a 5 cts. About 12,000 sheep sold at 4 a 7½ cts. per lb. gross, and 5,500 hogs at $10.25 a $10.50 per 100 lbs. net for corn fed.

THE WESTERN SOUP HOUSE,

Situated at No. 1615 South street, exclusively under the control of and mainly supported by Friends, will be opened for the delivery of soup on the 15th inst. It is expected that owing to the large number of persons out of employment, a greatly increased demand will be made this year upon the Society, in view of which the Friends having the management, earnestly solicit contributions to aid in carrying out the charitable work,—which may be sent to either

SAMUEL BETTLE, No. 151 North Tenth St.; or DAVID SCULL, Jr., Treasurer, 125 Market St.

WANTED.

A Governess for Westtown Boarding School, to enter on her duties at the opening of the next Session.

Apply to
Elizabeth C. Scattergood, West Chester, Pa.
Hannah Richardson, Wilmington, Del.
Hannah Evans, No. 322 Union St., Philada.
Lydia L. Walton, Moorestown, N. J.

FRIENDS' ASYLUM FOR THE INSANE.

Near Frankford, (Twenty-third Ward,) Philadelphia.

Physician and Superintendent—JOSHUA H. WORTHINGTON, M. D.

Applications for the Admission of Patients may be made to the Superintendent, or to any of the Board of Managers.

DIED, at his residence in Dartmouth, Mass., on the 14th of 11th month, 1874, THOMAS K. WILBUR, a member and elder of Dartmouth Monthly Meeting, in the 79th year of his age. This dear Friend was through life a consistent and faithful supporter of the principles and testimonies of Truth as ever held by the Society of Friends, and concerned to prevent any innovation upon them. When he saw indications of this, he faithfully withstood them in the ability afforded; in consequence of which he had much to endure from those disposed to adopt a modification of the principles of our forefathers less in the cross to the propensities of the natural man. He maintained his integrity to the last. He endured a protracted illness with patience and resignation, and as his end approached, of which he was well aware, he evinced no trepidation or fear, but in innocent and cheerful submission to the Divine will; quietly and peacefully passed away, we doubt not to a better and more enduring inheritance.

WILLIAM H. PILE, PRINTER,
No. 422 Walnut Street.

THE FRIEND.

A RELIGIOUS AND LITERARY JOURNAL.

VOL. XLVIII. SEVENTH-DAY, TWELFTH MONTH 19, 1874. NO. 18.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY.

Price Two Dollars per annum, if paid in advance. Two dollars and fifty cents, if not paid in advance.

Subscriptions and Payments received by

JOHN S. STOKES,

AT NO. 116 NORTH FOURTH STREET, UP STAIRS.

PHILADELPHIA.

Postage, when paid quarterly in advance, five cents.

For "The Friend."

Legal Opinions in the Ohio Case.

(Continued from page 134.)

"At the annual session of the Ohio Yearly Meeting for 1854, the men's meeting for discipline was duly opened by the old clerk, Benjamin Hoyle. The want of harmony, however, was immediately manifested, and was intensified by the presence of Thomas B. Gould, Clerk of the Wilburite New England Meeting, and a companion from the same body. The order of the Society, that the meeting be kept select, was insisted upon by the Friends in sympathy with the larger and regular New England Meeting. But the clerk and others in sympathy with Gould proceeded with business, against the protest of the former, and without making the meeting select, and without even requesting the objectionable persons to withdraw; and so the ordinary business of the meeting was continued, amid much confusion, until the adjournment. After the adjournment, the representatives, in pursuance of the order of the Society, met for the purpose of choosing a clerk and assistant for the ensuing year, but were unable to unite upon names to be presented to the meeting. A portion of the representatives, about one-third of the whole number, agreed to report to the meeting the name of Jonathan Binns for clerk, and James B. Bruff for assistant,* and the others agreed to report, simply, that the representatives were unable to unite upon names to be reported for clerk and assistant.

"At the next sitting, the report of the representatives being in order, Jabez Coulsen, one of the representatives, reported 'that the representatives had conferred together, and a large portion of them had united in proposing the name of Jonathan Binns for clerk, and James B. Bruff for assistant.' Many Friends immediately expressed themselves in favor of this report; and thereupon Nathan Hall, another representative arose and stated, 'that the representatives had met, but were unable to agree upon names to be offered to the meeting for clerk and assistant,' whereupon many other Friends expressed themselves in favor of continuing the old clerk and assistant for the ensuing year. The clerk then inquired of Nathan Hall whether it had been laid upon him to make that report, and, being answered in the affirmative, he said, 'Then it is in order.' Many voices again united in favor of Binns and Bruff, and others opposed, when the clerk arose and said, 'It is evident from the report Jabez Coulsen has made, that Nathan Hall's report is true, and it has always been the usage of this meeting, under such circumstances, to continue the old clerks, and that is the course I am now about to take, as the only one, in my opinion, that can be pursued according to order;' and thereupon he made and recorded a minute continuing himself and the old assistant for another year.

"Thereupon, Jonathan Binns, being urged thereto by those members who opposed Gould and his companion remaining in the meeting (with one or two exceptions), went to the clerk's table, and made a minute of his own and Bruff's appointment as clerk and assistant; which minute was approved by more voices than is usual on such occasions.

"The action of the meeting, upon the report from the representatives, is described by Jonathan Binns as follows: 'I think I can give nearly the order in which those events took place. I did not know my name would be reported by the representatives. Jabez Coulsen made the report from the representatives, naming me for clerk; Nathan Hall made the other report. I heard the clerk ask Nathan Hall whether the representatives required him to make that report. Nathan Hall answered in the affirmative. The clerk next spoke; I think he said, "This is in order." There was a large number of the members of the meeting who united in the name brought forward by the representatives, before the other arose to give his report. There was no unity expressed after Benjamin Hoyle said that they were in order and the other was not. Then there were very few voices that united with me. * * If the representatives report the name of a person not acceptable to the meeting, they would have a right to non-concur in the report. I do not recollect that it ever occurred before, that the meeting non-concurred in the report made by the representatives of a person for clerk. The meeting has a right to consider any person, no matter by whom nominated. I consider that the concurrence in my appointment was much more general than is usual in the appointment of clerks. I do not recollect that there was any opposition; there might have been one or two. The concurrence when Hoyle announced his appointment was not near so general as in my appointment.'

"The testimony of Benjamin Hoyle, on the same subject, is as follows: 'I will go on to state that Jabez Coulsen proposed the name of Jonathan Binns for clerk, and James B. Bruff for assistant; and immediately Nathan Hall arose—he was sitting right before me. I think there were two in the house about rising to approve Jabez Coulsen's report, but Nathan Hall arose, and said that the representatives were unable to agree, and, on inquiry, he said he was so instructed to report. I then said the latter was in order and the other was not. Upon that the meeting acted, and I made a minute appointing myself clerk, and W. S. Bates assistant, as at other times, to which there was considerable unity of expression, and a good deal of expression was over the name of Binns, too, from those that favored him; and he was invited, after some time, to the table. He made his minute, and there was considerable expression of unity, perhaps more than usual at that time; but the question was propounded by some one whether we could take any part in that, as it was a separate organization. He was answered that it was a separate organization, and we could not speak to it or recognize it in any shape.'"

"After the separation, but before the end of their respective sessions, each of these resultant bodies prepared and sent an epistle to each of the other Yearly Meetings of the Society, containing a statement of the circumstances of the separation. The letter of the Hoyle meeting stated the circumstances which occurred on the first and second days of the session, substantially as above given, and claimed that Binns and his associates were seceders from the Ohio Yearly Meeting, and had assumed the name without any just claim or right. The letter of the Binns meeting set forth the disorders which had prevailed in the Ohio Yearly Meeting from the year 1845, and their causes, substantially as above stated, together with the circumstances immediately attending the act of separation.

"Upon the receipt of these letters, the several Yearly Meetings of the Society (except Philadelphia) *acknowledged the meeting of which Binns was a clerk as the true and only Ohio Yearly Meeting, and at the same time disavowed and disowned the organization of which Hoyle was clerk. The Philadelphia Yearly Meeting, in 1855, united with the Hoyle organization, by receiving and answering its letter, and by sending letters to other Yearly Meetings in vindication of its course. Like correspondence was continued in 1856; but in the year 1857, on account of dissensions within its own borders, growing out of the same difficulties, it ceased its epistolary correspondence with the Hoyle meeting, and also with all other meetings of the Society. In the meantime, however, it has accorded full rights of membership to professed Friends in unity with each of the Ohio organizations, without giving credit to the letters or certificates of either body."

"It is conceded that, previous to 1854, the Ohio Yearly Meeting was composed of persons who were members of the Society of Friends, and that in and by the act of separation, two distinct and independent bodies were organized out of the old membership, each of which claim the succession, and that the persons of whom it is composed continue to be members of the Society of Friends. Hence it is that inquiries into the subsequent ecclesiastical relations of these respective bodies become natural and pertinent.

* No such agreement was known to the other representatives.

* No one of the Yearly Meetings declared that the Binns' meeting was the legitimate Ohio Yearly Meeting; but decided to correspond with it as the meeting with the members of which they had unity.—ED.

"The testimony clearly shows that Binns and his associates, ever since the separation, have maintained intact the accustomed relations of a Yearly Meeting with the Society, and its several other Yearly Meetings, save only in the matter of annual correspondence with the Philadelphia meeting. Every rule and order of the Society for the preservation of its unity have been kept and observed by and with this meeting. Not a tie has been broken, a duty unperformed, or right unacknowledged, whereby the Christian fellowship, which especially distinguishes this peculiar sect, has been interrupted.

"On the other hand, Hoyle and his associates, saving only their imperfect affiliation with Philadelphia Yearly Meeting, have, at all times and everywhere, been excluded from fellowship with the Society and all its members. The rights of Quakers have been denied to them by meetings and Friends whose standing in the Society is undisputed, and at the same time, the Hoyle meeting has ignored or violated the fundamental law of the Society, by invading the territory of other meetings, and setting up within their jurisdictions its own subordinate meetings. To Hoyle and his associates is denied the right to sit in other Yearly Meetings, except in Philadelphia; the right of ministers to exercise their gifts; the right of intermarriage; the right to participate in meetings for sufferings, and the duty of annual correspondence, *whereby their unity with the Society, in the Quaker sense of the term, is wholly destroyed.

"Upon the above stated facts and circumstances, we must now decide which of these associations is the Ohio Yearly Meeting, for whose use the property in controversy is held in trust."

(To be concluded.)

For "The Friend."

Winter in Russia.

In a recent work with this title, T. Gautier has given the impressions made on a Parisian by his first experience of Russian society and temperature. He thus speaks of the effects of the latter:

"We have been having, for a few days, truly Russian cold, and I propose to note some of its aspects; for, at this strength, cold is visible, and you see it perfectly, although you do not feel it through the double windows of your well-heated apartment.

The sky becomes clear, and of a tint of blue which has no resemblance to the azure of the South—a blue of steel, a blue of ice, of a rare and charming tone which no palette has ever reproduced. The light is brilliant, but it is not warm, and the icy sun reddens the cheeks of a few little rosy clouds. The diamonded snow scintillates; it sparkles like Parian marble, and grows twice as white under the frost which makes it hard. The trees, covered with crystallized rime, resemble great spreading ramifications of quicksilver, or the metallic splendors of an enchanted garden.

Draw on your pelisse, turn up the collar, pull your fur cap down to your eyebrows, and hail the first isvochtchik who passes; he will drive up quickly, and bring his sledge close to the sidewalk. However young he may be, his beard will be perfectly white. His breath condensed in icicles around his face, which is purple with cold, gives him the aspect of a patriarch. His stiffened locks scourge his cheek-bones like icy serpents; and the fur which he lays across your knees is sown with a million little white globules.

You are off; the air, keen, penetrating, icy, but salubrious, stings your face; the horse, heated by the rapidity of his motion, breathes out smoke like a fabled dragon, and from his reeking sides rises a little cloud of vapor which hangs about him. You notice, in passing, horses of other isvochtchiks standing to be fed; the sweat has frozen upon them; they are actually encrusted with ice, as a sugared almond with sugar. As soon as they are again in motion, this pellicle breaks; it melts or falls off, to be renewed at the next pause. These alternations, which would ruin an English horse in a week, have no bad effect upon the health of these hardy little animals. No matter how cold it it, only the most expensive horses are blanketed, and instead of those leather caparisons, embroidered in the corners with armorial devices, usual with us and in England, they merely throw over the smoking flanks of their blood-horses a Persian or Smyrna carpet of brilliant hues."

"They have begun to drive upon the river; the ice, two or three feet thick, in spite of some temporary thaws which melt the snow, will not break up until spring; it is strong enough to bear heavy wagons or even artillery. Pine branches designate the roads to follow and the points to be avoided. At certain places the ice is cut out, to give an opportunity of drawing up water, which is still flowing under this crystal floor. The water, warmer than the atmosphere, smokes through these apertures like a boiling caldron, but this is only by comparison, and it would not be wise to trust to its warmth.

In walking on the English quay, or on the river itself, it is curious to see the fish taken out from the tanks in which they are kept alive; when the scoop brings them up and they are thrown palpitating on the planks, they fling themselves about, writhing for a moment, but soon are still, stiffened, and, so to speak, are imprisoned in a transparent casing; the water with which they were wet has suddenly congealed upon them.

In this intense cold, freezing is marvellously sudden; place a bottle of champagne between the sashes of the double window, and in five minutes it will be iced better than in any cooler. Pardon a personal incident: I will not abuse your permission. Carried away by the force of habit, one day I had lighted an excellent Havana just at the moment of going out for a walk. In the door-way, the prohibition against smoking in the streets of St. Petersburg, and the fine of a ruble, suddenly recurred to me; and yet to throw away an excellent cigar after only two or three whiffs is a hard thing for a smoker. As I was going but a few steps, I concealed it in my hand. To carry a cigar is not against the law. When I opened my hand again, in the vestibule of my friend's house, the end moist from my lips had become a bit of ice, whil at the other the generous puro was yet smok ing."

"If my reader's fingers are not frost-bitte under this icy description of the Russia winter, and he has yet courage left to brav with me still further rigors of the thermome ter, let him come, after we have had a larg glass of very hot tea, and take a walk upo the Neva, to visit an encampment of Samoyed who have established themselves quite in th middle of the river, as being the only place i St. Petersburg cool enough for them. Thes polar creatures are like white bears. A tem perature of four or five degrees above zero i quite like spring to them, and makes them pant with the heat. Their migrations ar most irregular, obeying caprices or reason unknown. For several years they have failed to put in an appearance, and I esteem it one of the lucky incidents of my journey that they have come during my sojourn in the city of the czars.

The inquisitive group which has gathered around the hut of the Samoyeds forms a black circle on the white snow-covered surface of the Neva. I slip in between a mujik in his touloupe and a soldier in a gray capote, and, over a woman's shoulder, get a look into the tent made of skins stretched by pickets driven into the ice, and resembling a great paper horn with its point in the air. A low opening, through which one could enter only by going on all fours, allows me to see indistinctly in the darkness bundles of furs, which, perchance, are men or women—one could not say which. Outside, some skins are hung on ropes; snow-shoes are scattered about upon the ice; and a Samoyed, standing by a sledge, lends himself complacently to the ethnographic investigations of the crowd. He is clad in a sack of skin, the hair inwards, to which is fitted a hood, with an aperture made for the face. Coarse gloves, having only the thumbs separate, and covering the sleeves so as to leave no passage for the air, and boots of white felt, tied on with thongs, complete his costume; inelegant, doubtless, but hermetically sealed from cold, and, besides, not lacking character; the color is that of the skin itself, dressed by some primitive process. The face which is framed in this hood—tanned, reddened by the air—has prominent cheek-bones, a flattened nose, a wide mouth, steel-gray eyes, with light lashes; not ugly, and with a sad, gentle, intelligent expression.

While in St. Petersburg, these Samoyeds earn a little by charging visitors a few kopecks a trip, for excursions upon the Neva in their sledges drawn by reindeer. The sledge, which is very light, has but a single seat, covered by a ragged piece of fur, on which sits the passenger. The Samoyed, standing at the side, on one of the wooden runners, guides the team by means of a stick, with which he touches the reindeer who happens to lag, or who is required to change his direction. The team is composed of three animals abreast, or of four, in two couples. It is strange and droll to see these pretty, delicate creatures, with their dainty limbs and their stag's horns, run with so much docility, and draw loads. The reindeer go very fast, or, rather, seem to go very fast, for their movements are prompt and rapid in the extreme; but they are small, and I think that a trotting-horse of the Orlov breed would distance them without difficulty, especially if the race were prolonged. However, nothing is more graceful than these light equipages, as they describe great circles upon the Neva—flying off and then returning to the point of departure, scarcely making any impression upon the icy surface. Those who understand the subject say that the reindeer are not seen at their best, beeause it is too warm for them (twelve or fourteen degrees above zero!) In faet, one of the poor creatures, on being unharnessed, seemed to be suffocating; and, to restore her, they covered her with snow."

* This is a mere obiter dictum on points which have not been examined, and in proof of which no evidence had been given.—Ed.

For "The Friend."

Dividing the Word Aright.

In one of Richard Jordan's visits, remote from his home, he was the guest of a Friend having a numerous family of children, some of whom were pretty well grown up. After the older part of the family had taken supper, the children as is usual in sueh cases, had their turn at the table. Mirthfulness and good appetites prevailed around the board. Indeed there seemed to be with some of the boys a disposition to immoderate indulgence in eating, when one of the sisters of the company, of more eircumspect deportment, gently reproved them, adding thereto, Riehard Jordan will preach to you for this. The admonition thus quietly offered, was promptly seeonded by one of the boys who was observed to be habitually temperate in his eating, but who had nevertheless fallen into the evil habit of smoking tobaeco.

Supper being over, the family was assembled, and a religious opportunity ensued. In his remarks Richard Jordan dwelt upon the duty of a christian moderation in all things, with especial allusion to the evils of intemperate eating. At this point of the discourse the youthful smoker felt a glow of calm complacency, that all this grave admonition, however suited to the conduct of others, eould have no application to his own. He scarcely had time to settle his mind into this agreeable persuasion, when R. Jordan, whose seat was by the side of the young man, laid his hand upon his knee and solemnly addressing him said, "And there can be intemperance in smoking too."

First east the beam out of thine own eye—all boasting is excluded. B.

Unemployed Labor.—It is feared that the approaching winter will be a bad one for multitudes in the large northern eities, who, previous to last year, were strangers to extreme want. It is said that there are tens of thousands of laborers and mechanics already unemployed, and thousands will be added to this vast army when the season for out-door work shall end. But the number should be kept down as low as it is possible to keep it, and no better way can be found to accomplish this than one suggested by a writer in the New York Tribune, who says: "There is a class of rational and cultured men and women whom it may be worth while to remind just now that the saving of money is not sometimes the best humanity or economy. We fail to see the wisdom of discharging workmen or servants whose wages would amount to hundreds during the winter months, and before the winter is over subscribing thousands to beneficial societies or soup houses. Nor is it better policy to deny ourselves suddenly the comforts, upon the manufacture of which the majority of city operatives depend for their daily bread. These remarks, of course, only apply to the wealthy class, but there are none of us who should not carefully consider how our small surplus funds could be expended in wages rather than in alms."

For "The Friend."

John Griffith.

(Continued from page 129.)

What a blessing and a mercy it is that we have such a compassionate Heavenly Father, and sueh a loving Saviour, the faithful, ever-present High Priest of our profession! who, touehed with the feeling of our infirmities, and tempted in all points as we are yet without sin, is able to succor them that are tempted, and to save to the very uttermost, through the power of his Holy Spirit, all that come unto God by him. Thus, as appears in his journal, John Griffith was, through submission to the saving graee of the Lord Jesus, early convieted for sin, shown the depravity of his fallen heart, reproved for transgression, helped out of besetting temptations, waited for, wooed and entreated to turn unto Him, who gathereth His lambs in his arms and earrieth them in his bosom. That thus taking His yoke upon him, and dedicating his time and his talents to the Lord, He who alone is the sufficiency of His people, and whose merey being from everlasting to everlasting to them that fear Him, would, as obedience keeps pace with knowledge to His immediately communicated will, enable experimentally to say with the Psalmist: "The Lord is my shepherd, I shall not want. He maketh me to lie down in green pastures; he leadeth me beside the still waters. * * Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil: for Thou art with me; thy rod and thy staff they comfort me. * * Surely goodness and mercy shall follow me all the days of my life; and I will dwell in the house of the Lord forever."

Why is it with these exceeding great and precious promises, having respect not only to the life that now is, but to that which is to come; why is it that with the proffered, all-effeetual, saving help and grace of the Redeemer, whose strength, too, is made perfect in weakness; why is it that any, whether younger or older, can plead excuse, or say in word, or in the no less expressive language of conduet, to the heavenly visitant, "Go thy way for this time, when I have a convenient season I will eall for thee:"—Thus postponing to some indefinite period, to to-morrows that will never come, the first and greatest duty of this life. Especially may we thus query when we consider the value of an immortal soul for which Christ died; the marked uneertainty of this poor life for whieh we have no lease; with, no less, the fear of the withdrawal of the Saviour's warning, pleading voice, for we know not what a day may bring forth; nor when the Spirit may ccase to strive. For there is a time when long neglect may close our ears, or habitual transgression harden the heart against every message of Heavenly love; and the peace-giving power of the gospel of Jesus be greatly if not wholly withdrawn from us.

J. Griffith was long borne and pleaded with, though he continued his halting, wavering, sinning and repenting course till upwards of nineteen years of age, when the circumstance alluded to in the present selection took place; which, as he says, "through infinite mercy never to be forgotten, * * was the happy means of turning my mind, in a good degree, from the perishing vanities of an uneertain world, to the God of all sure mercies."

His narrative proceeds, viz:

"When I was about the age of thirteen years, a friend who had lived some time in Pennsylvania, being in our parts, and frequently at our house, gave a very pleasing account of that country. I having two uncles and one aunt there, some of whom had before written to encourage our going over thither, my inelination grew very strong to go; though my parents, especially my father, was at first very much against it. But I was as one immoveably bent for going; whieh when my parents saw, and an elder brother inelined to go with me, they at length consented thereunto, and procured a eertificate of our being in unity with Friends.

"Removing from under my parents' wateh-ful care over me, for my good, furnished me with great opportunity to gratify a vain mind, in the foolish amusements of a transitory world, towards which I had but too great an inclination. But I have this to say, in order that parents may be encouraged to exert their godly endeavors for the preservation of their children, that I do steadfastly believe, the religious care of my parents over me in my youth, impressed so great an awe upon my mind, that, through the blessing of Divine Providence, it was a great means of my preservation from gross enormities; though I had great opportunities of being plunged thereinto, after I left them. I hope ever to retain a grateful and thankful remembrance of those gracious preservations, when I consider how narrowly I have escaped those rocks, upon whieh many have been shipwrecked and ruined.

"I was sometimes visited, and in degree awakened to a sense of my undone condition without a Saviour, after my arrival in America, though not so frequently as when I was younger. As I had often, oh very often, knowingly withstood it, my taste for worldly pleasures being now grown stronger, I was very unwilling to give up to the eall of Christ. I could plead abundance of exeuses, eoncluding among other things, that I was but young, and might live a great many years; that if I did take my swing a few years, I might beeome religious sooner than many others had done, who were brave men in their day. I would, however, to make myself the more easy for that time, fully determine to be a very religious good man, at one time or other; but it must not be yet. Thus, through the gross darkness which had covered my mind, I who had no certainty of seeing the light of one day more, was prevailed upon by the subtilty of Satan, to run the dreadful hazard of a future repentance and amendment of life, and so became worse and more hardened in evil, though still preserved out of gross pollutions, or what are commonly so esteemed; I was afraid to tell a lie, exeept to embellish, or set off a pleasant or merry tale or story; apprehending it no great crime to tell a lie in jest. I never remember to have sworn an oath, or uttered a curse in my life. Nor was I ever prevailed upon, in my customary conversation, to depart from the rules of my education, respecting the plain language, thee and thou to one, and you to more than one; all this time preserving a pretty fair character amongst men, as none could charge me with anything accounted scandalous. I retained much love and regard for those I truly thought religious; especially weighty substantial ministers of the everlasting gospel; and I believe had a better sense of their spirits and labors than some of my companions had, and therefore was afraid to despise or speak contemptibly of such, as some of my associates did. In this carnal degenerate state, I did commonly, in a customary way, attend First-day meetings, and mostly had the liberty of going on other days of the week, when any ministers from distant parts came to visit Abington Meeting, to which I belonged: but alas! it was to little or no good purpose, as the labor bestowed upon me, by ministry or otherwise, was like water spilt upon a stone, that soon runs off again without any entrance; I being indeed for some time, like the heath in the desert, not knowing when good came: and if at any time, the seed of God's kingdom fell upon my heart, which was like the high-way ground, it was soon taken away, and I presently lost the savor thereof.

"When I had arrived to upwards of nineteen years of age, I was, through infinite mercy never to be forgotten, visited in an extraordinary manner; concerning which, as it was the happy means of turning my mind, in a good degree, from the perishing vanities of an uncertain world, to the God of all sure mercies, I intend to be somewhat particular. One evening, being with divers of my companions in vanity, and under no restraint, as the heads of the family were not at home, we carried our frothy vain conversation, and foolish rude actions, to a higher degree of wicked madness than I was ever guilty of before, in which I suppose I was a ringleader. On this account, I felt some sharp lashes of conscience as I went to bed that night; and a thoughtfulness took hold of my mind, that we had not a being in this world for such a purpose, or to spend our time as above mentioned, of which I gave some hint to my bedfellow; yet this conviction did not sink so deep, but that I pretty soon got to sleep. I had not slept long, before a messenger alarmed me with an account, that one of my jolly companions, who was then in the house, and who, I think, had been the best of us, was dying, desiring me to go immediately to him, which I did. I was exceedingly struck with horror of mind, at the thoughts of the manner in which we had spent the evening before, and the sudden stroke that followed upon this poor man. But when I came to his bed-side, and saw the dreadful agony he was in, my horror was increased beyond all expression; as none of us expected he could live many hours. For my part, I was so deeply plunged into anxiety of mind, that it seemed as if the terrors and pains of hell had laid hold of me already; and I was then in full expectation there was no deliverance for me therefrom; but that I should die, with the weight of that distress which was upon me, before morning."

(To be continued.)

"And it shall come to pass in the last days, saith God, I will pour out of My Spirit upon all flesh: and your sons and your daughters shall prophesy, and your young men shall see visions, and your old men shall dream dreams: and on My servants and on My hand-maidens I will pour out in those days of My Spirit; and they shall prophesy." Acts ii. 17, 18.

Selected.

THE SURE REFUGE.

Not seldom, clad in radiant vest,
Deceitfully goes forth the morn;
Not seldom evening in the west
Sinks sweetly, smilingly forsworn.

The smoothest seas will sometimes prove,
To the confiding bark, untrue;
And if she trust the stars above,
They can be false and treacherous too.

The umbrageous oak, in pomp outspread,
Full oft, when storms the welkin rend,
Draws lightnings down upon the head
It promised surely to defend.

But thou art true, incarnate Lord,
Who didst vouchsafe for man to die;
Thy smile is sure, thy plighted word
No change can break or falsify.

I bent before thy gracious throne,
And asked for peace with suppliant knee;
And peace was given—nor peace alone,
But faith, and hope, and ecstasy!

Wordsworth.

Selected.

HILLS.

Where are the hills? Across the meadows,
Once bright with summer's green, I gaze,
And see against the blue horizon
The trees their leafless branches raise;
On one side lies the busy city,
Where men must toil and strive for gain,
And round it, robbed of summer beauty,
So cold and cheerless, lies the plain.

No hills! Ah! all my life the longing
For hills grew in my heart more strong—
High hills, first touched by morning's glory,
And where the sunlight lingered long:
Green hills, with gentle, sweet flowers hiding
Their perfumed hearts in sheltered nooks;
With sweet-voiced birds their tired wings cooling
In sparkling, laughing little brooks.

But there are hills; each night at even
I watch as sinks the glowing sun,
And see my hills of gold and purple
Rise up in grandeur one by one;
Above them lie the deep blue heavens,
And at their feet still waters sleep,
While from near gates there streams a glory—
Then over all the shadows creep.

But I'm content, and say still gladly,
Yes, there are hills, and not so far;
A glimpse is sweeter than possession—
The darkest night, the brightest star;
And still I dream of hills, that, waiting,
Some time will greet my eager feet;
And all that causes patient striving,
When gained, repays by blessings sweet.

Yes, there are hills! some hearts, so noble,
Live on their heights, and are above
The poor weak world, so vainly striving
For gold—or any thing but love;
And in most lives there are high places,
As if, amid the petty strife,
An angel hand kept some place sacred,
Something that really meant true life.

O, there are hills! be not faint-hearted;
Our sight is dim, or we could see
How near our weary feet are pressing
The place where soon our home will be;
Not now—a little more hard toiling;
But soon will come the sweet, glad rest,
When, free from all our heavy burdens,
We reach the hill-tops of the blest.

The Christian Advocate.

From the "Congregationalist."

A True Arabian Night's Tale.

Forty years ago a Bowdoin professor lost a screw from a fine theodolite. The missing little fastening was a great defect much deplored, but an ingenious student undertook to supply it by making another screw out of brass, obtaining from sulphate of iron his own oxide to polish it. His success led him next to construct a perfect steam engine on a small scale, and that education of the brain by the hand induced more mechanical and chemical study, on the strength of which, being a missionary in Constantinople during the Crimean war, he set up vast bakeries for the pressing need, turning out seven tons of bread a day to save life and health for hundreds of thousands; specimens of which, filling the air with their perfume from the decks of several vessels, led a Mr. Robert to inquire for the baker, an introduction to whom occasioned the founding of a blessing to the whole East, of Robert College, sending rays of liberty and religion through the Oriental dark—all from the good heart that was put into the turning of a screw. The sincere boy is now the sincere man, Cyrus Hamlin, to whom reference is made in the following sketch from the New York Observer, of Nov. 1870:

"One afternoon, while I was at Constantinople, as I sat with Dr. Hamlin on the shores of the Bosphorus, looking over at the building now occupied temporarily as Robert College, which belongs to the American Board, and was formerly used as a Theological Seminary, I asked him for what purpose the building was originally erected. It seemed too large for an ordinary dwelling, and the palaces and residences of the pashas are chiefly down upon the water. My question struck a vein of recollection in Dr. Hamlin's mind which he seemed nothing loth to indulge, and he gave me the following history, derived from sources of undoubted authenticity. It is one of those records which could be made in no other land, but which seem to belong to the atmosphere of the Orient.

Just about a hundred years ago there stood, on opposite sides of a street in Stamboul, near the Egyptian Bazaar, two shops of no pretension—one kept by a Mohamedan for the sale of tobacco, chibouks, &c., the other kept by a baker, an Armenian Christian, for the sale of bread. Each of the proprietors had a son, and, notwithstanding the difference in their religions, quite contrary to the ordinary custom, these two youths formed a strong attachment. They spent much of their time together in rambles through the city and at each other's home, and the parents, living in good neighborhood, did not interfere with their unusual intimacy. They never talked or thought of separation until one day, when they had nearly reached manhood, the young Mussulman came to his friend with the heavy tidings that they must part. His father had procured for him the position of chiboukjee, or pipe-bearer, to a Pasha who had been appointed Governor of Bagdad. They talked the matter over between them with much bitterness of regret; but the position was one which was not to be thrown away, especially as it carried with it the promise of promotion. The fancy and the ambition of the young Mussulman, too, were excited by the thoughts of a journey to Bagdad, and a residence in that renowned old city. They pledged themselves each to the other to remain faithful in their attachment, however widely separated by time or distance, and the young man took his leave for Bagdad, while the other remained to succeed his father in business as an ekmekjee, or baker.

Many long years passed away. The young adventurer, who had gone to the East, first rose to the position of chiboukjee-bashee, or chief of the pipe-bearers; afterward, on account of his fidelity and general intelligence, he was promoted to the office of Secretary to the Pasha, and at length to that of Deputy Governor, when the Pasha bestowed upon him the hand of one of his daughters. His name now was not unknown at the Sublime Porte, and when the Governor of Bagdad had filled out his years and passed away, the son-in-law succeeded to his dignities and wealth, and acquired a high reputation.

At the end of about thirty years he was recalled to Constantinople, where he was placed in the responsible office of Grand Vizier—the Prime Minister to the Sultan. During all this time the two friends had no communication, and the humble baker was ignorant of the fortune that had smiled upon his former companion, whom he did not know under his new name and title. Some time after the Grand Vizier was invested with his new dignities, he called an officer and gave him orders to go to such a street and make inquiry for the shop of an ekmekjee, and if he found it, to bring the owner into his presence. The arrival of the officer with the usual train, before the shop of the humble baker, first excited astonishment and then alarm, when the object of his visit became known.

The ekmekjee, when asked if such was his name, confessed that it was, but he solemnly declared that he had been guilty of no offence against the laws of the Sultan, nor had he used false weights in dealing with his customers. The neighbors soon gathered round, and one and all were ready to go surety for the innocence of the terror-stricken baker. They were sure that some evil-minded person had been spreading a malicious report, and they were all willing, without investigation, to swear that it was false. The poor baker's wife and children were in the deepest affliction, as the shop was closed, and the officer persisted in saying he must obey his orders and take the man before the Grand Vizier.

As he entered the palace, and was brought into the august presence of the Prime Minister, he fell prostrate before him, reiterating the assertion of his innocence of all crime, and imploring mercy for the sake of his wife and children, who were even now in great distress, and who would be plunged into the deepest shame and sorrow if he should be sent to prison. The Grand Vizier bade him rise. He then asked him his name and something of his early history. He asked him whether he remembered a youth who once lived opposite to his father's shop, and if he knew what had become of his former friend? The baker could give no account of his subsequent history, but spoke of him in terms of the strongest affection. He had often wished he knew something about him, but years and distance had shut them out from each other's knowledge. On being asked if he desired to see his former friend, he said it would give him the greatest happiness could he meet him once more, but he presumed the son of the chiboukjee had risen so high that even if he were living he would hardly deign to look upon a humble baker who had succeeded to the occupation of his father, and who occupied the same little shop in which he was born.

The Grand Vizier directed the ekmekjee to come near him, and then asked if he had ever seen his face before. Thirty years had wrought a great change in his countenance, but he presently recognised the old features, and the two, regardless of all the distinctions which time had made in their lots, rushed to each other's arms, and renewed the expressions of their early love. (As Dr. H. related these scenes to me, I could not help thinking of another Oriental scene, the meeting of Joseph and his brethren, and of the interview when Joseph made himself known.)

After they had talked over the events of the intervening years, the ekmekjee was escorted to his shop with great pomp. The surprise of his family and the neighbors, as they saw him returning in state, was not less than it was when they saw him arrested and led away, as they supposed, to prison and to judgment. Presently he was summoned by the Grand Vizier to the palace, who had appointed him his private treasurer, and invested him with the charge of his whole personal affairs, which he administered with the same integrity that had characterized his whole life, but in which he had the opportunity of acquiring a handsome fortune. This fortune he invested in part in erecting the extensive building to which I alluded in the opening of this letter, and which subsequently became the property of the American Board of Missions, and which is now occupied by Robert College."

For "The Friend."

That the various and peculiar testimonies of Truth, that distinguish the Society of Friends from all other religious bodies, are gradually being accepted as binding by the thoughtful and more serious-minded of other persuasions, there is no doubt. The following interesting correspondence in relation to war, has recently come to the notice of the writer, and by the kindness of one of the parties, permission has been granted to make it public to the readers of "The Friend." It may be added that the motion of Henry Richards passed the House of Commons, and soon after the meeting of the present Congress of the United States a similar resolution will be submitted for action to that body, by W. T.

Clapham Road, London, June 17, 1873.

Hon. WASHINGTON TOWNSEND, West Chester, Pa.

Dear Sir,—Mr. Yardley Warner, of Germantown, Penna., a member of the Society of Friends, now in England, informs me that you are a good deal interested in the question of "International Arbitration." On July 8, I intend to move the following Resolution in the House of Commons: "That an address be presented to Her Majesty praying that she may be graciously pleased to instruct her principal Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, to enter into communication with foreign governments with a view to make further improvements in International Law, and the establishment of a general and permanent system of International Arbitration." May I ask your views on this subject, and how far you think your government would be disposed to co-operate with ours in such a mode of action as is indicated in my motion? It is greatly to the honor of the two great Anglo-Saxon nations, that they have given to the world so noble an example as they have done by the Geneva Arbitration. It would be a still greater honor to them of they would conjointly take the initiative in bringing about something like a settled system of International Arbitration.

I am, dear sir, yours respectfully,

HENRY RICHARDS.

West Chester, July 3, 1873.

Dear Sir,—Your favor of 17th ult., came duly to hand a few days since, containing a copy of the motion you propose to submit to House of Commons on July 8, concerning International Arbitration, and asking my views thereon. I may say, in reply, that I think your motion is a very judicious one, and that I would be greatly pleased to learn that it had the approbation of Parliament. I think the present time very opportune for presenting the subject to the representatives of the people of Great Britain and the U. States.

The Geneva arbitration has settled in a peaceable and satisfactory manner, some weighty questions that were irritating the public mind in both countries, and giving much anxiety to the governments of both. Wise, prudent and learned men, have rendered their services in the settlement of the matters at issue, and both governments, desirous of preserving amicable relations, have handsomely acquiesced in the award, and the party delinquent proposes to abide by, and promptly carry out the award without a murmur.

This result shows the gratifying fact that great nations may submit matters in dispute between them to a learned and competent tribunal, and accept and comply with the terms of its decision without compromising their dignity or honor. They will thus avoid "war" that "last argument of kings," and spare the effusion of blood and the vast expenditure of money and demoralization of the people that war inevitably brings. If happily your motion should pass Parliament, it will be communicated to our government through the usual channels, and if the President should refer it to Congress, instead of the treaty making power because of its great importance, it will receive, I doubt not, the support of the ablest members of that body, and I trust will eventually bring about the desired end. I need hardly add that I will be happy to support any proposition of the kind, that will tend to the establishment of a tribunal that will settle national differences by arbitration or other peaceful means, and avert from nations the calamities of war.

I am, &c.,

W. TOWNSEND.

We have lately had an opportunity of examining a grasshopper, of the species which has wrought such wide havoc this season with the grain crops in Nebraska and elsewhere in the West. In general appearance it resembles the ordinary field grasshopper of the Eastern States, but is very much larger. The specimen submitted to us proved, upon careful measurement, to be two and a quarter inches in length, and two and a half inches in circumference at the largest part of the body, and to possess hoppers two and three-quarter inches long. Its head was furnished with thick black, flexible antennæ, and the upper half of its back with a hard, horny covering, fitting like a hood. This insect, though of such enormous dimensions, was evidently a young one, as two oval, translucent appendages, protruding from underneath the hood or shield alluded to, have all the characteristics of incipient wings. In color it was a tawny gray.—Post.

The Lord useth his flail of affliction to separate the chaff from the wheat.

For "The Friend."

Wayside Notes.

(Continued from page 109.)

It was as under the shadow of a storm, upon the verge of great political changes in the government of England, that the Society of Friends came forth, a separate element in the spiritual life of the age, presenting in its example a more exalted teaching, and a higher type of faith, than were to be found among the various religious denominations which then prevailed. The cause which Friends were chosen to espouse was not by human ordination, as in spirit its growth was in the face of governmental authority—it possessed therefore no privileges, and was born among men, as without power.

But from its weakness and prostration, as under the weight of opposing forces which Friends were unable and unwilling to resist, issued those springs of inward life, which were its beauty, and strength, and the rock of its defence, because herein it became the Lord's work. Nurtured and fed from the highways and hedges; from the humbler avenues of life, its principles were planted in the hearts of such as had been prepared to receive them, many of whom lived in comparative obscurity, and the world had not known.

In the upward struggle of the human soul, it was a time well chosen for the acceptance and spread of gospel Truth. The eternal essence of vital religion, "Christ in man, the hope of glory," needed to be revived, and from such as these, who had borne the cross in great simplicity, were His instruments gathered, because it is the humble who are taught of His ways, and the meek He hath promised to guide in the paths of judgment. Kings and rulers; the man of wealth living in luxury, such as had sat in the seat of power, and had long assumed and exercised the Divine prerogative to govern, both in civil and spiritual affairs, were not selected to rescue the banner of the cross from the gloom and obscurity in which it had been so long involved; and to plead for salvation, as did the early believers, through perfect submission to the law of the Spirit of Life in Christ Jesus.

Those who had usurped the authority of the Holy One, but who had to a great extent lost sight of Him who is Lord of the whole earth, were rather to be taught by the work which their own hands had wrought; were to receive instruction through their own disobedience, and the rod of His avenging wrath. That mankind were really living under a spiritual dispensation, wherein He, who introduced it by His glorious coming in the flesh, is forever to be known as the only Author and upholder, was a thought that obtained very little practical consideration from the mass of religious professors, or from those who stood, in the sight of their brethren, as teachers and pastors.

The ruling classes, both in the State and in the church of its adoption, were not so much interested in the general good, as in the accomplishment of their own ambitious designs; and to this end, regardless of the civil and religious rights of many, was the government moulded, as well as by the influences of a powerful and ever vigilant church establishment, that had through three successive reigns interwoven its policy to such an extent, that its presence and demands for privilege were felt at the fireside of every home in England. Though of protestant belief, and possessing the power to vindicate and punish the wrongs with which the adherents of Luther, and other Christian reformers had been visited, under the most abhorrent forms of torture and death, yet the government did not hesitate to use that power against those who had formerly been their persecutors, though under the sway of a professedly reformed, and liberal church. Evincing the same intolerant spirit which had been exercised upon themselves, when they were too weak for resistance; and proving most clearly that they, like the church of Rome, were yet in the gall of bitterness, and in the bonds of iniquity. But He who performs mysteriously, that righteousness may continue to spread, and ultimately to rest as a crown of glory over the whole earth, works not only by His willing and chosen people, but by others who would take power into their own hands, and move as their lusts or inclinations might lead them. His hand is seen in the storm as in the sunshine; and the wicked purposes of men who would stand in the way of His moral government are often blasted, as man, unlike the All-wise Ruler, cannot see the end from the beginning, or follow to their ultimate results the effects to flow from any course of action. But of this we are assured, if we walk in the Light, as He is in the Light, our work and service shall be thereby directed, and rewarded with blessings. The wrongs inflicted by one generation are apt to poison the next, and may go unpurged and unpunished, until by the irresistible course of events, the flood gates of passion, or the changed thoughts of men reveal a new element of power, and others in turn become masters; a weapon of chastisement, and a means possibly of holding up to the view of the world that Infinite Justice will ever obtain its own vindication.

As surely as individual sin unrepented of brings in a reign of desolation to that soul, and must receive a merited punishment in the life to come, will that people or nation be turned about and their purposes broken, who would multiply wrong into a vast aggregated crime, using its power to turn the world backward, and out of those channels wherein His plans are fulfilled. Also, the age of which we are writing, indeed the human race in all ages, presents many examples wherein a people had been permitted to go on in sin, until their measure of iniquity hath been filled; when, in order to teach mankind anew how much is lost by transgression, and to unsettle their faith in all human teaching; these like the Israelites of old, when they renounced the law given them from the Mount, and sought the worship of idols, were scattered as before the blast of His righteous indignation, and became an easy prey to their enemies; who although these are not to be known as among His servants and of His obedient household, are to be recognized as the ready means, whereby the judgments of the Lord are manifested against those who persist after many warnings, in treading down His holy law. His ways are indeed unsearchable; and such is His power, that He can cause even the wicked to promote His glory, by using them as a scourge, or as a warning beacon; permitting them to flourish for a time even in licentiousness, that in their decline and fall, history may record another lesson, and the rock be avoided upon which they stranded.

The period in which Friends were called; for a Divine purpose I have no doubt, to plead for a more spiritual baptism than had been urged upon the attention of the people by other churches bearing the Christian name, is deeply interesting to the thoughtful student of history. As the individual members of the militant church, are, in the economy of God's grace and love, brought out gradually from the first and carnal nature into a state of acceptance, by the aid of His Light following them in every temptation, and as a wise Provider, feeding His flock with that food which will promote their growth and establishment; so do I believe in a larger sense, and in a sphere of action wherein nations become His workmen in the spiritual growth of the world, He secretly so directs the councils of men, sometimes immediately, but more often through the tortuous trials of change, defeat, and revolution, as that governments will be brought to conform their authority to His, and thus become co-helpers; a blessing to the individual members of the State; having no privileges, and exercising no powers which would oppress or abridge the Christian liberty of the humblest. Well, this is in its very nature a gradual work. It is not the education of one generation that will bring it about, but the education of many. The Light shines feebly at first in that soul that has long been covered up in the bondage of heathen worship; and it is as difficult to remove the dark veil of bigotry and prejudice, begotten by a false church, pandering to the passions and superstition of the multitude. And the one must become enlightened, and the other utterly wasted or reformed, before the Spirit of Truth can have free course in the earth.

In that earnest, patient, godly warfare in New England, which has been dwelt upon at some length in the course of these "Notes," between the pure, heart-searching, convicting Spirit of the Lord, seeking the good of souls, as exemplified by Friends in their character and labor upon that troubled sea of conflict and suffering; and the opposition and persecution they encountered from an envious priesthood, and a church which the world must affirm was for the time, blinded by passion and prejudice, we have a striking example of the barriers a false church may set up to hinder, and even destroy the work of Truth in the hearts of the Lord's humble, dedicated servants. P. B.

Philada, 12th mo. 9th, 1874.

(To be continued.)

How Indians Catch Wild Fowl.—A number of persons from this city and Gold Hill are at present in the mountains, hunting and angling. Wild ducks are found in some localities in abundance, and the trout in the streams take the hook readily. Wild fowl have not yet made their appearance in the market in any quantity, as most of those shot are kept by the sportsmen for their own use. As the season advances the Indians will take the field and capture them in great numbers. They make large swinging nets out of strong cord, which they manufacture from the roots of fibrous plants. The bark is stripped off and manipulated and twisted by the squaws into twine, which is wound into balls ready for use. It is then woven into nets, some of which are forty feet in length, the interstices being about two inches square. These nets are swung between two trees in some convenient position on the shore of a lake or pond.

Early on a cold frosty morning some of the Indians secrete themselves in a neighboring thicket, while others get into boats, and forming a semi-circle advance slowly towards a flock of ducks, driving them towards the mouth of the bayou. They swim slowly off, hesitating to take flight, being, perhaps, partially benumbed by cold. The circle narrows, and when the wild fowl are in front of the nets the Indians in the boats raise a great out-cry, and throwing sticks and stones scare the flock, which arising from the water flies in an opposite direction directly into the net, in the meshes of which they become entangled by their heads and feet. The Indians on shore spring from their hiding-places, tear down the net, and envelope the ducks in it. They are joined by their companions from the water, and the work of slaughter commences. The necks of the birds are broken as soon as seized, and they are thrown together in piles. In this manner several hundred ducks are sometimes taken at a single haul, and the Indians have enough for their own use, and an ample supply for the market. —Virginia, Nev., Chronicle.

"The Comforter, which is the Holy Ghost, whom the Father will send in My name, He shall teach you all things, and bring all things to your remembrance, whatsoever I have said unto you." John xiv. 26.

THE FRIEND.

TWELFTH MONTH 19, 1874.

Within a few years past, it has become a practice, which seems to be increasing in many parts of our Society, to hold what are termed General Meetings, as seasons of worship, and religious revival and refreshment, by the authority of different Yearly Meetings, and under the supervision of committees appointed by those bodies.

Such meetings were not unfrequent in the early days of the Society of Friends, and are often referred to in its records and in the Journals of those of its members who were engaged in spreading among men a knowledge of the truths of the Gospel, and in endeavoring to impress on their hearers the necessity for a faithful obedience to the Light of Christ in their hearts, as the alone way to obtain deliverance from sin, and to experience the blessed effects of His outward coming and sufferings. What were termed Yearly Meetings, appear to have been early established. These were held in many parts of England, and were much resorted to by Friends and others; and were, no doubt, useful in confirming the faith of the newly convinced, as well as in bringing others into the fold. Some of these were meetings of discipline, and others more exclusively times set apart for worship.

Thomas Story, in his journal, under date of 1722, speaks of being at Exeter, in England, where he attended such a Yearly Meeting. He says: "This meeting was appointed by the consent of the Yearly Meeting at London, and intended for the more effectual promulgation of truth in the several counties to which it was confined, or made particular, and movable at its own discretion, the better to answer the end; and, like those in the North, not meddling with matters of business or discipline, but only worship, doctrine and occasional communication of holy things." It held three days, and appears to have been a time of Divine favor, being blessed, "as the true and worthy crown of all, with the living presence of the everlasting Lord God, in some good degree."

Of a similar meeting held at Shrewsbury in 1718, he observes: "Such meetings being new there, a multitude of people of all ranks flocked thither, from one day to another; and the Lord was evidently with us, and opened many excellent truths of the Gospel to general satisfaction, and Truth was over all, the meetings being preserved in a good decorum from first to last."

In one of Thomas Story's notices of these General Meetings, he speaks of injury being done, by an unskilful offering from one not properly qualified for the service; and from divers passages in his journal, it is evident that Friends of his time, had to suffer to some extent from a superficial and lifeless ministry, the most charitable excuse for which is, that it is the offspring of a zeal not according to knowledge; as it certainly is an evidence of a declension from the pure standard of still earlier days. Thus, he records of a meeting at Hampton, which appears to have been appointed for him: "I was hindered and kept out of the public service, though under the weight of it, great part of the time, by one Thomas Chase, an old self-conceited, self-preferring, dead, dry and confused preacher of that place:" and he adds these observations, which may serve as a caution to some in the present day:

"The great hindrance, disservice and mischief which the adversary doth in the Church by such dry and dead preachers among us, (who being full of themselves only, can and will speak in their own time, without any regard to the life of Truth, or to any minister of Truth, though a stranger in the place) is, that their time being always, and what and when they will, and the true minister waiting only upon the Lord, as having no ministry at anytime, but immediately from Him; when the Lord's time is, and the real concern comes from Him upon the true minister, the false one is in the way, hindering the true work and service of the ministry and meetings many times, * * to the unspeakable hurt, loading and grieving of the true ministry, and their work and service in the Lord, and all the living and sensible members in an assembly."

The large concourse of people which usually attended these annual or general meetings, naturally tended, through the influence of a sympathetic excitement, to arouse the activity of those, who, as T. Story says, had "accustomed themselves to talk of the things of God in their own power and wills." This effect would be increasingly felt, as there was a lessening of that true religious weight and deep exercise of Spirit, which is needed to enable us to hold our religious meetings to the honor of the great Head of the Church In proportion as these essential requisites diminish, there would grow up a ministry depending for its success on the eloquence and warmth of man, and not on the humble following of Divine guidance. That Friends in England observed such consequences to follow, was, it is probable, one of the reasons why they became uneasy with those stated gatherings. In 1786, a committee was appointed in the Yearly Meetings weightily to consider the subject of their continuance. William Matthews, from America, who was then on a religious visit in England, and had attended one of these meetings at Gloucester, records, "After the service of the meeting was over, the committee met with many other Friends from other counties, and it was with much unanimity agreed to report, that those meetings have had their service, and to propose to the Yearly Meeting their discontinuance. At this conclusion, I rejoiced; having been at several of these Yearly or General Meetings, and being fully persuaded that if Friends would turn their minds towards their families, and making a reformation where things are out of order among us, it would be more likely to reach and convince the judgment of others of the purity of our principles. At these large mixed gatherings, it too frequently happens that not only the conduct and appearance of many of our youth and others, greatly contradict our profession of a self-denying life;—but the forward, light and unsavory appearance of some in the ministry, being without life and power, bring our profession of feeling a Divine influence into disrepute. For many are quick-sighted, and have a sense of what is delivered under right influence, and what is not."

We are far from asserting that these meetings, which English Friends, in 1786, thought had "had their service," may not again be profitably made use of under an altered condition of time, place or circumstances; but from the accounts which have been received from many that have been held of latter time, it is evident that there is great need of the caution which is contained in the preceding extracts from Thomas Story and William Matthews, as to the encouragement given thereby to a ministry and practices not Friendly in their character. A letter recently received from a responsible source, dated the 10th of the present month, in speaking of a series of "Revival" meetings then being held at Richmond, Indiana, says: "Singing is one of the features of these gatherings. The meetings are held by authority of Friends, and nearly all the members, old and young, participate. * * These meetings are a counterpart of those held here about this time last year, only the tendency to vocal music is more marked and increased, and is quite rapidly becoming an auxiliary of worship amongst Friends. These meetings are a close imitation of Methodist "Revivals." Friends being rather novices in singing, it is said by those competent to judge, that it is much inferior to that practiced by other denominations. Yet, no doubt, as many of the members have learned the art, a decided improvement will take place ere long. * * Those not members of our Society, look on it as a curious spectacle, this singing, preaching, praying, mourners' benches, &c., &c. The original Society of Friends is fast becoming extinct, out West. Some other name should be adopted to distinguish them from ancient Friends, their mode of worship and outward performances are so entirely different."

While we would be glad to hope, that his concern on account of the departures from our doctrines and practices, has led the writer of this letter to express himself more strongly than the average character of such meetings would warrant, yet, from concurrent testimony from various sources, it is abundantly evident, that many under our name, have entered upon a course, the end of which will be to lead them entirely away from our Society. Meetings under their control, are becoming more and more sensational in their character. Music, and other appliances, are introduced to work upon the sentimental feelings of those assembled, and an artificial excitement is fostered, which those affected by it are erroneously taught to believe is a true work of grace. We believe the tendency of these things is evil, and they they will hinder rather than promote the real work of religion in individuals and in communities. Doubtless in many parts of our Society there are those yet preserved, whose eyes have been anointed to see the workings of that "splendidly delusive" spirit, that would lead us to neglect that patient abidance with the Spirit of Christ in their hearts, which distinguished our early Friends, and was the ground and root of all their labors; and would substitute therefor those works of benevolence or outward efforts, professedly in the cause of religion, which man is able to perform by the force of his own intellect and natural faculties. May all such maintain an unwavering adherence to those precious principles which Friends were raised up to proclaim; and in the meekness of wisdom continue to bear, in their respective neighborhoods, an open testimony for the truth, and against the errors of their misguided fellow-members. The time may come, and perhaps sooner than they dare hope or expect, when some of those who are being led astray may return to the primitive standard; others may be brought into the fold; and these faithful ones may see of the travail of their soul and be satisfied. Whether they live to witness such a change or not, they will assuredly receive in themselves the blessing of the Lord, as they humbly and faithfully continue to wear the yoke of Christ, and follow the leadings of His Spirit to the end.

SUMMARY OF EVENTS.

FOREIGN.—The Mark Lane Express in its review of the breadstuffs market says: The weather throughout Europe the past week has been wintry. Many of the Russian ports are closed, and will remain so until spring. The European wheat markets have been firm, and fluctuations generally small. In some places a rise of one shilling is reported. It is thought the lowest rates for wheat have been passed. The weather everywhere is favorable for the new crop.

Gales of great violence have prevailed on the British coast, causing numerous marine disasters and great damage on shore. A number of small vessels were sunk with all aboard. The storm was also severe on the continent.

The Bishop of London has prohibited Bishop Conlenso from preaching in his diocese.

The British Parliament is to reassemble on the 5th of Second mo. 1875.

London, 12th mo. 14th.—Consols, 91⅞. U. S. sixes, 1867, 109½.

Liverpool.—Cotton dull. Uplands, 7⅛ a 7⅜*d.*; Orleans, 7½*d.* Breadstuffs quiet.

A St. Petersburg dispatch says: Several governments, including that of France, have sent favorable replies, with certain reservations, to the invitation to take part in the International Law Conference to be held here.

A violent storm occurred at St. Petersburg the 8th inst., causing much damage. The water rose nine feet above the usual high-water mark, partially inundating the lower portions of the city. Many of the poorer classes were driven from their homes. Over a thousand persons were sheltered by the police, and public kitchens were opened to supply the sufferers with food. News has reached the advanced posts of the Russian army in Central Asia of the safe arrival in Khorasan of the first Russian trading caravan which ever penetrated that country. Reports received from the caravan complain of hostile agitation among the native tribes, caused by intrigues and instigations of British agents.

The Russian campaign against the Turcomans in Khiva has commenced. Two columns are in motion—one has already crossed the Anne Darya and is operating in Khivan Territory.

The trial of Count Von Arnim began in Berlin on the 9th inst. The indictment charges him with dereliction in his official duty, and the abstraction and illegal retention of many public documents received by him in his official capacity as Minister to France. He acknowledged that he had purposely set apart some documents which he considered private property, and which on account of their tone and language he thought unfit to be communicated to others, as for the past six months he had been generally pointed out as an enemy of the Empire. He also admitted that he wished to influence the public press and had sent communications to the Cologne Gazette and other papers, but refused to answer any questions in relation to revelations in the Vienna Presse, for fear of compromising others. The public prosecutor declared the accused had been guilty of bad faith and his statements were unworthy of credit.

A division of the Spanish forces, under General Loma, made an attack on the Carlist lines near Tolossa. It was repulsed after an engagement lasting all day, and compelled to return to San Sebastian with a loss of 700 men.

There is a rumor that Don Carlos is negotiating with the ex-Queen Isabella.

It is said that Serrano's plan for the suppression of the insurrection is to occupy the entire line of the Pyrenees frontier, and, taking the Carlists in the rear, drive them toward the army of General Moriones.

Dariel's printing house, in Lille, the largest establishment of the kind in France, was burned the 9th inst. Loss about $300,000.

Chenu, medical inspector general of the French army, has published observations in regard to the war between Germany and France. He reports the losses sustained by the French to have been as follows: Killed, disappeared, or died of wounds and diseases, 138,871; wounded by the enemy's fire, 143,000; men disabled by marching, 11,421; 11,914 missing are treated as dead. These figures include 2881 officers killed or who died of wounds and disease and 96 missing, with 17,260 prisoners who died in Germany, 1701 in Switzerland, and 124 in Belgium. The German losses were: Killed or died of wounds and disease, 40,741; missing and treated as dead, 4000; wounded, 127,867. To these have to be added 1795 killed, 6600 wounded, and 1539 missing in skirmishes, patrols and slight engagements.

There were 41,722 deaths in Paris last year, including 650 suicides, 292 the result of accidents, and only 6 murdered.

The Argentine Legation at Washington, has received an official telegram from the Minister on Foreign Affairs at Buenos Ayres, stating that General Mitre had surrendered, and the insurrection was at an end.

Intense feeling has been aroused in France by some of the papers read in the trial of Count Von Arnim at Berlin. One dispatch especially in which Bismarck says he cannot but wish to see France weak, and deems it unadvisable to strengthen her by contributing to the establishment of a monarchy, causes profound indignation.

UNITED STATES.—The proceedings of Congress last week were not of great importance. Many bills and resolutions were offered and referred, and some speeches made. Judge Kelley, of Penna., addressed the House in support of his bill for the exchange of greenbacks into convertible bonds bearing an interest of 3.65 per cent. Butler, of Mass., advocated the measure, and it was opposed by Dawes, of Mass. and Garfield, of Ohio. The latter protested against the doctrines put forth by its advocates, and said he should feel base if he did not protest to the extent of all his power against any scheme that proposes to send this country back again into the clouds and darkness through which we have come in our financial affairs. If there was ever a time when American statesmanship needed courage and self-denial—that self-denial that shall reduce expenditures and resist all schemes that would help to keep us from solid values, honest industries and honest results, that time is now. He contended that it had not been a lack of currency which caused depression in trade and business, but the unsettled, unsteady, fickle and fluctuating values which could only be remedied by coming down to solid ground.

The transit Commission in Washington have received information stating that detailed telegrams of telescopic and micrometrical observations near Cairo and Suez, and of photographic observations at Thebes of the transit of Venus have been received. All were perfectly successful. Successful observations were also made at Teheran, Persia, and at various points in Australia, India, China, Japan and northern Asia.

It is said that cork trees grow very rapidly among the foothills of California, and that in some localities trees three or four years old have bark thick enough for an ordinary cork.

The interments in Philadelphia last week numbered 298, including 101 children under two years old.

The agent sent out to investigate the condition of affairs in Nebraska, having carefully visited seven counties, says that there are 2300 people in need of daily rations and clothing till they can raise something to subsist upon. He says there have been no cases of starvation. The people are plowing and doing all that can be done for spring planting.

Kalakaua, king of the Sandwich Islands, has come to the United States on a visit to the President. He arrived in Washington the 12th inst., having come overland from San Francisco.

The cotton product of 1874, as estimated by the cotton growers in their returns to the Department of Agriculture, somewhat exceeds three and a half millions of bales. The weather for ripening and gathering the crop has been very favorable.

The Milwaukie Wisconsin has published a list of disasters on the lakes, from which it appears that 243 persons perished in 1874, against 221 in 1873, and 219 in 1872.

The Markets, &c.—The following were the quotations on the 11th inst. New York.—American gold 111⅛. U. S. sixes, 1881, registered, 116½; do. coupons, 120¼; do. five per cents 1881, 112¾. Superfine flour, $4.15 a $4.50; State extra, $4.80 a $5.10; finer brands, $5.50 a $10.50. No. 2 Chicago spring wheat, $1.10; No. 3 do. $1.07 a $1.08; red western, $1.26 a $1.27; amber, $1.27 a $1.28; white Michigan, $1.36. State barley, $1.50. Oats, 68 a 72 cts. Rye, 96 cts. New yellow corn, 93½ cts.; western mixed, 92 a 93 cts. Philadelphia—Cotton, 14¼ a 14¾ cts. for middling uplands and New Orleans. Superfine flour, $4 a $4.25; finer brands, $4.50 a $7.50. Red wheat, $1.20 a $1.24; amber, $1.25 a $1.28; white, $1.37 a $1.42. Rye, $1.00. Old corn, 92 a 93 cts.; new, 80 a 86 cts. Oats, 65 a 68 cts. Smoked hams, 13 a 15 cts. Lard, 14 a 14¼ cts. Sales of about 3,000 beef cattle at 4 a 7¾ cts. per lb. gross. The range of prices mostly from 5 to 7½ cts. Sheep, 5 a 6¼ cts. per lh. gross. Receipts 10,000 head. Hogs sold at $10.25 a $10.50 per 100 lbs. net. Receipts 4,500 head. Baltimore.—No. 1 western amber wheat, $1.30; No. 2 do., $1.26; No. 3, $1.20; Maryland amber, $1.33 a $1.37. Yellow corn, 81 a 86 cts. Oats, 65 a 69 cts. Chicago.—No. 1 spring wheat, 91 cts.; No. 2 do., 88½ cts.; No. 3 do., 83½ cts. No. 2 mixed corn, 76 cts. Oats, 54 cts. Lard, $13.30 per 100 lbs. St. Louis.—No. 2 spring wheat, 93 cts.; No. 2 winter red, $1.08. New corn, 65 a 67 cts. Oats, 57 a 58½ cts. Cincinnati.—Red wheat, $1.12 a $1.14. Corn, 70 a 73 cts. Oats, 58 a 62 cts. Rye, $1.13.

NOTICE.

It is desired to call the attention of the charitably disposed, to the very needy condition of the "Emlen Institution, a manual labor school for destitute colored boys," where it is desired to give them good christian instruction, with a plain education. Funds are much wanted to pay for the new wagon-house, with work-shop above for the boys, &c., and also to aid in defraying the necessary expenses of the Institution, for which the present income in inadequate.

Further information given and contributions received by THOMAS STEWARDSON, Jr., Treasurer, 1132 Girard Street; or ISRAEL H. JOHNSON, Secretary, 809 Spruce street, Philadelphia.

12th mo. 1874.

WANTED.

A Governess for Westtown Boarding School, to enter on her duties at the opening of the next Session.

Apply to

Elizabeth C. Scattergood, West Chester, Pa.
Hannah Richardson, Wilmington, Del.
Hannah Evans, No. 322 Union St., Philada.
Lydia L. Walton, Moorestown, N. J.

FRIENDS' ASYLUM FOR THE INSANE.

Near Frankford, (Twenty-third Ward,) Philadelphia.

Physician and Superintendent—JOSHUA H. WORTHINGTON, M. D.

Applications for the Admission of Patients may be made to the Superintendent, or to any of the Board of Managers.

WILLIAM H. PILE, PRINTER,
No. 422 Walnut Street.

THE FRIEND.

A RELIGIOUS AND LITERARY JOURNAL.

VOL. XLVIII. SEVENTH-DAY, TWELFTH MONTH 26, 1874. NO. 19.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY.

Price Two Dollars per annum, if paid in advance. Two dollars and fifty cents, if not paid in advance.

Subscriptions and Payments received by

JOHN S. STOKES,

AT NO. 116 NORTH FOURTH STREET, UP STAIRS.

PHILADELPHIA.

Postage, when paid quarterly in advance, five cents.

For "The Friend."

Legal Opinions in the Ohio Case.

(Concluded from page 138.)

"In the scheme of Quaker government, no superior judicatory has been organized for the exercise of discipline over its Yearly Meetings. Neither of the contending parties has shown, that, by conforming strictly with prescribed rules and regulations of the Society, it has retained the regular organization of the Ohio Yearly Meeting. Indeed, the testimony shows that there was no prescribed order, or established usage of the Society, which provided for the emergency that existed at the time of the separation. We are not left, however, in ignorance of the principles of the Society, by which the question at issue can and should be determined.

"If the Ohio Yearly Meeting had been composed of one organized body only, and the women's meeting alone had constituted the Yearly Meeting, there would be no room for doubt as to the legitimate succession. The women's meeting of the Ohio Yearly Meeting, without interruption in the regularity of its organization, composes a part of the Yearly Meeting represented by Binns and his associates; and though the women's meeting is part only of the Yearly Meeting, its organization *is as essential to a regularly constituted Yearly Meeting as is the men's meeting.

"The regular succession in the men's meeting, however, when considered as a separate organization, is not so apparent. This subject has received much consideration; and after the fullest inquiry into the facts, and the laws of the Society, we are of opinion that Hoyle, whose term of office, as clerk of the meeting for the preceding year, was about to expire at the time of the separation, acted without authority, and without precedent, in deciding, under the circumstances, that he and the old assistant were entitled to be continued in office for the ensuing year. The matter of choosing a clerk and assistant was properly before the meeting for its action and determination. The representatives had failed to unite upon names to be presented to the meeting; but, nevertheless, the names of Binns and Bruff had been presented by a report from a portion of the representatives—a minority it is true, but whether by a minority or majority, it was within the power of the meeting, and of the meeting only, as such, to determine whether the report should or should not be adopted. The sole duty of the clerk in the premises, as we understand it, was to collect and minute the sense of the meeting upon the question. According to the order of the Society, the sense of the meeting was determinable only by the expressed will of the members. Those who remained silent should have been regarded as indifferent on the subject, or as willing to acquiesce in the result as ascertained from the voices of those who were not indifferent, and with whom the question was a matter of conscience. That a large majority of those members, who spoke to the question at all, united in favor of Binns and Bruff, is not a disputed fact. And, although the clerk, in collecting the sense of the meeting, should not have been controlled simply by a majority of voices, yet such majority was an important element in determining the sense of the meeting.

"The objection to the action of Hoyle, however, is not simply that he made a mistake in collecting the sense of the meeting—the irregularity in his conduct was, that he did not attempt to collect it at all, but arbitrarily decided in favor of his own appointment. The honesty of his motives is not impugned—his mistake was in extending a rule or usage to a case where it did not apply. It is probable, but not at all certain, that substantial unity in favor of Binns and Bruff would not have been attained, if Hoyle had made a minute in favor of the minority report; *and in that event, the report would have failed of adoption, and, as a matter of necessity, as well as of order, the old clerk and assistant would not have been superceded. But this being conceded, it does not follow that Hoyle can be justified in his assumption of the right to officiate for another year, without having attempted to ascertain the sense of the meeting upon the subject. It may also be conceded that, if no names had been presented to the meeting for clerk and assistant, after the failure of the representatives to agree, the usage of the Society and of the Yearly Meeting, would have continued the old officers for another year."

"The old clerk having failed to discharge his duty to the meeting, Jonathan Binns, the nominee for the office, undertook to collect the sense of the meeting as he understood it to have been expressed, and made a minute accordingly of his own appointment. The question now arises, whether the minute so made can be regarded and sustained as the action of the meeting? Two objections are urged against it: 1. That it was not made by the clerk; 2. That it did not express the true sense of the meeting.

"As to the first objection, it is true that, by the book of discipline, the duty of collecting and recording the sense of the meeting is imposed upon the clerk; and no provision is made therein for the contingencies of his absence, inability, or refusal to act. Yet, if we are right in the conclusion that Hoyle failed and refused to collect the sense of the meeting upon the nomination of Binns and Bruff, it can not be doubted that Binns was justified in assuming to discharge that duty, if it were the desire of the meeting that he should do so. Although the mode adopted was not prescribed in the book of discipline, or sanctioned by a general usage, *still the necessity of the case was a sufficient warrant for the action. The case, however, was not without a precedent. During the Hicksite troubles, the clerk of a Quarterly Meeting, within the jurisdiction of the Ohio Yearly, refused to minute the appointment of his successor, and thereupon the nominee collected the sense of the meeting upon his own nomination and made a minute of his own appointment, though the old clerk at the time was at the table. This action of the Quarter, and of the new clerk, was afterward approved by the Yearly Meeting."

"Disorder and dissension had prevailed at the meetings for discipline for years. At the time of the separation, Hoyle, as clerk, sustained by his associates, was conducting the business of the meeting in open violation of the order of the Society in not making and keeping the meeting select. The friends of order and unity had forborne until all hope of reconciliation had failed; and, in their judgment, the time had come for choosing between the alternatives, of either dissolving their unity with the Society and ceasing to maintain its order, or of freeing themselves from the official control of those in sympathy with the separatists. They chose the latter, and in doing so, our opinion coincides with that of the great body of Friends and of their Yearly Meetings throughout the world, that they were fully justified in using the means adopted for the accomplishment of their ends.

"We do not defer to the opinions of Friends, or the decisions of their Yearly Meetings, as conclusive upon the question before us. Yet

---

* This again is contrary to truth and fact. London Yearly Meeting was long without any Yearly Meeting of women Friends.—Ed.

* If, as the Judge here states, the old clerk still held his position and office; if he might have made a minute appointing J. Binns, which the Judge admits, "would have failed of adoption," how did Binns get the right to go to the table and record his own appointment? Did the expression of the minority in his favor and the minute he made, constitute "substantial unity?" Did Binns' usurping the place occupied by the regular clerk, and making the minute, give his appointment validity? —Ed.

* "If we are right," is the most important member of this whole section. Hoyle did not fail or refuse to collect the sense of the meeting on the proposition to appoint Binns. He announced it from the table, and that what he announced was true, is fully proved by the testimony, and the admissions of the Binns' party. The great body of the meeting, considering the movement on the part of Binns and his party as revolutionary and a separation from Ohio Yearly Meeting, thought they had nothing to say respecting his nomination, but they showed their entire disunity with it, by supporting the clerk of the meeting, and proceeding with its business.—Ed.

the connections and relations between Yearly Meetings are such that we are not at liberty to wholly disregard their judgments in the premises. If the question related merely to the manner in which local discipline* had been administered by the Ohio Meeting, all other Yearly Meetings would have been bound to acquiesce in its decision. The disorder undoubtedly began in a matter of discipline, but it ended in separation before the question of the discipline was determined.† After the separation, each party enforced the discipline according to its own judgment of right. But by the laws of the Society there could exist only one Yearly Meeting within this jurisdiction; hence the question arose, which of the bodies constituted the true Ohio Yearly Meeting? This question involved the unity of the Society, and was one in which all the Yearly Meetings had an interest. It became a question of identity, or succession, to be determined according to the laws and usages of the Society. Although, as we have said, one Yearly Meeting has no control over matters of local discipline arising within the jurisdiction of another, still, other matters, which affect the general welfare of the Society, are within cognizance of each and all the Yearly Meetings. As we understand it, such is the theory of Quaker government, and such also has been the practice under it. For instance, in 1827, the followers of Elias Hicks, embracing a majority of the members present at the Baltimore Yearly Meeting, and including the regular officers of the meeting, seceded from their unity with the Society upon questions of doctrine; whereupon the minority assembled and organized anew, claiming to be the true and only Baltimore Yearly Meeting of the Society. This claim was submitted to and acted upon by the several other Yearly Meetings. Thus the orthodox Friends, so organized, were recognized and acknowledged by all other Yearly Meetings (including the Ohio Yearly Meeting) as constituting the true and legitimate Baltimore Meeting; while the seceders, though possessing the apparent regular organization, were disowned and ceased to be of the Society."‡

"When public policy, or the positive law of the land, is not contravened, the decisions and orders of the Society, when made in conformity to its polity, should have the same effect, upon the subject to which they relate, in civil courts, which the Society intended should be awarded to them when pronounced by its own judicatories.

"If such society be composed of separate bodies, whether co ordinate or subordinated, the rules of the society for the management of its internal affairs, and for the adjustment of the relations between its branches, constitute the law by which they should be governed.

"Applying these principles to the facts of the case before us, we are of opinion that the decisions of the several Yearly Meetings of the Society, in relation to the succession in the Ohio Yearly Meeting, are proper and legitimate evidence in the case, and are entitled to great weight as intelligent opinions and judgments upon the subject. And when considered in connection with the circumstances of the separation, and in view of the principles upon which the Ohio Yearly Meeting was organized, they satisfactorily show that the meeting over which Binns presided, affiliated with the undoubted regular women's meeting, was and is the true 'Ohio Yearly Meeting of the Society of Friends,' within the terms and meaning of the grant, whereby the trust estate in controversy was created.

Decree for Plaintiffs."

* What is the appointment of a clerk to a Yearly Meeting but "local discipline?"

† The discipline of Ohio Yearly Meeting directed the manner in which the clerk of the meeting was to be chosen and appointed. If it was "a matter of discipline" when the disorder began, the discipline was certainly determined. A disorderly and revolutionary act, can be no apology for setting both discipline and usage at defiance.

‡ This is not an analogous case. The larger body of Baltimore Yearly Meeting had joined a new Society that did not hold the principles of Friends. The smaller body continued to be Friends, and of course was recognized as such.—Ed.

For "The Friend."

John Griffith.

(Continued from page 140.)

Perhaps there is no condition on this side of the grave more to be dreaded, than that of being left to ourselves; a state wherein the Spirit of Truth, being long grieved, ceases to strive with us, and the things which belong to our present and eternal peace become hidden from our eyes. On the other hand there is, it may be, no state in which more of Divine kindness is manifested on our behalf, than when awakened as slaves and prodigals from the bondage of sin and death; and, through the light of Christ, brought to see ourselves as we really are in a state of nature—poor and miserable, blind and naked. It is when thus brought to a humiliating sense of our depraved and lost condition without a Saviour's grace,—astray, wounded and helpless,—and are made to cry, "What shall I do to be saved?" and, "My Father, thou art the guide of my youth!" that the tender Shepherd of Israel compassionates and yearns towards us; and with Samaritan love binds up our wounds, pouring in the oil and the wine, and lays us rejoicingly upon His shoulder to restore to the fold of safety.

John Griffith, as might have been noticed in the latter part of the last number, as well as may be in the beginning of this, seems fairly brought into that ever desirable and indispensable state of apprehension and alarm on account of his soul's welfare; and into the brokenness, humility and contrition of spirit, which not only bring practically to the heartfelt exclamation, "A Saviour or I die!" but also introduces that godly sorrow for sin, which leads to repentance not to be repented of. True, anxiety and distress of mind were for a time his portion! But how can a reward be obtained without labor? or how a victory without contest? or how effected the "transformation of apostate man from fool to wise, from earthly to divine," but through the subjection of the carnal mind with all its sin-pleasing delights, to the cross of Christ, which alone can give rest unto the weary soul; and which leads, step by step, onward and upward into the glorious liberty of the children of God? "To reign it is necessary first to suffer;" And, "It is good for a man that he bear the yoke in his youth; he sitteth alone and keepeth silence, because he hath borne it upon him: he putteth his mouth in the dust, if so be there may be hope." But amid it all, He who requires the sacrifice, himself opened and trod the new and living way before us; He first endured the cross, even to an ignominious death, despising the shame; and, setting us the example, hath also promised, as we follow Him in obedience thereto, to make His yoke easy and his burden light; to cause the mountains to skip like rams, and the little hills like lambs for His obedient followers; and finally, when passing through the dark valley of the shadow of death, will enable to say, "Thy rod and thy staff they comfort me." J. Griffith continues:

"This happened on a seventh-day night, and though the young man in time recovered, yet he was not fit to be left next day, which hindered me from going to meeting, to which I was exceedingly desirous to have gone; for by this time I was pretty thoroughly awakened to a sense of duty; and it being a week before the like opportunity presented to me again, it seemed the longest week I had ever known. Oh, how did I long to present myself before the Lord in the assemblies of his people! that I might pour forth my inward cries before him, in a state of sincere repentance, and deep contrition of soul; which, through the effectual operation of his power in my heart, I was then in a condition to do. Now I clearly saw, that repentance is the gift of God, and that his love, wherewith he hath loved us in Christ Jesus our Lord, leads sinners thereinto. The fleshly will being, for the present, overcome and silenced, there was a giving up, with all readiness of mind, to the Lord's requirings. There was not any thing then too near to part with for the real and substantial enjoyment of the Beloved of my soul; for I was brought in degree to experience, that he came "for judgement into this world; that they which see not might see; and that they which see might be made blind." I could no longer look upon my former delights with any satisfaction, but instead thereof, had a glorious view of the beautiful situation of Mount Sion, and my face was turned thitherward, and for the joy which was set before me, I was made willing to endure the cross of Christ, and to despise the shame; and though I became a wonder and a gazing stock to my former companions, I did not much regard it, knowing I had just cause to be so. My great change struck them with some awe, for I observed they had not the boldness to mock or deride me before my face.

"The young man who was an instrument in the Divine hand for my awakening, and his brother, were both greatly reached and deeply affected, for the present, by the above mentioned wonderful visitation, and there was a visible change in them for a time; but, like the seed that fell on the stony ground, they withered away, and did not become fruitful to God.

"I greatly rejoiced when first-day came, that I might go to meeting; which proved to me indeed a memorable one, there being two public Friends, strangers, sent thither, as I thought, on my account; for most of what they had to deliver, appeared to me applicable to my state. Now did I, in some degree, experience the substance of what was intended, by the 'baptism of water unto repentance; the washing of water by the word; and being born of water and the Spirit.' All of which would be fully seen, and clearly understood, by the professors of Christianity, were they rightly acquainted with the 'gospel of Christ; which is the power of God unto salvation.' This power, inwardly revealed, is alone able to work that change in them, without which, our Lord saith, none shall so much as see the kingdom of God. But alas! being carnal in their minds, a spiritual religion does not suit them; for, as saith the scripture, 'the natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God, for they are foolishness unto him; neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned.' Hence it is, that the professors of the Christian name, retain signs and shadows, while the substance is neglected; pleading for the continuance of types, when the antitype is but little regarded: where this latter is experienced, all shadows and types vanish and come to an end; as did the legal types when Christ, the antitype, came and introduced his dispensation, which is altogether of a spiritual nature.

"The administration of water by the word continued in a remarkable manner upon me, for about three months, in which I found great satisfaction, as it was accompanied with an heavenly sweetness, like healing balsam upon my wounded spirit; my heart being melted before the Lord, as wax is melted before the fire. Great was my delight in reading the Holy Scriptures, and other good books; being favored, at that time, to receive much comfort and improvement thereby. But this easy melting dispensation, was to give way to a more powerful one, that the floor might be thoroughly purged, even the baptism with the Holy Ghost and fire; for the former dispensation of the Lord to my soul seemed much to resemble John's baptism with water unto repentance, as being the real thing signified thereby, in order to prepare the way of the Lord."

(To be continued.)

The Rag-fair of St. Petersburg.

Every city has its mysterious receptacle hidden somewhere, far away from the centre of the town, which the stranger, whose habits lead him day after day through the same network of fashionable streets, never sees; its rubbish heap, whereon are thrown the débris of luxury, soiled, faded, and past all recognition, yet still good enough to find purchasers at fifth or sixth hand. To this come at last the tasteful bonnets, the dainty triumphs of the milliner, now shapeless, torn, and soiled, fit to coif a learned donkey; to this, the fine black broadcloth coat which was once starred with decorations, and figured at splendid entertainments; to this, the dresses of a single evening, thrown in the morning to the femme de chambre,—the yellowed blonde, the frayed lace, the worn fur; and here, too, are the countless pieces of cast-off furniture. It is, in short, the very humus and stratum of civilizations. Paris has its Temple; Madrid, its Rastro; Constantinople, its Bazaar des poux; St. Petersburg, its Tchoukine-Dvor,—a rag-fair most curious to visit.

The booths in the Tchoukine-Dvor, are made of ends of planks; they are paltry little sheds, and the snow, whose immaculate whiteness lay fresh on their roofs that day, made their filthy appearance even more offensive.

Festoons of old greasy leather boots,—and what boots!—stiffened skins of animals which recalled, in a sort of sinister caricature, the figure of the living creature, and touloupes, ragged and dirty, yet still keeping a vague impress of their former wearer, formed a composite decoration of the frontage of each booth. Hanging, as it was, in the open air, and with here and there a little snow resting on it, all this had the most wretchedly doleful aspect, under a lowering, yellowish-gray sky. The merchants were scarcely more attractive than their merchandise.

A multitude of narrow lanes intersect one another in the Tchoukine-Dvor, and each trade has its own special quarter. Numerous little chapels showing, by the lamp-light within, the silver and gilt of their miniature iconostases, shine at the corners of these lanes. Elsewhere throughout the Tchoukine-Dvor, light is forbidden; a spark might set in blaze this collection of rubbish. Only for the glorifying of their religious pictures, do they brave the danger, and the masses of goldsmith's work in this gloomy and squalid place gleam with strange splendor. Buyers and sellers, as they pass these chapels, make countless signs of the cross, in the Greek fashion. Some of the most devout, or the least busy, prostrate themselves, the forehead touching the snow, murmur a prayer, and, as they rise, throw a kopeck into the box fastened by the door.

One of the most curious streets in the Tchoukine-Dvor is that where religious pictures are sold. If one were not quite sure of the date, he might think himself in the Middle Ages, so archaic is the style of these paintings, for the most part the work of yesterday. All these objects are identically similar to those which their ancestors revered. Immutable as dogma, they are perpetuated from age to age; art has had no bearing upon them, and to correct them, in spite of their rudeness and their simplicity, would have seemed a sacrilege. The blacker, more smoky, more rigid and ungraceful is the Madonna, the more confidence she inspires in the believer at whom she looks with her great sombre eyes.

It is amusing to see the naïve and pious admiration of the mujik, passing through the street, which might be called the Holy Street of the Tchoukine-Dvor. Notwithstanding the cold, he stands still in ecstasy before the saints and madonnas, and dreams of possessing some such picture to hang up, with a lamp in front of it, in a corner of his cabin built of fir-logs. But he goes away, regarding the purchase as beyond his means. Now and then, one richer than the rest, enters, after having fingered the little roll of paper rubles stowed away in his purse, to see if it seems thick enough, and, after long discussion, emerges, bringing his purchase carefully wrapped up. They do their reckoning in the Chinese manner, with an abacus, a kind of frame crossed by iron wires, on which are strung balls that are moved up and down according to the figures to be added.

Not everybody is a purchaser in the Tchoukine-Dvor; its narrow lanes are crowded with a checkered population, for the most part idlers merely; the mujik in his touloupe, the soldier in gray capote, elbow the gentleman in his pelisse, and the antiquary hoping for some treasure,—a hope but seldom satisfied, for simplicity has taken its flight from this bazaar, and, to be on the safe side, the dealers ask extravagant prices for the least trifles. A regret for having parted cheaply with some rare object of whose value they were ignorant, has rendered them more jealous than the Auvergnats of the Rue de Lappe. A little of everything may be found in this bazaar; the old books have their quarter, French, English, German, from all countries in the world, they are stranded here upon the snow among Russian books, odd volumes, ragged, stained, and worm-eaten. Sometimes the patient investigator will find among heaps of trash, an incunabulum, a first edition, a lost book, long out of print, which has made its way at last to the Tchoukine-Dvor through a series of adventures strange enough to furnish material for a humorous Odyssey. Some of these booksellers do not know how to read, a circumstance which by no means prevents them from perfectly understanding their merchandise.

Among the loiterers and the purchasers, women are in the minority; it would be the other way in Paris. The Russian women, although nothing compels them to do so, seem to have preserved the oriental habit of seclusion; they rarely go out.

The street of second-hand furniture would furnish material for a series of lectures on domestic economy, and would throw much light upon Russian home life for any man who knew how to decipher from these fragments in various stages of preservation, the history of their former owners: all styles are represented here; fashions gone-by form regular stratifications; each period deposits its layer. The predominating objects are those great green-leather sofas, a truly Russian article of furniture.

Elsewhere are trunks, valises, karsines, and other articles of a traveller's outfit, extending into the middle of the street and half buried under snow; then old saucepans, ironware of every kind, broken-nosed jugs, wooden bowls, utensils out of use, no longer having names in any tongue, fragments of cloth that are nothing more than lint, coming only into the rag-pickers' province. If it were not near zero, an expedition through a region like this would have its perils, but all the swarming tribe perishes in such a temperature.

—Gautier's Winter in Russia.

Keep your Promise.—A boy borrowed a tool from a carpenter, promised to return it at night. Before evening he was sent away on an errand, and did not return until late. Before he went, he was told that his brother should see the article returned.

After he had come home and gone to bed, he inquired, and found the tool had not been sent to its owner. He was much distressed to find his promise had not been kept, but was persuaded to go to sleep, and rise early and carry it home the next morning.

By daylight he was up, and nowhere was the tool to be found. After a long and fruitless search, he set off for his neighbor's in great distress, to acknowledge his fault. But how great was his surprise to find the tool on his neighbor's door-stone! And then it appeared from the print of his little bare feet in the mud, that the lad had got up in his sleep and carried the tool home, and gone to bed again, without knowing it.

Of course a boy who was prompt in his sleep was prompt when awake. He lived respected, had the confidence of his neighbors, and was placed in many offices of trust and profit.

If all the grown folks felt as this boy did, there would be a good many tracks of bare feet found some of these bright mornings; and what piles of tools and books would be found lying at their owners' doors!—Phrenological Journal.

The Czar and the Psalms.

When Alexander 1st, Emperor of Russia, came to the throne, few Bibles were found in his empire, and great indifference in reference to religion almost universally prevailed. A high place in the Greek church soon became vacant, and the emperor appointed his favorite Prince Alexander Galitzin, to fill it. He at first declined the appointment, on the plea of his entire ignorance of religion, but the emperor overruled the objection as of no weight. Constrained to accept the position, the prince on his first interview with Archbishop Platoff, requested him to point out some book which would give him a concise view of the Christian religion, that he might be better qualified for his official duties. The archbishop recommended the Bible. The prince said he could not think of reading that book. "Well," replied the archbishop, "that is the only book there is, or ever will be, that will give you a correct view of the Christian religion."

"Then I must remain ignorant of it; reading the Bible is out of the question," was his reply.

The advice he had heard remained upon his mind, and he shortly afterwards privately bought and read the Bible. The effects were soon visible.

In the year 1812, when information reached St. Petersburg that Napoleon's armies had entered Moscow, a general panic came upon the inhabitants, and they packed up their valuables to flee to some place of security, fully expecting that the French would soon march upon the capital. The emperor was also preparing to go out with a body of troops from the city to withstand the invading foe.

During all this time Prince Galitzin remained calm and unconcerned, and had a large number of men employed repairing his palace, which he continued to go on with, notwithstanding the prevailing fear. His companions were astonished at his course, and some envious person told the emperor what he was doing, and ventured to hint that he might be a traitor, who had some secret understanding with the invading foe. Alexander sought an interview with the prince, who was glad of an opportunity to acquaint the emperor of the foundation upon which his confidence was built.

"Galitzin," said the emperor, "what are you doing? What means all this? Everyone prepares to flee, and you are building."

"Oh," said the prince, "I am here in as sure a place of safety as any I could flee to; the Lord is my defence."

"Where have you such confidence?" replied the emperor. "Who assures you of it?"

"I feel it in my heart, and it is also stated in this divinely inspired volume," answered the prince drawing from his pocket and holding forth a small Bible—a book which the emperor had never seen before. He put out his hand to receive it, but by some inadvertence it dropped on the floor, opening as it fell. The prince raised the sacred volume, glanced at the open page, and said, "Well, permit me to read to you in that very place on which the Bible lies open before us."

It was that wonderful passage, the 91st Psalm: "He that dwelleth in the secret place of the Most High, shall abide under the shadow of the Almighty," &c.

"Oh that your majesty would seek this retreat," said the prince, as he read the inspiring words.

The emperor stood for a while as a man astonished. His army was at this time marching out of the city, and as it was customary, he repaired to the great cathedral for public worship—that being the last place that the emperor visits when leaving the capital to be absent any considerable time. Entering there, the religious services proceeded, and the officiating priest read before the wondering emperor the same 91st Psalm. After the service he sent for the priest, and asked if Galitzin had mentioned the circumstances of their interview. The priest replied that he had heard nothing of the matter.

"Who told you to make choice of that particular passage this day?" said the emperor. The priest replied that "nobody had done it, but that he had desired in prayer that the Lord would direct him to the particular portion of the inspired volume he should read, to encourage the emperor, and that he apprehended that that psalm was the word of the Lord to him."

The emperor proceeded on his way some distance, and late in the evening, feeling a great seriousness of mind, he sent for his chaplain to read the Bible to him in his tent. He came and began to read: "He that dwelleth in the secret place of the Most High, shall abide under the shadow of the Almighty."

"Hold," said the emperor. "Who told you to read that?"

"God," said the chaplain.

"How?" said the emperor. "Has Galitzin told you?"

He replied that he had not seen the prince, nor had any one told him what to read. "Surprised at your sending for me," continued the chaplain, "I fell upon my knees before God, and besought Him to teach my weak lips what to speak. I felt that part of the holy word clearly pointed out to me. Why your majesty interrupted me I know not."

The emperor felt astonished at this, and paid the greater attention to what was read, believing this must be of the Lord's ordering, he was therefore very solemnly and tenderly impressed, and from that time he concluded, morning and evening, to read privately a chapter in the Bible.

The next day he was with the Princess Metchersky at Trer. They agreed to begin the Bible together, regularly to read it every day so that they might both read the same portion on the same day, and be able to communicate to one another the particular impressions or reflections the reading of the day might have produced.

The world knows what was the end of the French invasion of Russia. Moscow was burned by its inhabitants, and of Napoleon's mighty army, 125,000 were slain, 132,000 died of fatigue, hunger, disease and cold, in their disastrous retreat, and 193,000 were made prisoners, and the expedition undertaken in a haughty contempt of the government and providence of God, ended in the downfall of its leader and the overthrow of his empire.

As for the emperor, the impressions made upon his mind by that psalm were not transient. He took Galitzin's Bible and, to use his own language, "I devoured it, finding in it words so suitable to, and descriptive of, the state of my mind. The Lord, by his divine Spirit, was also pleased to give me an understanding of what I read therein. It is to this inward teacher alone that I am indebted; therefore I consider divine inspiration, or the teachings of the Spirit of God, as the sure foundation of saving knowledge."

Such was his testimony to Stephen Grellet and William Allen, two members of the Society of Friends, who visited him while employed in gospel labors in St. Petersburg seven years afterwards, in 1819. They found him a man of tender heart, and at repeated interviews the Czar of all the Russians bowed the knee and united in fervent prayer with these two lowly men of God, in the presence of Him who is higher than kings and mightier than emperors, whose throne is in the heavens, and whose kingdom ruleth over all.

Most of the circumstances in this account are recorded by S. Grellet, in his journal, as received from the lips of Prince Galitzin himself, the day before they left St. Petersburg to pursue their journey to the regions beyond, whither they went to carry tidings of Him who came to bring peace on earth and good will to men.—Boston Christian.

Forestry.—George May Powell presented the following in behalf of the Committee of Forestry:

N. C. Ely, President Farmers' Club, American Institute:—Perhaps none of the philosophies of Goethe were finer than this: "Strive to encourage the beautiful; the useful will encourage itself." The beautiful is a power as a moral agency. It strikes chords on that wondrous harp, the human soul, which wakes the better nature slumbering within. Some of the wisest of those who labor for the good of the poor put flowers and plants in their dwellings; and taxpayers, as well as those who for benevolent reasons furnish the money to help them do it, could richly afford to take stock in the operation. On a wider scale we can afford for similar reasons to encourage the beautifying the homes of our fatherland by planting trees. In this material age, however, he who labors to advance either æsthetics or ethics has far more than half his work done when he learned that the quick, efficient way to lead people to act in a desired direction, is to show them that it will pay to do or not to do thus or so. In previous papers, therefore, we have labored to show that it will pay to plant trees, and to economise the timber wealth still left. Instances could be given which have come within our knowledge of farms being sold for advance prices many times exceeding the cost of a little judicious beautifying the premises by planting forest-trees around the house and in artistic groups here and there. One fine farm we could specify sold for at least a thousand dollars more than it would have brought were it not for a beautiful little grove of maples in which the cottage nestled. The original cost of transplanting that grove could not have been ten dollars. If it had been seed-planted it would not have been one dollar. Hundreds of speculators have held lands in the West till accumulated taxes and interest exceed the price the land will bring. Had they skilfully beautified these lands by planting forest trees, they would long since have sold them for a higher price than they will now command. As a cool, calculating piece of money making, the brightest thing they can now do is to ornament these properties by planting trees on them. Many a painting which would bring only a few hundred dollars if not set, would bring as many thousands if put in a frame worth a hundred dollars. Many a piece of town or country property, both East and West, would sell for an advance of fifty per cent. by five per cent. being spent in tasteful tree planting on it. We hope the shades of the great German poet will not close down in darkness on us for adding to his injunction, "Strive to encourage the beautiful," the words, "because it will pay to do so."

What Pascal has left as the Profession of his Faith.—I love poverty because Jesus Christ loved it. I love wealth, because it gives me the means of assisting the wretched. I keep faith with all men. I do not render evil to those who do it to me; but I desire a state for them like to my own, in which I receive neither evil nor good from the hand of man. I endeavor to be just, truthful, sincere and faithful to all men, and I have a tenderness of heart for those to whom God has united me more closely; and whether I am alone, or in the sight of men, in all my actions I have in sight God, who must judge them, and to whom I have consecrated them all.

These are my sentiments, and I bless all the days of my life, my Redeemer, who has put them into me, and who from a man full of weakness, misery, concupiscence, pride and ambition, has made a man exempt from all these evils, by the strength of His grace, to which all the glory of it is due, since I have in myself nothing but misery and error.

Recent Assyrian Discoveries.—We may see, says Frazer's Magazine, numerous black stones in the British Museum, which record the sale and purchase of particular lands, and the most terrible curses are invoked upon the heads of those who should injure and destroy these evidences of ownership of property. One of them, lately found by Mr. Smith, tells us that the ground mentioned in it was bestowed by the king upon a sort of poet laureat on account of some panegyrics he had written upon the kingdom. Still more plentiful than these are private contract tablets, often in an outer coating of clay, on which an abstract of the contents of the inner tablet is stamped. Many of them are pierced with holes, through which strings were passed attached to leaves of papyri. The latter have long since perished; but papyrus was used by the Accadians as a writing material at a remote date, although the more durable clay tablets were preferred. The mercantile class seems to have consisted chiefly of Semites, rather than of Accadians; and if we want to find the fullest development of business and commerce we must come down to the eighth and seventh centuries B. C., when Nineveh was a bustling centre of trade. Tyre had been discovered by the Assyrian kings, and trade had transferred itself further to the east. Carchemish, which was favorably situated near the Euphrates, was the meeting place of the merchants of all nations, and the "manch of Carchemish" became the standard of weight. Houses and other property, including slaves, were bought and sold; and the carefulness with which the deeds of sale or lease were drawn up, the details into which they went, and the number of attesting witnesses, were quite worthy of a modern lawyer. Money, too, was loaned at interest, usually at the rate of 4 per cent., but sometimes, more especially when goods like iron were borrowed, at 3 per cent. Security for the loan was often taken in houses or other property. The witnesses and contracting parties generally affixed their seals; but where they were too poor to possess any, a nail-mark was considered sufficient. All this appreciation and interchanging of property led, as we might suppose, to testamentary devolution, and no less a document than the private will of Sennacherib is now in the British Museum.

Selected.

HYMN OF THE NATIVITY.

BY THOMAS CAMPBELL.

When Jordan hushed his waters still,
And silence slept on Zion's hill;
When Bethlehem's shepherds through the night
Watched o'er their flocks by starry light:

Hark! from the midnight hills around,
A voice of more than mortal sound,
In distant hallelujahs stole,
Wild murmuring o'er the raptured soul.

Then swift to every startled eye,
New streams of glory light the sky;
Heaven bursts her azure gates to pour
Her spirits to the midnight hour.

On wheels of light, on wings of flame,
The glorious hosts of Zion came;
High heaven with songs of triumph rang,
While thus they struck their harps and sang:

Oh, Zion! lift thy raptured eye,
The long expected hour is nigh;
The joys of Nature rise again,
The Prince of Salem comes to reign.

See, Mercy from her golden urn
Pours a rich stream to them that mourn;
Behold, she binds, with tender care,
The bleeding bosom of Despair!

He comes! to cheer the trembling heart;
Bids Satan and his hosts depart:
Again the Day-star gilds the gloom,
Again the bowers of Eden bloom!

Oh, Zion! lift thy raptured eye,
The long-expected hour draws nigh!
The joys of Nature rise again,
The Prince of Salem comes to reign.

For "The Friend."

Suffering Friends in Kansas.

[The following communication from our friend Richard Cadbury, will interest many of the readers of "The Friend," whose sympathies have been awakened by the sufferings of the settlers in Kansas and its vicinity. Those who desire to contribute to their relief can remit directly to William Hadley, the Treasurer of the relief fund, at Lawrence, Kansas; or can send any contributions to the office of "The Friend," number 116 N. 4th street, Philadelphia.]

Lawrence, Kansas, 12th mo. 11th, 1874.

Dear Friend,—I am glad to be able to state that in response to the appeal lately published, the Executive Committee have received many contributions, both of money and goods. We have also received several letters of inquiry as to the reality and extent of the destitution amongst Friends and others in this State. In order that I might be able to reply to these, I asked our agent, Jonathan Wilson, to furnish us with a brief report, and as there are probably many who feel an interest in this matter, I enclose a copy of his letter.

I wish also to state that since his return our committee through W. Hadley, Treasurer, has taken steps to purchase the necessary quantity of wheat at Concordia, the nearest available point to the settlement at Barr Oak, which is to be stored there subject to our order. The plan of distribution mentioned by J. W. is as follows. He is furnished with a complete list of all articles sent. In his visit to each family he makes a note of their needs, requesting them to state their wants fully. He then plans the distribution as he unpacks the goods, and on the day appointed, takes each family by itself into the room where the goods are, and fits them out, adhering as closely as possible to the list previously furnished.

Joseph N. Woodard started from Lawrence to day with a supply of goods for Elk river Monthly Meeting, Montgomery county; and Jonathan Wilson will set off again early next week to visit all the meetings on the line of the Atchison, Topeka, and Santa Fe railroad.

On behalf of the executive committee for Kansas relief,

FRANCIS A. WRIGHT, Secretary.

Francis A. Wright, Secretary—Dear Friend,—I have just returned from a visit to Walnut Creek Monthly Meeting, Burr Oak, Jewell county, where I distributed about $470 worth of clothing, provisions, and money. These goods had to be hauled on wagons 95 miles to reach their destination. On arriving at the house of a Friend, I had several Friends called in who gave me a list of the destitute, and on the following morning I proceeded, accompanied by a guide, to their several dwellings. I visited twenty-seven families, about half of whom live in what they call a "Dug-out," which is a cellar in the side of a hill, with a roof of poles, brush, and sod, the door, being on the lower side, and a window in the gable at the back end. These dwellings are warm and comfortable in the winter, more so than an unplastered frame house on a bleak prairie. Most of these families have an 160 acre claim, which is now paid for, if they remain on it. They nearly all have a span of good horses and a wagon, and have each from 20 to 40 acres broken for farming. They wear the appearance of thrift, and will I believe eventually become independent farmers, if they can be supplied with means to take them through until another crop can be raised.

In the second family I visited there were nine children, seven of whom were barefooted and their clothing quite ragged. On inquiring what eatables they had, they showed me a sack of flour with about twenty pounds in it. They had no grain of any kind, no money, and no work was to be had; "And what are you going to do!" I inquired. The woman said the neighbors were going to divide with them as long as they had anything, and then if no help came they were going to Iowa where corn and potatoes were plentiful.

After spending two days in visiting these 27 families, and finding many in a similar condition, I summoned them to attend with me at the house of a Friend, where my goods were stored, to receive each their portion. Accordingly, on the next day more than one hundred young and old, met me, and more happy countenances I never beheld in one company. It was their meeting day, and when the hour arrived we all repaired to the meeting house, where prayer and praise resounded for more than an hour, mentally and vocally. In the evening, after the completion of the distribution, Friends acknowledged that they had never seen anything more successful, not a murmur, nor a dissatisfied expression was heard, every one appeared contented. I also ascertained what amount of wheat would be necessary to carry them through until harvest, which in the aggregate for that monthly meeting amounted to 300 bushels for bread, and 150 bushels for seed. This plan of distribution I am now more than ever convinced, is the right one.

Thy friend,

JONATHAN WILSON, Agent.

Lawrence, 12th mo. 11th, 1874.

For "The Friend."

Some Strictures on E. Ash's pamphlet concerning George Fox.

An editorial article in "The Friend" of 10th mo. 24th last, contains some criticisms upon a pamphlet issued in 1873, from the pen of Dr. Edward Ash, of England, on "George Fox, his character, doctrine and work." This pamphlet makes certain animadversions upon the doctrinal views held and promulgated by George Fox and his coadjutors, that we propose to examine and compare with the text of the Holy Scriptures relating to the points at issue.

E. Ash asserts (page 22) after citing several expressions of Geo. Fox respecting the light, spirit, grace, and power of Christ, and His teaching the people himself thereby, as follows, viz: "Now on examining these passages we find that they include four distinct ideas altogether peculiar to G. F.'s teaching, namely; that there is something in all men variously described by him as the light of Christ, the Spirit of God, and the grace of God, by believing in which and not otherwise they will be enlightened and saved; that this doctrine was taught by our Lord and his Apostles, although it had since been lost to the church; that he himself had received it by an immediate divine revelation, although he afterwards found it in the Holy Scriptures; and that he had been Divinely commissioned to teach and promulgate it. As it is no part of my purpose in these pages to enter into either theological or textual discussion, I shall here confine myself to the simple expression of my conviction, arrived at long ago, and confirmed by subsequent examination, that neither in those passages of Scripture to which G. F. evidently refers, nor in any other, is the above doctrine taught;—that nothing is any where said in Scripture which implies that men are to look to any thing in themselves for illumination and salvation; that there is no warrant in Scripture for any such expression as 'the light of Christ;'—that the word light is never used with relation to our Lord except in a strictly personal sense, denoting him as 'the Light of the world,' or 'of men;'—that these expressions refer to his office as the great teacher of God's truth (see Heb. i. 2);—that it was plainly to him personally, and not to any thing in themselves, derived from him, that John the Baptist bore witness, 'that all men through him might believe' (John i. 7);—that it was to him, and not to any thing in their hearts, that both our Lord himself and his apostles taught men to look for illumination and salvation:—that there is no warrant whatever in Scripture for saying that a measure of the Spirit of God is in wicked men; and that the Holy Spirit is never designated in Scripture by the terms light and grace.

"Entertaining this conviction, I have of course no alternative but to regard G. F. as having been altogether mistaken in supposing that the Spirit of God had immediately revealed the above doctrine to him, that he had afterwards found it in the Scriptures, and that God had commissioned him to teach and promulgate it."

E. Ash here boldly declares that the Scriptures nowhere teach the doctrine that the grace, light, or Spirit of Christ, is manifested or appears in the hearts of all men, in order to enlighten and save them. In His conversation with the Jews, as narrated John vi. 45, Christ says to them, "It is written in the prophets, and they shall be all taught of God. Every man, therefore, that hath heard and hath learned of the Father, cometh unto me." This quotation from the prophets, made by our Saviour, is contained in Isaiah liv. 13, and is a promise given to the Gentiles on the bringing in of the Christian dispensation. It is corroborated by a similar prophecy in Jeremiah xxxi. 33, 34, where a new covenant is promised to Israel by writing the law in their hearts, so that all shall know the Lord from the least to the greatest. Thus the doctrine of the universal teaching of men by the Holy Spirit of God in their souls, is distinctly recognized and avowed by Christ. He had been speaking of the bread of life, and the indispensable necessity of all partaking of that if they would participate in eternal life. At this the unbelieving Jews murmured, and He thereupon plainly informed them that nothing but the Spirit of His Father operating upon their souls could draw them into true fellowship with Him, and followed it by the reference to the prophecy above alluded to. We can conceive of no more full statement than is here contained in the language of Christ himself, of the doctrine always held by Friends, and controverted by E. Ash. "All shall be taught of God," and "no man" can come to Christ except the Father draw him. "Every man, therefore, that hath heard and learned (thus) of the Father, cometh unto me." There are no exceptions. He does not say that all good men, or all christians only shall be taught of God, nor that every man who has read the Scriptures or heard the outward preaching of the gospel, shall come unto Christ and be saved, but those who hear and learn, or obey the inward teaching of the Holy Spirit in their hearts. For in the same conversation when in their carnal apprehensions of His words respecting eating His flesh and drinking His blood, His disciples murmured at what they thought a hard saying, He told them that "it is the Spirit that quickeneth, the flesh profiteth nothing." "Therefore said I unto you, that no man can come unto me except it were given unto him of my Father;" thus assimilating the processes alluded to in both the spiritual acts of partaking of His flesh, and of conversion or coming unto Him, viz: That they were only to be experienced by the work of the Holy Spirit in the heart.

E. Ash asserts "that nothing is anywhere said in Scriptures which implies that men are to look to anything in themselves for illumination and salvation." What then is the meaning of the following passages, "Faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God." "The word is nigh thee in thy heart, and in thy mouth, that is the word of faith which we preach," Romans, x. 17, 8. Now if we are justified by faith, (Rom. v. 1) and faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God, which is in the heart, then the Scriptures do teach that men are to look to "Something in themselves for illumination and salvation." Moreover, Christ expressly told the Jews that the kingdom of God was within them, and not to be expected outwardly, Luke, xvii. 20, 21. Again, Paul in writing to the Romans (i. 18, 19) declares that "the wrath of God is revealed from heaven, against all ungodliness and unrighteousness of men who hold the truth in unrighteousness; because that which may be known of God is manifest in them, for God hath showed it unto them."

What could constitute a plainer assertion than these words of the revelation to man by the Holy Spirit, of God's displeasure at his unrighteous deeds, and this in the very secret recesses of his heart without any outward means? "For God, (not man, not the letter of Scripture only) hath showed it unto them." The last text further disposes of another of E. Ash's unsound thesis, "that there is no warrant whatever in Scripture for saying that a measure of the Spirit of God is in wicked men." How is the Spirit of Truth, which was promised by Christ to follow His resurrection in order to reprove the world for sin, among other offices, to operate for that end, except by appearing in and moving upon the hearts of wicked men? Does not every heart which has been redeemed from sin by Christ, know that such a statement as E. Ash ventures upon here is a monstrous fallacy! What was it struck remorse and horror into the soul after giving way to transgression when yet unconverted? Who preached to the corrupt generation of Noah's age? The apostle Peter in his 1st Ep. iii. 18, 19, 20, writes thus, "For Christ also hath once suffered for sins, the just for the unjust, that he might bring us to God, being put to death in the flesh but quickened by the Spirit: by which also, he went and preached unto the spirits in prison, which were sometime disobedient, when once the long suffering of God waited in the days of Noah, while the ark was a preparing." We find also in the account of the cause of the deluge, recorded in Genesis, 6th chapter, 3rd verse, these expressions; "And the Lord said my spirit shall not always strive with man, for that he also is flesh." The 8th chapter of Proverbs is in itself a complete refutation of the assumptions of E. Ash, nearly the whole of it being an exhortation to attend to the immediate teachings of the Holy Spirit under the name of wisdom. That wisdom as spoken of in this Scripture was not merely the wise sayings or counsel of good men, is evident by the personal designation applied to the term: "Unto you, oh men, I call: and my voice is to the sons of man. Hear, for I will speak of excellent things. I lead in the way of righteousness, that I may cause those that love me to inherit substance." Again, wisdom as here alluded to appears to be synonymous with Christ from these expressions: "The Lord possessed me in the beginning of his way, before his works of old. I was set up from everlasting, from the beginning, or ever the earth was." "Then I was by him as one brought up with him, and I was daily his delight, rejoicing always before him; rejoicing in the habitable part of his earth; and my delights were with the sons of men." * * "Whoso findeth me findeth life, and shall obtain favor of the Lord; but he that sinneth against me wrongeth his own soul; all they that hate me love death." How strikingly these passages agree with the testimony given of Christ in the 1st chapter of John! That He was in the beginning, and that all things were made by Him; that in Him was life, and the life was the light of men; that all who hate this light are in the condemnation, or love death.

Our Saviour's outward mission among men lasted only about three years, and those parts of the Scriptures which relate to his life and doctrines, were not written until some years after his death. The number of copies in circulation before Tyndale's time in the 16th century was very few, so that they were inaccessible to nearly all the laity, even of professedly Christian lands. To say nothing then of the millions of human beings in pagan countries, such as China and India, who never heard of the name of Christ, and assuming according to E. Ash's theories, that mankind can only be taught the way of salvation by outward means, such as the oral preaching of their fellow men, or the letter of the Scripture, it would appear that the opportunities of salvation for the vast bulk of mankind were slender indeed, and two of the most noble attributes of the Creator, his justice and mercy, must be denied.

On the other hand if we admit that the wisdom which was from the beginning, and strove with the antediluvians to rescue them from sin and destruction, whose voice is to the sons of men, "crying at the gates, at the entry of the city, at the coming in at the doors," to lead them in the way of righteousness, is the true Light that has imparted to every soul the knowledge of saving Truth, either immediately or instrumentally, since the creation of Adam, then all difficulties in justifying the ways of God to man vanish.

E. Ash's assertion, "that there is no warrant in Scripture for any such expression as the Light of Christ," may have a show of verbal accuracy thus far, that the juxtaposition of the four words referred to in that exact order, is not met with in the Scripture text. But that the form of expression is warranted by the Scriptures, must be obvious to all candid minds in consideration of the following texts. "I am the light of the world." "I am come a light into the world." "He that followeth me, shall not walk in darkness, but shall have the light of life." "The Day Spring from on high hath visited us, to give light to them that sit in darkness." "A light to lighten the Gentiles." "God is light." "Awake thou that sleepest, and Christ shall give thee light." "In him (Christ) was life, and the life was the light of men." What hypercriticism is it to object to the term in question, after so broad a warrant for its use by Christ himself!

(To be concluded.)

The experience of my own long life, and of that of all those whom I have intimately known, has on the other hand, abundantly shown me that there can be no seeking of God, however ignorant, however dark, that is pursued with integrity, which does not effectually lead upward from grace to grace, from grace to glory; for of a truth, "God is, and is a rewarder of those who diligently seek Him."—M. A. Schimmelpennick.

"And I will pray the Father, and He shall give you another Comforter, that He may abide with you for ever; Even the Spirit of Truth: whom the world cannot receive, because it seeth Him not, neither knoweth Him: but ye know Him; for He dwelleth with you, and shall be in you." John xiv. 16, 17.

THE FRIEND.

TWELFTH MONTH 26, 1874.

With the annual revolution of the seasons, we are again in the midst of that period usually devoted to the interchange of gifts, and the enjoyment of festivities among relatives and friends, to the winding up of the affairs of the out-going year, and the needed preparation for the advent of the new.

The term Christmas is derived from the name of our Saviour, coupled with that of "mas" or "missa;" the latter being a rite or ceremonial of the Romish Church. Edwards, in his Encyclopedia of Religious Knowledge, thus defines this rite: "The office of prayers used at the celebration of the eucharist; or in other words, the consecrating the bread and wine, so that it is transubstantiated into the body and blood of Christ, and offering them as an expiatory sacrifice for the quick and the dead." This writer further states that the first traces of the observation of the 25th of the 12th month as a religious festival in commemoration of the birth of Christ, are to be found in the second century, about the time of the Emperor Commodus. Kitto tells us that the earliest writer who alludes to it was Clement, of Alexandria, who wrote about the middle of the third century, and "who speaks, (he says), with compassionate scorn of the attempts made by persons in his time to fix not only the precise year, but the exact day of Christ's birth, both of which he considered equally futile and impracticable."

Kitto further writes thus concerning it:—"It is clear that the celebration of the day of Christ's nativity was not thought of in the earliest ages of the christian church; when it was at length considered proper, no clue or tradition existed as to the real time." * * * "We strongly think that there is no satisfactory evidence as to the time of the year; and still less as to the precise day; and it appears to us that the season, and consequently the day, have been determined on erroneous and uncritical data." * * * "Neither have ancient tradition or practice in their favor." Edwards states that "The custom of making presents on Christmas-eve is derived from an old heathen usage, practised among the northern nations at the feast of the birth of Sol on the 25th of December, to which it succeeded, and retained the name of Yule or Inul; that is, the 'wheel' or revolution of the sun."

Friends have always avoided the superstitious observation of any "days and times," as possessing in themselves peculiar sanctity above others; believing that such practices rather tend to weaken that sense of obligation which should rest upon all true Christians to regard not only every day, but also each moment of their lives, as consecrated to Him who has bought them with a price of untold value. It is to be observed also, with regret, that those days commonly set apart as Holydays or festivals, become easily prostituted by many to indulgence in sensual appetites and unprofitable pleasures; so that their popular effect seems rather to stimulate a worldly spirit than to promote holiness and Divine love. It is therefore from no sour or cynical spirit, that we have found it safest for us, as a people, to refrain chiefly from the customary observation of such periods. The cessation of worldly thought and care at intervals, and the reverent introversion of the mind in reflection upon those wonderful proofs of Divine love and mercy displayed in the birth, life and passion of our incarnate Lord, are not only allowable, but laudable means for promoting a growth in grace, and girding on the heavenly armor when the favor of the Holy Spirit is realized to bless such opportunities. We believe it was in this sense that our Lord, on that memorable night prior to his crucifixion, after He had broken the bread and poured out the wine at this final occasion of partaking with them of the passover, commanded His immediate disciples to "do this, as oft as ye do it, in remembrance of me." No sincere follower of the Redeemer can be insensible to the sublime importance of that event proclaimed by the angel herald to the shepherds of Galilee, on the night of the nativity of the only begotten Son of God. "Behold I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people. For unto you is born this day, in the City of David, a Saviour which is Christ the Lord."

Says Wm. Penn, "We acknowledge Christ in his double appearance; as in the flesh of the seed of Abraham, so in the Spirit as He is God over all blessed forever. Wherein is a full confession to Him, both as a blessed person, and as a Divine Spirit of light and life in the soul." * * * "Whose doctrine pierced, whose life preached, whose miracles astonished, whose blood atoned, and whose death, resurrection and ascension, confirmed that blessed manifestation to be no less than the Word God, (the life and light of men) manifested in the flesh, according to the Apostle Paul, for the salvation of the world; and therefore properly and truly He was the Son of man on earth, and is now as truly the Son of man in glory, as the head of our manhood, which shall also be glorified, if we now receive Him into our hearts, as the true Light that leads in the way of life eternal, and continue in well doing unto the end."

George Fox informs us in his journal, that when he was a young man, at the time called Christmas, whilst others were feasting and sporting themselves, he looked out poor widows, from house to house, and gave them money for their relief. Thus this godly man proved his title to pure and undefiled religion, agreeably to the apostolic declaration, and has left us a good example to follow. How many sorrowful households this wintry season must witness among unemployed mechanics and the laboring classes, whom the present depressed condition of trade has deprived of their usual means of support? Last winter there were nearly 5,000 inmates in the Philadelphia Almshouse, whilst 19,000 more were obliged to receive out-door relief in this city. The prospect for the present cold season is even more gloomy than the last; and every consideration of Christian duty of love to our Heavenly Father and our fellow beings, should open the hearts of those who have enough and to spare of the necessaries of life, to remember their poor brothers. "This is a faithful saying, (writes Paul to Titus) and these things I will that thou affirm constantly, that they which have believed in God might be careful to maintain good works." Again he exhorts Timothy to "charge them that are rich in this world, * * that they do good, that they be rich in good works, ready to distribute, willing to communicate." Blessings are promised to such that are encouraging in the highest degree. The royal Psalmist declares that "the Lord will deliver him in time of trouble," and he shall be blessed upon earth, that considereth the poor. "The Lord will strengthen him upon the bed of languishing." And the inspired Apostle assures us that such "lay up in store for themselves a good foundation against the time to come, that they may lay hold on eternal life." It has been truly said that, "our love to God in love to man we owe," and "he that loveth not his brother whom he hath seen, how can he love God whom he hath not seen." It is not sufficient that we dwell in our ceiled houses appropriating the comforts which a bountiful Providence has poured into our laps, and only relieving those cases of want which present themselves at our doors, and which we may perhaps contribute to more for the sake of being rid of their importunities, than from any feelings of genuine charity. Indeed this class of mendicants are often the least deserving objects of charity, whilst those who usually earn an honest livelihood, but who may in such crises as the present be destitute of both work and means of support, are too modest to urge their claims in public. The patriarch Job could testify "I was a father to the poor; and the cause which I knew not I searched out. I delivered the poor that cried and the fatherless, and him that had none to help. The blessing of him that was ready to perish came upon me; and I caused the widow's heart to sing for joy." May we then who are not in want ourselves; not only the rich in the usual acceptation of that term, but all who can spare anything of the Lord's gifts to them, remember our obligations to Him who for our sakes became poor, that we through His poverty might be made rich. Let us not too readily please ourselves by making costly and perhaps merely ornamental gifts to our well-to-do relatives and friends, but remember the lesson taught by these words from the lip of Truth: "When thou makest a dinner or a supper, call not thy friends, nor thy brethren, neither thy kinsmen, nor thy rich neighbors: lest they also bid thee again, and a recompense be made thee. But when thou makest a feast call the poor, the maimed, the lame, the blind; and thou shalt be blessed: for they cannot recompense thee; for thou shalt be recompensed at the resurrection of the just."

SUMMARY OF EVENTS.

FOREIGN.—The trial of Count Von Arnim, at Berlin, resulted in his being found guilty of only a part of the offences with which he was charged. He was sentenced to three months imprisonment, including one month of the time during which he had previously been under arrest. The Count is required to pay the costs of prosecution, but is permitted to retain his official dignities. The prosecution had copies of the papers which Von Arnim abstracted, some of which show that he had disobeyed his instructions, which were to sustain President Thiers, and had aided in the election of MacMahon, and also that he had acted in a similar manner with the German bishops in the Œcumenical Council.

The German Parliament passed the imperial budget and adjourned from the 19th inst. to the 7th prox. Bismarck has received a warning from the police of a fresh plot against his life.

The London Morning Standard has a dispatch from Spain reporting the total defeat and routing of a Republican army in Catalonia by the Carlists under Gen. Tristany.

A Paris dispatch of the 16th states that the Assembly committee of thirty met that day, and considered the question of placing constitutional bills in the order of the day. A motion to place the bills for the organization of the second Chamber first was adopted.

There has been a heavy fall of snow in the north of France. In the city of Angers, the capital of the Department of Maine-et-Loire, the roof of the market hall, unable to sustain the weight of the snow that had accumulated upon it, gave way, causing death and injury to many persons.

The iron-works of the Great Western Railway Company at Reading, Eng., were destroyed by fire the 19th inst. Four hundred persons are thrown out of employment by the fire.

The crew of the brig Brocklesby, at Liverpool, from Galveston, have been sentenced to imprisonment for terms ranging from six to eight years, for mutiny.

Deep snows have fallen in England making travelling difficult.

London, 12th mo. 21st. The rate of discount in the open market, for three months bills, is 5¼ per cent., which is ¾ below the Bank of England rate.

Liverpool.—Breadstuffs quiet. Middling uplands cotton, 7*d.* a 7-16*d.*

The Italian Chamber of Deputies has passed a bill granting an annuity to Garibaldi, by a vote of 207 to 25.

A City of Mexico dispatch says: A Congressional committee has reported in favor of the subvention of $12,000 per mile to the Tehuantepec Railway Company. Tepic has been completely pacified and the authorities reinstated. The suppression of the Order of "Sisters of Charity" has been decreed by Congress by a vote of 113 against 57.

Olive oil is produced in large quantities in Tunis. The olive crops during the past two years have been so abundant that there is still a great deal of oil in the country, notwithstanding the immense quantities—amounting in all to 3452 tons, of the value of £125,893—that have been shipped during the past year to Great Britain, France and Italy.

Tokio, Japan, suffered heavy loss by fire on the 17th ult. Over one thousand houses were destroyed.

The Governor-General of Canada has given his assent to the bill passed by the Quebec Assembly, entitled "An Act for the union of Canada, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick."

All the principal governments having accepted the invitation to the International Code Conference, Russia has issued a circular asking them to present their recommendation as to the time of meeting.

A Constantinople dispatch of the 21st says, during a storm to-day lightning struck the powder magazine at Scutari and caused a terrible explosion. A portion of the wall was overthrown, many houses demolished, and 200 people were killed and wounded.

UNITED STATES.—The report of the Chief of the Bureau of Statistics shows the total number of immigrants into the United States during the four years ending 6th mo. 30th last, to have been 1,499,298, viz: 1871, 331,250; 1872, 404,806; 1873, 459,803; 1874, 313,339. Of these immigrants 321,830 came from England, Scotland and Wales, 257,222 from Ireland, 492,501 from Germany, Austria and Netherlands, 158,089 from the British North American Provinces, and 269,656 from other lands.

The wool production of the United States is larger this year than last. There has been a marked increase of production in the States west of the Mississippi and on the Pacific.

The report of the Erie Railway for the fiscal year ending 9th mo. 30th last, shows gross earnings $18,598,898, and the working expenses $13,563,738, leaving a net revenue of $5,035,160. The net earnings were $1,336,804 less than the previous year. The decrease is attributed to the general depression of business in the country.

The Fayetteville N. C. Eagle, mentions that a vineyard near that town contains 100 acres, on which there are 7,000 vines of several varieties. It is supposed the yield of wine this season will be fully 40,000 gallons.

The Pennsylvania Commissioners of the Sinking Fund, during the year ending 11th mo. 30th last, paid off and extinguished $1,230,186 of the public debt of the commonwealth.

The 15th of Twelfth month was very cold in Canada and some of the northern States. At Quebec the thermometer was 20 degrees below zero, in Montreal 14 below, and at various other points from 4 below to 20 below zero. In Maine, New Hampshire, and Massachusetts, the temperature ranged according to location, from 6 below to 30 deg. below—the lowest point being reached at Lancaster, N. H.

At the late exhibition of the Franklin Institute in Philadelphia, 33,277 persons were weighed. It was found the average weight of the men was 149½ pounds, and that of the women 129 pounds.

The Pacific Mail Company's steamship Japan, from San Francisco and Yokohama for Hong Kong, was destroyed last week by fire when sixty miles out from Yokohama. The disaster was attended with a fearful loss of life and great destruction of property. The Japan had 973 tons of freight, and $375,000 in treasure.

The amount of salt inspected in Michigan the present year has been 1,026,977 barrels, being an increase of 23,633 barrels over last year.

Among the bills presented to Congress within the past few days the most important is one from the Senate Finance Committee providing for a resumption of specie payments. By the terms of the bill the circulation of legal tender notes is to be gradually reduced to $300,000,000, and on and after the first day of the year 1879, the Secretary of the Treasury is to redeem in coin the legal tender notes then outstanding. The present issue of fractional currency is to be exchanged as rapidly as possible for silver coins of the denominations of ten, twenty-five and fifty cents, of standard value. There is also a provision for free banking under the provisions of the national banking system. It is said that the President and Secretary of the Treasury approve the proposed measure

The interments in Philadelphia last week numbered 320, including 93 children under two years. There were 58 deaths of consumption and 22 scarlet fever.

A Hong Kong dispatch of the 20th states that the captain of the steamship Japan, together with thirty Europeans and 92 Chinese, had reached that port. Two boats and the rafts had not yet been heard from.

The Markets, &c.—The following were the quotations on the 21st inst. New York.—American gold 111½. U. S. sixes, 1881, registered, 117½; do. coupons, 121; do. 1868 registered, 117; coupons, 120¾; do. five per cents 1881, 113½. Superfine flour, $4.15 a $4.50; State extra, $4.90 a $5.15; finer brands, $5.50 a $10.50. No. 2 Chicago spring wheat, $1.12 a $113.; No. 3 do. $1.08 a $1.09; red western, $1.27 a $1.28; amber, $1.30 a $1.31; white Michigan, $1.36 a $1.38. Canada West barley, $1.62. Oats, 67 a 70 cts. Rye, 95 cts. Western mixed corn, 88 a 90 cts.; old, 93 cts.; yellow, 90 a 91 cts. Philadelphia—Middlings cotton, 14⅛ a 14½ cts. for uplands and New Orleans Superfine flour, $4 a $4.25; extras, $4.50 a $5; finer brands, $5.50 a $7.50. Red wheat, $1.20 a $1.24; amber, $1.25 a $1.28; white, $1.37 a $1.42. Rye, $1.00. New corn, 80 a 85 cts.; old yellow and mixed, 92 a 93 cts. Oats, 64 a 67 cts. Lard, 13½ a 13¾ cts. About 2,500 beef cattle were sold at 3½ a 8½ cts. per lb. gross; the better grades were in demand and prices higher, ranging from 7 to 8½ cts. Sheep sold at 5 a 8 cts. per lb. gross. Receipts 8,000 head. Hogs, $9.50 a $10.50 per 100 lbs. net for corn fed. Receipts 5,000 head. Chicago.—Spring extra flour, $4.12 a $4.50. No. 1 spring wheat, 91½ cts.; No. 2 do., 89¼ cts. No. 2 old mixed corn, 78 cts.; new, 65¾ cts. Oats, 53½ cts. Rye, 96 a 98 cts. No. 2 spring barley, $1.24 a $1.26. Lard, 13 cts. St. Louis.—No. 2 spring wheat, 90 a 91 cts. New corn, 67 a 70 cts. No. 2 oats, 57 cts.

WANTED.

A Governess for Westtown Boarding School, to enter on her duties at the opening of the next Session.

Apply to

Elizabeth C. Scattergood, West Chester, Pa.
Hannah Richardson, Wilmington, Del.
Hannah Evans, No. 322 Union St., Philada.
Lydia L. Walton, Moorestown, N. J.

NOTICE.

Wanted immediately, a competent Seamstress for the "Shelter for Colored Orphans." Apply to Hannah B. Newbold, No. 643 Franklin St.

Sarah G. Yarnall, No. 922 Mt. Vernon St.

MUSINGS AND MEMORIES

Published by the Tract Association of Friends, is now for sale at their Depository, No. 304 Arch St., Philada. Price, in cloth, $1.00 per copy or $9.00 per dozen.

FRIENDS' ASYLUM FOR THE INSANE.

Near Frankford, (Twenty-third Ward,) Philadelphia.

Physician and Superintendent—JOSHUA H. WORTHINGTON, M. D.

Applications for the Admission of Patients may be made to the Superintendent, or to any of the Board of Managers.

MARRIED, 12th mo. 17th, 1874, at Upper Chichester Meeting-house, Delaware Co., Pa., EZEKIEL C. SHOEMAKER, of Montgomery Co., to S. REBECCA, daughter of James Larkin, of the former place.

THE FRIEND.

A RELIGIOUS AND LITERARY JOURNAL.

VOL. XLVIII. SEVENTH-DAY, FIRST MONTH 2, 1875. NO. 20.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY.

Price Two Dollars per annum, if paid in advance. Two dollars and fifty cents, if not paid in advance.

Subscriptions and Payments received by

JOHN S. STOKES,

AT NO. 116 NORTH FOURTH STREET, UP STAIRS.

PHILADELPHIA.

Postage, when paid quarterly in advance, five cents.

For "The Friend."

Legal Opinions in the Ohio Case.

(Continued from page 146.)

We now give the dissenting opinion of Chief Justice Welsh and Judge White.]

"Welch, C. J., dissenting. I can not concur in the opinion. I think the plaintiffs have made no case to justify a court of equity in disturbing the defendants in the possession of this property.

The property was donated to a religious organization, by the name which it had already adopted, 'The Ohio Yearly Meeting of the Society of Friends,' and the donation was unconditional, unless there be a condition implied in name itself. For many years, and up to 1854, the defendants and their predecessors in office held and controlled the property, for and on behalf of the Society, as and being its admitted officers and agents. They have held it ever since, claiming to be such officers and agents. It is now sought to dispossess them, on the alleged ground that by an election of the Society, held in 1854, or by subsequent action of other like societies, they have been superseded in office by the election or installation of the plaintiffs. The burden of proof to sustain one or the other of these grounds of claim rests on the plaintiffs. They must show a legal election of Binns in 1854, or they must show that Hoyle has since been ousted, and Binns installed as his successor, by the judgment or authoritative order of some superior tribunal, to which the Ohio Yearly Meeting is subordinate. That they have failed to show either, is to my mind quite plain.

Briefly stated, the essential facts in relation to the election in 1854 are these: Hoyle was admittedly the regular and lawful clerk of the meeting, and acted and was acknowledged as such by unanimous consent. By the constitution or 'Book of Discipline' of the Society, by the Society's unbroken practice, and by well-known parliamentary usage, Hoyle's enunciations, or entries, made by him as such clerk, bona fide and understandingly, are conclusive evidence of the vote or 'sense' of the meeting. Hoyle did bona fide and understandingly, and while admittedly he was the sole clerk of the meeting, announce to the meeting, and afterward enter in its regular journal, the fact that 'the delegates had failed to unite on a clerk,' and 'that the old clerk was continued in office.'

This enunciation and entry, I say, are conclusive. They are conclusive, not only because of their official character, as the utterance and act of the only proper organ and officer of the meeting, but also because of their undeniable truth. It was not only true that the delegates had failed to unite, but also that the meeting had failed to unite, and that, therefore, as a matter of necessity, as well as in conformity to unbroken former usage, the old clerk was continued. It was not only true that both the meeting and the delegates failed to unite, but it was true that a 'large majority of both' were in favor of 'continuing the old clerk,' and opposed to the election of Binns; and had Hoyle made an entry to the effect that the meeting had 'united' on Binns, or given their 'solid sense' in his favor, the entry would have been a glaring falsehood, for which he would have deserved impeachment.

That it is the general law of deliberative bodies that such an enunciation by its organ and entry by its authorized clerk are conclusive proof of the result of an election, needs no authority to prove. That this law is applicable to the proceedings of Yearly Meetings of the Society of Friends, and that it is in fact so made applicable by their book of discipline and usages, is expressly held in Field v. Field, 9 Wend. 402, and in Earle v. Wood, 8 Cush. 467. In the former case, the court held the act of the clerk to be conclusive, although he was sustained by only a minority of the members. The latter case, Earle v. Wood, was really the foundation of the present case. It was the controversy between the Gurneyites and Wilburites, in the New England Yearly Meeting, and was decided in favor of the former, who supported the old clerk under circumstances substantially similar to those of the present case. Chief Justice Shaw, in delivering the opinion of the court in the case, says, that the election of a clerk for the Yearly Meeting 'is an act which can only be done in pursuance of the "solid sense" of the whole body, taken, declared and minuted by its only acknowledged regular officer.'

This being the law of the case, it matters not whether we find, from the evidence, that, by the rules of the Society, the election of clerk was a matter belonging exclusively to the delegates, or whether we hold that the meeting had the right to take it out of their hands, and decide for themselves. The entry of the clerk is a conclusive negative to the proposition that Binns was elected, either by the delegates or the meeting, by solid sense, by a majority, or otherwise.

That Binns was elected by a majority of the delegates or by a majority of the meeting is not claimed. The claim is, that the entry of the clerk is not conclusive, but that we may go behind the entry, and inquire into its truth; and that the evidence shows that the meeting, acting by a minority of its members, did "unite" on Binns, or give its solid sense in favor of his election. In other words, it is claimed that a minority represented the solid sense of the meeting, and that the regular clerk refusing to make an announcement and entry to that effect, the clerk thus chosen made the entry himself, which the old clerk should have made. This is the claim as I understand it.

I confess it is difficult for me to reply seriously to such an argument. What is the "solid sense" of the meeting? Does it mean the opinion of its most solid members—the opinion which is supported by the greatest weight of intelligence, morality and piety? If so, who but the clerk is to weigh the characters of the voters, and determine which side of the scales preponderates. That the preponderance here was in favor of Hoyle is well established, without the aid of the entry which he made as clerk; for there is no syllable of evidence to show, nor is it pretended, that the majority who favored his election were not equal in intelligence, morality, and piety to the minority who supported Binns; nor does the entry subsequently made by Binns assert that the "solid sense" of the meeting was for Binns, or that the meeting united on him, but merely shows that "part" of the meeting united on him.

It makes no difference, therefore, whether we are to understand this peculiar expression, "solid sense," as indicating unanimity, majority, or weight of character. In neither sense was the "solid sense" of the meeting in favor of Binns. But I deny that the last named is the true Quaker meaning of the phrase. If that is the meaning, it is an anomaly in Quakerism and a strange departure from one of the foundation principles of the sect, namely, the perfect equality of all men in point of privilege and power. If such be its real meaning, why is the minute book so full of entries that the meeting "failed to unite?" Was there a tie vote or a perfect equilibrium of character in all such cases? By no means. The phrase originally meant unanimity, or at least an approximation to it—substantial unanimity. The word "unite," when applied to the meeting, I also understand in the same sense. The true Quaker idea, underlying these expressions, is the belief that an unerring divine spirit, as in the day of Pentecost, moves the people to act with "one accord." To "unite" is to become a unit. "Solid sense," when applied to an aggregate of individuals, means the sense or opinion of the whole, just as in solido means by the whole, or as consolidate means to unite many in one. Had a serious division of opinion been contemplated, and a weighing of the character or worth of the voters intended, it is highly improbable that any such form of expression as "solid sense" or "unite" would have found a place in their book of discipline, or have been thought of. Instead of "solid sense," the words would have been "prevailing sense," "preponderating sense," "better sense," or "sense of the majority;"

and the word "unite" could have had no application whatever. Certainly no true Quaker could ever intend that any question should be carried by less than a majority of the deliberative body.

But, as I have said, it matters not what meaning we assign to these words, or whether we rest the defendants' case upon the official character of the clerk's entry, or upon its truth. If the evidence shows anything, it shows that both delegates and meeting did "fail to unite" on any one as clerk. Much more does it show, that both bodies failed to unite on Binns. It shows that twenty-eight of the forty-two delegates, and a "large majority" of the meeting, including at least two of the remaining fourteen delegates, were opposed to the election of Binns, and in favor of continuing Hoyle in the office. Hoyle's election stands, therefore, trebly proven—by the clerk's entry, by the failure to unite on any successor, and by the admitted fact that a majority was in his favor. For it is to be observed, that, in order to validate the continuance of Hoyle in office, it is not necessary to show that he was re-elected, or that there was an entry in the minute book, as there in fact was, to the effect that he was continued in office. It is enough for that purpose to show that no successor was elected. This was expressly held in Hendrickson v. Shotwell and wife, 1 Saxton Ch. 577, and is abundantly shown by the testimony as to the usages of the Society.

The argument that Binns was elected seems to be based wholly upon the fact that "more than the usual number" seconded his nomination, and that at the particular time when his name was proposed to the meeting but few made known their objections. I must express my surprise at this argument. To give to it any weight would be to stick in words and disregard facts, and to hold that the election was a battle of noises and not of opinions. The "usual" number is no criterion in a case like this, where there was an actual and serious division of sentiment. Usually there is no division, and one or two voices—nay, silent acquiescence—is sufficient to show assent. Here there was known and serious opposition; and there were two good reasons why the quiet and good order of the meeting was not disturbed by reasserting that opposition at the particular time. One of these reasons was that it was unnecessary to do so, the fact of such opposition having already been sufficiently made known. It had been made known by the report of Hall and by the total absence of objection to that report, and then by the announcement of the clerk that he should entertain the report, and in pursuance of it would record the continuance of the old clerk. Another reason for not making a clamorous cry of opposition at the particular time mentioned, and which was publicly proclaimed as such reason, was that the majority, having already acted in the matter, did not wish to participate in the separate action of the minority, lest their participation might be construed into an acknowledgment that the separatist were the true yearly meeting. The fact of a serious opposition to Binns' election was well known before the meeting and at all stages of its proceedings, and was abundantly manifested on every decent and proper occasion, when it could be done consistently with the quiet and good order of a Quaker meeting. The plaintiffs' own witnesses substantially admit this. Jabez Coulson himself says, "I know that more than half the meeting was opposed to the appointment of Binns." He also says that he "believed" at the time that this majority were opposed to the election of Binns; and he admits that the silence of the majority "might have been in deference to decency and order," and that he "did not understand that their silence was an agreement to the appointment of Binns." Other witnesses testify to the same effect. Nathan Hall estimates the Hoyle men as "very much more than half," and as he supposes "over two-thirds." And if we take the testimony of the disinterested stenographer, who sat in the gallery and reported the proceedings, there was a preponderance of expression in favor of Hoyle, corresponding with the majority of members in his favor.

(To be continued.)

For "The Friend."

Some Strictures on E. Ash's pamphlet concerning George Fox.

(Continued from page 151.)

Dr. Ash further alleges that, "the Holy Spirit is never designated in Scripture by the terms light and grace." In refutation of this statement it will be sufficient to cite the following passages. "And I will pour upon the house of David, and upon the inhabitants of Jerusalem, the Spirit of grace and of supplication." Zech. xii. 10. "And hath done despite unto the Spirit of Grace." Heb. x. 29. "In thy light we shall see light." Ps. xxxvi. 9. "O, send out thy light and thy truth." Ps. xliii. 3. "Grace is poured into thy lips." Ps. xlv. 2. "Of his (Christ's) fulness have all we received, and grace for grace." "Grace and truth came by Jesus Christ." Jno. i. 16, 17. "The Word was made flesh, and dwelt among us * * full of grace and truth." Jno. i. 14. "Thou hast set our iniquities before thee, our secret sins in the light of thy countenance." Ps. xc. 8. "The grace of God which bringeth salvation, hath appeared to all men." Tit. ii. 11.

Again, we find this statement in the pamphlet: "That it was to him, and not to any thing in their own hearts, that both our Lord himself and his apostles taught men to look for illumination and salvation." Undoubtedly it is true that Christ and his apostles directed people to Him for illumination and salvation; but that they never directed men to Christ or the Holy Spirit as dwelling in their hearts, is contrary to numerous Scripture testimonies. "Christ in you the hope of glory, whom we preach," &c. Col. i. 27. "Know ye not that ye are the temple of God, and that the Spirit of God dwelleth in you? If any man defile the temple of God, him shall God destroy; for the temple of God is holy, which temple ye are." 1 Cor. iii. 16, 17. "What! know ye not that your body is the temple of the Holy Ghost which is in you," &c. 1 Cor. vi. 19. See also 2 Cor. i. 16. "And I will pray the Father, and he shall give you another Comforter, that he may abide with you forever; even the Spirit of truth * * he dwelleth with you and shall be in you." * * * "At that day ye shall know that I am in my Father, and you in me, and I in you." * * "If a man love me he will keep my words, and my Father will love him, and we will come unto him and make our abode with him." Jno. xiv. 16, 17, 20, 23. "I in them, and thou in me." Jno. xvii. 23. "Behold I stand at the door and knock: if any man hear my voice, and open the door, I will come in unto him, and sup with him, and he with me." Rev. iii. 20. "It is God that worketh in you both to will and to do of his good pleasure."

Our early Friends took much pains in setting forth the doctrine of the Divine illumination of the soul of man, to inculcate the idea that this Light or Grace, although operating therein, was nothing that appertains to his own nature as a created being; and in order to check any assumption by conceited or fanatic people of being guided by the Holy Spirit when they were walking after their own lusts or impure imaginations, they asserted it to be an accepted principle among them, "that whatsoever any do, pretending to the Spirit, which is contrary to the Scriptures, be accounted and reckoned a delusion of the devil." (Barclay's Apology. Prop. III. § VI.)

A careful investigation of Dr. Ash's Tract convinces us that the main intent of the author is to uphold a view of salvation by Christ which has become widely popular of latter time among a certain class, in which a lively imagination of the incidents and objects which attended the crucifixion of our Redeemer is proposed to sinners as the true method of "looking to Jesus," and thus experiencing the cure of their spiritual maladies by faith, in a manner comparable to the act of the snake-bitten Israelites in gazing upon the brazen serpent set upon a pole in the wilderness by Moses. Such teachers seem to have grown tired of the route to Canaan, proposed by the Founder of Christianity through the throes of the new birth, and the straits of the narrow way which leads to life, so that one seldom notices any allusions to these avenues in their teachings. "Look and live;"—"Come just as you are;"—"the work is all done for you by Jesus;—all you have to do is to reach out your hand and lay hold on it;" are the accepted mottoes and invitations of this school of theologists. It is certainly very convenient for us to suppose that by a cheap reference of all our sins, past, present, and future, to an Omnipotent Arm who will bear them without any further concern of ours, we can, without repentance or any perceptible change of life, be absolved from their entire responsibility, and may lead a free and easy life of enjoyment in this world, and obtain a vastly superior one in the next; and yet this is scarcely an overdrawn statement of the plan of salvation taught by a large class of well meaning but mistaken people in this day, and we fear by not a few in our own Society. The attack of E. Ash upon George Fox is but one of the more prominent offshoots from this unsound root; and alarming as it is in its bold denial of some of the cardinal doctrines of the Gospel which have always been held by the Society of Friends, and its slurs upon the convictions of one whom all classes in the Society have hitherto delighted to honor, we trust these features may have a tendency to turn back the wandering feet of some earnest and well-meaning workers in the gospel field, into the time honored paths of Scripture truth, and open their eyes to the "dark mountains" of error to which any departure from the crucifying power of Christ in the heart will inevitably lead, if pursued to its legitimate end.

Most precious as it must be to every quickened soul, to contemplate that amazing act of Divine love and mercy displayed in the sacrifice on Calvary, and true as it is that "the Lord hath laid upon Him the iniquity of us all," and that "He hath made Christ to be sin for us, who knew no sin, that we might be made the righteousness of God in Him," let us never lose sight of the fact that merely dwelling in thought upon these truths will not entitle us to their benefits. That what sinners require for their regeneration and acceptance in the Beloved, is the reception of Christ Jesus in their hearts, that He may disarm the strong man who has long dwelt there, and spoil his goods, and set up His own blessed kingdom as rightful Lord. "To as many as received Him, to them gave He power to become the sons of God." Jno. i. 12. "If ye continue in my word," said Christ, "then are ye my disciples indeed, and ye shall know the Truth, and the Truth shall make you free." Whosoever committeth sin is the servant of sin. "If the Son therefore shall make you free, then shall ye be free indeed." Jno. viii. 31, &c.

On page 24 of the pamphlet, E. Ash states his belief, "that nothing is anywhere said in the New Testament which implies the future continuance of direct or immediate revelation to Christ's followers, and that the whole subsequent experience of the Church (including that afforded by G. F. and his brethren) goes to show that nothing of the kind has been known since the days of the apostles." If this be true then it is in vain that we pray for the influence and pouring out of the Holy Spirit upon the hearts of ourselves or others, and it invalidates Christ's promise of the gift of the Spirit to those who ask for it. Luke xi. 13. He has expressly told us that no man can come to Him except the Father draw him, and that all shall be so taught or drawn. Jno. vi. 45. What is this but a promise of His immediate influence or revelation, not to the apostles only, but to all of every age who would hear His voice. The prophecy of Joel (ii. 28) is universal in its terms, "I will pour out of my spirit on all flesh." This could not be restricted then to those who were assembled on the day of Pentecost.

Paul, in writing to the Ephesians, declares that his prayer for them was, that they might receive from the Father "the spirit of wisdom, and revelation in the knowledge of Him," (Eph. i. 17); and again, "unto every one of us is given grace according to the measure of the gift of Christ." "Wherefore He saith when He ascended up on high, He led captivity captive, and gave gifts unto men." Eph. iv. 7-8. There is nothing in these passages to warrant restricting them in their application to the apostles' days.

How does E. Ash suppose a gift in the ministry is now conferred upon any if not by the immediate or direct revelation of the Holy Spirit. The letter of Scripture cannot enable any body of Christians to decide which of them has a call to the work of the ministry. Indeed our author broadly contradicts himself on page 29, where, in speaking of the early Friends and their influence, he thus writes: "The large exercise among them of a ministry which, * * * bore evidence to spiritually minded men of a real 'unction from the Holy One,' and was manifestly fitted both to bring men to Christ, and to build them up in Him." On page 30 he further speaks approvingly of the doctrine "of the Holy Spirit's begetting in men repentance towards God, and faith in our Lord Jesus Christ; of His renewing and sanctifying their fallen nature; of His opening their hearts to receive and their minds to understand the truth of God as it is revealed in the Holy Scriptures; of His enabling them to worship Him in spirit and in truth; of His bestowing upon them special gifts for Christ's service; and of His affording them whatever guidance they need in their earthly course beyond that which they have in the exercise of their own natural faculties, in the indications of God's Providence and in the teaching of the Holy Scriptures." How to reconcile these views with the before mentioned denial of any direct revelation to men since the apostle's days, we are at a loss to imagine.

To our view there is no more comforting or well-founded doctrine than that of the immediate personal agency of the Holy Spirit in the hearts of believers; and the loving legacy left by our blessed Surety, prior to His ascension, that the Comforter should come and "take of mine and show it unto you," that He would thus dwell with his followers even to the end of the world, was certainly not meant to be confined to the small number of men who were eye witnesses to His resurrection, but as He is "the same yesterday, and to-day, and for ever," so He is to be for salvation even to the ends of the earth. Is. xlix. 6.

An effort is made in this pamphlet to distinguish between the genuineness of certain instances of supernatural communications to the primitive members of the Society, and those more normal manifestations of the Divine will to the mind of man which are derived through the channel of the Scriptures, by throwing doubts and even contemptuous reflections upon the former, whilst still admitting the probability of Divine guidance to the same individuals in the latter cases. Whilst we do not deny that some enthusiastic adherents of George Fox may have been led into modes of action and expression that the wisdom of the Head of the Church did not inspire, yet we can see no more reason to doubt the claims of Fox to Divine authority in the remarkable cases given in his journal, than in those narrated in the records of the early church. The power of the Omnipotent has not diminished by the lapse of time, and there are numerous well authenticated instances in our own day of both prescience and discerning of spirits, quite beyond the ordinary capacity of the natural faculties, which have been vouchsafed by the Almighty to His favored servants, as well to those of other denominations as to members of our own Society. The little work published by Friends' Tract Association of Philadelphia, styled Biographical Sketches of Members of the Society of Friends, is replete with extraordinary proofs of this.

The writer is acquainted with an instance of the kind that has never been made public, that may go to sustain such assumptions. H. R., a female minister and member of Philadelphia Yearly Meeting, whilst travelling in Great Britain on a religious visit, in the year 1850, was engaged in visiting the families of a particular meeting of Friends. Her companion related to the writer that on entering the house of one of these families, and sitting down with them, an unusual and awful impression was made upon her mind, and that H. R. afterward addressed herself to the male head of this household by stating that she believed he had been tempted to the commission of a breach of trust and unfaithfulness, both towards God and man, in the course of his life, and setting before him the awful consequences of such a sin, unless repentance and amendment of life were experienced by him. She further told him that she believed a door of mercy was still open to him for this end if he would humbly embrace it, but that unless this was experienced, a blast would come upon his temporal prosperity, his family would be scattered, and he come to poverty. Upon retiring from the house, H. R.'s companion asked her if she had ever heard any thing of this individual's circumstances; to which she gave an emphatic negative; she having no previous acquaintance with him nor any intimation of his character. The man Friend who accompanied the females on this visit, afterwards informed them that the person in question had been guilty of embezzling the property of some orphans for whom he was guardian, and had been the subject of disciplinary care to his friends of that meeting. He was attired in the peculiar garb of Friends, and had made some profession of religion. Some years after this the English Friend who had accompanied H. R. on the visit in question, wrote to her companion, then in Philadelphia, informing her of the subsequent history of the person alluded to. He lost both reputation and estate, his family were scattered in disgrace, and H. R.'s prediction seemed to have been literally fulfilled.

The doctrine of the agency of the Holy Spirit in the work of man's redemption, and in his subsequent guidance as a follower of Christ, has not only the highest sanction of scriptural authority, but is guarded with words of awful warning by the Son of God himself, as narrated in the 12th of Matthew 31st and 32d verses, and Mark, iii. 29. "Whosoever speaketh against the Holy Ghost it shall not be forgiven him, neither in this world nor in the world to come." Let us beware, under these considerations, lest we essay to limit the work of the Spirit by our denial of His presence and agency in the true field of His operations. He whose "delights were with the sons of men," has indeed stooped in adorable condescension to dwell with the contrite and humble spirit. How unspeakably consoling is the thought that He deigns to be made in all things like unto His human brethren, "that He might be a merciful and faithful High Priest in things pertaining to God, to make reconciliation for the sins of the people;" and thus having filled His sacrificial mission, now sends the Comforter that He may "abide with us forever;" who shall take of Christ's and show it unto us; shall show us things to come, and make us kings and priests unto God and His Father!

Desiring with the broadest charity to impute no design on the part of E. Ash to derogate from the ubiquity or offices of the Holy Spirit, we cannot but feel that he has (perhaps unconsciously) committed a grave offence against the truth of Scripture, and has impeached the faith of the Society with which he was in professed fellowship, in a most vital point. To our view the relinquishment of this tenet of the immediate guidance of the Spirit of Truth in the hearts of believers, must result in the total dissolution of the Society of Friends ere long. It would be the severance of the trunk of the tree from its root, and cut off the very source of vitality.

We are confident that many hearts in this land, not only within Philadelphia Yearly Meeting but elsewhere, who have regarded London Yearly Meeting with the respect that naturally attaches to the first gathered body in our church, have been deeply pained that she should have permitted the memorial of E. Ash to be recorded, without a protest against his uncalled for attack upon one whom men of just repute without our pale have often stepped aside to honor with a tribute to his exalted worth and christian character.

Silence, under such circumstances, must be deemed as a quasi endorsement at least, of the doctrinal errors of the subject of the memorial. Men will pass away and be forgotten as a dream, or a tale that is told, but principles are enduring as the "lasting hills." It may be an act of charity to let the mantle of oblivion fall over the memory of those who have gone out from us because they were not of us, but it can scarcely be a duty, and may involve unfaithfulness to the High Priest of our profession, to join in public commendation of even the benevolent traits of a character, whose voice and pen have been employed in sapping the very foundations of our articles of faith.

C. R.

Paraffine.—This substance which twenty years ago was merely a chemical curiosity, has now become an article of extensive use in the arts, and is manufactured annually by the thousands of tons. When pure, it is perfectly colorless and transparent, resembling spermaceti in appearance. It is tasteless, and is but little affected by most chemical substances; from this indifference to chemical action it obtains its name of paraffine, derived from two Latin words signifying of equal affinity. It has been made on a large scale by distilling Irish peat, certain varieties of bituminous coal and petroleum. It is used in the manufacture of candles, and as a substitute for wax in certain processes; and has also been applied to different fabrics to render them water-repellent, and as a coating to the inside of casks and barrels. It has been employed to some extent to retard the explosive force of gunpowder in certain cases. By immersing the grains in melted paraffine for a short time, the gunpowder becomes coated with this insoluble substance, and may thus also be preserved under water for some time without much injury. On account of its non-conducting character, it has been used extensively as an insulator in telegraphic operations. It has also been employed, when dissolved in naptha, as a preservative of stone and brick work. When melted with India rubber it makes a good waterproof compound which can be applied to wearing apparel. The horticulturist has found that paraffine when mixed with bees wax, can be usefully applied in the budding of roses, and the grafting of fruit trees; and the laundress has discovered that by the aid of a warm flat iron, a beautiful gloss is imparted to linen by paraffine, upon which it leaves no greasy stain.

I see the great danger to which individuals of small religious experience, though otherwise well disposed, are liable, when, in their zeal to become active, they engage in matters too high for them, and beyond their growth in the Truth; they may thereby come to the loss of the little they had attained, wound their own souls, and hurt the cause they were prompted, by their imprudent zeal to attempt to promote. My concern for some of these has at times been great; and I fear that, from this cause, other trials may arise in our Society.—Stephen Grellet.

Selected

THE WIDOW'S THANKSGIVING.

Of the precious years of my life, to day
I count another one;
And I thank thee, Lord, for the light is good,
And 'tis sweet to see the sun.

To watch the seasons as they pass,
Their wondrous wealth unfold,
Till the silvery treasures of the snow
Are changed to the harvest's gold.

For kindly still does the teeming earth
Her stores of plenty yield,
Whether we come to bind the sheaves,
Or only to glean in the field.

And dwelling in such a pleasant land,
Though poor in goods and friends,
We may still be rich, if we live content
With what our Father sends.

If we feel that life is a blessed thing—
A boon to be desired;
And where not much to us is given,
Not much will be required;

And keep our natures sweet with the sense
Of fervent gratitude
That we have been left to live in the world,
And to know that God is good!

And since there is naught of all we have;
That we have not received:
Shall we dare, though our treasures be reclaimed,
To call ourselves bereaved?

For 'tis easy to walk by sight in the day;
'Tis the night that tries our faith;
And what is that worth if we render thanks
For life and not for death?

Lord, help me still, at the midnight hour,
My lamp of faith to trim;
And to sing from my heart at the break of day,
A glad thanksgiving hymn:

Nor doubt thy love, though my earthly joys
Were narrowed down to this one,
So long as the sweet day shines for me,
And mine eyes behold the sun.

Last Poems of A. and P. Carey.

For "The Friend."

The Light of Christ.

"Obedience to the light of Christ is the first step to peace." "I was sent to turn people from darkness to light, that they might receive Christ Jesus; for to as many as should receive him in his light, I saw he would give power to become the sons of God."—George Fox.

"That which maketh sin manifest is Christ's light." "This light which shineth in man in his dark state, is light which hath life in it; it is the life of our Lord Jesus Christ, of the Word eternal, which is the light of men."—Isaac Penington.

In the light of the Lamb must the nations of them that are saved walk, as the Scriptures testify. "[This] is that blessed principle of light and life of Christ, which we profess, and direct all people to, as the great instrument and agent of man's conversion to God."—William Penn.

"It is because this light, seed, and grace that appears in the heart of man is so little regarded, and so much overlooked, that so few know Christ brought forth in them."—Robert Barclay.

"As we are all driven from Paradise; and the flaming sword and the cherubim are set to keep the way of the tree of life, so we must return into the favor of God again by the light of Christ." "There is no other way, dear people; you must bring your deeds to the light of Christ, and abide the sentence of condemnation," &c.—William Dewsbury.

It may well be questioned, whether a more comprehensive, and at the same time condensed and faithful exposition of original Quakerism can be found, than in the foregoing apothegms taken from the works of five of its prominent exponents. Men who were noble sufferers for the truths which they not only advocated, but exemplified in their lives and conversation, with unfaltering faith and trust in the everlasting Arm, before the world.

By submission and obedience to this light or transforming grace of the Lord Jesus, which the apostle Paul was assured by Him was "sufficient," these noble pioneers like to "princes of the provinces" in their day, became through the powerful operation and transforming power of the Holy Spirit, changed men themselves before they went about to change others. Thus, says one of them, "I never heard the voice of Christ (as His follower) till I was slain, and baptized, and lay as a little child under His heavenly chastisements." "I was made a Christian," he continues, "through a day of vengeance and of burning as an oven; and the haughtiness and pride of man in me was brought low."

Is not this what is so much wanting in the present day of much ease to the flesh, even a being "baptized into Christ," that we may put on Christ? A submission to the humbling power, and chastening discipline of the cross, and obedience to that light of Christ Jesus which shineth in darkness, and can alone guide our feet out of the labyrinths of error into the way of true peace?

The Power from on High is the same as ever it was; the grace and mercy as a living stream from the Source eternal are the same also. The deficiency then must be wholly on our part. If we do not yield in an uncompromising, whole-hearted surrender of our all to the leavening, thoroughly transforming operation of the Holy Ghost and fire, which can alone cleanse our wicked and deceitful hearts, how can we expect to become children of the Saviour, or be made of the pure in heart who shall see God? Without this, we shall be too much like the seed, in the parable of our Redeemer, that fell either by the wayside, in the stony places, or among the briars and thorns of this world, that bringeth no fruit to perfection. Is it not evident that we are not thoroughly enough broken to pieces; neither brought into the similitude of passive clay in the potter's hand, thence to be moulded into whatever vessels the Master would have us, for workmen and workwomen in His house? Oh! that the cry of our hearts individually might more be, Lord I am thine, and thine only: do with me what thou wilt, so that thy name may be glorified by life or by death; and my soul be permitted to rejoice in thy salvation. Then would the windows of heaven be opened for the pouring out of blessings. Then would be given unto them that mourn in Zion, beauty for ashes, the oil of joy for sorrow, and the garment of praise for the spirit of heaviness. Then would be experienced a putting on strength in the name of the Lord; and a receiving of gifts more abundantly, one after this manner and another after that, "for the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ: till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ."

Whale Catching in Baffin's Bay.

The entire change in whaling resulting from the introduction of steamers into the service, may make a few extracts from Markham's "Whaling Cruise to Baffin's Bay," acceptable to our readers.

Captain Albert Hastings Markham, an officer in the British navy, appears to have joined the crew of the whaler "Polaris," of Dundee, in 1873, for the purpose of scientific observation in the Arctic regions, and has written a very pleasant detail of the daily experience of a whaling voyage.

Speaking of catching their first whale he says:—"At four o'clock this morning a whale was seen, and a couple of boats lowered and sent in pursuit, but the chase was apparently abandoned shortly after five, the captain looking into my cabin, and in forcible terms expressed his opinion, that notwithstanding his having "turned his horseshoe" yesterday, we were going to have no luck this cruise. He went to bed, at half past seven our ears were assailed by that cry, which is such sweet music to all on board a whaler, 'A fall! a fall!' accompanied by the usual commotion on deck. Hurriedly putting my coat on, being in the act of dressing at the time, I hastened up and found that the speksioneer* was the lucky man, having struck a fine fish, which was rapidly towing him towards the edge of the pack ice. Our boats were soon in the water, and in less than twenty minutes the unfortunate fish had six harpoons buried in its body. In the meantime, I had retired below to complete my toilet, the scanty manner in which I was attired being ill adapted for remaining on deck with the temperature four degrees below the freezing point. On my return to the upper deck, the loose boats were observed alongside their prey in the act of administering with lances the coup de grace, on receiving which the huge monster turned over on its back and expired. The flags in the fast boats were then struck amidst the cheers of the men both in the boats and on board the ship. The loose boats were at once recalled to the ship, their crews, after the boats had been hoisted up, being busily employed in making the necessary preparations for flinching and taking in the blubber.

The crews of the fast boats were engaged in hauling in and coiling away their lines, which on the death of the whale are always cut at the splice of the foregore. It is usually the duty of the crew of the first fast boat to prepare the whale for coming alongside. The preparations consist in cutting a hole through each fin, for the purpose of receiving the fin-tow, and lashing them together across the belly of the fish. This is done in order that they may offer no obstruction in the water whilst the fish is being towed alongside. The tail is then roused up to the bows of the boat, and in this way the fish is brought to the port side† of the ship, and there secured in the following manner. The fish is always brought alongside with its tail forward abreast of the fore-chains; it is then secured by means of a tackle from the fore rigging, which is hooked to a strop round the small end of the tail (where it is united to the back of the fish,) and by a stout rope, which is called the 'rump rope.' A similar purchase is hooked from the main rigging to a strop rove through a hole cut in the extremity of the under jaw, which is called the 'nose tackle.' The right fin of the fish (which is next the ship's side, the whale being on its back) is dragged taut up and secured by a chain or rope to the upper deck, the bulwarks of the vessel on the port side being unshipped. Between the fore-mast and main-mast is a stout wire rope, called the 'blubber guy,' having four large single blocks strapped to it, through which are rove the fore and main spek tackles (five inch rope.) The former is usually worked by the steam winch, and the latter by a hand winch, near the main-mast. These tackles are used for hoisting on board the large layers of blubber, some between one and two tons in weight, as they are cut off.

From the main-mast head is a heavy purchase called the 'kent' or 'cant' tackle, which is used to turn the fish over as it is being flinched. It consists of a treble and a double block, having a seven inch fall. Everything being in readiness, the crew are turned up, and commence the operation of flinching. The captain, from the port main rigging, superintends the whole process; the mate in the gangway acting under his orders. The remaining seven harpooners, under the guidance of the specksioneer, are on the whale, and with their blubber spades and knives separate the blubber from the carcase in long strips, which are hoisted in, as before mentioned, by the fore and main spek tackles. Previous to this, however, a strip of blubber, from two to three feet in width, is cut from the neck just abaft the inside fin. This is called the 'cant.' A large hole is then cut in this band of blubber, through which is passed the strap of the cant purchase, and secured there by a wooden toggle or fid being passed through. By means of this purchase, brought to the windlass, the fish is turned over as required. Each harpooner has iron spikes, called 'spurs,' strapped on to his boots, to avoid the possibility of slipping off of the fish.

The belly is the first part of a whale that is operated upon. After the blubber from this part has been completely taken off and the right fin removed, the fish is canted on its side by means of the large tackle, and the blubber from the opposite side is similarly stripped. The whalebone is then detached, special bone gear being used for this purpose, and the lips hoisted in, and so on until all that is valuable has been cut off and taken on board. The tail is then separated from the carcase, or 'kreng,' as it is called, which latter being released, disappears with a plunge, the noise of which is drowned only by the cheers of the men, discoloring the water with a sanguine hue for some distance. * * *

The whalebone, on being received on deck, is split up into portions, each containing from nine to sixteen blades, by means of large iron wedges, and these are again divided into pieces of three or four blades, when what is called the gum, which connects them together, is removed. There are between three and four hundred of these blades in each side of the head.

Our men were remarkably quick in flinching this, our first whale, the 'kreng' sinking, amidst the frantic cheers of all hands, exactly two hours after the operation had commenced. * * Our prize to day was not what is considered a large one, although regarded as a fair average sized fish. It will probably yield about thirteen tons of oil; its bone was nine feet six inches long; altogether about the the value of £800; its length was between forty and fifty feet."

* Speksioneer is the officer under whose directions the whale is cut.

† Port side—in nautical language means the left side.

For "The Friend."

John Griffith.

(Continued from page 147.)

The Saviour's one, saving, all-powerful baptism of the Holy Ghost, which, when submitted to, thoroughly cleanses the floor of the heart, must of necessity bring under condemnation all in us that is contrary to His holy will and law; and as with the "spirit of judgment and of burning" to consume and remove all which will not stand when He appeareth, whose coming is represented to be as "a refiner's fire, and like fuller's soap." The old man with his deeds, being corrupt, cannot keep the heart when the new man, which after God is created in righteousness and true holiness, is, through the power of an endless life, put on; any more than two dwellings can occupy the same place at the same time. Thus, in the testimony of Christ, "A strong man armed keepeth his palace," until "a stronger than he shall come upon him and overcome him;" and, as is also written of the house of David, "it waxed stronger and stronger, and the house of Saul waxed weaker and weaker."

The weight of pain and of suffering now at times experienced by J. Griffith, represent the pangs of the new birth, or the putting off, through grace, the old man with his deeds of darkness, and the putting on of the new man, being born again of the incorruptible seed and word of God, without which, as declared the Saviour to Nicodemus, "No man can see the kingdom of God." While those struggles are sometimes sharp and hard, as shown in the characters of Christian and Faithful in Bunyan's Pilgrim's Progress; and also in the case of the Children of Israel in their journeyings toward Canaan; yet it is well to remember that none are tried beyond the ability given them to bear or withstand; for, as declared in Holy Scripture, "Thou, Lord, hast not forsaken them that fear thee." But should it be the lot of any of His to experience desertions—the drought to consume by day, and the frost by night, so that sleep shall depart from their eyes, as was the case with Jacob, who nevertheless was watched over by the covenant-keeping, tender Shepherd of Israel; or should any seem to be cast into "the burning fiery furnace," as was the case with three servants formerly, be it not forgotten that the Son of God joined himself, as "the fourth" to them, and yielded that protection and holy confidence which all the powers of earth and hell confederate could not deprive them of. Again it is written, for our encouragement and our hope, of the two disciples going to Emmaus,—cast down and sorrowful because of the betrayal and crucifixion of their Lord,—that "Jesus himself drew near, and went with them;" causing their hearts to burn within them, while He talked with them by the way, and while He—the only true opener of the understanding—opened to them the Scriptures. So that whatever the trial or affliction meted or permitted, if the Physician of souls, and Healer of spiritual wounds and bruises only condescends to be with us, distilling of the dew of His grace, and infusing of His Spirit, who or what can make trouble, or much unsettle the calmness and rest of the soul? or, in other words, "If the Lord be for us, who can be against us?"

The dispensation of condemnation, and the imposed chastenings and restraints of self-denial and the cross, which was now to be the experience of J. Griffith, was not, in his measure, unlike that of the apostle Paul when he said: "We are troubled on every side, yet not distressed; we are perplexed, but not in despair; persecuted, but not forsaken; cast down, but not destroyed; always bearing about in the body the dying of the Lord Jesus, that the life also of Jesus might be made manifest in our body." If the Truth, ever unchangeable, be our teacher, its discipline and instruction, with the corresponding fruits, must have strong points of resemblance in all who are taught thereby. Blessed are they who, in and through and over all, "love much;" a love induced by great humbleness of mind and heart, from the lively sense that as much has been forgiven, therefore much will be required. The Apostle could say, "I count all things but loss for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus my Lord;" and again, "I count not my life dear unto myself, that I may finish my course with joy," &c. Truly happy are those, who will not withhold things as near as the right hand or the right eye, when called for by Him, who gave His precious life for us; remembering that the dearer or most costly the sacrifice offered to the Lord, the sweeter the incense upon His altar; as was the case when Mary anointed the feet of Jesus—"the house was filled with the odor of the ointment;" and in that of Abraham called to sacrifice his beloved and only son;—this last proving, too, how little satisfies when all is resigned.

The journal resumed: "Under this dispensation I was for a time exceedingly distressed, in a sense of the great alteration I found in the state of my mind; attributing it to some cause given by me, that I was thus, as I thought, forsaken. All the former tenderness was gone, and I was as the parched ground. My agonies were so great, that when it was day I wished for night; and when it was night I wished for day. In meetings for worship, where I had enjoyed most satisfaction, I was now under the greatest weight of pain and distress, even to that degree, at times, that I could scarcely forbear crying aloud for mere agony. When meeting was over, I would sometimes walk a considerable way into the woods, that unheard by any mortal, I might in mournful accents, give vent to my greatly distressed soul.* In this doleful state of mind, the grand adversary was permitted to pour forth floods of temptations. I was almost constantly beset with evil thoughts, which exceedingly grieved me; for though I was in such a dark distressed condition, my mind was, by this time, too much enlightened to allow of, or join with, wicked and corrupt thoughts: yet I often judged myself, and I believe at times not without cause, being apprehensive, I was not earnest enough in resisting those evil thoughts and temptations. But oh! I was exceeding weak in those days; and I am persuaded the Lord, in gracious condescension, looked mercifully at the sincerity of my intention, not marking all my failings, or I could not have stood before him with any degree of acceptance. Very great were my temptations, and deep my distress of mind for about a year; in which time I was but as a little child in understanding the way and work of God upon me, for my redemption. Yet, he who will not break the bruised reed, nor quench the smoking flax, until he sends forth judgment unto victory, by his invisible power, bore up my head above the raging waves of temptation, so that the enemy found he could not overwhelm me therewith: the Lord teaching my hands to war, and my fingers to fight under his banner, through whose blessing and assistance, I found some degree of victory over the beast, viz., that part which hath its life in fleshly gratifications. Then began the false prophet to work with signs and lying wonders, in order to deceive my weak and unskilful understanding; as it is written, 'Satan is transformed into an angel of light;' so I found him at least in appearance. Afterward I clearly saw, that Satan in his religious approaches, was carefully to be guarded against; as nothing in religion can be acceptable to God, but the genuine product of his unerring Spirit, distinctly heard and understood by the ear of the soul, and the renewed understanding. 'My sheep,' said Christ, 'hear my voice;' which I now began to experience fulfilled; blessed be the Lord forever! I had many precious openings into the Divine mysteries about this time; and when I read the Holy Scriptures, they were opened to my understanding, far beyond whatever they had been before, so that I had very great comfort; my hope being revived, and my faith strengthened, by those things that were written aforetime. I am well assured, by certain experience, that the mysteries couched in those holy writings, cannot be profitably understood, but by the same Spirit which inspired the penmen of them: therefore it is vain presumption for fallen and unregenerate man, by his carthl wisdom and human learning, to attempt th unfolding of heavenly mysteries. The lip Truth hath signified, they are hid from th wise and prudent of this world, and reveale unto the humble, dependent babes and such lings; those who sensibly experience thei suffieieney for every good word and work, t proceed immediately from God alone; an that Christ 'is made unto them, wisdom an righteousness, sanetification and redemption. The want of this inward living sense, hath been the cause of, and hath opened the way for, that great apostasy, darkness, and error which have overspread Christendom, so called There is no way for its recovery, but by humbly submitting to Christ inwardly revealed, and learning the nature of true religion of him, the great Author thereof: for I am well assured, that forward, active and inventing self must be denied, abased, and laid in the dust forever, and the Lord alone exalted in our hearts, before we can come up in the several duties of religion, with Divine approbation. This I saw, in the Divine light which began to shine out of my darkness, and separated me therefrom, was the greater light which was to rule the day of God's salvation, and that all the saved of the Lord must carefully walk in this light, wherein there is no occasion of stumbling. I also saw, that when it pleased the Lord in wisdom, for a trial of my faith and patience, to withdraw this holy light, and there was a sitting in darkness, and as in the region of the shadow of death for a time, so that I had no distinct knowledge therefrom what to do; that it was my indispensable duty to stand still, and wait for my sure and unerring Guide; if at those times, self would arise and be uneasy, it must be brought to the cross, there to be slain. By such experience, I found I was nothing, and that God was all things necessary for soul and body; that if I was brought into a state of perfect reconciliation with him, I must know all things made new."

(To be continued.)

A Rival to the Mammoth Cave.—It is said that the cave of Cacahuamilpa is the largest cave in the world. Several persons, who have visited the Mammoth Cave of Kentucky and that of Cacahuamilpa in Mexico, pronounce the latter the larger. A volcanic mountain with an extinct crater covers this cave. It is not described in guide books or books of travel. It has, in fact, never been adequately described. Porter C. Bliss has twice examined and explored it, the last time in February of the present year. Six hundred persons constituted the last exploring party. They were provided with bengal lights and scientific appliances. After reaching the level, at perhaps fifty feet depth, they proceeded three and three-quarter miles into the interior. The roof was so high—a succession of halls—that rockets often exploded before striking it. Labyrinthine passages leave the main hall in every direction. Stalagmites and stalacites are abundant. Below this cave, at a great depth, are two other immense caves, from each of which issues a branch of a great river, uniting here. These two rivers enter five miles distant at the other side of the mountain, flow parallel, and issue at last together. Vast quantities of bats are the most numerous inhabitants of these caverns.—Late Paper.

* Should any of the readers of this journal feel apprehensions with regard to what they may term the too discouraging, if not gloomy features of J. G.'s memoranda; let such remember, that perhaps the greater danger would lie in withholding portions that disclose the more severe discipline of the cross of Christ—the refining baptisms and self-humbling draughts of the Saviour's cup—lest we hold out false colors and deceive enquiring pilgrims, by causing them to suppose the way more easy than in truth it is; which may lead either to avoid its roughness—the self-denial and the cross—or to induce an ignominious looking back, like Lot's wife at Sodom; or a lusting after the flesh-pots of Egypt, as did the Children of Israel, saying, our "souls loathe this light bread," though the manna especially provided for them by miraculous Power. The way cannot be other than hard to the unmortified will of the unrenewed heart, which can see but little else at all than foolishness in the requisitions of the gospel of Jesus. But He, who is the way, has promised to make his yoke easy, and his burden light to those who look to Him as their sufficiency, their all in all. By withholding such parts, are we not in danger of promoting a superficial race of professors, who would give little heed to the injunction of the Apostle to Timothy: "Learn to endure hardness as a good soldier of Christ Jesus?" It is recorded that while Jesus loved the young man who came to him enquiring, "Good Master, what good thing shall I do that I may inherit eternal life," He made no abatement in His requisitions, but said, "Sell all that thou hast," "and come, take up the cross and follow me."

The sequel will show what rich results in spiritual growth and knowledge was J. G.'s experience — no otherwise to be obtained than by some such mortifying baptisms and holy warfare as here represented.

For "The Friend."

Is there no Religion in Dress?

Dress is not clothing merely, but it is clothing which a man wears with certain, definite motives. And if one of the motives with man or woman be, to show forth out of a pure heart a Christian modesty and moderation in dress, then there is so to speak, religion in the action. There is a testimony borne, the root of which is in the very truth itself.

In the discussion of this subject, I have often thought the assertion "There is no religion in dress," was a thing so weak and irrelevant, as scarcely to be worthy of notice. Indeed I would almost say of it, "Answer not a fool according to his folly, lest thou also be like unto him."

If we are not considering the conduct, the actions of men and women with respect to attire, the nature of which conduct is manifest by their dress, then we have no question to consider at all. But if we are speaking of human conduct, whether in dress or any other thing, why is there no religion in it? Is it not written, 'Whether ye eat or drink, or whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God."

If the countenance of a man bewrayeth him, that he has been with One who of olden time joined two of the disciples as they walked to Emmaus, causing their hearts to burn within them, why then should not the dress, the costume of the true disciple, bear witness that he is a Nazarite indeed. Could we reasonably look to the follower of a meek and lowly Saviour, for less than this testimony to the denial of self and of the world, manifested out of the abundance of the heart?

Samuel Scott was a minister of the Gospel, in the last century, of whom it is said, that he was a man fearing God and hating covetousness, deep in divine things, of a humble mind and benevolent disposition, extensive in Christian charity, and unfeigned love to the brethren. He has left on the subject of dress and address, the following remarkable, prophetic testimony, penned in the waning of his days, when his anointed vision held, as it were, two worlds in view.

"1788, 10th mo. 11th.—It is in my heart to leave behind me a testimony to the truth. In my youth, when dead in trespasses and sins, and walking according to the course of this world, although in my infancy, educated in an esteem of those precious testimonies borne by George Fox and his fellow laborers to plainness of dress and address, I contemned them in my heart, and departed from them in practice. When I was awakened to a sense of my lost and miserable estate without a Saviour, I embraced them with all acceptation in their strictest forms, and have not since deviated from them, either in sentiment or practice, not for an hour; they are of God; and will be established in the earth, when "the crown of pride" shall be cast down, and the glory of all flesh abased.

"Nevertheless, let none, who by the influence of education or any other means, invariably adhere to them, glory in, or value themselves upon a bare exterior conformity to these truths; while the inner man of their heart is full of pride, self-preference, and ravening after the unrighteous mammon."

I conclude with some extracts from the excellent advices in the Book of our Discipline. In transcribing these, I would invite the reader to observe that the obligation to support this testimony to plainness of dress is not confined merely to the particular, individual conviction of religious duty, as some of modern times would teach us, but that the discipline lays it upon "all Friends" as an obligation, going hand in hand, and simply consistent with, fellowship in a religious body, professing to be a self-denying and cross-bearing people.

"Advised that all Friends, both old and young, keep out of the world's corrupt language, manners, vain and needless things and fashions in apparel, buildings and furniture of houses; some of which are immodest, indecent and unbecoming.

"We tenderly exhort all seriously to consider the plainness and simplicity which the Gospel enjoins, and to manifest an adherence to this testimony, in their speech, apparel, furniture, business, salutations and conversation, into which our forefathers were led by the Spirit of Christ, and in conformity with whose precepts and example, they patiently suffered long imprisonments, and great persecutions; being convinced that it was their duty thus to bear a testimony against the vain, corrupt spirit of the world."

B.

For "The Friend."

The following letter of John Barclay was written about a month before the close of his valuable life. While the query is often prompted, "The fathers, where are they?" would that their wisdom, their counsel, and experience—the accumulated gatherings of years of obedience to the Lord, of travail and deep Christian solicitude for the church's welfare—might have their due and proper effect upon us, and prove like to "the words of the wise," "as goads, and as nails fastened by the Master of assemblies," leavening the heart and the act into conformity with their Christian teaching.

"To Peter Bedford,

Stoke Newington, 4th mo. 10th, 1838.

My dear Friend,—I am on the eve of leaving home for Brighton, if able; for I am very poorly, 'feeble and sore broken' outwardly; though I trust alive in my spirit as ever, and resigned to all that may be in store for me. The enclosed packet came to my hand; so I take this opportuity of conveying my near love to thee, in that which changeth not—the everlasting Truth.

"Though unable to mingle with my Friends in person, when they come together for the sake of this blessed cause, to endeavor to strengthen one another's hands in God, and to build up one another in that holy faith once and still delivered to the saints,—my poor mind is as deeply, as strongly concerned as ever, that every part and parcel thereof, with all its genuine accompaniments and fruits in practice, may be maintained inviolate; and that nothing may be forborne, or let fall, or slighted through our degeneracy, and dimsightedness of that which our worthy ancients upheld through suffering. What has our refinement, religious or civil, done for us? and what has an approach or a condescending affinity thereto done for us?—weakness has inevitably followed, and even the strongest and the wisest have been utterly laid waste. Some are not sufficiently warned and humbled by these things; and if they are, they should openly acknowledge their error, and forsake the very appearance of this track.

"I am cheerfully confident, that if those to whom we somewhat look, as watchers, as seers, as standard bearers, as counsellors, are removed (and they are removing,) to their rest,—or, if any of these that remain, should not keep their habitations firm and undeviating, but turn aside in any respect from the ancient testimony,—that He who raised up such a people as we were at the first, will never cease to raise up others, and put some forth into the foreground—into the very seats of the unfaithful. I have seen it wonderfully in my short day,—I have read it of those that have gone before: and therefore, let none ever throw away their shield, and weakly compromise the trust devolving on them.

"Farewell, my beloved friend; may the Lord preserve us purely to his praise.

With love from thy affectionate friend,

J. B."

Seth Green, while exhibiting a tank of fish in public recently, made a few remarks on the nature and habits of these animals, and referring to the mooted question, "Do Fish Hear?" answered emphatically in the negative. To demonstrate his opinion he asked the band to arrange themselves in close proximity to the tanks and blow their loudest blast. This they did; but not one of the multitude of fishes stirred a fin. S. Green then said that although fish were thus unsusceptible to sound, they were keen of vision and sensitive to the slightest jar. To illustrate the latter point, he tapped on the bottom of one of the trout tanks with just enough force to cause a slight vibration in the water, when every inmate of the tank darted off like a flash.—Late Paper.

THE FRIEND.

FIRST MONTH 2, 1875.

The close of the year seems a peculiarly appropriate time for that thorough examination of the condition of their affairs, which prudent business men feel to be important to their success in financial matters. Such an examination is recommended in the advices which our excellent Discipline enjoins to be annually read in our meetings. "That Friends carefully inspect the state of their affairs once in the year; and make their wills and settle their outward estates whilst in health."

In making such an inspection, there is one point, on which those who have not received a good mercantile training are liable to err. In reviewing their debts, they may disregard those liabilities they have assumed for the benefit of others, and which they expect others to pay; but for which they are responsible if there should be any default. If a man possesses property, which, if sold, would yield him $10,000, and at the same time has endorsed notes, or in other ways become security for others to the same amount, he may really have no estate of his own left, while he still thinks he is in comfortable circumstances. For want of taking a proper view of this subject, and exercising a true Christian prudence, there have been sad instances of persons becoming involved in great trouble and finally being ruined financially, even when they were past middle age, and had saved enough to support them in the decline of life, by honest industry and economy in their earlier years. It is a sorrowful sight to see such Friends, with failing energies and strength, again thrown into the battle of life, to struggle for the means of subsistence, when their thoughts should be more exclusively directed to a preparation for the final change which is approaching them, and to the filling up of their measure of religious service in the Church and the world.

There is perhaps no class of people more liable to be entangled in this snare than that portion of our farming community, whose business operations have been mainly confined to raising and selling the products of their land. It has often happened with such, that sons, or other relatives of a younger generation, have arisen, who have been ambitious to enter on a wider sphere of action, and have embarked in more extensive business. In the fluctuations which attend the mercantile and manufacturing interests of our country, such adventurers are often greatly in need of money, and resort to the credit of their parents to obtain funds which would not be given to themselves. The parent is naturally interested in the welfare of his child, and places great confidence in his ability; and being, through want of knowledge and training, himself unable to form an independent judgment as to the probable success of the business enterprises, he is easily induced to endorse the notes of his son, or in some other way to guarantee the payment of his debts. In many cases the issue of such transactions has been ruinous to all concerned.

There are often cases in which individuals need and ought to receive help one from another—but we believe the obligation is equally imperative, to observe that prudent caution, which the Proverb associates with "Wisdom." Perhaps there is no better general rule to adopt, than to consider, before entering into such obligations as have been referred to, whether, if we are called upon to pay the whole amount ourselves, we can do so without injury to others, and without greater injury to ourselves than we are willing to submit to. This care is especially needful for those who are in the station of ministers, elders, or overseers, or who in any way occupy prominent positions in the Church; because on all such a double responsibility rests to see that the Truth be not evil spoken of through their means.

The depressed condition of general business through which we have been passing, has no doubt brought with it much anxious thoughtfulness to many of our readers. Those who were in no want themselves have had their sympathies enlisted for others. May it have the effect of turning our thoughts more earnestly towards the Heavenly City where the "weary are at rest," and of inducing us more submissively and steadily to observe the guidance of the Spirit of Christ in our hearts, which is profitable to direct in outward as well as in inward concerns. And may all be willing to so regulate their own habits and households, as to live within the bounds of their income, and yet reserve a sufficient portion for the help of the needy.

SUMMARY OF EVENTS.

Foreign.—According to the London Times, the total revenue of the Australian colonies, for the year ending 6th mo. 30th last, was £9,754,671, of which £4,402,722 was raised by taxation. The balance was obtained from railways and telegraphs belonging to the colonies, land sales, &c. At the close of 1873 these colonies, including New Zealand, had a population of 2,136,129, having increased from 1,266,432 in 1861.

It is a singular fact that in England the number of persons belonging to each of the three learned professions, is nearly the same. Thus the census returns show 35,995 physicians, 35,483 clergymen, and 34,970 lawyers.

The emigrant ship Cospatrick, from London for Auckland, New Zealand, was burned at sea 11th mo. 17th, in lat. 37° South, long. 12° West. It is estimated that 465 lives were lost by the disaster; of all on board only three are known to survive.

An express train on a branch of the Great Western Railway, was thrown from the track, near Woodstock, on the 24th ult., and precipitated down an embankment. Thirty of the passengers were killed and fifty wounded, some of them fatally.

An explosion occurred the 24th ult. in a coal mine in North Staffordshire, by which twenty miners were killed.

The weather in England has been unusually cold.

London, 12th mo. 28th.—U. S. five per cents, 10-40, 104⅜. Consols, 91¾.

Liverpool.—Uplands cotton, 7¼ a 7⅜*d.*; Orleans, 7⅝*d.* Breadstuffs quiet.

Granite and Macadam pavements are to be abolished in the streets of London, the Macadam pavement is too dusty, and the granite too slippery.

The French Academy of Sciences, it is announced, is about to consider the propriety of adopting the meridian of Greenwich, which is already recognized by the other nations of the Continent, in lieu of that of Paris. The meridian would touch the French soil at Trouville, and in the event of the government sanctioning the change, a column would be erected on the spot.

The French National Assembly adjourned from the 24th ult. to the 5th of First month.

Prince Bismarck has moved in the German Federal Council that an extradition treaty be concluded with the United States, which should replace all similar treaties now existing between that country and the various German governments.

A commission of ten persons of distinction have been appointed by the German Imperial Government to attend the Centennial Exhibition, at Philadelphia, in 1876.

The civil war in Spain continues with no decisive results. Alfonso, Prince of the Asturias, replying to the address of certain Spanish grandees, says that a monarchy alone can terminate the disorders and uncertainty which prevail in Spain. A majority of the people of Spain are agreed, and have declared their opinion that he only is the rightful representative of the Spanish monarchy.

A Madrid dispatch of the 24th, says: The Spanish Commissioners to the Philadelphia Centennial Exhibition met to-day. Senor Castelar made an eloquent address. He sketched the rise and progress of the United States, and the ideas of liberty and labor which prevailed there.

A special from St. Petersburg to the Times says, the difficulties with the Turcoman tribes have been settled. The Attrok expedition has returned without fighting. The Turcomans voluntarily released thirty prisoners.

Advices from Venezuela to the 8th ult., report that a desperate battle has been fought in the province of Barquisimento between a force of government troops under General Marquez and a body of insurgents under General Colina. Between seven and eight hundred men were killed and wounded on both sides. Both parties claim a victory.

The sugar crop of Cuba the present year is estimated at 800,000 tons.

A Havana dispatch says: Captain-General Concha has issued orders to the officers commanding Spanish troops to act leniently toward captured or surrendered insurgents, but to execute all incendiaries and filibusters who may be taken prisoners.

The whole number of insurgents under arms is said not to exceed 6,000 men. These are confined chiefly to the mountain ranges in the eastern end of the island, from which they make occasional raids upon the adjacent country.

United States.—There were 565 interments in New York last week, and 278 in Philadelphia.

The bill providing for a final resumption of specie payments in four years from the present time, passed the U. S. Senate by more than a two-thirds vote. The House of Representatives has ordered that the bill be made the special order for the 8th of First month. Both Houses adjourned from 12th mo. 23d to 1st mo. 5th, 1875.

During the nine months ending 10th mo. last, the total excess of exports over imports was $17,715,870, being the reverse of the corresponding period of t preceding year, when the exports were $37,271,881 l in value than the imports.

A Hong Kong dispatch of the 24th ult. says: Tw American war vessels have arrived here with addition survivors of the burned steamship Japan.

This years crop of hay, in Maine, is reported to l 1,806,300 tons, worth $24,000,000; and of potatoes 3 027,071 bushels, both of these products are largely e ported.

Real estate in New York city is reported to hav fallen in price from twenty to thirty per cent. from th rates current two years ago. This has resulted chiefl from the financial and commercial revulsion which ha affected the business of the city.

The Markets, &c.—The following were the quotation on the 28th ult. New York.—American gold 111¾ U. S. sixes, 1881, registered, 118¼; do. coupons, 122 do. 1868, 118⅛; coupons, 121⅞; do. five per cents 113½. Superfine flour, $4.20 a $4.55; State extra, $4.9 a $5.20; finer brands, $5.50 a $10.50. No. 2 Chicag spring wheat, $1.11; No. 3 do. $1.09 a $1.10; re western, $1.26 a $1.27; white Indiana, $1.33; whit Michigan, $1.37. State barley, $1.30; Canada, $1.40 Oats, 66 a 71 cts. Rye, 92 a 93 cts. Western mixe corn, 83 a 85 cts.; yellow, 85 a 87; old mixed, 95 cts Philadelphia—Uplands and New Orleans cotton, 14½ 15 cts. Superfine flour, $4 a $4.25; extras, $4.50 a $5 finer brands, $5.50 a $7.50. Red wheat, $1.20 a $1.22 amber, $1.23 a $1.25; white $1.37 a $1.40. Rye, $1.00 New corn, 80 a 83 cts. Oats, 63 a 65 cts. Lard, 13 a 13¾ cts. Sales of about 2,300 beef cattle at 4 a 8¼ cts per lb. gross, the latter for choice. Most of the sale were between 6 a 7½ cts. Sheep, 5 a 8 cts. per lb. gross Hogs, $9.75 a $10.25 per 100 lbs. net for corn fed Receipts 5,000 head. Baltimore.—Flour, $4 a $8.25 Yellow corn, 80 a 83 cts. Oats, 64 a 65 cts. Chicago —No. 1 spring wheat, 93 cts.; No. 2 do., 90 cts.; No. 3 do., 84 cts. New corn, 65½ cts. Oats, 53 a 54 cts. Lard, $13.35 per 100 lbs. Cincinnati.—Red wheat, $1.08 a $1.10. Corn, 68 a 78 cts. Oats, 59 a 62 cts. St. Louis.—No. 2 winter red wheat, $1.05; No. 2 spring, 87 cts. New corn, 64 a 66 cts. Oats, 55½ a 57½ cts. Rye, $1.00.

WESTTOWN BOARDING SCHOOL.

A Stated Meeting of the Committee having charge of the Boarding School at Westtown, will be held in Philadelphia, on Sixth-day, First month 8th, 1875, at 1 P. M.

The Committees on Instruction and Admissions meet the same day at 10 A. M.

Samuel Morris,
Philada., 12th mo. 26th, 1874. Clerk.

ERRATUM.

In the communication respecting "Suffering Friends in Kansas," published in last week's issue of "The Friend," the name of the Treasurer of the Relief Fund should be Washington Hadley, and not William Hadley, as printed.

WANTED.

A Governess for Westtown Boarding School, to enter on her duties at the opening of the next Session.

Apply to
Elizabeth C. Scattergood, West Chester, Pa.
Hannah Richardson, Wilmington, Del.
Hannah Evans, No. 322 Union St., Philada.
Lydia L. Walton, Moorestown, N. J.

NOTICE.

Wanted immediately, a competent Seamstress for the "Shelter for Colored Orphans." Apply to Hannah B. Newbold, No. 643 Franklin St.
Sarah G. Yarnall, No. 922 Mt. Vernon St.

MUSINGS AND MEMORIES

Published by the Tract Association of Friends, is now for sale at their Depository, No. 304 Arch St., Philada. Price, in cloth, $1.00 per copy or $9.00 per dozen.

FRIENDS' ASYLUM FOR THE INSANE.

Near Frankford, (Twenty-third Ward,) Philadelphia.

Physician and Superintendent—Joshua H. Worthington, M. D.

Applications for the Admission of Patients may be made to the Superintendent, or to any of the Board of Managers.

WILLIAM H. PILE, PRINTER,
No. 422 Walnut Street.

THE FRIEND.

A RELIGIOUS AND LITERARY JOURNAL.

VOL. XLVIII. SEVENTH-DAY, FIRST MONTH 9, 1875. NO. 21.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY.

Price Two Dollars per annum, if paid in advance. Two dollars and fifty cents, if not paid in advance.

Subscriptions and Payments received by

JOHN S. STOKES,

AT NO. 116 NORTH FOURTH STREET, UP STAIRS.

PHILADELPHIA.

Postage, when paid quarterly in advance, five cents.

For "The Friend."

Wayside Notes.

(Continued from page 142.)

Continuing the narrative respecting the progress of Christian liberty in New England: in the latter part of 1659, Cassandra Southick, her husband Lawrance, and their son Josiah, are again spoken of as belonging to that increasing number of dissatisfied members of the ruling church, who, on account of the obvious injustice done to Friends, were not prepared to yield a willing compliance, and continued to absent themselves from the attendence and support of the established public worship, for which they had endured much hardness, and many reproaches. Cassandra appears to have been a faithful head in her household, (as well as her husband) and a devout mother in promoting the welfare of the Church of Christ. Whittier has memorialized her sufferings in a number of touching verses, by which her character for courage and exalted faith, will be long remembered by all the lovers of genuine poetry. They had two other children, Daniel and Provided, who so far from being deterred by the wrongs to which the parents and brother were exposed, were encouraged to follow their upright example, for which they were heavily fined, though it was well understood they possessed no means, the parents' property, and all the family estate having been seized and wasted by those who had been pursuing them with imprisonment and fines. To obtain the money they were taken into custody, and treated under the operation of a law then existing, as the absolute property of the Province, and ordered to be sold. The order takes the form of an official paper, and is signed by Edward Rawson, Sec.

The subject of this cruel action was fully answered in a printed exposure by G. Bishop, who proved from Scripture its inconsistency and wickedness, Amos 2d chapter 6th verse, where the judgments of God are denounced against those who sold the righteous for silver and the poor for merchandise; and from Levit. 25th chapter 42d verse, where the practice of making bondmen of the children of Israel is expressly forbidden, except in a single case not herein applicable. The law referred to, required that such should be sold to any of the English people residing at Barbadoes or Virginia, and one of the persons authorized to execute the order for their sale, sought out a vessel for their passage to the islands named, but no ship master could be found disposed to carry them, and one to whom application was made, to put from him the request, pretended they would "spoil all the ship's company." To which the officer replied, "No, you need not fear that, as they are poor harmless creatures, and will not harm any one." "Will they not?" returned the captain, "and will you offer to make slaves of such?"

Josiah Southick, a few years later, in 1662, underwent from the authorities of Boston, Roxbury and Dedham, the most outrageous wrong; was tied, driven and whipped, at the cart's tail, when with outstretched arms, he said to those who sentenced him, "Here is my body; if you want a further testimony of the Truth I profess, take it, and do what you will: I freely give my life into your hands." The whip used for these barbarous executions was not of "whip-cord," as used in England, but of dried entrails, and every string with three knots near the end. This must indeed have caused violent torture, when wielded by an excited, ignorant, and able-bodied executioner, who, it is stated, often used both hands in the bloody work. But all this was not enough to turn Josiah from the path of duty. As he was drawn through the streets of Boston, he sang aloud, under a sense of the presence of the Lord; uttering these words: "They that know God to be their strength, cannot fear what man can do."

So misguided in their religious zeal, were many of these New England professors, that the opinion had gained wide currency, that whatever was done, "nothing could be done amiss to the Quakers," or their abettors. It is said, upon the authority of Sewel, that thieves in prison were sometimes discharged, lest by contact with Friends in their cells, who were endeavoring to reform their wicked lives, they should become "Quakers" too.

The cause of Truth is always very precious, and it is often promoted by the faithfulness of the young. Patience Scott, a girl about 11 years of age, whose religious mother had been cruelly whipped, bore a fearless, outspoken testimony against it, which so enraged the authorities she was sent to prison; and the child being examined, spoke so well to the purpose, as to confound her enemies. For this simple, natural, humane expression of feeling for an outraged parent, the little girl would have been banished, but her tender years sheltered her from the application of the law.

The Dutch, in some of their American settlements, were now prompted to enter upon the work of persecution also, and without careful investigation, concluded Friends undoubtedly held pernicious opinions, because they were so sharply persecuted by their own countrymen. Robert Hodshone, a Friend, residing at Hamstead in the vicinity of New Amsterdam, now New York, was one upon whom was laid the burthen of intense suffering. Having had a meeting, at which a number of his friends from England were present, he was arrested; his papers and bible taken from him, and he chained until the next day. A cart was then procured, and Robert fastened to the hinder part, pinioned, and in this helpless situation drawn through the woods in the darkness of night, by which he was much torn and abused. Arriving in New York he was consigned to a filthy dungeon. Some days after a sentence was read to him, which being in another tongue he did not understand. He was informed, however, it required him to work two years at the wheelbarrow, or pay six hundred guilders. To this he attempted to make a defence, but was not permitted to speak, and sent back to his dark, unwholesome cell. Some days after he was brought out, and chained to a wheelbarrow, and commanded to work; to which he replied, he had not been accustomed to such severe labor, whereupon he was beaten with a heavy rope until from weakness he fell to the ground, having received, as the account states, about one hundred blows. In this condition, and suffering greatly from the bruises received, he was kept all day in the heat of the sun, without food; and at night returned to the dungeon. Thus he passed several days; chained to the wheelbarrow in the morning, to pass the day-light hours, while the time for rest was spent in the gloom and darkness of a filthy cell.

In his weak state of body, resulting from many bruises and scanty fare, he was brought before the governor, who showed no mercy, but insisted he must work, or the same chastisement would be continued. Robert now enquired what law he had broken? and called for his accusers, that he might know wherein his transgression consisted. To this he received no answer, but was chained as before. Some days elapsed, when he was taken into a private room, and stripped to the waist: then suspended by his hands, and a log of wood tied to his feet, so that he could not turn his body, or in any way shield his already lacerated and agonized person. In this situation he was cruelly whipped with rods by a strong negro. Then removed to his cell and no one permitted to communicate with him. Two days after the same barbarous work was repeated, until his life seemed in imminent danger. Finally, through the kind interference of the governor's sister, who was moved to compassion by his sufferings, he obtained an unconditional discharge.

Near the close of 1660, Wm. Leddra, who had been banished from the Province, returned under a call to religious duty. The fear of man and the fear of suffering, were alike taken away. The personal danger that awaited him was not to be considered in a matter involving his conscientious convictions. He was soon taken prisoner, "and being fastened to a log of wood, was kept night and day locked in chains, in an open prison, during a very cold winter."

The situation of Friends in England at this date appeared more hopeful. On the 8th of 5th month previous, Charles the 2nd was restored to the throne, under circumstances that opened up a brighter view for the friends of religious toleration. The government, after years of internal disturbance, had acquired something of its former stability. A state of things little better than a military despotism had existed, in which all parties were sufferers, if not the cause of religious freedom itself. The king therefore in his proclamation, was persuaded to offer his subjects a broader policy, and many were induced to think the re-establishment of peace and quiet was truly the harbinger of better days for such as were not in accord with the established church. This was indeed the promise of the king, and all classes had a right to expect that religious toleration would be freely granted. His intentions seem to have been mainly right, but lacking in firmness and stability, his pledges were often trampled upon by subordinates, or by the judiciary, whose rule of action was not so much governed by the good humor of their soverign, and his apparent willingness to exercise impartiality, as by their own bias and preferences for the established religious worship. For a time, however, persecution received a decided check in England. The action of the law-making power in the colonies had often been simply a usurpation of authority. Resolutely bent upon satisfying personal animosities, no barriers were permitted to stand in the way. In dealing with Friends, who in New England were regarded by many as unworthy the protection of government, it was no wonder laws were hastily made, unmade, or violated at pleasure; or that the authorities should transcend their privileges as conferred by charter. Had these wrongs been perpetrated in the face of a strong and wise administration of the home government, the colonies would probably have lost their standing as thus established; while on the other hand it may be said its inaction and lack of moral integrity, opened a door, and really gave encouragement, to many of these abuses. But now the Boston rulers were put under some restraint, and fearing lest their rashness might involve them in serious danger, they had issued an apology in explanation of their proceedings against Wm. Robinson, M. Stevenson and Mary Dyer, a short time previous to the execution of the latter, to satisfy the king and parliament of the justice of their action, not without some misgivings, however, as to the effect it would produce. It was put forth in the name of the Province, and signed by its Secretary, E. Rawson.

After Mary's execution another address appeared, issued by the general court of Boston, directed to king Charles, and signed by John Endicot, governor. Herein they set forth, "They had chosen the trials of seclusion in a remote wilderness, among the heathen, that they might enjoy a pure scripture worship, rather than the pleasures of England, and subjection to the imposition of a hierachy." Concerning Friends they stated, "They were open capital blasphemers, and seducers from the glorious Trinity, the blessed gospel; enemies to the government, and malignant promoters of doctrines directly tending to subvert both church and State." This proved a very lame defence. They stated far too much, falsifying the truth at every step in the argument. The king could not conceive them to be objects of sympathy on account of their separation and seclusion in America, these being voluntary. Nor was their claim to religious freedom sincere, when they denied the same right to others coming among them. And as to their statement respecting our doctrines and personal interest in the welfare of the State, this had little weight, as it contradicted all experience. Among intelligent minds, Friends were known in England to be law-abiding, and eminently peaceable; and their religious belief when faithfully supported, was known also to be in sympathy with just and wise legislation.

Their appeals for support, though not sustained, did not receive a decided check, which rather gave encouragement to the leaders of persecution in New England to renew their aggressive proceedings against Friends. Wm. Leddra, who continued a prisoner in Boston jail under sentence of death, was likely soon to close a useful life upon the gallows. Meanwhile Edw'd Burrough's pen was employed in preparing a full and clear vindication of the situation Friends bore to the Colonial authorities, that had great weight, and led the king's mind a few months later to take a determined stand in their defence, though not in time to rescue this faithful man from the grasp of his accusers. P. B.

Philada., 12th mo. 25th, 1874.

(To be concluded.)

For "The Friend."

The similarity of the religious views of those who are really taught in Christ's school, is often witnessed in a remarkable degree to exist even where the home training and outward influences are exceedingly dissimilar.

Juan de Valdéz, a Spanish nobleman of great piety, who lived in the 16th century, appears to have been divinely lead to the embracing of many truths so nearly identical with those which were afterwards more fully opened to the spiritual understanding of George Fox and his co-adjutors, that I have thought it was of sufficient interest to transcribe some of them for the readers of "The Friend." In Consideration LXIII, respecting the Scriptures, he says:—

"St. Peter in his second Epistle, chapter i. 19, judges that the man having no other light than that of the Holy Scriptures, is like a man who stands in a dark place, having no other light in it than that of a candle; and that the man who having obtained the spirit of God to guide him, is like a man who stands in a place where the rays of the sun enter, which make it bright and resplendent. Whereupon I consider seven things.

"First, that as the man who stands in the dark place is better off with a candle than without it, so the man who seeks to be pious, which is with regard to him a dark place, forasmuch as his reason and human wisdom rather prejudice him with reference to it than prove useful to him, is better off with Holy Scripture than without it.

"Second, that as the man in a dark place does not see the things that are in it as clearly and plainly with the candle as he would see them with the sun, just so the man who is intent on piety, neither understands nor does he know the things of God, nor God himself, so clearly and plainly by Holy Scripture a he would be able to see and know them b the Spirit of God.

"Third, that as the man who stands in dark place, with the light of the candle only is in danger of being left in the dark, shoul anything happen to extinguish the candle, s the man who, intent on piety, has no othe light than that of Holy Scripture, is in dange of being left without light, should any thin happen that would deprive him of Holy Scrip ture, or of the right apprehension of it.

"Fourth, that as to the man who stands in dark place, where there is the light of a can dle, it happens at times, that desiring it shoul give more light, he either snuffs it himself, o gets some one else to snuff it for him, and i comes to pass that it is put out in the snuffing and the man is left without light; just so it i with the man who is intent on piety, being only aided therein by that which he knows and understands of Holy Scripture; it comes to pass at times, that desiring to understand more and better, he either interprets it himself, or gets some one else to interpret it for him, and it comes to pass that in interpreting it, by converting Holy Scripture into human composition, the man remains in the dark, although he may persuade himself that he is not so.

"Fifth, that as it happens when the rays of the sun, by penetrating a dark place where the man was using only the light of a candle, enable the man to see there more clearly than before, all the things that are in that place: just so, when the Holy Spirit enters into the mind of a man intent on piety, and availing himself to that end of Holy Scripture, it comes to pass that the man understands and knows the things of God and God himself more clearly than he did previously.

"Sixth, that as the man who enjoys the light of the sun, and knows assuredly that it will never fail him, although he would not throw the candle away on account of the benefit received, but would, on the contrary, leave it, in order that it might assist others in the way in which it has assisted him;—just so the man who enjoys the light of the Holy Spirit, being assured that it can never fail him, though he does not throw the Holy Scriptures aside, still he does not employ them as he previously did.

Seventh, that as it is not essential in the sun, when it enters a place where there is a candle, that it should discover all that enters into the candle's composition, just so likewise neither is it of the essence of the Holy Spirit, when He enters the mind of a man who, intent on piety, avails himself of Holy Scripture, to show and discover all the secrets that are involved in it, although He shows and discovers that part of them which God desires be discovered to the man to whom the Holy Spirit is given."

Be Reverent.—Submit your minds to early impressions of reverence for sacred things. Let no wantonness of youthful spirits, no compliance with the intemperate mirth of others, ever betray you into profane sallies; besides the guilt which is thereby incurred, nothing gives a more odious appearance of petulance and presumption to youth than the affectation of treating religion with levity; instead of being an evidence of superior understanding, it discovers a pert and shallow mind, which, vain of the first smatterings of knowledge, presumes to make light of what the best of mankind revere.

For "The Friend."

Legal Opinions in the Ohio Case.

(Continued from page 154.)

I need hardly say that I suppose the women's meeting has nothing to do with the question. The women elect their own officers, and can give no vote and can take no part in the election of officers of the men's meeting.

In view of these facts, I am quite unable to hold that Binns was legally elected clerk of the meeting, and that those who organized under him are not separatists—provided the Ohio Yearly Meeting is to be regarded as an independent organization, and its decisions subject to no appeal to a superior jurisdiction. Indeed, the fact that such an appeal has been taken, and is prosecuted upon the ground that Hoyle has forfeited his right to the office by bad conduct, would seem to be an admission that but for that bad conduct his election would have been legal—that he was the choice of the Society, but was unfit for the position. The ground on which the appeal to other yearly meetings was taken, if sustained, would show Hoyle to have been a usurper of the office for nine years preceding the election, as well as since its date, and all the acts and proceedings of the Society during that time to be void. This is the ground on which it is claimed the other yearly meetings place the case. I have a copy of the proceedings of those yearly meetings, in which it will be seen that none of them place their judgment upon the ground that Binns was elected by the Society. What they assume to do, is to ostracize or excommunicate the Ohio Yearly Meeting itself, and to set up the Binns faction in its place. Take the proceedings of the Indiana Yearly Meeting as a specimen. Two reasons are given by that yearly meeting for its judgment in the premises: 1. "That the Ohio Yearly Meeting," not the Hoyle party, but the meeting itself, "has for several years past," by the influence of the Hoyle party, "refused and prevented the reading of regular epistles" from the New England Society. 2. "They" —that is, the Ohio Yearly Meeting—"have permitted to have a seat in the yearly meeting * * * persons who had been disowned in New England." They then say that the "Friends who appointed Jonathan Binns as clerk"—not the Society itself, but the individual friends who adhere to Binns—"after enduring these disorders for years," finally felt themselves impelled * * * "to appoint a clerk, and proceed with the regular business of the yearly meeting, without the unity of that party who caused the disorders complained of." That is to say, Binns was elected, not by the Society, but by his individual "friends," without the unity of a "large majority" of the members of the Society. This is a plain admission that Binns was not elected by the Society, and that the election of Hoyle stood on the same basis and had the same validity as any one of his elections for the nine years next preceding. The legality of all of which seem to be now admitted. In the case of Earle v. Wood, 8 Cush. 447, it appeared that Gould was chosen clerk by his party friends, precisely as Binns was chosen by his friends in the present case, with this difference, that a majority united on Gould, whereas only a minority united on Binns. And yet the court unanimously held in that case that Gould was not elected, and that he and his adherents were seceders, giving as a principal reason for so holding, that his nomination or election was not made by the Society, but, from his own showing, was made "by those who had been for some years laboring under much oppression," &c. That is precisely the case here. Binns' own entry shows that he was chosen by only a "part" of the meeting, and that "part" was a minority of the meeting.

Hoyle, therefore, having been duly continued as clerk of the Society, and those adhering to him being the regularly organized Society, it remains to inquire whether they have been ousted, or their election invalidated, and Binns and his adherents installed in their place by the authorized judgment of a superior tribunal.

I not only deny the existence of any such tribunal, but I deny that any tribunal has assumed to render such a judgment. When and where was any such judgment rendered, and what was the judgment? It was rendered, if at all, at as many times and places as there were yearly meetings acting on the subject, and no two of the judgments are the same. None of these yearly meetings assume to adjudge the election of Hoyle to be illegal or irregular, or to oust him from office, or install Binns. The only thing in which these several judgments concur is, that they will not hereafter "correspond" with Hoyle and his party, and that they will correspond with Binns and his party; and this is the utmost extent to which any of them go. Each meeting acted for itself, and upon its independent views of the case. There was no concert or community of action between them. The Yearly Meeting at Philadelphia, founded by the contemporaries of William Penn, refused to unite with them in this, and holds that it is not essential or advisable to keep up such correspondences with each other. Now it seems to me that here is no judgment, no order assuming to affect the legal status of the parties. It was simply the judgment of a majority of the yearly meetings, each speaking for itself, that they, respectively, would decline a correspondence, which the evidence shows to have been at all times voluntary and discretionary with each society. There was no joint session of the several societies, or delegates representing them; no jurisdiction was acquired over the persons of Hoyle or his associates, by process, notice, consent, or otherwise; each Society assumed to represent itself alone, and to be, as each was in fact, no more than the equal of the Society whose officers it assumed to condemn. The subject-matter of the adjudication was not the legality or regularity of the Ohio election, but the dispute between the Gurneyites and the Wilburites of New England, as to a matter of discipline. The real judgment rendered by the several societies was simply, that, in their opinion, Hoyle did wrong in refusing to exclude Gould, the New England Wilburite, from the meeting, and that for this reason they would refuse to correspond with him and his party, no matter whether he and his party represented and constituted the regular organization or not. This, I say, is no judgment affecting the status of Hoyle, or the organization under him, even if we concede the existence of power to render the proper judgment for that purpose.

But was there any such power?

In none of their utterances on the subject is there any claim of such power, and in some of them it is expressly disavowed. Take, as example, the utterance of the London Society. The following is its essential part:

"The desire consistently to carry out the principles of Christian order which have regulated our own course of action, and to counteract, as far as our example and influence may extend, the disorganizing tendencies that have so painfully manifested themselves, not only in Ohio, but also in several other of the American Yearly Meetings, has led us to accept the epistle signed by Jonathan Binns, under the conviction that the Friends whom he represents have been, and are, acting most in accordance with the course which this meeting adopted in 1846, and which it has ever since pursued. Yet, in so doing, we would not be understood as implying that the proceedings of that body (though we speak it with tenderness, and with sympathy for the peculiar difficulties of their position) have been, in all respects, such as we could approve, were it our place to pronounce an opinion thereon."

It also contains the following, which shows that they did not claim the right to overrule or interfere with an election regularly made by the Ohio Society:

"It is a principle with this Yearly Meeting that the several American Yearly Meetings with which it is in correspondence are independent bodies, whose deliberations and decisions in the exercise of the discipline toward their own members and subordinate meetings are to be regarded as final, and not to be interfered with."

But I deny that there is, in fact, any authority in the yearly meetings of the world, or in any number of them, either acting jointly or separately, to control the organization, discipline, or property of the Ohio Yearly Meeting, or of any one of its members. The book of discipline or constitution of the Ohio Yearly Meeting contains no word giving any such authority. It purports to be adopted for that Society alone, and is entitled, "Book of Discipline of the Society of the Ohio Yearly Meeting." Nor is there any book, document, record, or usage giving any such authority, or acknowledging the Society to be subordinate to any other. On the contrary, the book of discipline, and the evidence as to the usages of the several yearly meetings, show that the yearly meeting is the "highest tribunal in the church organization." This was expressly resolved by the general conference of yearly meetings held in 1849, as follows:

"Yearly, quarterly, monthly, and preparative meetings were set up and are still continued for the purpose of church government, subordinate and accountable one unto another —preparative to monthly, monthly to quarterly, and quarterly to the yearly meeting, the last being the highest tribunal in the church organization, from whose decisions there is no appeal.

"It can not be questioned that, if a yearly meeting should manifest unsoundness in Christian faith, if it should promulgate views inconsistent with the principles professed by Friends, or should not maintain our Christian testimonies, it may then become the duty of the other yearly meetings to extend to it brotherly entreaty or admonition for its restoration. But in the exercise of those functions which legitimately and exclusively belong to itself—as the forming or administering its own discipline—any interference by another yearly meeting, or attempt to control its action in these respects, would be an infraction of our established order, and fraught with consequences perilous to the whole brotherhood of yearly meetings, against which we feel solemnly bound to bear testimony."

This conference of 1849, like the conference of 1829–1832—the only other conference ever held by the yearly meetings, as I understand—was exceptional and provisional, devised and held for the occasion, for the special purpose of "healing divisions and promoting harmony." It was abnormal and merely provisional. There is no authority, constitutional or otherwise, for calling such conferences, or authorizing any person or persons to appoint times or places for their meeting; much less is there any provision for organizing any such body, or conferring upon it any power or authority over the several yearly meetings.

The witness, William Bates, I think, truly states the relation and organization of the different yearly meetings, when he says:

"They are of like churches, and hold a common faith, but they hold no relation of subordination to any other power. Among these religious bodies thus constituted, are what are called Congregationalists. Baptists, also, are organized on that principle; can not say as to others, but am under the impression that Disciples are organized in the same way, but in this I may be mistaken. These are accustomed—the Baptists and Congregationalists are accustomed—to hold conferences, associations, conventions, and the like, known by different names, which are composed of similar bodies of like denominations from the independent churches—in which associations, &c., advice is taken, and sometimes common enterprises entered upon, and Christian sympathies expressed, and correspondence opened with other denominations of Christians, recognized by them as being of sound or orthodox faith; but still the churches, as to all matters legislative and judicial, or in respect to all matters of property and the like, remain in absolute independence. * * There is no common constitution; each yearly meeting has its own constitution."

Jesse Cope says: "I know of no higher power than the yearly meetings in the Society of Friends, on all questions disciplinary, legislative, or judicial, or on questions relating to the control and disposition of property."

William Fisher says: "I know of no appeal from the decision and action of the yearly meetings on questions of discipline, property, &c. It is the highest tribunal, I think."

Other witnesses testify to the same effect, and state that the correspondence between the different meetings is "a mere acknowledgment of fraternity;" that it is "entirely voluntary;" and that no book of discipline "requires or enjoins" it. There is no competent or sufficient evidence that when a member of one meeting is accredited, or "liberated" as a traveller, he becomes a member of other meetings. There is no testimony stronger than that of John Butler, to prove any such right of membership; and he merely says that in his "view" such travelling party is "in some sense a member." But he admits that such a party "would not be regarded as rightfully entitled to take part" in the "nomination of a clerk," or in "disposing of real estate." In this he substantially agrees with Charles Evans, who says that such travelling party is merely "at liberty to give a sentiment, as to what he thinks right or wrong," but that he "would be out of place in attempting to interfere with the business of the yearly meeting, so as to direct the course it should take."

(To be concluded.)

Selected.

"GOING ALONE."

With curls in the sunny air tossing,
With light in the merry blue eyes,
With laughter so clearly outringing,
A laugh of delight and surprise;
All friendly assistance disdaining,
And trusting no strength but its own—
The past fears and trials forgotten,
The baby is "going alone."

What woful mishaps have preceded
This day of rejoicing and pride!
How often the help that he needed
Has carelessly gone from his side!
He has fallen while reaching for sun-beams,
Which, just as he grasped them, have flown,
And the tears of vexation have followed,
But now he is "going alone."

And all through his life he will study
This lesson again and again,
He will carelessly lean upon shadows,
He will fall and weep over the pain,
The hand whose fond clasp was the surest
Will coldly withdraw from his own,
The sunniest eyes will be clouded,
And he will be walking alone.

He will learn what a stern world we live in,
And he may grow cold like the rest,
Just keeping a warm sunny welcome
For those who seem truest and best;
Yet, chastened and taught by past sorrow,
And stronger and manlier grown,
Not trusting his all in their keeping,
He learns to walk bravely alone.

And yet not alone, for our Father
The faltering footsteps will guide
Through all the dark mazes of earth-life,
And "over the rivers" deep tide.
Oh! here is a helper unfailing,
A strength we can perfectly trust,
When, all human aid unavailing,
"The dust shall return unto dust."

Selected.

AFTER THE STORM.

Patience! for the strife is o'er;
Weary wave and dying blast
Beat and moan around the shore;
Peace must come at last.

Lo! the seagull's silver wing
Flashes in the sunset gold;
Wait, another morn shall bring
Gladness, as of old.

Sunlight on the yellow strand,
Shadows lying still and clear,
Pearly fringes on the sand;
Murmurs, sweet to hear.

Storms of life must have their way
Ere these changeful years may cease;
Foam and tempest for to-day
And to-morrow—peace.

Never till the fight is won,
And the bitter draught is drained—
Never till the storm is done
Shall thy rest be gained.

Waves and winds fulfil His word;
Thou, like them, shalt do His will,
Waiting till His voice is heard
Saying, "Peace, be still."

Sunday at Home.

I believe that no Divine truth can truly dwell in any heart, without an external testimony in manner, bearing and appearance, that must reach the witness within the heart of the beholder, and bear an unmistakable, though silent, evidence to the eternal principle from which it emanates.

For "The Friend."

John Griffith.

(Continued from page 158.)

The example of John Griffith, being in effect, "Follow me as I have followed Christ," is one of grave importance and of practical application to us all. The doctrines and requisitions of our holy religion are no cunningly devised fable, but real and substantial truths. And though the Lord to prove his people, may now, as he did formerly, lead them "through a land of deserts and of pits; through a land of drought, and of the shadow of death," though not without hope of brighter days beyond; yet, how much more are these dispensations from His chastening hand to be desired, than the too common lukewarmness and apathy noticeable in professed followers of the meek and lowly Jesus! How infinitely better for us to know the ploughing up of the fallow ground of the heart, and to endure even the sifting, the upheaving, the overturning, the quick and powerful operation of the Holy Ghost or transforming power of the Redeemer there. We want more of presenting our bodies a living sacrifice; more earnest, faithful, prayerful entreaty from broken hearts and contrite spirits to the God of all grace, and of all our sure mercies. We want more firmness of purpose and holy resolution to yield ourselves unreservedly to the Saviour, and, through the power of his Spirit to labor faithfully, and contend earnestly for the faith once delivered to the saints. Then to him that hath, would more be given unto increase in the increase that is of God through Christ Jesus.

In the present number are J. Griffith's views respecting the great work of the ministry. They are commended to the careful perusal and consideration of all:—

"About this time I had a distant view of being called into the work of the ministry; my mind being at times wonderfully overshadowed with the universal love of God, in the glorious gospel of his Son, to mankind, to that degree that I thought I could, in the strength thereof, give up to spend and to be spent, for the gathering of souls to him, the great Shepherd of Israel; and that I could lift up my voice like a trumpet, to awaken the inhabitants of the earth: but I found all this was only by way of preparation for this important work, and that I had not yet received a commission to engage therein. A fear and care were upon my mind, lest I should presume to enter upon this solemn undertaking without a right call; it appearing to me exceedingly dangerous to speak in the name of the Lord, without a clear evidence in the mind, that he required it of me; which I then fully believed he would in his own time, which was to be waited for. From this time, until I was really called to the work, I frequently had, but especially in religious meetings, openings of scripture passages, with lively operations of the Divine power in my mind; and sometimes with so much energy, that I have been almost ready to offer what I had upon my mind, to others. But as, through an holy care which dwelt upon my heart, I endeavored to try my offering in the unerring balance of the sanctuary, I found it was too light to be offered, and was thankful to the Lord for his merciful preservation, in that I had been enabled to avoid offering the sacrifice of fools. But when the time really came that it was divinely required of me, the evidence was so indisputably clear, that there was not the least room to doubt; yet, through fear and human frailty, I put it off, and did not give way thereunto. But oh! how was I condemned in myself! The Divine sweetness which had covered my mind in the meeting was withdrawn, and I left in a very poor disconsolate state, wherein I was ready to beg forgiveness, and to covenant with the Lord, that if he would be pleased to favor me again in like manner, I would give up to his requiring. At the next first-day meeting, the heavenly power overshadowed me in a wonderful manner, in which it was required of me to kneel down in supplication to the Lord in a few words: I gave way thereto, in the dread of his power, with fear and trembling. After which, oh, how my soul was filled with peace and joy in the Holy Ghost! I could then sing, and make sweet melody in my heart to the Lord. As I remember, I was twenty-one years of age the very day I first entered into this great and awful work of the ministry; which was the 21st of the 5th month, old style, 1734.

"I have found my mind engaged to be somewhat particular concerning the manner of my entering into the work of the ministry, to stand by way of caution and proper encouragement to others, who may peruse the same; having in the course of my observation had cause to fear, some have taken the work of preparation, as before hinted, for the thing itself; and so have proceeded very far, to their own great wounding, and the hurt of others, in bringing forth untimely fruit, which is exceedingly dangerous, and carefully to be avoided. Nothing is a sufficient guard to preserve therefrom, but the single eye, through the divine blessing awfully considering what a great thing it is for dust and ashes to speak as the apostle Peter directs, viz: 'As every man hath received the gift, even so minister the same one to another, as good stewards of the manifold grace of God. If any man speak, let him speak as the oracles of God; if any man minister, let him do it as of the ability which God giveth.' The author to the Hebrews saith, that 'No man taketh this honor to himself, but he that is called of God, as was Aaron.' So that whatever some may pretend to, and intrude themselves into, unless they are really called of God, they will have no share in that honor that cometh from God only.

The church of Christ hath not been without its troubles from false ministers, neither in the primitive times, nor in ours. That excellent gospel liberty of all who feel themselves inspired thereunto, whether male or female, speaking or prophesying one by one, hath been, and still is, abused by false pretenders to divine inspiration; yet the liberty ought to be preserved inviolable, and other means found out to remedy this great inconveniency; which would not be difficult, were the members in a general way spiritually minded, rightly savoring the things that be of God. Forward and unsanctified appearances, by way of ministry, would then be easily awed and suppressed, so as not to disturb the peace of the church. The case has been otherwise, as I have observed in some places; but little minded, if the words and doctrine were sound, and nothing to blame in the conversation. Here the main thing, which is the powerful demonstration of the Holy Spirit, is little regarded: and if a few are deeply pained at heart with such lifeless ministry, they find it exceedingly difficult to lay hands thereon, for want of more strength; especially when they perceive what strength there is against them; for formal professors love to have it so, rather than to sit in silence. And I have observed such pretenders to be all mouth or tongue, and no ears to receive instruction; fond of teaching others, but very unteachable themselves. I pray to God to quicken his people, and raise the Society into a more lively sense of that blessed arm of power which gathered us to be a people; or, I fear, the great evil above hinted at will prove a very growing one: profession without possession, being the proper element for such a ministry to grow and flourish in. I am not quite free to omit a remark on this head, as I am fully persuaded the living members of the church of Christ, groan under a painful sense of this sorrowful token of a declining Society. May the Lord of sabaoth hear their cries, and regard the anguish of their souls in secret, so as to work by his invisible power for his own name's sake, and their enlargement, by turning his hand upon our Sion, to purge away her dross, and to take away her tin and reprobate silver; that her judges may be restored as at the first, and her counsellors as at the beginning; that many, having their feet shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace, may yet appear beautiful on the mountains! So be it, saith my soul.

"I have given some hints how it was with me, by way of preparation for the great and important work of the ministry, and the danger of being misled; even at some times when I had right openings, and felt the sweet efficacious virtue of the love of God, through Jesus Christ, to mankind: which, doubtless, is the sensible experience and enjoyment, at times, of every faithful follower of Christ, who never was called to the work of the ministry. I was in those days apprehensive of some danger of being led out at that door; but I have since more fully and perfectly seen the danger of this and other by-paths, which would have led me to give that away to others, which I was to live upon myself; and out of the humble dependent state, in which only there is safety, to have a will and way of my own, that I might be furnished and enriched with much treasure. But sincerity of heart, and my endeavors to preserve the single eye, through the watchful care of Divine Providence over me, brought the day of the Lord upon it all: so that I came clearly to see, and experimentally to know, that my sufficiency was of God; that there must be a steady dependence on the Lord, to be immediately filled and supplied, every time I was to engage in this solemn service. I ardently desire, that all who have the least apprehension of being called into the work of the ministry, may dwell in an holy dread of the Divine presence, and know their own wills wholly subjected to the divine will, waiting for a clear and distinct certainty of the Lord's requirings, not only in entering upon it at first, but also at all other times. And as self comes to be laid in the dust, they will receive undeniable evidence in their own minds of the certainty of their mission; and they will not be without a testimony thereof, from the witness for God in the consciences of those amongst whom they are sent to minister. They will be a savor of life to the living in the Truth, and of death to those who are in a state of death. Let it ever be remembered, that nothing of, or belonging to man, can possibly add any lustre or dignity to the divine gift. Neither will the best and most curiously adapted words or doctrine, ever so truly and consistently delivered, be any more than as sounding brass, or as a tinkling cymbal, without the power, light and demonstration of the Spirit of Christ. There is no occasion for those who regard his power as the substance of their ministry, to be solicitous about words; as the lowest and most simple are really beautiful, when fitly spoken under that holy influence."

(To be continued.)

For "The Friend."

William Law, A. M.

The following is taken from Law's Address to the Clergy, who was also the author of divers other religious tracts:—

"He was born at King's Cliff, a market town in Northamptonshire (G. B.), in the year 1687; his parents were of good repute, and in circumstances which enabled them to give him a liberal education. He was sent early to the University of Cambridge, and was of Emanuel college, where his superior genius soon distinguished itself by three letters to (Hooadly) the Bishop of Bangor so greatly, that upon their publication, the celebrated Bishop Atterbury waited upon him and made him this compliment; Mr. Law from your writings, instead of seeing a youth, I should have expected to see grey hairs. The universal applause those three letters met with, instead of filling his mind with pride and vanity, the two pregnant attendants of superior abilities and human applause, only served to make him the more retired from the world, in order the more deeply to look into himself. He lived a single life, and the last twenty years of it in the same town in which he was born; but the reasons of his not continuing in the ministry can only be conjectured; for it is not known that he ever acquainted any one with them.

"The first fruits produced in his retirement were his two excellent treatises on 'Christian Perfection,' and 'Serious Call to a Devout and Holy Life.' From these instructive writings, by a gradual progress in spirituality and sound philosophy, he became qualified to illustrate and unfold some deep mystic writings, which he hath done with much fulness and depth of penetration.

"In the year 1727 he founded a charity school at King's Cliff, and afterwards added two tenements for two ancient women, with a weekly allowance."

The following circumstances whereby he was enabled to be extensively useful are remarkable:—"Attending the Feast of the Sons of the Clergy at St. Paul's Cathedral, a person who was unknown to him came to him and asked his name, to whom he modestly answered, 'My name is William Law.' Whereupon the man gave him a letter directed to our author himself, which he, for the present, put into his pocket, and which upon opening it at a convenient opportunity, he found inclosed a bank note for one thousand pounds sterling. And at another time a bank note for five hundred pounds sterling, was sent him from an unknown hand."

That truly pious and catholic-spirited writer, Dr. Philip Doddridge, in a sermon to young persons, has the following passage concerning William Law: "It is an awakening saying of one of the most lively and pathetic as well as most pious writers which our age has produced, 'That the condition of man in his natural state, seems to be like that of a person sick of a variety of diseases, knowing neither his distemper nor cure, but unhappily enclosed in a place where he could hear, or see, or taste, or feel nothing, but what tended to inflame his disorder.'" Law of Christian Perfection, page 2.

The author of the address to the clergy, died April 9th, 1761, aged seventy-five years. The whole of it was sent by himself to be printed, except a few pages, written by him not many days before his death. Though it appears chiefly directed to the Episcopal clergy, it is of common concern to all professed ministers of the Gospel and Christians in general.—Extracts now follow:

"Ye are not in the flesh, saith the Apostle, but in the Spirit, but then he adds, as the only ground of this, if so be that the Spirit of God dwelleth in you; surely he means, if so be ye are moved, guided and governed by that, which the Spirit wills, works and inspires within you. And then to show the absolute necessity of this life of God in the soul, he adds, if any man hath not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his; and that this is the state to which God hath appointed, and called all Christians, he thus declares, God hath sent forth the Spirit of his Son into your hearts, crying, Abba, Father," Gal. iv. 6. "The same thing, most surely as if he had said, nothing in you can cry or pray to God, as its Father, but the Spirit of his Son, Christ, come to life in you. Which is also as true of every tendency in the soul towards God, or goodness; so much as there is of it, so much there is of the seed of the woman, striving to bring forth a full birth of Christ in the soul.

"Lo, I am always with you, saith the holy Jesus, even to the end of the world. How is it with us? Not outwardly, every illiterate man knoweth; not inwardly saith many a learned Divinity Doctor; because a Christ within us is as gross enthusiasm, or Quakerism, as the Light within us. How then shall the faith of the common Christian find any comfort in these words of Christ's promise, unless the Spirit brings him into a remembrance and belief, that Christ is in him and with him, as the vine is with, and in the branch? Christ saith, Without me, ye can do nothing; and also, If any man love me, my Father will love him, and we will come unto him, and make our abode with him. Now if without him, we can do nothing, then all the love that a man can possibly have for Christ, must be from the power and life of Christ in him; and from such a love, so begotten, man has the Father, and the Son dwelling, and making their abode in him. What higher proof or fuller certainty can there be, that the whole work of redemption in the soul of man is, and can be nothing else, but the inward, continual, immediate operation of Father, Son and Holy Spirit, raising up again their own first life in the soul, to which Adam, our first father died?

"Again, Christ, after his glorification in heaven, saith, 'Behold I stand at the door and knock.' He does not say behold ye have me in the Scriptures. Now what is the door at which Christ, at the right hand of God in heaven, knocketh? Surely it is the heart, to which Christ is always present. He goeth on, 'If any man hear my voice;' how hear but by the hearing of the heart, or what voice, but that which is the speaking or sounding of Christ within him? He adds 'And open the door,' that is open his heart for me, 'I will come into him,' that is, will be a living, holy nature and Spirit born within him, 'And sup with him and he with me.' Rev.

"Behold the last, finishing work of a redeeming Jesus, entered into the heart, that opens to him; bringing forth the joy, the blessing, and perfection of that first life of God in the soul, which was lost by the fall [and by personal sin] set forth as a supper, or feast of the heavenly Jesus with the soul, and the soul with him. Can any one justly call it enthusiasm, to say, that this suppering of the soul with this glorified Christ within it, must mean something more heavenly, transacted in the soul, than that last supper, which He celebrated with his disciples, whilst He was with them in the flesh? For that supper of bread and wine, was such, as a Judas could partake of, and could only be an outward type or signification of that inward and blessed nourishment, with which the believing soul, should be feasted, when the glorified Son of God should, as a creating spirit, enter into us, quickening, and raising up his own heavenly nature and life within us. Now this continual knocking of Christ at the door of the heart, sets forth the case or nature of a continual, immediate, divine inspiration within us; it is always with us, but there must be an opening of the heart to it, and though it is always there, yet it is only felt and found by those who are attentive to it, depend upon, and humbly wait for it.

"Now let any one tell me, how he can believe anything of this voice of Christ, how he can listen to it, hear or obey it, but by such a faith as keeps him habitually turned to an immediate, constant inspiration of the Spirit of Christ within him? Or how any heathenish, profane person, can do more despite to this presence, and power of Christ in his own soul, or more effectually lead others into it, than that ecclesiastic, who makes a mock at the light within, a Christ within, and openly blasphemes that faith, and hope, and trust, which solely relies upon being moved by the Spirit, as its only power of doing that, which is right, and good and pious, either towards God or man.

"Let every man whom this concerns, lay it to heart. Time, and the things of time, will soon have an end; and he that in time trusts to anything but the Spirit and power of God working in his heart, will be but ill fitted to enter into eternity. God must be all in all in us here, or we cannot be his hereafter. Time works only for eternity; and poverty eternal must as certainly follow him who dies, only fully stuffed with human learning, as he who dies only full of worldly riches.

"The folly of thinking to have any divine learning, but that which the holy Spirit teaches, or to make ourselves rich in knowledge towards God by heaps of common-place learning, crowded into our minds, will leave us as dreadfully cheated, as that rich builder of barns in the gospel, to whom it was said, thou fool, this night shall thy soul be required of thee; and then whose shall all these things be? Luke, xii. So is every man that treasures up a religious learning, that comes not wholly from the Spirit of God."

Watch ye, stand fast in the faith.

For "The Friend."

"Musings and Memories: being a collection of anecdotes and reflections of a religious character, on various subjects. Tract Association of Friends. Philadelphia, 1875."

This is a volume of 367 pages, the design of which, as the preface states, is to convey moral and religious truths in connection with simple incidents; this method being frequently more efficacious in making profitable impressions on the mind of the reader, than by more elaborate essays. Many of the reflections as well as anecdotes have appeared in the columns of this Journal at different times. A considerable part of the volume however, was derived from other sources, and some parts, not the least interesting in the book, have never before been printed. It is uniform in style with a former publication of the same association, entitled, "Biographical Sketches and Anecdotes of Friends." We not only consider it as a valuable addition to the list of their issues, but that it will be read with pleasure and edification by the enlightened Christian, without regard to sectarian distinction. For sale at Friends' Bookstore, No. 304 Arch Street.

THE FRIEND.

FIRST MONTH 9, 1875.

"Friends, call to mind the former times, and remember the days that are past and gone, when the day of the Lord first dawned unto you, and his power seized upon you. You know how weighty and retired the spirits of Friends then were; how grave and solid their deportment and carriage; how few and savory their words, tending to edify the hearers; how great a fear and backwardness was in them, to enter in familiarity with the world's people. Oh! Friends, that was a good day, and that was a safe state; for fear begets watchfulness, and watchfulness is a means to prevent danger. Therefore, all Friends keep in the holy fear, and therein watch against the enemy, that he entangle you not, nor hurt your spirits by a too near familiarity, and intimate conversing with the people of the world; for therein, I assure you lies a snare."

To one with religious thoughtfulness, when viewing the change that has been going on for some years, and is still in active progress within our religious Society, the questions naturally present, What is the character of the fruits produced by the principles brought into operation, and the theology taught, by the prime movers in the, so called, "advance" on Quakerism? Are the evidences accompanying the "revival," such as prove a renewed reception of divine Light; which while making manifest the errors of the past, has led to the discovery of new modes of applying, and the necessity for more strict conformity to the self-denying principles and requisitions of the Gospel, so as to improve the condition of our part of the visible church, and to lead, or at least invite other portions of it, out of the formalities and will-worship that have so long obstructed the spread and power of spiritual religion? Does it manifest a superhuman origin, by bringing its converts more unreservedly under the yoke and cross of Christ, and thrusting back the Spirit of the world from the place it has usurped, in boldly prescribing the order and discipline of the church, and in regulating the conduct of professed Christians?

The history of the rise and progress of Friends as a religious Society, leaves no doubt as to what constituted the wisdom and power that enabled them at the outset, to take a firm stand against the corruptions prevalent in the church in that day; to address themselves successfully to instruct those who were spiritually blind and ignorant; to proclaim the true character and demands of the religion of Christ, and to manifest to every beholder, that, as disciples of a crucified Redeemer, they were constrained to bear testimony, not only against the formal, dead preaching and worship practised in the different denominations, from which they were brought out, but also against the love, spirit, maxims, manners, and other unrighteous ways of the world around them. They declared that all the saving knowledge of God and of Christ to which they attained; all the qualification for service in the church with which they were clothed; all the success which crowned their labors; were attained by and through obedience to the Holy Spirit, manifesting the will of God concerning them in the secret of the soul, and supplying them with the requisite ability and guidance for the work assigned them.

They were changed men themselves before they went about to change others; made so through submission to the crucifying, transforming power of the Grace of God; which they could testify from living experience, brought salvation to the obedient soul. Their ministry therefore, was not in the enticing words of man's wisdom; and their commission from on high, was to turn people "to that inward Light, Spirit and Grace, by which all might know their salvation, and their way to God;" "to bring people off from all their own ways, to Christ the new and living way;" "from their churches which men had made and gathered, to the church in God;" "from the world's teachers made by men, to learn of Christ, who is the way, the truth and the life;" "to know the Spirit of Truth in the inward parts, and to be led thereby; that in it they might worship the Father of spirits, who seeks such to worship him; which Spirit, they that worshipped not in, know not what they worship." From practical experience they could testify, that while this Holy Spirit required them to bear the daily cross, crucifying the lusts of the flesh, the lust of the eye, and the pride of life, it brought its humble, contrite subjects, to realise Christ to be the Lamb of God that took away their sins, and taketh away the sin of the world; and that there was no more condemnation to those who were thus grafted into Him, and who walked not after the flesh, but after the Spirit.

As these preachers of righteousness and their converts, became gathered into a body or church, it was to be seen by all, that they had not left their former modes of worship, nor declared against the ministry under which they had been accustomed to sit, because they were aiming at setting up a new man-made contrivance; nor yet to bring themselves into notice and repute; but because they saw in the light of Truth, that the system of divinity taught by the so-called evangelical churches was defective, and the ministry connected with them depended on the ordinances of man, and was opposed to the Headship of Christ. That it cherished the spirit of priestcraft, and obstructed the dispensing and exercise of gifts, which He who led captivity captive, had in store for his obedient, dedicated disciples.

Having seen that the God of this world had blinded the eye of very many of the professors of the religion of the new testament dispensation, so that while they talked much about the gospel, and boasted of being in Christ and being members of his church, their lives showed they had never entered the strait gate, and were far from walking in the narrow way, they found it laid upon them not merely to bear testimony against them and their unscriptural views, but at the same time to illustrate the restrained and holy life, into which all the true believers in Christ are led. Thus the primitive Friend, from whose work our first extract is taken, says, "You know, Friends, that at the first, when the visiting arm of the Lord reached us, He led us out of the world's ways, manners, customs and fashions, and a close testimony both in word and practice, was borne against them."

Under the authority of their divine Master, they bore an unwavering testimony against men claiming to be reconciled and justified by a self wrought faith in a crucified Redeemer, and satisfying themselves with external observances and will-worship; declaring that in order to know complete justification and sanctification, it was indispensable to be buried with Christ by baptism into death, and through the washing of regeneration and the renewing of the Holy Ghost, to be raised up into newness of life. This newness of life was not mere newness of profession, but experiencing the propensities and deeds of the old or natural man crucified, by submission to Christ within, and putting on the new man created in righteousness and true holiness. Though entertaining christian charity towards all men, yet they could in no wise join hands with those, who called themselves ministers of Christ, but were not willing to comply with his command—"Freely ye have received, freely give," but sought to make merchandise of his gospel.

These were characteristic traits of the spiritual religion preached and practised by Friends in the beginning. They brought contempt and hatred upon them, from worldlings and unregenerate professors, but they set the society on a hill, so that it could not be hid, and gave an impetus to religious reform that has been operative up to this day. They are traits which have also marked the religion of all true Friends since that day.

Now if our predecessors were led by the Spirit of Truth into their religion, and by it were made eminent reformers in the visible church, all true advance from the point they attained, must be in the line of former progress. If under the further enlightening of the Holy Spirit there has been a discovery of a different or deeper meaning in, and a more extended application of, any one or more of the cardinal doctrines of christianity, calling for a modification of the forms and exemplifications of our religious faith and practice, its fruits must, in accordance with its divine source and nature, be alike distinguished—as were the changes produced upon the primitive Friends—by a more complete withdrawal from the spirit, manners and fashions of the world; a more full acceptance and practical illustration of the spiritual character of the gospel dispensation, and a more decided and firm testimony against will-worship, and a man-made and hireling ministry.

We may rest assured that the blessed Head of his own church, will never lead it back from whatever advanced position it may have attained by His holy help and guidance, and bring it into a closer approximation to, and a nearer assimilation with those things, whether rites, forms or practices, which have been introduced among His professed followers, as parts of, or connected with his religion or worship, by the unsanctified will of man; nor will He sanction its participation with any of the ways of the world, that minister to the pride and rebellion of the human heart, or induce the delusion that men may be his followers, without obeying his command to deny themselves and take up the daily cross. There must always be, not merely a doubt of, but an assurance against supposed discoveries and palpable changes, that contradict the lessons in which the Head of the Church has been teaching and exercising his faithful servants in our church, for over two hundred years, and against the introduction of forms of worship or other practices, that reverse the more spiritual advances of former times, and set at naught the experiences of the gifted instruments in the Lord's work who have preceded us.

Where any doctrine is preached from our galleries, or where would-be reformers rise up among Friends, the practical effect of whose influence is, to bring into disrepute the observance of the testimonies which were given to the Society in the beginning, even though they may be stigmatized as badges unworthy of the present enlightened age; such as plainness of speech, behavior and apparel; to substitute study of the Scriptures, and engaging in "religious works" for the conversion of others, for close attention and obedience to the visitations of divine grace, and laboring under its direction, in the vineyard of the heart; where it is clearly manifest that this influence has so lowered the standard of the ministry, that very many are encouraged to engage in it, who give little evidence of having been under the preparing hand, and none that they have received a gift therefor; where the testimony against a man-made and hireling ministry is so far laid waste, that those who are connected with and have been "ordained," in accordance with this system, are invited and assisted to take part, as ministers, in our religious meetings; where a will-worship, consisting of Scripture reading and hymn singing, is, through this influence, taking the place of reverent waiting in the silence of all flesh, to be qualified to offer that worship which is in spirit and in truth; where, as this influence prevails, the tendency is to carry the members back to the "beggarly elements," from which Friends were liberated, and against which they were designed to bear testimony; and where, as month after month passeth away, even the superficial observer can see, that the converts of a new doctrine, and the copyists of innovators, are deserting the advanced position which the Society was raised up to occupy, and becoming more and more nearly assimilated to other religious professors; where all or any of these fruits are produced, we may safely conclude, that the doctrine, the influence and the changes accompanying them, have not the same origin and sanction as brought forth the Society in the beginning, and which have characterized the religion of faithful, dedicated Friends since its rise.

SUMMARY OF EVENTS.

FOREIGN.—The declaration of Alfonso, son of ex-Queen Isabella, that a majority of the people of Spain wished to place him on the throne in order to terminate the disorder and internal strife which had so long prevailed in the country, seems to have been based on correct information.

On the 30th ult. General Campus, who was in the province of Valencia, with two battalions of soldiers, pronounced in favor of Alfonso. A portion of the Republican army was sent to suppress the revolt under Campus, but no conflict took place; the Republican troops at once joined Campus, and he marched into the city of Valencia at their head. The army in the north also promptly embraced the movement for a restoration of the monarchy under Alfonso. Under these circumstances the Madrid government at once acquiesced in what was declared to be the general wish of the nation, and on the 31st ult., the Spanish Minister of the Interior sent the following dispatch to the Governors of the provinces: "Alfonso XII. has been unanimously proclaimed King by the national army and the Ministry. A regency has been formed under the presidency of Conavas Del Castillo, without a portfolio. We hope your patriotism will induce you to firmly maintain the great interests confided to you." When these events occurred, Alfonso was in England, but would proceed to Spain without delay. He has telegraphed to the Pope asking his blessing, and promising that he will, like his ancestors, defend the rights of the Holy See.

A Paris dispatch of the 2nd says: The Papal Nuncio in this city has received the blessing of the Pope, asked for by the king. Alfonso will issue from this city, a decree convoking the Cortes. A Madrid dispatch of the 3d states that the new Minister of the Navy, and others, have gone to Cartagena, where they will embark on the iron-clad Numancia, and proceed to Marseilles to bring Alfonso to Spain. The king will land at Barcelona and proceed from thence to Madrid by way of Valencia.

A telegram from the Carlist head-quarters in Spain says: "The Alfonso pronunciamento leaves the situation there unchanged. There is no defection of the Carlist army, but the change strengthens us and weakens the enemy." On the other hand Madrid dispatches state that the Carlist officers generally are expected to join the Alfonsists. King Alfonso has granted complete amnesty to all the Carlists.

The Duke De Montpensier and the Orleans Princes, have congratulated Alfonso upon his accession to the Spanish throne.

The Captain-General of Cuba has issued a proclamation announcing the accession of Alfonso to the Spanish crown.

Castelar has resigned the Presidency of the Spanish Commission to the Centennial Exhibition at Philadelphia, and the Chancellorship of Public Instruction. A decree has been issued in Madrid suspending the jury system.

The new sovereign of Spain is in the eighteenth year of his age.

Further details of the Cospatrick disaster have been received. When the vessel was discovered to be on fire, eighty persons, mostly women, rushed into one of the boats, which was capsized and all in it were drowned. Soon after the masts fell, killing many of the passengers. An explosion subsequently occurred in the stern of the vessel, completing the destruction. The total number of lives lost by the destruction of the vessel is now estimated at 474.

Navigation on the river Humber above Hull is stopped by ice. The Harbor of Goole on the Ouse is closed. Drift ice hinders navigation on the Thames. The railways in western England are blocked by snow, and some local lines have suspended traffic altogether.

Sixty thousand colliers in South Wales have struck work, in consequence of a reduction in their wages.

The weather in England has been cold and stormy with violent gales around the coasts of the island.

London 1st mo. 4th.—The rate of discount in the open market for three month's bills is 5½, which is ⅞ below the Bank of England rate.

Liverpool.—Uplands middlings cotton, 7⅜*d*. Breadstuffs quiet.

Garibaldi declines a national grant for his relief, because of the condition of Italian finances. He, however, expresses his gratitude to Parliament for voting the grant.

Late accounts from Asia Minor show that the distress from famine is increasing. There is much disease and great mortality among the people.

A Berlin dispatch says: The Official Gazette publishes Bismarck's circular note of the 14th of May, 1872, which was read in secret session of the Von Arnim trial. The note declares that, because of the declaration of the dogma of infallibility of the Pope, it is desirable that the Powers should take steps toward concerted action in view of the next Papal election.

The Archbishop of Cologne has been fined thirty thousand thalers, and will probably be imprisoned again before long.

Von Arnim has appealed from the judgment in his case, and demands trial before a higher tribunal. The public prosecutor also appeals.

A Vienna dispatch says: In consequence of a very heavy fall of snow, many railways in Austria have wholly or partially discontinued traffic. Freight traffic is at a standstill throughout the country. Communication between this city and Prague is entirely interrupted. Trieste is isolated landward and seaward.

UNITED STATES.—There were 322 interments in Philadelphia last week. The mean temperature of the Twelfth month, at the Pennsylvania Hospital, was 36 deg., the highest during the month 55 deg., and the lowest 14 deg. The amount of rain 2.24 inches, making 40 inches for the entire year. The average of the mean temperature of the 12th month for the past 85 years is stated to be 32.66 deg. The highest mean for that entire period was 45 deg. in 1848, the lowest was 25 deg. in 1832.

During the year 1874, 4,309 new dwellings were erected in Philadelphia. According to the census of 1870, the whole number of dwellings in the city was 112,366; since then 23,075 have been added, making the number at this time 135,441.

During the year 19,111 persons were committed to the Philadelphia County Prison, of whom 15,720 were men, and 3,391 women.

The imports of foreign dry goods at the port of New York, during the year 1874, amounted to $106,320,450, against a total of $114,160,468 for the year 1873, and of $136,831,612 for the year 1872.

New York city had 584 deaths last week.

The public debt statement, published at the beginning of the month, shows an increase during the Twelfth month, 1874, of $3,659,968. The amount of coin in the Treasury was $82,587,450.

The number of deaths in Philadelphia in each year since 1860, is stated to be as follows:

1861, . .	14,468	1868, . .	14,693
1862, . .	15,097	1869, . .	14,781
1863, . .	15,788	1870, . .	16,750
1864, . .	17,582	1871, . .	16,993
1865, . .	17,169	1872, . .	20,544
1866, . .	16,803	1873, . .	16,736
1867, . .	13,933	1874, . .	15,393

The population of Philadelphia being about 800,000, the mortality of last year appears to have been under two per cent. The increased mortality in 1872 was due to the prevalence of small pox in that year.

The report of the Department of Agriculture at Washington says, that the corn crop of the U. States last year slightly exceeds 800,000,000 bushels, which is about 120,000,000 bushels less than the crop of 1873. The cotton crop is about 3,666,000 bales.

A Washington dispatch of the 4th inst. says that instructions have been forwarded to the United States Minister at Madrid, directing him to recognize the new government in case Alfonso succeeds in establishing himself as king. It is not believed at Washington that the accession of Alfonso to the throne will be the means of ending the Carlist war.

Under instructions from the President of the United States, General Sheridan has assumed control of the Department of the Gulf, consisting of the States of Louisiana, Arkansas and Mississippi. In a dispatch from New Orleans to the Secretary of War, Sheridan says: It is with deep regret that I have to announce to you the existence in this State of a spirit of defiance to all lawful authority, and an insecurity of life, which is hardly realized by the general government or country at large.

The lives of citizens have become so jeopardized that unless something is done to give protection to the people all security usually afforded by law will be overridden. Defiance to laws and murder of individuals seems to be looked upon by the community here from a standpoint which gives impunity to all who choose to indulge in either, and the civil government appears powerless to punish or even arrest.

The Markets, &c.—The following were the quotations on the 4th inst. New York.—American gold 112½. U. S. sixes, 1881, registered and coupons, 118⅜ a 118½; do. five per cents, 1881, 113¾. Superfine flour, $4.15 a $4.35; State extra, $5 a $5.20; finer brands, $5 a $10.50. No. 2 Chicago spring wheat, $1.12; red western, $1.28; amber, $1.30. Canada barley, $1.57. Oats, 69 a 72 cts. Rye, 94 cts. Yellow corn, 87 a 89 cts.; old corn, 97 cts. Philadelphia—Uplands and New Orleans middling cotton, 14½ a 15 cts. Superfine flour $4 a $4.25; extras, $4.50 a $5; finer brands, $5.50 a $7.50. Red wheat, $1.18 a $1.20; amber, $1.22 a $1.23; white $1.28 a $1.33. Rye, $1.00. New yellow corn 82 a 84 cts. Oats, 63 a 67 cts. Lard, 14 cts. Sales of 2,200 beef cattle at prices ranging from 4½ to 8 cts. per lb. gross. Sheep 5½ a 8 cts. per lb. gross, and hogs $10.50 a $11, per 100 lbs. net for corn fed. Chicago.—No. 2 spring wheat, 90½ cts.; No. 3 do., 84¾ cts. No. 2 mixed corn, 66 cts. No. 2 oats, 52¾ cts. Lard, $13.65 per 100 lbs. St. Louis.—No. 2 winter red wheat, $1.07½; No. 2 spring, 88 cts. New corn, 63 a 64 cts. No. 2 oats, 50½ cts. Indianapolis.—Flour, $3.75 a $6. Wheat, $1.03 a $1.15. Corn, 60 a 64 cts. Oats, 55 a 57 cts. Rye, $1.06.

WANTED.

A Governess for Westtown Boarding School, to enter on her duties at the opening of the next Session.

Apply to

Elizabeth C. Scattergood, West Chester, Pa.
Hannah Richardson, Wilmington, Del.
Hannah Evans, No. 322 Union St., Philada.
Lydia L. Walton, Moorestown, N. J.

NOTICE.

Wanted immediately, a competent Seamstress for the "Shelter for Colored Orphans." Apply to Hannah B. Newbold, No. 643 Franklin St.

Sarah G. Yarnall, No. 922 Mt. Vernon St.

MUSINGS AND MEMORIES

Published by the Tract Association of Friends, is now for sale at their Depository, No. 304 Arch St., Philada. Price, in cloth, $1.00 per copy or $9.00 per dozen.

MARRIED, at Hopewell Meeting, Lynn Co., Iowa, 9th mo. 23d, 1874, ABNER F. CREW to MATILDA E. DEWEESE, daughter of William P. and Maria Deweese, of the former place.

——, at Springville, Lynn Co., Iowa, 10th mo. 22d, 1874, ELWOOD T., son of John M. Smith, of Smyrna, Ohio, to HANNAH, daughter of Samuel W. and Mary Stanley, of the former place.

DIED, on the 10th of 12th mo. 1874, at her home at "Ashley," Newtown, Del. Co., HANNAH S. RHOADS, wife of William Rhoads, in the 44th year of her age. For many months she had been ripening for her Heavenly home; and she died trusting in her Saviour, saying, she was saved by the atoning blood of Jesus who had washed away her sins.

——, in this city, on the 16th of Twelfth month, 1874, LYDIA STARR, a member and elder of the Monthly Meeting of Friends of Philadelphia for the Northern District, in the 71st year of her age. Having in early life yielded to the visitations of Divine Grace, this dear Friend was strengthened to take up the cross, and by obedience to its requirements she became a useful member and pillar in the Church. She was firm in the support of the doctrines and testimonies of the Gospel, as held by the religious Society of Friends, and was earnestly concerned so to walk as not to bring reproach upon the Truth; often speaking of the necessity of daily watchfulness unto prayer, and "that none were safe, whatever their past experience may have been, unless this watch was maintained." Being preserved under this exercise on her own account, she early noticed departures in their various forms, and was frequently engaged in affectionate labor for the maintainance of sound doctrine, as well as for the restoration of those who were letting fall the testimonies of Truth. Her health gradually failing, she seemed sensible that her disease was making certain progress, and although she said but little in relation to herself, yet it was the privilege of those who were near her, to observe the solemn retirement and introversion which frequently clothed her spirit, and under which she gave utterance to expressions which evidenced that her mind was centered on those things which are not seen "but which are eternal." Under a measure of this solemn covering, her spirit was released—without apparent suffering or struggle—nearly her last words being that she "believed she was now going;" leaving a well-grounded hope, that through the mercy of a compassionate Redeemer, whom she loved and endeavored faithfully to serve, she has received a crown of righteousness that fadeth not away.

——, on the morning of 1st month 1st, 1875, at her residence in this city, ELIZABETH BROWN, formerly of Nottingham, Cecil Co., Maryland, in the 84th year of her age, a member of Philadelphia Monthly Meeting.

THE FRIEND.

A RELIGIOUS AND LITERARY JOURNAL.

VOL. XLVIII. SEVENTH-DAY, FIRST MONTH 16, 1875. NO. 22.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY.

Price Two Dollars per annum, if paid in advance. Two dollars and fifty cents, if not paid in advance.

Subscriptions and Payments received by

JOHN S. STOKES,

AT NO. 116 NORTH FOURTH STREET, UP STAIRS.

PHILADELPHIA.

Postage, when paid quarterly in advance, five cents.

For "The Friend."

John Griffith.

(Continued from page 165.)

John Griffith having, after the needful washings, and purgings, and renewings of the Holy Ghost, entered upon the solemn and responsible work of the ministry, we find him exercising the same care in waiting upon the Lord, and of watching unto prayer with all perseverance as has all along marked his devoted, self-denying course. His remarks generally in relation to the ministry, with his own missteps particularly, may well claim the solid attention of all; as showing how our wily foe endeavors to supplant truth with error, and in every or any way to pervert the right ways of the Lord.

How it would do one's heart good to see in this day such a breaking forth in the ministry, such a stir in the camp by the Spirit of the Lord, as he speaks of, wherein about one hundred opened their mouths in public testimony in little more than a year. Whatever may be the state of the case as respects us individually, whether the farm or the merchandise, whether indifferenee or lukewarmness have caused us practically to bury the talent committed in the earth, one truth is clear, that the qualifying power from on high is in no wise lessened, but to us-ward remains the same yesterday, to day, and forever. Were we but willing to yield ourselves wholly and unreservedly to Him who has bought us with the price of his own blood, the same preeious, fruitful, glorious results would follow now as there did in the days of our early Friends, when multitudes flocked to the standard in "the valley of decision," and the Lord was not only the hope and refuge, but the mouth and wisdom, the tongue and utterance of his dedicated and faithful children.

It is when the will of the creature, through the refining and transforming power of the Holy Spirit, is made subjeet to the will of the Crcator; and, in great nothingness, such have no cause to promote but that whieh, through the means He appoints, is to His honor, without whom we can do nothing, that His bless ing which maketh truly rieh reaches our all, and a living engagement is felt to cleave to that invincible Power which alone can preserve from erring on either hand, and lead in the one straight and narrow way unto eternal life.

It would seem, espeeially in view of the too little effect of ministry now-a-days, that there was much room for Him to speak, "whose words go forth at once to their effeet; who calls for things that are not and they côme." However earnest and sincere the labors of a minister may be, he or she cannot eonfer grace; neither create that hunger and thirst after the life of righteousness in their hearers, which will ever and only command the blessing, "They shall be filled." Herein the amount of supply is ever proportionate to the keenness of the appetite. In a summary review of John Griffith's matured experienee in regard to the ministry, with the expressed desire to administer no hurt or discouragement to any truly eoneerned in this important work, he says: "I am fully persuaded that the more formal and superficial we as a people become, the more danger there is of a false ministry rising, and finding eneouragement to grow and prevail; for the lifeless, formal professors had rather have almost any kind of ministry than all silence. On the other hand, a right ministry eannot have a free course, nor be exalted, where there is nothing but worldly spirits, clothed with a form of religion. But true ministers must be like the holy prophet Ezekiel, 'And I will make thy tongue cleave to the roof of thy mouth, that thou shalt be dumb, and shalt not be to them a reprover; for they are a rebellious house.' And, 'The prudent shall keep silence in that time.'" Samuel Bownas, to an aged cotemporary, wrote in 1751 as follows concerning the ministry: "The ehurch seems very barren of young ministers, to what it was in our youth, nor is there mueh convincement to what was then. It seems to me (and I have been a minister these 54 years) that I had more serviee and better success in my ministry the first 20 years than I have since had for a long time. I do not find any fruit or good effect of what I do in that way, and yet what I am eoncerned in seems to be very acceptable and well received by others. I have closely examined where the fault is, but don't find it out." After an allusion to some visits lately paid, S. B. continues: "The man spoke well," say they, "and that is all I get for my labor. Now formerly, I rarely went a journey but I found some convincement. Taking this into eonsideration makes my heart sad; but we must submit, for unless our Master bless our ministry we cannot make it profitable to others."

The Journal of J. Griffith resumed: "Having entered upon the solemn and awful serviee of the ministry, I gave up for the most part, as I found the requirings of Truth, through the divine power and efficacy thereof, moving upon my heart and subjeeting my will, to utter a few words in a broken manner, with fear and trembling; the Lord being exceedingly merciful to me, as a tender father, taking me by the hand and making me willing by his mighty power, to be counted a fool for his sake and the gospel's.

"The meeting I then belonged to was large, and a body of valuable weighty Friends therein; who, as far as I eould observe by their carriage, did own and approve of my weak and low appearanees in this serviee: yet they used Christian prudence, not to lay hands suddenly; but gave me full opportunity to make proof of my ministry; and to feel my feet therein.

"About this time a fine spring of ministry was opened within the eompass of our Yearly Meeting; there having, by aeeount, about one hundred opened their mouths in public testimony, in little more than a year; divers of whom beeame powerful, able ministers, and some of them withered away like unripe fruit. About ten appeared within that time, in the particular meeting of Abington, to which I belonged.

"As I was enabled to wait on my ministry, I experienced a considerable growth and enlargement; and, in a faithful diseharge of duty therein, great peaee and heavenly eonsolation like a pleasant refreshing stream, flowed into my soul. I also found, that it was the means of engaging the minds of Friends, in a sweet and eomfortable nearness of unity with me, whieh I had never before so largely and livingly felt. Many well-minded young people, and some others of little experienee, seemed to admire my gift, and would sometimes speak highly of it, which they did not always forbear in my hearing. But oh, how dangerous this is, if delighted in by ministers! it may be justly eompared to poison, which will soon destroy the pure innocent life. My judgment was against it; yet I found something in me that seemed to have no aversion thereto, but rather inelined to hearken to it, yet not with full approbation. The same thing in me would want to know, what such and sueh, who were in most esteem for experience and wisdom, thought of me. I sometimes imagined such looked shy upon me, which would cast me down; all whieh, being from a root of self, I found was for judgment, and must die upon the cross, before I was fit to be trusted with any great store of gospel treasure. I began also to take rather too mueh delight myself in the gift; and had not Divine goodness in mercy, by a deep distressing baptism, kindly prevented, this might have opened a door for spiritual pride, whieh is the worst kind of pride, to enter in, to my ruin. I have reason to think, that solid Friends observing my large growth in the top, with spreading branches, were in fear of my downfall, in ease of a storm. But, in the midst of my high eareer, the Lord was pleased to take away from me, for a time, the gift of the ministry, and with it all sensible comforts of the Spirit; so that I was, as I thought, in total darkness; even in the region and shadow of death. In this doleful state of mind I was grievously beset and tempted by the false prophet, the transformer, to keep up my credit in the ministry, by continuing my public appearances. It might well be said of him, that he would 'cause fire to come down from heaven, in the sight of men, to deceive them;' for so I found it. It is hard to imagine, how near a resemblance he could make, how exact an imitation he could form, of the very thing itself, to the state of mind I was then in; even to that degree, that I have at times been ready to say, 'Ah! I see and feel the fire of the Lord coming down to prepare the offering;' and have been almost ready to give up thereto, when a godly fear would sieze my mind, and a desire to try it again; by which means, the strong delusion has been discovered, the false fire rejected, and my soul been plunged into deeper anxiety, by this false heat, than I was in before. No tongue or pen can set forth to the full, the almost constant anguish of my soul, for about the space of four or five months; being as nearly as I can remember the time this sore affliction was upon me. It fared with me in some degree, respecting my friends, as it did with Job; some conjecturing one thing, and some another thing, to be the cause of this fall, as it was apprehended; though, through mercy, they could not charge me with any evil conduct as the cause thereof. The most probable reason to them of this alteration was, that I had been too much set up by others, and so had lost my gift; and this, I think, came the nearest to the truth of the case. Yet it was not so lost, but that when my gracious Helper saw my suffering was enough, he restored it again, and appeared to my soul as a clear morning without clouds; everlasting praises to his holy name! My mind was deeply bowed in humble thankfulness, under a sense of the great favor of being again counted worthy to be entrusted with so precious a gift; therefore I was careful to exercise it in great fear and awfulness, and more in a cross to my own will than before; as that which was likely to deck itself therewith, was, for the present at least, in a good degree slain. I have very often in the course of my religious experience, had cause to admire and adore Divine wisdom, in his dealings with me for my preservation in the way of peace; being well assured that he will so work for mankind, if they are entirely given up in heart to him, that it will not be possible for them to miss of everlasting happiness; for none are able to pluck these out of his almighty hand, who do not first incline to leave him."

(To be continued.)

The Power of Vegetation.—Walton Hall had at one time its own corn-mill, and when that inconvenient necessity no longer existed, the mill-stone was laid in an orchard and forgotten. Th diameter of this circular stone measured five feet and a half, while its depth averaged seven inches throughout; its central hole had a diameter of eleven inches. By mere accident some bird or squirrel had dropped the fruit of the filbert tree through this hole on to the earth, and in 1812 the seedling was seen rising up through that unwonted channel. As its trunk gradually grew through this aperture and increased, its power to raise the ponderous mass of stone was speculated on by many. Would the filbert tree die in the attempt? Would it burst the mill-stone or would it lift it? In the end the little filbert tree lifted the mill-stone, and in 1863 wore it like a crinoline about its trunk, and Mr. Watertown used to sit upon it under the branching shade.—Late Paper.

For "The Friend."

Legal Opinions in the Ohio Case.

(Concluded from page 164.)

The "meetings for sufferings," as they are called, are evidently mere acting committees, who are accustomed to confer with each other for counsel, advice, and assistance, but with no power to bind the yearly meetings, except to the extent that funds are placed in their hands, or matters are referred to them.

Nothing, therefore, could be much clearer to my mind, than that these yearly meetings are independent organizations, and that the decisions of each, regarding its own matters of discipline and government, are subject to no review by the other yearly meetings. True, there is a relationship, a "union," if you choose so to call it, between the different yearly meetings; but it is not a union of organization, of government, of authority. It is not an ecclesiastical union. It is a union of spirit, of friendship, of brotherhood, of faith. It is a "union" without organization, and without any grant of legislative, executive, or judicial power, and without the means of appointing officers to discharge the duties of either of these several departments of government. The meetings are "alike"—alike in faith, in practice, and in form of organization; but they are not organically united. They are not parts of one ecclesiastical organization. They are incapable of taking a grant or devise. They can enact no law but the law of love, and are authorized to issue no mandates beyond "advice," "brotherly entreaty," and "admonition." Like the Baptists, Congregationalists, and others, each society, in matters of government, is a law unto itself. Their system of organization begins with the "preparative," and ends with the "yearly" meeting. These together make a single organization; above and beyond them no other is known or provided for. In other words, they have no presbytery, no synod, no general assembly; nor do they have any pope, with power to excommunicate the yearly meetings, or their members. The Quaker ecclesiastical system seems to embody the smallest possible amount of man power. In this they are consistent with themselves, for a foundation principle of Quakerism is non-resistance and non-coercion. There is nothing on which to base the idea that they form a single ecclesiastical organization, except the mere legal opinion of witnesses, and these opinions are conflicting. There is no book, document, or record on which to found them. The rights accorded by one yearly meeting to the members of another, are evidently matters of grace and courtesy, and not of obligation.

As to the argument drawn from the evidence that new yearly meetings are "set up" by the old ones, I have merely to say that it is a play upon this phrase "set up." There is no proof that one was ever set down. They are "set up," as a missionary station is set up, whether by different societies co-operating, or by a single society. They are set up in the sense that a father sets up his sons in business, or his daughters on marriage. When set up, however, they become their own men and women. When the hive becomes too full, the bees swarm, and the swarm becomes an independent hive. It by no means follows that because one society is set up by the consent and assistance of another society, it is to be dependent upon or subject to the parent society. All the authorities we have on the subject are to the effect that these yearly meetings are independent organizations, and the highest organizations known or recognized. In the case of Earle v. Wood, above cited, where the evidence, I presume, was substantially the same as here, the court say:

"The different yearly meetings in America and England keep up a friendly and fraternal communication with each other, by means of epistles, visits, and liberating certificates, or general letters of recommendation from one to another; but there is no subordination acknowledged of one to another, or to all others.

* * From this view of the constitution, organization, and acknowledged usages of the Quaker body, it appears that the Yearly Meeting has a final and controlling jurisdiction in all matters of faith and religious duty, of administration and discipline, as well as of manners and conduct, of all Quakers within its limits. It is final and conclusive, because there is no superior body which can call its decisions in question. It is conclusive in the sense in which the judgments of the highest courts are conclusive, not because they are necessarily wiser or better than those of other courts, but because it is the tribunal of last resort, and the constitution and laws have created no tribunal to re-examine its decisions. * * * Each yearly meeting is independent of all others, and different yearly meetings have no other connection than that which results from Christian fellowship and courtesy."

Does a society thus organized hold its property by the frail tenure of the will of other like and co-ordinate societies? Is a grant to it to inure, at the pleasure of those other societies, as a grant to them, or to a majority of them? Can its property be thus taken from an Ohio organization, and bestowed upon a society in London or Dublin, without any law or pre-agreement prescribing the terms and conditions on which it may be done? Shall the title and possession of the property thus be made to change with the changing and capricious will of the majority of the other societies? Can Plymouth Church of Brooklyn, for instance, be thus compelled, or could its regularly elected officers be compelled, to transfer its church property to the other Congregational churches of New York, or of the world? The cases are similar. I presume the church last named took its property, and holds it, as a "Congregational" church, just as this society took and holds its property as a Quaker church, or church "of the Society of Friends." In other words, they both took and hold their property by their respective proper names—the names which they voluntarily adopted; and for the very good reason that they could take it by no other names. The denominational part of the name of such organizations, as "Congregational," "Baptist," "Quaker," or the like, when applied to societies thus independently organized, is mere matter of description, and not of limitation. Such words are parts of the descriptio personæ, and not a covenant as to the exercise of its powers, or the uses of its property. This is abundantly established by authorities. I refer to Smith v. Nelson, 18 Vt. 511; Shannon v. Frost, 3 B. Mon. 253; Watson v. Jones, 13 Wall. 679, and Wiswell v.

First Congregational Church of Cincinnati, 14 Ohio St. 31, and cases cited.

It is otherwise where the society is only a branch or member of a superior organization. There the union is organic, vital. The vitality of the branch ceases as soon as it is severed. It has no life but in the life of its superior. A conveyance to it, as such branch, may well imply, and is generally held, though not always (see Smith v. Smith, cited supra), to imply a covenant that it will maintain its vital union with the mother organization. It seems to me that there is a total absence of this organic or vital union among the Quaker societies. The Congregationalists, who are conceded to be strictly independent in their organizations, have regulations and laws by which they can call councils, consisting of delegates representing the various organizations; but no such power or regulation, or even usage, is known among Quakers. Admittedly, no such usage was known at the date of this grant.

"The Ohio Yearly Meeting of the Society of Friends," simply means "the Ohio Yearly Meeting of Quakers." The word "society" is here used in the sense of sect or denomination, and not in the sense of organization. It could not be legitimately used in the latter sense, for there was, and is, no such organization. The Quakers are a "society" in the original sense of the word; they are united in the bonds of friendship and Christian love. They are "Friends." They are united in a common belief, but a part of this very belief is, that the yearly meetings have no power over each other. This is a "union," but it is a union without ecclesiastical power. Counsel say that the Society of Friends consisted at the outset of a single organization or society. That is true; but it is also true of the Congregationalists, and of all other denominations whose organizations are admittedly independent.

It is argued by counsel, "that there can be but one Ohio Yearly Meeting of the Society of Friends." If by this is meant that both can not be the legitimate successors of the original Ohio Yearly Meeting, I agree to it. But I deny that there can not be two or any number of Ohio Yearly Meetings of the Society of Friends, whether "set up," as counsel claim they may be, by the sister societies, or formed by voluntary organization. If this society, at its inception, was "the Ohio Yearly Meeting of the Society of Friends," and has kept up its regular organization, then it is still the "Ohio Yearly Meeting of the Society of Friends." If it is not, then it has ceased to be itself. I think it is shown to have kept up its organization, and that Hoyle and his adherents are its regular successors. If a second society is organized by the same name, or is "set up" by the sister societies and called by the same name, it by no means follows that the second society extinguishes and supplants the first one. It has the same name, but it is a different organization. .

Had the society adopted any other name —had they called themselves simply "The Yearly Meeting," I can not see that the case would be in the slightest degree varied from what it is. They chose, however, naturally enough, for the purpose of further identification, to add words showing that the society was located in "Ohio," and that its members were Quakers. Here is no implied covenant in favor of parties from whom they received property by that name, either that they are Quakers, or that they will remain Quakers, much less that they will submit the question of their orthodoxy, or discipline, or the validity of their organization, to the arbitrament of similar and co-ordinate societies. Indeed, there is no question of orthodoxy here, but a mere question of discipline. The real question is, whether Hoyle shall forfeit an office to which he has been regularly elected by the society to which he had belonged for years, and forfeit his membership therein, for no other fault than that which was committed by every society condemning him. He was condemned and disfranchised, or, rather, the Society was condemned and excommunicated, for the crime of refusing to acknowledge the validity of a regular election of the New England Yearly Meeting; and every yearly meeting which so condemned him, thereby refused to acknowledge the validity of a regular, and perfectly similar, election of the Ohio Yearly Meeting. In other words, the Gurneyites established their claims in the New England contest, by procuring from the court an opinion, which is undoubtedly the law, namely, that the entry of the clerk is conclusive of the validity of the election in such cases; and now they have brought a second suit in which they refuse to give the Wilburites the benefit of the law which they have thus established. As I understand it, they have completely changed sides of the question.

Under these circumstances, I say I am quite unwilling to take this property from the defendants and place it virtually in the hands of the other yearly meetings of the world, or of any number of them. The parties in possession have done nothing to forfeit their right thereto. They have kept their original faith and kept up their original organization. They are a majority of the Society, and there is no charge against their moral and Christian character, except that they refuse to fellowship with one section of the New England Society, unless fellowship is accorded to both; while their accusers refuse absolutely and unconditionally to fellowship with them.

WHITE, J., concurred substantially in the dissenting opinion of WELCH, C. J.

For "The Friend."

In the bowels of that love that called me in the day of my youth out of the vanities and follies of the world, I would address the members of our religious Society in every part of the heritage; believing that a call has renewedly gone forth, which, if given heed to, will lead out of the ways and the manners of the world that lieth in wickedness, into a holy life and conversation that would adorn the doctrine of God our Saviour, and once more set this people as a city that cannot be hid. This call of Divine grace in the secret of the soul, that sets our sins in order before us, and brings all things that ever we did to remembrance, must be obeyed before we can advance one step towards that city that needeth not the light of the sun nor the moon, where the Lord God and the Lamb are the light thereof. This light was in the beginning with God and was God: all things were made by it, and without it was not any thing made that was made. In Him was light, and the light was the life of men. He was in the world and the world was made by Him, and the world knew Him not. He came to his own and his own received Him not. But to as many as received Him, to them gave He power to become the sons of God; even to them that believe on His name, that are born not of the flesh nor of the will of man, but of God. This precious experience is the fruit not merely of a literal faith in what Christ hath done for us without us, but of a being renewed into His image by the effectual working of his power within us, whereby all old things will be done away (as we submit to his holy government), and all things become new, and all things of God, who hath reconciled us unto Himself by the death of His Son, having slain the enmity thereby, and came and preached peace to them that are afar off, and to them that are nigh. May there be an awakening and coming forth at His call, out of all that His holy controversy is against, that we may yet be a people to His praise, and know for ourselves what it is to pass from death to life, by putting off the old man which is corrupt, with his deeds, and a putting on the new man, which is created in righteousness and true holiness.

This great work is not done in the time and will of man; but it is to be worked out by the operation of the Spirit of Truth—this must be waited for. The visitations of Divine grace are not at our command; may we all yield obedience to every manifestation of His will, and close in with the offers of redeeming love and mercy vouchsafed to us poor sinful creatures. How infinite is the condescension of our allwise Creator, that he sees meet to visit us and revisit us with the Day-spring from on high, from time to time, and from season to season, pleading with us to come to Him and live. He deigns to point out the way, and lead along, step by step, as we are able to bear. Having trodden the path before us, He hath left us an example that we should follow His steps. It is the same path that the righteous of all ages have trodden; the same narrow way testified of by our holy Redeemer, when he said, "If any man will be my disciple, let him deny himself and take up his cross daily and follow me. He that saveth his life shall lose it, he that loseth his life for my sake, the same shall keep it unto life eternal." May we all lay aside every weight and the sin that doth so easily beset, and run with patience the race that is set before us, enduring the cross and despising the shame; and receive with meekness the engrafted word that is able to save the soul. As we come to this blessed experience, we shall be brought to travail for others in our measure. Earnest wrestling will be witnessed for ourselves and all of the flock and family of Christ, wherever they may have been scattered in the cloudy and dark day. As Christ comes to be our all in all, the envy of Ephraim will depart, and the adversary of Judah will be cut off; Ephraim will not envy Judah nor Judah vex Ephraim; there will be a united travail for the welfare of Zion, and the enlargement of her borders. Then again will be heard the language, "Come and let us go up to the mountain of the Lord, to the house of the God of Jacob; and He will teach us of his way and we will walk in His paths, for a law shall go forth from Zion, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem." Notwithstanding the discouragements that abound, is there not some light in the horizon, of that day when there shall be a returning to first principles; when there shall be more of a brightness, more of an undivided looking to the rock from whence we were hewn, and to the hole of the pit whence we were digged; when there will be more of that spirit that thinketh no evil; when the Lord will be our judge and our lawgiver; when the outcasts of Israel and the despised of Judah, shall be gathered from the four corners of the earth. A. V.

Iowa, 1st mo. 1st, 1875.

Mink Housekeepers.—One sunny morning in summer, down the pathway, still sparkling with the dewy moisture, came stealthily moving the long, lithe form of a mink. Her fur looked worn and rusty when the sunlight struck her as she skulked between the tussocks of grass. Occasionally she halted to look about her, alert for anything eye could see or ears could hear; but hearing nothing but the sweet notes of a song-sparrow and the complaining cry of a cat-bird among the alders she again moved on. As she reached the muddy edge of the brook, she trod more daintily; then, winding among the pickerel weeds, swam down stream, hardly disturbing the water, only making a long, wedge-shaped wake as she stole into the shadowy edge of the brook. Suddenly she disappeared under water; but soon came up, struggling with something that swayed and pulled her about, disturbing the quiet stream, and sending a muddiness down with the current. But she bore the almost unmanageable wriggling eel (for this it was) to the stone wall, and drawing herself and burden up out of the water on the large stone, readjusted her hold, and seized the creature back of the head. Then bracing herself to suck the blood, the thrashing, struggling eel grew gradually weaker and weaker, until it looked perfectly limp and lifeless. Then she jumped from the wall, dragging this eel, longer than herself, up through the grass, taking a different and more concealed way than the one by which she came, and soon disappeared altogether.

In the thick-banked wall of the barn on the hillside she had her young; and after they grew large enough to require something more substantial than nature's first provision, the mother used to bring them fish of different kinds—eels, ducks, and like prey. So slyly and stealthily did she keep herself, that she was not seen until the young were half grown, and looked like little fawn-colored weasels; when she betrayed herself by bringing this food which impeded her movements. By travelling the same way so many times, she grew bold.

These minks are very destructive to fish; and when the brook is low, they can often be tracked for a long distance by the dead eels, pickerel, shiners, and sometimes trout, lying along the bank; the mink only sucking the blood, and leaving the fish unmutilated. One autumn, some small shiners meant for bait in pickerel-fishing through the ice, were kept in an old tub set in a spring near the brook; and one night all these fish were killed by a mink, who left them laid in a row on the ground. They looked precisely as if some person had so arranged them. But through the back of each fish, near the head, were four tooth-marks that told who had been there; this being frequently the only mark the mink makes on his victim.—Old and New.

Our life is a vast reality. It is the eternal lifetime that makes the lifetime of earth such a solemn thing.

Selected.

"BLIND SPINNER."

Like a blind spinner in the sun,
I tread my days;
I know that all the threads will run
Appointed ways;
I know each day will bring its task
And, being blind, no more I ask.

I do not know the use or name
Of that I spin;
I only know that some one came,
And laid within
My hand the thread, and said, "Since you
Are blind, but one thing you can do."

Sometimes the threads so rough and fast
And tangled fly,
I know wild storms are sweeping past,
And fear that I
Shall fall, but dare not try to find
A safer place, since I am blind.

I know not why, but I am sure
That tint and place,
In some great fabric to endure
Past time and race,
My threads will have; so, from the first,
Though blind, I never felt accursed.

But whether this be seal or sign,
Within, without,
It matters not; the bond divine
I never doubt.
I know He set me here, and still,
And glad, and blind, I wait his will—

But listen, listen, day by day,
To hear the tread
Who bear the finished web away,
And cut the thread,
And bring God's message in the sun,
"Thou poor, blind spinner, work is done."

Christian World.

Selected.

JUST AS GOD LEADS.

Just as God leads me, I would go;
I would not ask to choose my way;
Content with what he will bestow,
Assured he will not let me stray.
So as he leads, my path I make,
And step by step I gladly take,
A child, in him confiding.

Just as God leads, I am content;
I rest me calmly in his hands;
That which he has decreed and sent—
That which his will for me commands—
I would that he should all fulfil,
That I should do his gracious will
In living or in dying.

Just as God leads, I all resign;
I trust me to my Father's will;
When reason's rays deceptive shine,
His counsel would I yet fulfil;
That which his love ordained as right,
Before he brought me to the light,
My all to him resigning.

Just as God leads me, I abide,
In faith, in hope, in suffering true;
His strength is ever by my side—
Can aught my hold on him undo?
I hold me firm in patience, knowing
That God my life is still bestowing—
The best in kindness sending.

Just as God leads, I onward go,
Out amid thorns and briars keen;
God does not yet his guidance show—
But in the end it shall be seen
How, by a loving Father's will,
Faithful and true, he leads me still.

From the German.

Advice to Young Tradesmen.—Buy the best goods, cut the work out yourselves; let the eye of the master be everywhere. Employ the soberest men. Avoid all low deceits of trade. Never lower the credit of another to raise your own. Make short payments; keep exact accounts; avoid idle company; and be very strict to your word.

For "The Friend."

The following newspaper paragraph shows that people of other denominations are not blind to the inconsisteney with our principles of some things which have been tolerated of latter years in certain portions of our beloved Society:

"The Quakers, until quite a recent period, buried their dead in graves undistinguished by any monument or mark of diserimination. At the present time, we believe, American Quakers are allowed to erect headstones of a few inches in height, with the names or initials of their deceased friends inscribed thereon. Whether a similar relaxation of the old rule has been made in England or not we do not know; but Mr. Conway, in one of his letters to the Cincinnati Commercial, speaks of visiting the ancient Friends' cemetery in London, wherein lie the remains of George Fox, the founder of the Society. Every sod in this field of an aere and a half lies over a grave, but, with a single exception, there is not a mound or a monument to define the plaee of any one's interment, but simply a level greensward. Near the center of this field, but whether or not over the spot where he was buried we do not know, is a small plain slab on whieh are the words: 'George Fox; born 13th day of the 11th month, 1624, died 1690.' 'When we consider,' says Mr. Conway, 'the towering monuments we have passed, the eolumns raised to soldiers and sailors great and small, to saints like George III. and slayers like the Duke of Wellington, this little solitary stone, about a foot high, marking the spot where a great religious genius was laid to rest, is exceptionally sublime. One end of the ground is occupied by a large tent in which the Quakers are now holding nightly meetings for "preaching the Gospel." On the gate-way inside there is a hand-bill which shows us how much harder it is for a sect to stick to the principles of its founder than to reverence his dust. If there was one principle that was sacred in the time of Fox, it was that the preacher should preach only as he was moved at the moment by the Spirit, and if not moved, he was to sit in silence. But there is a big placard advertising that on Sunday a certain Mr. Grubb will preach, and on Monday one Pomphrey—I think that is the name—and there appears no intimation that it will be under any condition that the Spirit will move them.'"

"Going West"—and Giving it up.—The Baltimore American makes this statement: Those who have a hankering after the cheap lands of the far West, should give attention to a faet reported by a gentleman who says he has been in the United States Land Office for five years, that about one half the homestead entries made are abandoned, and the land entered by others; in many eases the entry is abandoned three or four times before coming into the possession of persons who hold it permanently. Proof of six months' abandonment is sufficient to have the entry cancelled. This alone, and there is no reason to doubt the fact stated, should convince those who have but small means how poor are their ehances of success in regions where, if there are neighbors to be found, every one has as much as he can struggle under in his efforts to effect a elearing, and hence if sickness or aceidents of any kind should overtake the settler, what an amount of sorrow and trouble, and finally a loss of all the labor that may have been performed, must finally attack those who seek their fortunes in those desolate regions.

For "The Friend."

Andrew Sowle.

The following notice of this Friend is taken from the account given of him in the first volume of "Piety Promoted."

"Andrew Sowle of London, received the truth as professed by Friends, in his young years, and became obedient thereto, and gave himself up to its living power, by which he was enabled with much cheerfulness to undergo manifold afflictions and persecutions; for being a just and upright man, he was zealous for the propagation of the truth, to which, both by conversation and sufferings, be bore a faithful testimony.

He was a printer by trade, and engaged himself freely in printing Friends' books, when he had large offers of advancing himself in the world, made to him by his relations and others, if he would have desisted therefrom. But his love to truth, and the desire he had to be instrumental in his calling for spreading it abroad, would not suffer him to hearken to any of these offers. He freely gave himself up to this service, even in times of the fiercest persecution, believing it his duty so to do, though therein he should hazard the outward substance God had blessed him with, and his life also. For several years together, he was in continual danger upon that account, his house being often searched, and his printing materials and presses as often carried off or broken in pieces. During this time though he met with great losses and had at one time about a thousand reams of printed books taken from him, he was never heard to complain, but he would say he was glad to have any thing to lose for truth, and that the Lord had made him worthy to be a sufferer for it. This quiet resignation of himself to the Divine will, brought conviction to the consciences of some of his persecutors. It more than once occurred when persons came to take away his printing press and other property, and had seized upon all, he set meat and drink before them, according to the command, Rom. xii. 19, 20, to feed even his enemies, thus overcoming evil with good.

As this sincere man met with great sufferings, so had he large experiences of the goodness of God towards him in many remarkable providences. At one time he was taken at a meeting of the people called Quakers, and carried to Newgate, and being examined by Sir Richard Brown, the persecuting mayor, who, understanding he was a printer, threatened to send him after his brother Twin, (as he called him, who sometime before suffered in Smithfield for printing a treasonable book), to whom this meek man replied, 'Thou wilt not live to see it:' and the event justified his words, for Brown died soon after.

After many exercises and trials in divers ways, which it would be too long to recite, he was visited with weakness of body the beginning of the Tenth mo. 1695, and grew weaker and weaker till the 25th of the same month. His patience and resignation to the will of God, during the time of his weakness were such, that he was seldom heard to complain, but would say, that he was given up to the will of God; saying often, that he had no dependence on any thing, save upon Christ Jesus, the good Samaritan, on whom was his whole dependence.

George Whitehead, with another friend, coming to visit him, he said he had served truth faithfully, according to what the Lord had been pleased to make manifest to him; and that in what he had done, he had not sought himself, but the honor of God. He would often exhort his family to faithfulness, and his young ones also to seek the Lord in the days of their youth. His reproofs to those who had done amiss, were so kind and so convincing, that a servant of his said he stood more in awe of a reproof from him, than the severest treatment of another. 'His end,' said he, 'being in love to convince me that I had done that which is not right.'

William Penn, the night before he departed, came somewhat late to visit him, and finding him in a sweet composed frame of mind, (for indeed he was to appearance as though he ailed nothing), asked him how he did; he answered with much cheerfulness, his satisfaction and peace of mind were great, and that he waited for his change. The said Friend, who had been many years acquainted with his industrious and innocent life, after some discourse with him, kneeled down and prayed that the Lord would give him the reward of his labor; for through him many blessed truths had been brought into the world, &c. After prayer was ended, he acknowledged William Penn's love, telling him he was well satisfied in his condition, and in the truth of God which he had professed; and that he had nothing to do but to wait in the will of God till his change came; and so in much love they parted, signifying his love to and unity with all Friends, in the truth.

After that, he lay sweetly retired, waiting for his change, and had his senses perfectly and clear to the last, which was about eight the next morning; at which time his wife came to his bedside, and asked him how he did; he answered, 'Oh Jane, never such a good night as this:' and the same minute shut his eyes, and with a hymn of praise to God, offered up his last breath, and fell asleep, not so much as fetching the least sigh, nor was any alteration seen in his countenance. So easily and quietly did he leave this world in which he had known much exercise, and is gone to his everlasting rest, with God's faithful servants.

He finished this life the 26th of the Tenth month, in the year 1695, at his house in Holywell lane, London, in the sixty-seventh year of his age.

Rom. viii. 18. 'For I reckon that the sufferings of this present time, are not worthy to be compared with the glory which shall be revealed in us.'"

Satan a Bad Paymaster.—"What does Satan pay you for swearing?" said the deacon to one whom he heard using profane language.

"He don't pay me anything," was the reply.

"Well, you work cheap: to lay aside the character of a gentleman; to inflict so much pain on your friends and civil people; to suffer, and, lastly, to run the risk of losing your own precious soul, and (gradually rising in emphasis,) and all for nothing! You certainly do work cheap—very cheap indeed."

As a wise child maketh a happy father, so a wise father maketh a happy child.

Ice in Melville Bay.

Captain Markham's description of steering among the ice in a whaling voyage is so graphic that we propose making a few unconnected extracts from his journal:

"One must actually experience the dangers of Arctic navigation before they can be realized. Several of the floes that we passed today were filled up with masses of hummocky ice, formed in solid square and cubic blocks, resting in an uneven and confused manner, one on the other, and presenting in places varied brilliant tints of blue.

"These hummocks are formed by the action of one floe against another, pressing and squeezing off by their ponderous weight, those fragments which rest on the floe where they have fallen.

"It is most interesting to watch from the forecastle the ship battling, as it were, with the ice, one moment striking a floe, stem on, causing the ship to come to a dead stop, at another making a cannon from one piece and striking a second on her opposite bow, which will rebound with such force as to make the ship's head swerve from four to six points; again, there are other pieces which are pressed down by the weight of the ship's bow, and which, when released of the pressure, rise rapidly and suddenly in most unexpected directions. Great care must be taken to fend off these latter pieces by means of long poles, as they spring up in the water to such a height, and with such velocity, that they have occasionally been known to rise under one of the boats, completely smashing it. Several icebergs were passed, one, the height of which we estimated at over four hundred feet. By way of making us feel easy and comfortable amongst so many of these huge masses of ice, the captain beguiles the time by recounting to us a few of his own personal experiences during his long and arduous services in these regions.

"Whilst serving as harpooner on board a whaler (in much about the same position in Davis' Straits as we are to-day), his ship was running under reefed topsails and foresail at the rate of ten knots an hour before a strong southerly gale, snow falling heavily, and the weather, to use a seaman's expression, as thick as pea soup. The men were employed in getting the boats in board, and securing them from the heavy and angry white-topped waves that come curling up astern and on each quarter, apparently eager to overtake and swallow up the little vessel that was flying in mad career along their crests. Suddenly a huge mountain of ice was seen ahead. To have struck it would have been total destruction to the little craft, and death in all its horrors to those on board. 'Hard-a-port,' was yelled in agonized tones from the look-out on the forecastle, 'hard-a-port,' was echoed along the deck, and answered quickly and smartly by the ever watchful and ready helmsman. To answer and to act was the work of a moment, a breathless suspense for all on board, and amidst the sighing of the wind, the creaking of the masts, and the rattling of the blocks and cordage, accompanied by a far more fearful and dreadful sound, namely, that of the sea dashing over the berg, the little ship, obedient to her helm, flew up to the wind, and as she did so, the eddy and the back-water from the lumbering mass of ice nearly threw her upon her beam ends to windward. She quickly righted, and as the wind again caught her sails her lee yard-arms scraped along a steep and preeipitous berg, causing fragments to break off, which actually fell upon the ship's deck. In another moment they were clear—and saved! the enemy with whom they had had so elose a death struggle lost to sight in the thiek snow and foam astern.

* * * * * * * *

"Shortly before noon, the captain seeing what he considered a good lead, though separated from us by a broad stream of ice, determined upon boring his way through. Steam was raised, the ice anchors taken on board, and at the apparently unyielding ice we went full speed. Men were stationed on the floe, on each bow of the ship, whose duties were to remove with long boat hooks and handspikes the fragments of ice as they were broken off and crushed by the force of our blows. The ice in many places was several fect in thickness, and the floes had long projecting tongues under water, commonly called calves, and these catehing the fore foot of the ship would frequently turn her head round, and consequently away from the passage aimed at.

"Pieees of ice of considerable magnitude, broken off by our repeated charges, would pass along under the bottom of the ship, and, emerging up the screw aperture, prevent the propeller from performing its revolutions, and therefore bringing the engine to a dead stop. Those of the ship's company remaining on board were all this time employed in running from side to side on the upper deek, for the purpose of rolling the ship and thus crushing the ice and making a free passage for us to pass through.

"Our exertions were rewarded with success, and we soon had the satisfaetion of emerging into a clear lead, through which we steamed into a fine open water. The other two vessels, observing our success, immediately took advantage of the opening we had made, and were soon in our wake.

"Off the Duck Islands were several large bergs aground, between two of which, whose summits towered far above our mast-heads, we steered, beholding with admiration their wonderful structure. One was most beautifully adorned on the side nearest us with an ornamental fringe of icicles, pendant from its overhanging brow.

"Now our troubles are about to commence, for stretching out from the nearest point of the shore to the northward and westward, as far as the eye can reach, is our great enemy, the dreaded floe ice of Melville Bay.

"Imagining we saw a 'lead,' closed only by a narrow neck of ice, we endeavored by 'but ting,' and 'boring,' to break through this obstacle; but though we tried for a couple of hours, we were unable to advanee a single ship's length, and we were compelled to retraee our steps and search for a lead elsewhere.

"To the northward of us, and therefore ahead, we can see the smoke and top-gallant yards of another whaler, just visible above the icy horizon, but the floes have apparently closed up the passage by which she had gone through, so that the knowledge of her position is of very little value to us.

"Most ominous and significant preparations were made during the day. Provisions were hoisted up from below, and ranged along the upper deck, in readiness to be plaeed in the boats or thrown out on the ice, should it be necessary to abandon the vessel, each man of the ship's company being ordered to have a shift of elothing packed up handy in a small bag. When a vessel is 'nipped' by the iee, there having been no time to cut a dock out of the land floe, this relentless foe must pass either over or under the ship, and that so quickly, that the men have barely time in the former ease to jump out on the ice. Several instances have occurred in which the ice has nipped and gone through a ship; and on one occasion that of the whaler 'North Britain,' in the year 1830, it is related that the surgeon, who was sitting in the cabin at the time, beheld the ice breaking through both sides of the ship, and he was barely able to make his retreat in safety. In that year no less than twenty vessels were lost in Melville Bay, some of them being literally crushed to pieces. The year 1819 was also most disastrous to our whaling fleet, fourteen vessels having been lost; in fact until the introduetion of steam, scarcely a season passed without the destruction of many vessels. The water below the ice in Melville Bay could indeed unfold a sad tale. Many is the stout ship, manned by a daring crew and eommanded by a skilful and brave master, that has perished, crushed into innumerable fragments by the insatiable and ponderous floes rapidly closing upon the unlucky and doomed vessel, swallowing her so rapidly as barely to allow time for the escape of the crew.

"It is very remarkable that these frequent causalties are seldom or ever attended with loss of life. The real danger to be apprehended on that score is from insufficient food and exposure in a rigorous climate. After the mishap has taken place, if there are no vessels in company, the shipwreeked crew must needs find their way to the nearest Danish settlements, and this can only be done by means of boats or sledges; in the latter ease only when the ice is of sufficient thickness to render travelling on it perfectly safe.

"Since steam has been introduced into the whaling trade, the dangers of Melville Bay have been much reduced, and vessels have of late years been enabled to navigate those waters in comparative safety. I make use of the expression 'comparative safety,' advisedly, for of course there are instances in whieh even steam vessels have been lost; but these are happily rare."—Markham's Cruise in Baffins' Bay.

For "The Friend."

Extract from the Journal of George Fox, 1656.

About this time many mouths being open in our meetings to declare the goodness of the Lord, some that were young and tender in the truth would sometimes utter a few words in thanksgiving and praises to God; that no disorder might arise from thence in our meetings, I was moved to write an epistle to Friends, by way of advice in that matter:

"All my dear friends in the noble seed of God, who have known his power, life, and presence among you, let it be your joy to hear or see the springs of life break forth in any; through which ye have all unity in the same, feeling and power. And above all things take heed of judging any one openly in your meetings, except they be openly profane or rebellious; such are out of the truth; that by the power, life, and wisdom ye may stand over them, and by it answer the witness of God in the world, that such whom you bear your testimony against, are none of you, that therein the truth may stand clear and single, but such as are tender, if they should be moved to bubble forth a few words, and speak in the seed and Lamb's power, suffer and bear that; that is, the tender. And if they should go beyond their measure, bear it in the meeting for peace and order's sake, and that the spirits of the world be not moved against you. But when the meeting is done, if any be moved to speak to them, between you and them, one or two of you that feel it in the life, do it in the love and wisdom that is pure and gentle from above, for love is that whieh edifies, bears all things, suffers long, and fulfils the law.

In this ye have order and edification, ye have wisdom to preserve you, all wise and in patience, which takes away the occasion of stumbling the weak, and the occasion of the spirits of the world to get up; but in the royal seed, the heavy stone, ye keep down all that is wrong, and by it answer that of God in all."

For "The Friend."

"The William Penn Charter School."

Most of the Philadelphia readers of "The Friend," have been familiar with what have been known as the "Corporation Schools." They originated from a petition made by Friends, in 1696, to Lieutenant-Governor Markham of Pennsylvania, and his Council, for authority to establish a school for the education of both sexes in elementary knowledge, languages and seienees. Subsequently Wm. Penn granted three successive charters, in 1701, 1708, and 1711. It is under this last that "The Overseers of the Public School founded by Charter in the Town and County of Philadelphia," now aet. Its preamble contains the following: "Whereas the prosperity and welfare of any people depend in great measure upon the good education of youth, and their early instruction in the prineiples of true religion and virtue, and qualifying them to serve their country and themselves, by breeding them in reading and writing, and learning of language and useful arts and sciences, suitable to their age, sex and degree, which cannot be effected in any manner so well as by erecting public schools for the purposes aforesaid," &c.

In carrying out the provisions of the charter, with the increase of population, several additional schools were added to the first, and as many as nine or ten were some years baek in operation at one time; and very many of the most useful citizens of Philadelphia, both members of the Society of Friends and others, received the greater part of their education at these seminaries, whieh were placed under the care of the best masters whose services could be procured, most of whom were members among Friends. The inauguration of the Free Public School system of Philadelphia, gradually established a competition with the "Corporation Schools," which much diminished the usefulness of many of them, and from several causes which it is not necessary to enlarge upon here they declined, until the Board of Overseers decided that it was best to abandon them as then constituted, and to found a new school, which should be as thorough and as practically useful as they could make it. Accordingly, in the latter part of last year they purchased a lot 58 feet by 132 feet, on Twelfth St., below Market, and have altered the dwelling which already stood upon it to suit the requirements, and the school, to be known as the William Penn Charter School, is to be opened, for boys only, on the 2nd day of Seeond month of this year, under the care of Richard M. Jones, head master. If the school should sueceed in aecordance with the expeetation of the Overseers, it may ultimately be enlarged and adapted for the education of both sexes.

For "The Friend."

The Mennonites in Dakota.

The following is an extract from the report of a committee of Mennonites of Pennsylvania, who have just returned from a visit of sympathy and assistance to those of their Russian brethren who have recently settled in Dakota. The famine with which these were threatened was promptly provided against by the committee, who purchased a large supply of flour in Yankton, and arranged for its distribution to the needy.

"We visited many of the brethren. They heartily rejoieed to see us. They manifested unto us all the love possible. We attended three of their meetings. Twice were the appointments made on our aceount. The greater number live in sod houses which they erected. We were in one of these houses, where services were held, and where we met an aged grandmother on her bed, who had been overtaken with a prairie fire. She was in such great misery and so badly burned, that it was heart-rending to see her. Near to her lay a nearly grown-up girl, who was also badly burned. Here was lamentation, misery and want. Such a house of mourning we have never before seen among our brethren.

At nearly every place we came to we were surrounded by the brethren, who solicited us to help them. They say the winter will soon set in; they can obtain no labor to earn anything, and have no bread for themselves and their children. They live very plainly, and appear to be well contented when they have bread and coffee. Their greatest solicitation is for bread. And notwithstanding the difficulties which meet them in commencing a new settlement, and the sorrows and trials by whieh they are surrounded in their new life, we met none who wished to be again in Russia. They appear to be satisfied that they are living in a land where they have freedom of conscience. In outward forms they are somewhat different from us; but, so far as we can understand, their confession of faith harmonizes with ours. Pride was nowhere visible among them.

We met none among the Russian brethren who chewed tobacco or smoked. They say that through smoking great misfortunes have occurred, that extensive fires have originated thereby, and that all use of tobacco is unnecessary."

India Rubber.—The increase which has taken place in the consumption of this article may be seen from the statistics of the amounts imported into Great Britian in various years. In 1830 the amount imported was 49,952 pounds, in 1852, 2,195,984 pounds and in 1867, 8,932,672 pounds. The chief supplies of india rubber are derived from Bengal and New Granada. The erude article arrives at the manufactory in various shapes, according to the mode in which it is eolleeted by the natives of the different countries which produce it. The finest qualities generally come in the shape of curiously formed bottles, and the coarser kinds in roughly kneaded balls of about four or five inches in diameter. It is no unusual thing to find stones and other heavy substances mixed with the rubber, for the colleetors have learned the art of adulteration. After being softened by steeping in hot water, the rubber passes through the breaking and cleaning machines. Such is the adhesive nature of the material, that it would be impossible to break or clean it in a dry state, and eonsequently jets of water are made to flow on the rubber and cylinders when the maehines are in operation. The water, besides carrying off the impurities set free by the action of the rollers, causes the rubber to assume a granulated appearance, and under the pressure of the cylinders it is formed into a web. The webs of washed rubber, which are made only three or four yards long, are taken to a drying room, where they are hung up in a dry atmosphere for several weeks.

From the drying room the rubber is taken to the mill, which is of the most powerful construction; for the rubber is stubborn stuff, and submits only to a degree of force that would destroy almost any other non-metallic substanee.

The grinding machines to the operation of which the rubber is next subjeeted, consist of two eylinders, one of whieh is slightly heated by steam, and the webs formed by the washing maehines are kept revolving round the eylinders until all appearance of granulation disappears, and the stuff becomes quite plastic. At this stage the rubber has incorporated with it, sulphur, or other chemical substances, whieh determine its ultimate character, and is then made up into rolls of seven or eight pounds eaeh. The further treatment of the rubber depends on the purpose to which it is applied.—The Industries of Scotland.

Dr. Fothergill says, "On me the world has not frowned; I counted not its favors nor feared the reverse. It is time, however to think of getting into port, and as the wind serves, I hope to make use of it for the best of purposes—Security."

THE FRIEND.

FIRST MONTH 16, 1875.

Thomas Story, in his journal, speaks of having a meeting with Friends at Salem, Massachusetts, where, he says, "part of my testimony was against a sleepy state in some, and a wandering spirit in others; whieh I perceived infested and hurt that meeting, and hindered the growth of several. It was a tender comfortable meeting, and I was told afterwards there was great need of such a testimony; one aneient Friend confessed with tears that he had received great hurt in meetings by a wandering spirit, which draws away the mind from a true and sincere waiting upon God, and hinders its progress in the Truth, and in true worship."

There are many in the present time, who, like the "aneient Friend" of whom Thomas Story speaks, ean acknowledge the hurt they have received from a "wandering spirit," when they were endeavoring to draw near to the Source of all good. Not only when gathered with their Friends for this especial purpose, but in their more private retirements, they often are disturbed with great unsettlement of mind. Their thoughts seem to wander to the very ends of the earth. The most trivial object—an artiele of dress, a passing insect, the floor on which their eye rests, or the rustle of a garment—may suggest a train of ideas, whieh follow each other with wonderful eelerity, and lead to imaginations or reflections altogether unconneeted with the worship of the Almighty. When aroused from their reveries, with a feeling of sorrow for wasted time, and humiliation for their weakness, they may remember with desire former seasons of favor in which the mind has been awed into a holy calm by the sense of the Divine presenee, or been melted into tenderness by the refreshing influence of that stream which makes glad the whole heritage of God. Yet they are abundantly convinced by experience, that they eannot command these visitations of Heavenly love, which are dispensed by our Heavenly Father in such manner and time as He sees best.

It seems needful here to extend the caution, that none settle down into an easy, unconcerned state in our religious meetings; concluding, that as the Divine visitations are not at their control, they have no duty to perform beyond their presence at the stated time and plaee. A religious exercise must be maintained, an endeavor to have the mind turned to the Author of all our blessings, waiting with fixed attention to receive from Him, sueh comfort or instruction as it may please Him to bestow.

Let all, then, be careful not to grow weary in well-doing. The promises are still sure: "They that wait upon the Lord shall renew their strength," and "In due season ye shall reap, if ye faint not." The Lord will never desert His children, who in sincerity strive to do His will; and whose earnest and continued desire it is, in meetings and out of meetings, to look to Him for help, strength and guidance, with the honest purpose of faithfully obeying His directions. It is greatly to be feared that many persons, becoming weary of this humiliating exercise, whieh to the natural man hath no form nor eomeliness in it, have been led to substitute therefor various exereises which their own unassisted powers enable them to perform. It is to this cause, in part at least, may be attributed the tendency which is manifested in some portions of our Society, to introduce into meetings for worship, the reading of portions of scripture, and the praetice of singing; as well as the increase of vocal offerings which earry with them little or no evidenee of true religious weight. Some persons find it much easier to attempt to teach others the truths of religion, than to be themselves experimental learners in the school of Christ, under the diseipline of His cross. Such compass themselves about with sparks of their own kindling, and will ultimately discover that these efforts can not promote their religious growth, or yield them substantial comfort.

The experience of Christopher Story, a valuable minister in the early days of the Soeiety of Friends, may be encouraging to some honest-hearted ones, who are at times disheartened with a sense of dryness and deadness of spirit in their religious meetings.—Speaking of the time when a meeting was first established among the newly convinced Friends of his neighborhood, he says: "When we sat down together, I may say I was hard beset to keep my mind from running hither and thither after the transitory things of this world; and a great warfare I had for the greatest part of the meeting. Yet near the conclusion, those vain thoughts vanished, and the Lord was pleased to bring to my remembrance, how that men who had great possessions in this world, had their day, and were gone; and I saw clearly, in a little time that my day would soon pass over. I was comforted in my spirit, and my inward man renewed in a sense of the Lord's nearness.

"Though we were at times plentifully fed with that bread which came down from heaven, and sat together at the Lord's table, where the wing of His power was known to overshadow us; yet at other times the Lord tried us with want; and at a certain time it entered my mind as a weighty consideration why it should be thus, we being the same people, and sometimes had very good and comfortable meetings, and were sometimes very dry and barren in our meeting together. As I was thus concerned in my mind, it opened to me, that there should be seed-time and harvest, summer and winter, unto the end of the world. So I saw clearly there were times to abound, and times to suffer want; and I desired to rest satisfied in the will of God."

SUMMARY OF EVENTS.

FOREIGN.—Alfonso, the new sovereign of Spain, arrived at Barcelona in a Spanish frigate on the 9th inst. The prefect of the city and a number of deputations went on board the frigate and welcomed the King to Spain. A crowd of citizens also gave an enthusiastic welcome. On the 10th he left Barcelona for Valencia, en route to Madrid, where he was expected by the 12th inst.

Isabella, ex-Queen of Spain, has received a telegram from a number of Catalonia corporations, inviting her to take up her residence in Barcelona.

The Bank of Spain has advanced the government Treasury 40,000,000 reals.

All the great Powers of Europe have authorized their representatives at Madrid to enter into semi-official relations with the new government.

A dispatch to the London Daily Telegraph says that Castelar is preparing to quit Spain before King Alfonso's arrival.

Two Protestant newspapers have been suppressed in Madrid.

King Alfonso has sent a telegraphic dispatch to Canovas del Castello confirming the ministerial appointments, and expressing the hope that there will now be inaugurated an era of real liberty, peace, and forgetfulness of past discords.

It is reported that Don Carlos is determined on continuing the war, notwithstanding the restoration of the monarchy. He has issued a proclamation in which he declares, as head of the Spanish Bourbons, he contemplates with profound sorrow the attitude of his cousin, Alfonso, whose inexperience has led him to consent to being the instrument of the same persons who expelled him and his mother.

In the province of Valencia an engagement between the Carlist and national troops resulted in the defeat of the former, with the loss of forty men killed and many more wounded or captured.

On the 6th inst. President MacMahon sent a message to the Assembly, urgently requesting the following legislation: First. The passage of a bill creating a second Chamber. Second. Provision for the maintenance of the statu quo until 1880, in the event of MacMahon's death before the expiration of his term. Third. That when the second Chamber is organized both Chambers shall decide upon a definite government to succeed the Septennate.

The President, in the course of his message, says: "I have instructed the government to ask you to place a bill for the creation of a second Chamber on the order of the day for one of your next sittings. The conservative interests most imperatively demand its adoption. The point relating to the transmission of power after 1880 must be as promptly settled. It ought to be so regulated as to leave to future Assemblies complete liberty to determine the form of government." After the reading of the President's message it was moved that the constitutional bills be placed on the order of the day after the army bill, and that priority of consideration be given to the second Chamber bill. The House divided on this motion and rejected it. Legitimists and Bonapartists as well as Republicans, voting against it. All the factions hope to come into power in 1880, if not before, and the proposal to lay aside at the present time their prospects, by a substantial agreement to establish an empire, a kingdom or a republic at that date, creates bitter hostility on all sides.

In consequence of the disagreement between the President and Assembly, the French Ministers tendered their resignations, and MacMahon attempted to form a new Cabinet, but not succeeding in the attempt, has requested the ministry to remain in office for the present.

The Bank of England has reduced its rate of interest from six to five per cent.

On the 5th inst. an explosion of fire damp occurred in a coal mine at Rotherham, Yorkshire, causing the death of eight persons.

Icebergs are reported to have been met with in the Bay of Biscay during the rough weather by the Mongolia, which arrived at Southampton lately. Icebergs have been met with as far south, but generally well out in the Atlantic Ocean.

Last year India had 3,700,000 acres of land devoted to cotton cultivation.

Cape Town advices report that the country has been visited by a terrific storm. The wind blew a hurricane and most disastrous floods prevailed. The damage on both land and water has been very great.

London, 1st mo. 11th.—Consols 92¼. The rate of discount in the open market for three month's bills is four per cent., which is one per cent. below the Bank of England rate.

Liverpool.—Uplands cotton, 7⅝*d.*; Orleans, 7⅞*d.*

The London Times says it has reason to believe Bismarck has intimated to Spain that the German government will defer the recognition of King Alfonso until the decree suspending two Protestant newspapers, and closing the Protestant chapel in Cadiz, is repealed.

UNITED STATES.—The bill which recently passed the Senate to provide for the resumption of specie payments at the beginning of the year 1879, has also passed the House of Representatives. The vote stood yeas 136, nays 99.

The estimates of the production of gold in the United States, since the discovery of gold in California, show the product in California in 1848 to be $10,000,000, and in 1873, $17,000,000. The highest amount was in 1865, $65,000,000. The entire product from 1848 to 1873, inclusive, was $985,800,000; other states and territories, $254,950,000, being a total of $1,240,750,000. Total silver, $186,050,000. Total gold and silver from 1848 to 1873, inclusive, $1,426,800,000.

On the 7th inst. two of the State tobacco warehouses in Richmond, Va., were completely destroyed by fire, together with 2,700 hogsheads of tobacco valued at $250,000. Total loss about $350,000.

A collision occurred the night of the 7th inst., on the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad, a few miles from Washington. The postal car took fire and was destroyed together with the entire northern mail from Washington. The mail agent was crushed to death before the car took fire. About $400,000 in new national bank notes and $300,000 in legal-tenders and fractional currency were burned.

The total number of interments in the city of New York during 1874, was 28,632. There were 1659 deaths of diptheria, 457 of small pox, 1237 from violence, and 178 suicides.

From the report of the Superintendent of Common Schools in Pennsylvania, it appears there are now 16,641 schools, attended by 850,774 pupils. The sum of $9,408,819 was expended under the direction of the School Department. This amount includes the expenses of Orphan Schools and Normal Schools.

The public debt of the State of Pennsylvania on the 30th of 11th mo. 1874, was $24,371,884. The debt was reduced $1,230,186 during the year.

The funded debt of the State of Massachusetts is $29,465,204, against which the State has a sinking fund of nearly $11,000,000.

The morning of the 10th inst. was very cold over a large part of the Northern States, the temperature at sunrise ranging from zero to 20 deg. below, according to location; at Des Moines, Iowa, the thermometer marked 28 deg. below zero, the night of the 8th inst.

When the Legislature of Louisiana met on the 4th inst. at New Orleans, the highly excited condition of party feeling led to confusion and disorder. Several persons whose names were not on the list furnished by the Returning Board as having been duly elected, took their seats with the approval of about half of the regularly chosen members. The others protested against the proceeding, and in order to prevent violence and bloodshed the alleged intruders were expelled by U. S. troops, on which the Conservative or Democratic members withdrew and the House became divided into two bodies.

President Grant has been severely censured by many persons of both parties for permitting any interference with the organization of the Legislature by the military authorities whose proceedings are denounced as tyranical and unconstitutional.

The Philadelphia and Reading Railroad Company carried 6,348,812 tons of coal to market during 1874. In 1873 the amount carried was 6,546,194. The net profits of the year were $5,720,206, from which 10 per cent. dividends were made, and a large balance carried to the reserve fund.

The interments in Philadelphia last week numbered 305, including 37 of consumption, 15 croup and 12 scarlet fever.

The Markets, &c.—The following were the quotations on the 11th inst. New York.—American gold 112¼. U. S. sixes, 1867 and 1868, 118; new five per cents, 113⅞. Superfine flour, $4.15 a $4.30; State extra, $4.75 a $5.10; finer brands, $5.50 a $10.50. No. 2 Chicago spring wheat, $1.10½; No. 2 Milwaukie, $1.12½; red western, $1.28 a $1.29; white Michigan, $1.33. Canada barley, $1.60; State, $1.43. Oats, 66 a 71 cts. Yellow corn, 86½ a 88 cts. Philadelphia—Uplands and New Orleans cotton, 15¼ a 16 cts. Superfine flour, $4 a $4.25; extras, $4.50 a $4.75; finer brands, $5 a $7.50. Red wheat, $1.18 a $1.20; amber, $1.22 a $1.23; white, $1.28 a $1.33. Rye, 95 a 97 cts. New corn, 83 a 84 cts. Oats, 64 a 67 cts. About 3,200 beef cattle sold at from 4½ to 7¾ cts. per lb. gross. Sheep 5 a 7¼ cts. per lb. gross, and hogs $10.50 a $10.75 per 100 lbs. net for corn fed.

WANTED.

A Governess for Westtown Boarding School, to enter on her duties at the opening of the next Session.

Apply to

Elizabeth C. Scattergood, West Chester, Pa.
Hannah Richardson, Wilmington, Del.
Hannah Evans, No. 322 Union St., Philada.
Lydia L. Walton, Moorestown, N. J.

MUSINGS AND MEMORIES

Published by the Tract Association of Friends, is now for sale at their Depository, No. 304 Arch St., Philada. Price, in cloth, $1.00 per copy or $9.00 per dozen, $1.10 each, post paid.

FRIENDS' ASYLUM FOR THE INSANE.

Near Frankford, (Twenty-third Ward,) Philadelphia.

Physician and Superintendent—JOSHUA H. WORTHINGTON, M. D.

Applications for the Admission of Patients may be made to the Superintendent, or to any of the Board of Managers.

DIED, on the 24th of 10th mo. 1874, in Loudon Grove Township, Chester Co., Pa., MARGARET BAILEY, in the 97th year of her age, an esteemed member of West Grove Particular and New Garden Monthly Meeting.

——, on Fourth-day, the 23d of 12th month, 1874, JOHN M. SHARPLESS, in the 64th year of his age, a member and overseer of Chester Particular and Monthly Meeting, Pa.

——, at her residence in Haddonfield, N. J., on the 29th of 12th mo. 1874, ANNIE SNOWDON, in the 33d year of her age, daughter of the late Joseph Snowdon, and a member of Haddonfield Monthly Meeting of Friends. The following lines were written by her a short time previous to her death: "I feel this day as if there were but little to look to or depend upon in this world, and that the ties of earth are fast being broken from all outward things. I often long for that rest which this world cannot give or take away; but is everlasting, even to the end of the world."

WILLIAM H. PILE, PRINTER,
No. 422 Walnut Street.

THE FRIEND.

A RELIGIOUS AND LITERARY JOURNAL.

VOL. XLVIII. SEVENTH-DAY, FIRST MONTH 23, 1875. NO. 23.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY.

Price Two Dollars per annum, if paid in advance. Two dollars and fifty cents, if not paid in advance.

Subscriptions and Payments received by

JOHN S. STOKES,

AT NO. 116 NORTH FOURTH STREET, UP STAIRS.

PHILADELPHIA.

Postage, when paid quarterly in advance, five cents.

For "The Friend."

The German Arctic Expedition of 1869—70.

English and American readers have long been familiar with the narratives of those daring adventurers who have pushed their journeys into high northern latitudes. The most of these have chosen the route by Baffin's Bay and Davis' Straits, penetrating the icy arm of the sea which lies between Greenland and the coast of North America. During the past year an English translation has been published of the expedition sent out under German auspices in 1869, whose object was to explore the eastern coast of Greenland, and, using that as a base, to attain as high a northern latitude as was practicable. As this field of research is comparatively new to American readers, some notice of their observations and experiences may prove acceptable to the readers of "The Friend."

The expedition was under the command of Captain Karl Koldewey, and sailed from Bremen in two small vessels—the Germania, a steamer about 90 feet in length and 143 tons burden, and the Hansa, a sailing vessel of 76¾ tons. Both vessels were thoroughly provisioned and equipped for their perilous undertaking, and in addition to the requisite seamen, a corps of scientific observers were attached to them.

"From the west coast of Norway to far beyond the North Cape rush the waves of the Atlantic, which are never covered with ice; while on the east coast of Greenland, down to its most southerly point, presses from one year's end to another a powerful mass of heavy ice. The boundary of the icy sea (as a sea covered with ice) may now upon the whole be settled by a line drawn from Cape Farewell to Iceland, from thence to Spitzbergen, and lastly to Nova Zembla. The cause of this appearance lies really in the existence of two important sea-currents. From the coast of Norway up to Spitzbergen and Nova Zembla stretches the north-easterly branch of the Gulf Stream, driving back all floating ice, and from the comparative warmth of its waters conducing to the melting of the same all along the ice boundary.

On the other hand, on the east coast of Greenland runs the Polar current in a south-westerly direction to a great distance, carrying with it the heavy ice formed in the extreme north, and picking up on its way all the younger ice frozen during the winter; while, from the coldness of its waters, it prevents the melting of the same in a remarkable degree. Thus it is explained how from Davis' Straits also must flow towards the south just such another cold, ice burdened stream, and how on the voyage from Germany to New York are often seen one or more drifting pieces of ice, or even icebergs. This Greenland ice-current forms the main outlet for the removal of the Polar ice, and we may very reasonably liken it to a floating glacier whose farthest domain is the Polar basin.

Upon the nature of the ice in this Polar current, the following preliminary remarks may throw some light. At the beginning of the current, in the same latitude as Spitzbergen, and much nearer to the coast, as far down as Iceland, the largest fields of ice are to be found; tracts of enormous extent and sometimes more than fifty feet in thickness. Between these, and originating from them in the course of time, by their breaking up, are smaller fields called ice-floes; and these, increased by thawing, by the surrounding driving and pressing, as well as by the waves, break up in small pieces, the real hummocks which prevail at the eastern boundary of the current, at the 'ice-line,' as well as at the most southerly end. As a last remains of the disturbing process, huge hummocks float about, or cover the broken ice or the wide expanse of sea with small brashes. Real icebergs seem almost peculiar to the southern part of the coasts; such an iceberg is not formed in the sea, but is a broken piece of glacier moving with its lower part in the sea, and from which at different times large pieces have been broken off by the pressure of the water, and carried onward by the current.

The breadth of this ice current, and also the position of the ice-line is, as may be imagined, very different at different times of the year. Whilst in spring-time it runs about the middle of Iceland past Jan Mayen to the southern point of Spitzbergen, in summer it retreats nearer to the coast, and stretches somewhat in the direction of the west-end of Iceland to the north of Spitzbergen. Some pieces of ice, under peculiar circumstances, naturally float very far from this boundary towards the south-east; sometimes even reaching the Faroes."

The Germania and Hansa reached this ice-belt between 74° and 75° North latitude, and attempted to make their way through it to the true coast. The Hansa became entangled among the floes, and being without the help of steam power, was so blocked in that escape was impossible. As the colder season of the year approached, the crew found themselves attached to a floe some two or three miles in diameter. On this they built a house, using coal tiles for the walls and sailcloth and matting for the roof, and stored it with fuel and provisions. This hut was placed about a quarter of a mile from the edge of the ice. The following extracts from the published narrative will show how important this precaution proved to the crew of the Hansa.

"On the 18th of October early, again clear and still frosty weather; but already at half-past eight A. M. the ice began to thrust and press round the ship. This unpleasant noise lasted until the afternoon. At regular intervals underneath, the ice, like a succession of waves, groaned and cracked, squashed and puffed; now sounding like the banging of doors, now like many human voices raised one against the other, and lastly, like a drag on the wheel of a railway engine. The evident immediate cause of this crushing was that our field had turned in drifting, and was now pressed closer to the coast-ice. The two floes of ice lying before the vessel received the hardest pressure, so that for a time the Hansa was spared, though trembling violently. The masts often swayed so much that it seemed as though some one was climbing them. At the same time our field sustained long and deep fissures, by which the whale-boat seemed so endangered, that we thought it necessary for its safety to bring it alongside the ship. Towards evening the weather cleared again; but our fear that this day was only a forerunner of worse proved itself on the following day too well grounded."

"On the 19th some mighty blocks of ice pushed themselves under the bow of the vessel, and although they were crushed by it, they forced it up, slowly at first, then quicker, until it was raised 17 feet out of its former position upon the ice. This movement we tried to ease as much as possible by shovelling away the ice and snow from the larboard side. The rising of the ship was an extraordinary and awful, yet splendid spectacle, of which the whole crew were witnesses from the ice. In all haste the clothing, nautical instruments, journals, and cards were taken over the landing-bridge. The after part of the ship, unfortunately, would not rise; and therefore the stern-post had to bear the most frightful pressure, and the conviction that the ship must soon break up forced itself upon our minds.

About five o'clock there was again a pause in the pressure of the ice-floes, and the raised ice retreated, so that in the course of an hour the ship, lying on her starboard side, glided into more open water. The hawsers, which had been cast loose, so as not to stop her from rising, were again made fast; after which we went to the pumps, and found that there were seventeen inches of water in the hold. We set them working at once, and about seven o'clock had the pleasure of finding them run more slowly. We now allowed ourselves time for our evening meal, for we might entertain the hope that, in spite of the frightful pressure she had sustained, our ship was not very leaky. But in a quarter of an hour's time, we found to our terror, that there was again two feet of water in the pumps. Even admitting that part of this water had penetrated slowly from the after part, the ship must be dreadfully leaky. Again we set to work at the pumps, determined to do all in our power to rid our vessel of the water. A half-hour's work, however, showed that all exertions were vain; the depth of the water in the cabin was increasing steadily, though slowly. The most careful investigation of the ship, however, did not reveal the position of the leak. In vain did both captain and steersman listen for the sound of water dripping. Evidently this was taking place at some part of the ship's bottom, under the coal. Besides the leak in the stern-post, the keel must have sustained a fracture; perhaps even the ship's sides near the floor-heads had been forced in. Enough! the fate of the Hansa was sealed; our good ship must go to the bottom! Calmly, though much moved, we faced this hard fact. The house of coal on the southward drifting ice fields was destined now to be, through the long Arctic winter, our only place of refuge—perhaps too, our grave! There was not a minute's time to be lost. The work went steadily forward. By nine P. M. the fall of snow had ceased; a clear, starry heaven shone down upon us, and the moon shed her light over the dreary ice-field. Now and again the northern lights shot upwards in ever-changing colors. At the same time it was freezing sharply, the thermometer marking in the night — 13° F. One half of the men stayed by the pumps; the others were busily engaged until midnight, in bringing the most necessary articles from the vessel on to the floe."

"One great evil with the pumps was, that the water streaming on the deck could not, owing to the uneven position of the vessel, run off through the scuppers, which were filled up with ice; and thus it froze between the provision-chests. Soon the whole of the after-deck was full of ice; the water which was pumped up stood round the pumps, and the men who worked them had to stand in tubs in order to keep dry. To make a way for it to escape, we had to make holes in the bulwarks; though without any particular result, as from the intense cold the water came out quite in a half-frozen state. At the same time the ice settled so over the cabin skylight, that the water penetrated through the chinks. The night allowed our exhausted men some hours of refreshing sleep; then all gladly drained a cup of hot coffee, and set to work again. But the catastrophe was near! At eight A. M. the men who were busy in the forepeak getting out fire-wood came with anxious faces, with the news that the wood was already floating below. When the captain had ascertained the truth of this intelligence, he ordered the pumping to cease. It was evident that the ship was sinking, and that it must be abandoned."

(To be continued.)

What Father Takes.—There is food for thought in the story that is told of a young lad who for the first time accompanied his father to a public dinner. The waiter asked him, "What will you take to drink?"

Hesitating for a moment, he replied, "I'll take what father takes."

The answer reached his father's ear, and instantly the full responsibility of his position flashed upon him. Quicker than lightning various thoughts passed through his mind; in a moment his decision was made, and in tones tremulous with emotion, and to the astonishment of those who were acquainted with him, he said, "Waiter, I'll take water."

For "The Friend."

Papal Infallibility.

The dogma of Papal infallibility, as set forth by the decrees of the Vatican Council held at Rome in the year 1870, has given rise to various questions of grave interest both to those professing the Romish faith and others without its pale. One of the first results of its promulgation in Europe was the public protest of such members of the Roman Catholic Church as Dollinger, Gratry, Hyacinthe, and Montalambert, and the organization, in some places, of separate congregations under the title of the "Old Catholics." A noticeable event of recent date, in connection with these assumptions of the Papacy, is the Tract issued by W. E. Gladstone, the English statesman and late Premier in the British Cabinet, entitled, "The Vatican Decrees in their bearing on Civil Allegiance." The author in defining the object and scope of his essay, alludes to certain language used by him in a former publication in the Contemporary Review, and uses the following expressions: "I was speaking of the question whether a handful of the clergy are, or are not, engaged in an utterly hopeless and visionary effort to Romanize the church and people of England. At no time since the bloody reign of Mary has such a scheme been possible. But if it had been possible in the 17th or 18th centuries, it would still have become impossible in the 19th: when Rome has substituted for the proud boast of semper eadam a policy of violence and change in faith; when she has refurbished and paraded anew every rusty tool she was fondly thought to have disused; when no one can become her convert without renouncing his moral and mental freedom, and placing his civil loyalty and duty at the mercy of another; and when she has equally repudiated modern thought and ancient history." To prove the soundness of these assertions, the author of the tract proceeds to cite various facts and arguments, from which we propose to make a few extracts:

"The Popes had kept up, with comparatively little intermission, for well nigh a thousand years, their claim to dogmatic infallibility; and had at periods within the same tract of time, often enough made and never retracted that other claim which is theoretically less but practically larger—their claim to an obedience virtually universal from the baptized members of the church." * * * "It was well known that in the days of its glory and intellectual power, the great Gallican Church had not only not admitted, but had denied Papal infallibility, and had declared that the local laws and usages of the church could not be set aside by the will of the pontiff."

Gladstone then proceeds to give the testimony of the Prelates of the Romish Church in England at the time of the consideration of Catholic emancipation from political disabilities by the Parliament of 1826, respecting the moral obligation of the Papal decrees on British subjects in regard to their allegiance to the government. Among these occurs the following: "They declare on oath their belief that it is not an article of the Catholic faith, neither are they thereby required to believe, that the Pope is infallible." "They declare that neither the Pope nor any other Prelate or ecclesiastical person of the Roman Catholic Church, has any right to interfere, directly or indirectly in the civil government, nor to oppose in any manner the performance of the civil duties which are due to the king."

"Since that time (says Gladstone) all these propositions have been reversed. The Pope's infallibility, when he speaks ex cathedra, on faith and morals has been declared, with the assent of the Bishops of the Roman Church, to be an article of faith binding on the conscience of every christian. His claim to the obedience of his spiritual subjects has been declared in like manner without any practical limit or reserve; and his supremacy, without any reserve of civil rights, has been similarly affirmed to include everything which relates to the discipline and government of the church throughout the world; and these doctrines we now know on the highest authority, it is of necessity for salvation to believe."

The text of the Decrees of the Vatican Council are here subjoined, that our readers may see their full scope for themselves.

First Dogmatic Constitution on the Church of Christ.

Published in the Fourth Session of the holy Œcumenical Council of the Vatican.

Pius Bishop, servant of the servants of God, with the approval of the Sacred Council, for an everlasting remembrance.

The eternal Pastor and Bishop of our souls, in order to continue for all time the life-giving work of his Redemption, determined to build up the holy Church, wherein, as in the house of the living God, all who believe might be united in the bond of one faith and one charity. Wherefore, before he entered into his glory, he prayed unto the Father, not for the Apostles only, but for those also who through their preaching should come to believe in him, that all might be one even as he the Son and the Father are one. As then he sent the Apostles whom he had chosen to himself from the world, as he himself had been sent by the Father: so he willed that there should ever be pastors and teachers in his Church to the end of the world. And in order that the Episcopate also might be one and undivided, and that by means of a closely united priesthood the multitude of the faithful might be kept secure in the oneness of faith and communion, he set blessed Peter over the rest of the Apostles, and fixed in him the abiding principle of this twofold unity, and its visible foundation, in the strength of which the everlasting temple should arise, and the Church in the firmness of that faith should lift her majestic front to Heaven. And seeing that the gates of hell, with daily increase of hatred, are gathering their strength on every side to upheave the foundation laid by God's own hand, and so, if that might be, to overthrow the Church: we, therefore, for the preservation, safe-keeping, and increase of the Catholic flock, with the approval of the sacred Council, do judge it to be necessary to propose to the belief and acceptance of all the faithful, in accordance with the ancient and constant faith of the universal Church, the doctrine touching the institution, perpetuity, and nature of the sacred Apostolic Primacy, in which is found the strength and solidity of the entire Church, and at the same time to proscribe and condemn the contrary errors, so hurtful to the flock of Christ.

Chapter I.

Of the Institution of the Apostolic Primacy in blessed Peter.

We therefore teach and declare that, according to the testimony of the Gospel, the primacy of jurisdiction over the universal Church of God was immediately and directly promised and given to blessed Peter the Apostle by Christ the Lord. For it was to Simon alone, to whom he had already said: 'Thou shalt be called Cephas,' that the Lord after the confession made by him, saying: 'Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God,' addressed these solemn words: 'Blessed art thou, Simon Bar-Jona, because flesh and blood have not revealed it to thee, but my Father who is in heaven. And I say to thee that thou art Peter; and upon this rock I will build my Church, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it. And I will give to thee the keys of the kingdom of heaven. And whatsoever thou shalt bind on earth, it shall be bound also in heaven; and whatsoever thou shalt loose on earth, it shall be loosed also in heaven.' And it was upon Simon alone that Jesus after his resurrection bestowed the jurisdiction of chief pastor and ruler over all his fold in the words: 'Feed my lambs; feed my sheep.' At open variance with this clear doctrine of Holy Scripture as it has been ever understood by the Catholic Church are the perverse opinions of those who, while they distort the form of government established by Christ the Lord in his Church, deny that Peter in his single person, preferably to all the other Apostles, whether taken separately or together, was endowed by Christ with a true and proper primacy of jurisdiction; or of those who assert that the same primacy was not bestowed immediately and directly upon blessed Peter himself, but upon the Church, and through the Church on Peter as her minister.

If any one, therefore, shall say that blessed Peter the Apostle was not appointed the Prince of all the Apostles and the visible Head of the whole Church Militant; or that the same directly and immediately received from the same our Lord Jesus Christ a primacy of honor only, and not of true and proper jurisdiction: let him be anathema.

Chapter II.

On the Perpetuity of the Primacy of blessed Peter in the Roman Pontiffs.

That which the Prince of Shepherds and great Shepherd of the sheep, Jesus Christ our Lord, established in the person of the blessed Apostle Peter to secure the perpetual welfare and lasting good of the Church, must, by the same institution, necessarily remain unceasingly in the Church; which, being founded upon the Rock, will stand firm to the end of the world. For none can doubt, and it is known to all ages, that the holy and blessed Peter, the Prince and Chief of the Apostles, the pillar of the faith and foundation of the Catholic Church, received the keys of the kingdom from our Lord Jesus Christ, the Saviour and Redeemer of mankind, and lives, presides, and judges, to this day and always, in his successors the Bishops of the Holy See of Rome, which was founded by him, and consecrated by his blood. Whence, whosoever succeeds to Peter in this See, does by the institution of Christ himself obtain the Primacy of Peter over the whole Church. The disposition made by Incarnate Truth therefore remains, and blessed Peter, abiding through the strength of the Rock in the power that he received, has not abandoned the direction of the Church. Wherefore it has at all times been necessary that every particular Church—that is to say, the faithful throughout the world—should agree with the Roman Church, on account of the greater authority of the princedom which this has received; that all being associated in the unity of that See whence the rights of communion spread to all, might grow together as members of one Head in the compact unity of the body.

If, then, any should deny that it is by the institution of Christ the Lord, or by divine right, that blessed Peter should have a perpetual line of successors in the Primacy over the universal Church, or that the Roman Pontiff is the successor of blessed Peter in this primacy: let him be anathema.

(To be concluded.)

An Extract from "The Higher Life," by J. Baldwin Brown, B. A., minister of Brixton Independent Church.

"And ye became followers of us, and of the Lord; having received the word in much affliction, with joy of the Holy Ghost."—1 Thess. i. 6.

* * * This will help us a little way and in a wholly right direction, to understand the joy of the Holy Ghost. It is the joy of the man who has found the true Lover and Lord of his being whom he can serve with perfect loyalty, love with passionate devotion, and obey with supreme delight. It is the joy of the lonely widowed soul, which has discovered its kindred; of a sick man who feels within himself that the spring of his life is healed, that his vigor and vital energy are restored. The earth does not gladden more when the morning sun flashes his light on her bosom, than does the soul rejoice, when the light of the heavenly sun first touches it and it passes out of darkness into warm, bright day. Circumstances are nothing, "I have found Him whom my soul loveth," is the cry; and nothing can kill, nothing can even dash, the joy which that consciousness quickens within.

Man can glory in infirmities, in distresses, in necessities, in persecutions, if they but bring him more fully into the sphere of Christ's fellowship and love. These men were so filled with the joy of God's salvation, that I question not that it was a matter of glorying with them if they were called to suffer, that they might show how much they loved, and how much they were beloved. This explains the constant language of the apostles about glorying in tribulation, and counting it all joy if they were called to suffer for Christ. Their joy was so exuberant that they were ready at any moment to put it to the test of the keenest pain. All love delights in sacrifices, yea in sufferings, for its object. Suffering ceases to be pain if love consecrates it; it becomes a holy and blessed offering, and it tends ever to the increase of love.

And let the careless reader understand, that the choice in life is mainly between suffering with joy of the Holy Ghost, and suffering without it. Do not let the devil cheat you into the belief that the choice is between an easy, merry, careless, pleasant life-course, and the struggles and sorrows of the Christian, lightened, and sweetened by the joy of the Holy Ghost. Life is no merry march, or holiday pastime for any of us; but the true agony of life must be with those who are without God, and without hope in the world. God sets no such choice before us as the pleasures of sin and the pains of godliness. The choice is simply between the sorrows of sin and the sorrows of redemption; the one embittered by the frown, the other illumined by the smile of God.

There is sorrow with a curse in the heart of it, and sorrow with a blessing; sorrow with the devil for a comforter, and sorrow with God for a friend; sorrow with the fiends for comrades, sorrow with Christ as the elder brother of the spirit; sorrow with hell at the end of it, and sorrow with heaven. Here is your choice, the only choice which the Lord leaves you. Choose at once—for the sorrow comes hastening on. Escape is blankly impossible, but you may meet it with a smile of welcome, with a song of triumph. Fiercely as the storm may beat, this anchor at any rate will hold. "It is a faithful saying that if we die with Him, we shall live with Him;" "if we suffer, we shall reign." How faithful, they know full well "who received the word with much affliction and with joy of the Holy Ghost," and have passed up to the recompenses of eternity.

For "The Friend."

Thomas Loe.

The following brief notice of this faithful servant and minister of Christ, is taken from the account published in "Piety Promoted."

"He lived in Oxfordshire, but his ministerial labors led him frequently into other parts of England, and also into Ireland, which he visited several times. His first visit to Ireland was about the year 1657; Francis Howgil, Edward Burrough, and others, having been there before him. He had an excellent gift, was sound and clear in the ministry, powerful in speech, sharp and quick in his understanding, and many were convinced and received truth by his ministry in that nation; and others who were convinced before, he confirmed in the truth. He was often publicly engaged with priests and opposers, and the Lord made him an instrument in his hand to confound the adversaries of truth and stop the mouths of gainsayers. His company was very desirable, being pleasant and sweet in conversation, and sympathizing with his friends in affliction, so that he could speak a word in due season. He sometimes met with great hardships in the performance of his religious duties, and was several times imprisoned on that account.

He died in London in the year 1668, and on his death-bed expressed his faith and confidence in the Divine goodness as follows:—'Glory to thee, O God, for thy power is known.' 'God is the Lord.' Then speaking to William Penn, whom the Lord had made him instrumental to convince, he said, 'Dear heart, bear thy cross. Stand faithful for God, and bear thy testimony in thy day and generation, and God will give thee an eternal crown of glory that shall not be taken from thee. There is not another way than that the holy men of old walked in, and it shall prosper. God has brought immortality to light, and immortal life is felt; glory, glory, for he is worthy. My heart is full, what shall I say? His love overcomes my heart; my cup runs over, my cup runs over. Glory, glory to his name for ever. He is come, he has appeared, and will appear. Friends, keep your testimony for God, live with him and He will live with you.'"

Animals that Chew the Cud.—Ruminating animals gather their food rapidly, give it a few cuts with the teeth and swallow it. It goes to an inferior receptacle, where it is moistened; this is very essential if it be dry hay. When the animal has filled himself, he masticates the food thus stowed away in his stomach, raising it cud by cud. When a portion is completely masticated, it passes to another receptacle and the progress of digestion goes on. Thus an ox left to himself will raise and masticate all his food thus stowed away in his stomach. If he be pushed and worked hard, and does not have time to masticate, he falls off in flesh, his health is poor, his digestion incomplete.

The horse, on the contrary, however much in a hurry he may be, must masticate each mouthful before he swallows it. A hungry ox, let into a meadow, will fill himself in twenty minutes, while a horse would want at least an hour and twenty minutes to take the same amount of grass. The ox, deer, sheep, goat, chamois and rabbit, being the natural prey of ferocious beasts, are endowed with the extra stomach in which hastily to stow away the food without mastication. This may, perhaps, be regarded as a wise provision of Nature, enabling them to sally forth where the food is plenty, and in a short time fill themselves and retire to a place of safety to ruminate their food at their leisnre.

Selected.

THE VOICE IN THE TWILIGHT.

I was sitting alone in the twilight,
With spirit troubled and vexed,
With thoughts that were morbid and gloomy,
And faith that was sadly perplexed.

Some homely work I was doing
For the child of my love and care,
Some stitches half-wearily setting
In the endless need of repair.

But my thoughts were about the "building,"
The work some day to be tried,
And that only the gold and the silver
And the precious stones should abide.

And remembering my own poor efforts,
The wretched work I had done,
And, even when trying most truly,
The meagre success I had won:

"It is nothing but wood, hay, and stubble,"
I said; "it will all be burned—
This useless fruit of the talents
One day to be returned.

"And I have so longed to serve Him,
And sometimes I know I have tried;
But I'm sure when He sees such building
He will never let it abide."

Just then, as I turned the garment,
That no rent should be left behind,
My eye caught an odd little bungle
Of mending and patchwork combined.

My heart grew suddenly tender,
And something blinded my eyes
With one of those sweet intuitions
That sometimes make us so wise.

Dear child, she wanted to help me;
I knew 't was the best she could do;
But oh, what a botch she had made it—
The gray miss-matching the blue!

And yet—can you understand it?—
With a tender smile and a tear,
And a half-compassionate yearning
I felt she had grown more dear.

Tben a sweet voice broke the silence,
And the dear Lord said to me,
"Art thou tenderer for the little child
Than I am tender for thee?"

Then straightway I knew his meaning,
So full of compassion and love,
And my faith came back to its Refuge,
Like the glad returning dove.

For I thought, when the Master Builder
Comes down his temple to view,
To see what rents must be mended,
And what must be builded anew;

Perhaps as he looks o'er the building,
He will bring my work to the ligbt,
And seeing the marring and bungling,
And how far it all is from right;

He will feel as I felt for my darling,
And will say as I said for her,
"Dear child, she wanted to help me,
And love for me was the spur.

"And for the true love that is in it,
The work shall seem perfect as mine,
And because it was willing service,
I will crown it with plaudits divine."

And there in the deepening twiligbt
I seem to be clasping a Hand,
And to feel a great love constraining me,
Stronger than any command.

Then I knew by the thrill of sweetness
'T was the hand of the Blessed One,
Which would tenderly guide and hold me
Till all the labor is done.

So my thougbts are nevermore gloomy,
My faith no longer is dim;
But my heart is strong and restful,
And my eyes are unto Him.

Selected.

NOT KNOWING.

I know not what will befall me! God hangs a mist o'er my eyes;
And o'er each step of my onward path, He makes new scenes to rise,
And every joy he sends me, comes as a sweet and glad surprise.

I see not a step before me, as I tread the days of the year,
But the past is still in God's keeping, the future his mercy shall clear,
And what looks dark in the distance, may brighten as I draw near.

For perhaps the dreaded future has less bitterness than I think;
The Lord may sweeten the water before I stoop to drink,
Or, if Marah must be Marah, He will stand beside its brink.

It may be there is waiting for the coming of my feet
Some gift of such rare blessedness, some joy so strangely sweet,
Tbat my lips can only tremble with the thanks I cannot speak.

Oh restful, blissful ignorance! 'Tis blessed not to know,
It keeps me quiet in those arms which will not let me go,
And hushes my soul to rest on the bosom which loves me so.

So I go on not knowing! I would not if I might;
I would rather walk on in the dark with God, than go alone in the light,
I would rather walk with Him by faitb, than walk alone by sight.

My heart shrinks back from trials which the future may disclose,
Yet I never had a sorrow but what the dear Lord chose;
So I send the coming tears back, with the whispered word, "Ile knows."

A Noble Sentiment.—The late Dr. Nelaton, of Paris, the favorite physician of Napoleon III., said to his son and son-in-law, the night before he died, "Do a great deal of good in this world, but make as little noise in it as you can."

For "The Friend."

John Griffith.

(Continued from page 170.)

It is no uncommon thing in these days to hear it said, "that as I have consecrated myself, body, soul, and spirit to the Lord, therefore my salvation is secure." But with other serious objections, this seems deficient in the second premise of the argument; for who knows that they have experienced that tremendous plunge of self-abnegation, or have yielded up "the stiff necked will of the flesh to the keen slaughter of that Holy Spirit which is quick and powerful, and sharper than any two edged sword," so as to have consecrated body, soul and spirit to Him, who, through death, opened up a new and living way for us, and whose eyes are as a flame of fire? The self-righteous Pharisee no doubt thought he had been consecrated when he stood and prayed thus with himself: "God, I thank thee, I am not as other men are," &c. From the Saviour's relation of some formerly, they no doubt thought salvation had been attained, where they assured Him, "We have eaten and drunk in thy presence, and thou hast taught in our streets." Whose answer, nevertheless, to them was, "I know ye not whence ye are," &c. After all that any can do, it is of the Lord's mercies that we are not consumed. And oh! that all may take heed of presumptuous assurance. Salvation is not a work wrought out solely by any thing we can do of ourselves; neither is it obtained to any from merely saying they believe in Christ as their Saviour, or in any mere outward confession of Him before men; but salvation, or in other words the washing of regeneration and the renewing of the Holy Ghost, is a deeply humiliating and prolonged work—"first the blade, then the ear; after that, the full corn in the ear"—which can be effected only by our passive submission to the Refiner's fire and the Fuller's soap, or that thoroughly cleansing baptism of the heart which makes us indeed new creatures; wherein the man of sin is put off, and the new man, which after God is created in righteousness and true holiness, is put on. It is not duly understood and appreciated, that a death unto self, is the requisite foundation for the Christian life; or, in other words, that it is by a total surrender of ourselves to the leavening power of saving grace, that a union with Christ, the light of life, is effected, and the garment of regeneration and salvation wrought.

We would by no means call in question, not only the practicability but the indispensable need of holiness or perfection in this life, through power from on high, "till," in the langnage of the Apostle, "we all come in the unity of the faith, and the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ." But so far as the writer's observation goes, such has been the corresponding growth in self-distrust, in the feeling of unworthiness, in meekness, in humility, that as the Christian character has grown in depth and weight and living experience, the sense and sight thereof, not to say boasting, has as equally diminished: witness those of New Testament record who had administered to the necessities of their Lord; who, when told so by Him, queried of Him, "When saw we thee an hungered," &c. Matt. xxx. 34 to 41. And witness also the apostle Paul's modest words to the Philippians: "Not as though I had already attained, either were already perfect: but I follow after, if that I may apprehend that for which I am also apprehended of Christ Jesus." Robert Barclay in his proposition on Perfection, says: "For myself, I shall speak modestly, as acknowledging not to have arrived at it; yet I dare not deny it, because it seems so positively to be asserted by the apostle: 'He that is born of God sinneth not, neither can he, because the seed of God remaineth in him.'"

John Griffith's example nor precept gave no countenance to these extravagant views. He was in great fear at times lest he should fall short in his duty; and, looking upon himself as a child in the Truth, he had great regard for those set over him, and whom he thought pillars in the house of God—fathers and mothers in Israel—and ever manifested due regard and respect for them. This is more to be commended at the present time, seeing the forwardness, the over-confidence, the want of due deference and respect in some, who, nevertheless, might have been, as Marcus and Aristarchus, fellow-workers unto the hoped for kingdom of God.

J. Griffith writes:—"After I had appeared in public somewhat more than two years, I found some drawings of gospel love, as I apprehended, to visit the meetings of Friends in some parts of New Jersey; and being but young in the ministry, I was in great fear, at times, lest I should be mistaken, in that which I, at other times, thought to be the Divine requirings: for I much dreaded that of running when and where the Lord did not send me, lest I should bring dishonor to his blessed name, and expose myself naked and void of proper qualifications for so great an undertaking, to wise and discerning Friends. Great indeed was my distress night and day, crying to the Lord for greater confirmation; which he graciously heard, and was pleased, by a dream or night-vision, to afford me such full satisfaction in, that I do not remember I had any doubt afterwards concerning it."

He relates respecting this journey: "I found the Lord by his blessed power near, opening my mouth, and enlarging my heart abundantly in his work." Being encouraged thereby to proceed, he attended, with many smaller meetings, the Yearly Meeting at Shrewsbury, which he represents as much favored with the Divine presence, and attended by divers ministering Friends from Pennsylvania. He thus continues:

"It neither suited my growth in the ministry, nor my inclination, to take up much time in those large meetings. I therefore, for the most part, gave way to such as were better qualified for the work, and in my esteem worthy of double honor. I had a great regard in my mind for those whom I thought pillars in the house of God, whether ministers or elders; and really think, if such had given it as their sense that I was wrong in my offerings, at any time, I should have been more likely to depend upon their judgment than on my own. I looked upon myself, for many years, as a child in experience every way; and therefore thought a subjection was due from me, to those who were fathers and mothers in Israel, and never, that I remember, manifested any disregard to them; which is now a satisfaction to my mind. I confess, I have at times since had cause to marvel at the forwardness of some, who though but children, if rightly children at all, have undertaken the work of men, hardly discerning a willingness to give the preference to any; and when they have been admonished by those of much more experience than themselves, they have been apt to retort, or to plead a Divine commission, and that it is right to obey God rather than man; as if they had the sole right of speaking and judging too. I had divers times seen the great danger of being deceived and misled by the transformer, and was therefore afraid of being confident of my own sight, and looked upon it to be safest for me to stand quite open to instruction, let it come from what quarter it would; there being nothing more desired by me than to be right."

After alluding to the snares and temptations, with "the polluting floods," which he says, "were almost continually poured out of the dragon's mouth, in order to carry away my imagination into unlawful delights, from which I did not always wholly escape," he thus precepts:—"Then, traveller Zionward, look forward to the joy set before thee, not suffering thine eyes to wander about thee, lest they convey such delight to thy heart, as may infect thy soul with pernicious distempers, by which thou mayest be unable to proceed in thy journey toward the holy city; and through the defect occasioned thereby to thy sight, thou mayest, in a great measure, lose the glorious prospect of its beautiful situation and the splendor of its structures. Beware thou do not load thyself with the seemingly pleasant fruit of that country through which thou travellest. Although it may appear to hang plentifully on each hand, it will neither be of any use to thee in that heavenly country whither thou art going, nor for refreshment on the way thither. If thou hast a mind that thy own way should be prosperous, look steadily forward, with a single eye to the recompense of reward. Bring every motion towards seeking satisfaction in forbidden places, immediately to the cross, and thou wilt much sooner find the yoke of Christ made easy and his burden light, all his ways pleasant and his paths peace. This is abundantly better than that uneasy, in and out way of travelling, sinning and repenting again, which lays a foundation for murmuring, labor and toil, crying out, as some do all their days, There is no complete victory to be obtained over sin on this side of the grave; miserable sinners we must remain: when the cause thereof is wholly in themselves; because they will not come into and abide in the help of the Lord, against the mighty enemies of their soul's happiness, which is altogether sufficient to give a complete victory over them; yea, to give power to triumph, and say, "We are more than conquerors through him that hath loved us."

About this time, viz., the 30th of the Tenth month, 1737, John Griffith entered into the marriage state with Rebecca, the daughter of Josiah and Sarah Fearn, and settled in Lower Darby, about seven miles from Philadelphia, near a large meeting.

A few years after this, in company with his friend William Brown, a member of the same Quarterly Meeting, and also a minister, J. G. paid a religious visit to New England. He says: "We laid our concern before the meeting of ministers and elders, where it appeared to be well approved, which was no small strength to us. I did then, and hope ever shall, greatly love and highly value the unity of the brethren; having found it no small strength and encouragement to me, in many low and trying times, which are necessary and unavoidable in that solemn engagement of visiting the churches; especially now in their low declined state. It became indubitably clear to my understanding, that it is altogether impossible to administer, in a feeling effectual manner, to people's several states, unless we are baptized thereunto. Well adapted words, and sound doctrine, as to the external appearance, may, without much difficulty, be attained; seeing we have the Holy Scriptures, and many other good books, containing the principles of truth, and the Christian experience of the Lord's people: yet all this, delivered with the tongue of men or angels, will prove an empty, fruitless sound, without the power and demonstration of the Spirit of Christ, who enables his upright hearted ministers to search all things, yea, the hidden mystery of iniquity, as well as the deep things of God, even as he led his prophet Ezekiel to look through the hole in the wall, that the most secret abomination may be brought to light, and testified against."

(To be continued.)

For "The Friend."

An Indian Funeral in the Yo Semite.

During a few days sojourn in the Yo Semite, we frequently met with scattered groups of Indians, whose general physiognomy reminded us of those we had seen in Southern California.

They were small in stature, with a mop of coarse, black hair falling in heavy masses over their faces, which are almost always gentle in expression and rather sad. Extreme age had given a strange, weird look to a few among them, while others presented an aspect of degraded mentality, scarcely elevated above the brute. Notwithstanding their many privations, no care for the morrow oppressed their untroubl espirits, evidently to them life seemed a perpetual holiday. As scattered groups lounged lazily about the hotels, we noticed their bright, eager eyes, were caught by every novelty the "Americanos" indulged in; and the uncouth attempts of the many timid riders, looking down breathlessly from the perilous height of a horse's back, or the efforts of the discomfited equestrians, who preferring a mule, found it would not proceed at a decorous pace en route for Mirror Lake or Vernal Falls, Sentinel Dome, or Cloud's Rest—afforded abundant food for merriment; as every little "mucha cho" in California, American, Spanish or Indian, can ride—and ride, too, as no other children can.

The second morning after our arrival, we remarked to the proprietor of our hotel, that we would like to see the homes of some of the native inhabitants of the Yo Semite. He replied, "that can be readily done, madam; their wigwams are yonder, near the Indian canon; one of this tribe died yesterday, and will be buried to-day; yonder they go, now, with the coffin which they made at our house last evening."

We soon found the path leading to the encampment. It was a lovely morning in early summer, the air soft and balmy; the quiet around us only interrupted by the dash, and roar of the great Yo Semite Falls, a short distance on our left; a majestic cataract, leaping over the perpendicular walls of the valley; and precipitated with so much force, that the water becomes a snowy sheet of foam and spray—"a misty veil of purified tears." This in contrast with the velvet green of the meadows lying on each side of the rapid Merced, forms a scene of inexpressible beauty, loveliness, and grandeur, a combination probably unsurpassed.

A walk of half a mile brought us to the wigwams, which appeared to be deserted, but we soon found that the Indians were gathered about the open grave, at some distance from us. We hastened to the spot, and found about thirty assembled to perform the last rites over the remains of their deceased companion. The place selected, was on the level plain, near the border of the valley, somewhat more free from the great granite boulders, which obtrude above the general surface. Spreading live oaks, covered with sombre foliage, were at no great distance from us, and nearer, growing between the rocks, we noticed azalias, and oreodaphni, or mountain laurel, intermingled with the collomia and common penny-royal of our eastern fields.

The coffin stood by the grave side; a sheet had been closely tucked in over the corpse, so that, to our regret, we could not see the face. The lid was then nailed on the rude box, all stood around in silence, except two very aged women, who, with extended arms, made a mournful lament for the dead.

The little son of the deceased, a boy of twelve, was then brought forward; he prostrated himself upon the coffin, face downward, and was held forcibly in this position by a man present.

. The blanket of the woman had been laid in the bottom of the grave; her basket, cut in two pieces, placed at each end. The coffin was then lowered, a man stood at its side and assisted the husband to descend, who in turn extended himself on the coffin lid, the daughter followed, and the little son the second time. The aged woman, who seemed to lead the ceremonies, then gathered some penny-royal, which she strewed over the coffin, placing a part in the belt of the husband.

The interment was conducted with great solemnity, and more tears were shed over this untutored child of the forest, then at many a costlier funeral. As our friends and ourselves stood among them in respectful silence, they seemed grateful for our sympathy, but our knowledge of Spanish was too limited to understand all that they wished to say to us.

The grave was then filled up with stones and earth, and the Indians returned slowly, and quietly to their homes.

On our return to the hotel we were informed that this was one of the first burials among them, as they have, hitherto, always practised cremation. S.

The Bible.—"The uncommon beauty and marvellous English of the Protestant Bible," is acknowledged even by one who styles it "one of the greatest strongholds of heresy in this country." "It lives," says Dr. Newman, "on the ear like a music that can never be forgotten—like the sound of church bells which the convert hardly knows how he can forego. Its felicities often seem to be almost things rather than words; it is part of the national mind, and the anchor of national seriousness; the memory of the dead passes into it; the fondest traditions of childhood are stereotyped in its verses; the power of all the griefs and trials of a man is hidden beneath its words. It is the representative of his best moments, and all that there has been about him of soft, and gentle, and pure, and penitent, and good, speaks to him for ever out of his English Bible. It is his sacred thing, which doubt has never dimmed, and controversy never soiled. In the length and breadth of the land there is not a Protestant, with one spark of religiousness about him, whose spiritual biography is not in his English Bible."

For "The Friend"

The following practical suggestions are taken from the late message of Gov. Hartranft, they relate to the importance of teaching our children the mechanic arts as well as storing their minds with classical and mathematical lore, and it was thought might well claim the serious attention of members of the Society of Friends at this time. In the desire for wealth which has so largely taken possession of us as a people, have we not departed from the humble simplicity of our fore-fathers, and thereby in measure lost the "dew of our youth," as it were, and become leavened into the spirit of the world:

"I am persuaded the members of the present Legislature are interested in any design that concerns the honor and welfare of the State, and I appeal to your judgment whether dictates of common sense and a proper appreciation of the true sources of our prosperity do not demand that some provision should be made for training a portion of our children in a knowledge of the mechanic arts, and I beg leave to offer a few suggestions as the outlines of a plan to impart this knowledge which, upon examination, I believe to be feasible and applicable to our system of education. Let young men in our common schools who desire to become mechanical engineers or master mechanics, or acquire a knowledge of some particular branch of mechanical industry, be transferred to schools where they can be taught the sciences that bear upon, and especially mathematics in their relations to the trade they wish to learn. Lecture and draughting rooms should be provided and a workshop furnished with all the improved machinery, the former to be presided over by a professor of mechanical engineering and the latter carefully supervised by a master mechanic. The time of the students could be divided between the schoolroom and the workshop, and the lessons taught in the one be reduced to practice in the other, and a knowledge obtained of the mechanical processes made use of from the simplest to the most complicated work. Is there any practical obstacle to educating boys in this manner so that they can calculate the size and parts of a machine, then draught and finally make it with their own hands, if required. In Philadelphia, Pittsburg, and other manufacturing cities, where the means of acquiring information of this kind are so ample, schools such as I have described, might be established without great cost, and where provision is made therefor by the local school boards, the State should be pledged to give them proper assistance."

Where and How Pins are made.—A correspondent of the Hartford Times describes a large pin manufactory and its operations as follows: The main building is of brick, 100 feet long by 40 feet wide, and four stories high. Then there is another building two stories high and 120 feet long by 30 wide. They employ about sixty hands, which is less than half the number employed in a driving season. Last week they turned out two and a half tons of pins. They have capacity for eating up 20 tons of wire in a week. Each machine is complete in itself. All that is necessary to do is to place one end of a coil of wire into its greedy maw, and it will bite off the wire the proper length, point it, swedge up the head and spit out the pins at the rate of 175 a minute. Now a slight knowledge of multiplication will enable us to get at the capacity of the concern, supposing they were driven to the utmost, with two sets of hands, day and night. They have 75 machines, each machine capable of turning out 175 pins a minute. What do we see? For one machine 10,500 pins an hour; for ten hours ten times as many or 105,000. Now the night hands come along and before daylight the busy, never-tiring brass eater has made the number 210,000. Then let us see what the 75 machines have been doing in the same time. Seventy-five times 210,000 is 15,750,000. Now that is the sum total for a single day. Multiply it by six, the number of days in the week, and you have 94,500,000 pins a week. If you have any curiosity to follow it further, you can multiply it by the number of weeks in a year and the grand total will be 4,914,000,000 pins. Whew! Enough to take one's breath away. That beats the national debt. They actually have the capacity to make more pins a year than the United States owes dollars. The principal manufactories for making pins in this country are at Waterbury, Birmingham, and Winstead, in the State of Connecticut. No wonder the question is frequently asked, "Where do all the pins go to?" For sticking them in paper the pins are fed into a hollow revolving cylinder, and are taken up in the compartments of longitudinal ribs which extend along the inner surface of the cylinder and drop upon an inclined plate, down which they slide and are caught in the links of an endless chain. Each link is notched for as many pins as make a row, and each notch receives its pin hanging in it by the head. The whole is then left together in the paper. The only attention the machine requires is to supply it with paper and pins. The first attempt to manufacture pins in this country was made soon after the war of 1812, when pins sold for $1 a paper.

For "The Friend."

Modern Skepticism.

Throughout the Christian world the minds of men appear at the present period of time, to be deeply and earnestly stirred by the speculations and theories of the so-called scientists. We hear much about the remarkable investigations of science and the great advance in knowledge, and not only is matter, but mind also, subjected to the boldest treatment by the ministers of a modern materialism. But the thoughtful inquirer very naturally as well as reverently asks, "Has any new thing happened unto us?" Where are the records of the Epicurean philosophers and infidel writers of the past ages? Let us consult their pages and consider the days of old, and we shall soon discover that the old materialism of the heathen world is only revived with the new phases and the new features of a modern era. Do we remember how the faith of Abraham was unmoved, though he dwelt in the midst of an infidel nation and surrounded by the thick darkness of the heathen world? And how did he retain his unbroken faith in the midst of a wicked and perverse generation? By obedience to the law written on the table of his heart by the finger of Him who declared "before Abraham was, I Am." He lived and dwelt in this glorious reality, and thus even is his day, experieneed the fulfilment of that declaration: "I will put my laws into their mind and write them in their hearts." Has any language of the earth, the rocks, the ocean or the everlasting hills, sileneed the word written in the hearts of men?

Do we remember that Pilate, the infidel ruler of the Jews, nearly two thousand years ago, exelaimed, "What is truth?" and in that short sentenee revealed a mind troubled and disturbed, and which by this touching inquiry proclaimed loudly its want of "that rest which remaineth to the people of God." But long before the days of Pilate, the Book of Job, the earliest religious treatise, perhaps, that is known, bears a sublime reeord on its pages, directed from those far off and distant ages to the raee of mankind throughout all the subseqnent and long suceeeding eenturies of time. And what says this sublime and inspired record? "Canst thou by searching find out God? Canst thou find out the Almighty unto perfection? Who is this that darkeneth counsel by words without knowledge? Where wast thou when I laid the foundations of the earth? Deelare if thou hast understanding. Whereupon are the foundations thereof fastened? or who laid the eorner stone thereof? Hast thou commanded the morning sinee thy days and caused the day spring to know his plaee?" Can these eloquent and inspiring queries be answered any better in the latter years of the nineteenth century, than they were three thousand years ago? But the word of faith that lives and dwells with the humble and honest believer, is neither destroyed nor weakened, for it has triumphed over the same adversaries in the past ages. Indeed the true Christian draws additional inspiration from these eonsoling pages, and in his patient pilgrimage towards a better country, that is, "an heavenly," is often permitted reverently to exclaim, "Look now at the generations of old and see; did ever any trust in the Lord and was confounded?" SENEX.

Canine Sagacity.—Miehael Conly, the sewer eontractor, is the possessor of four greyhounds, which were the other morning the means of saving a man's life, displaying a remarkable degree of sagacity in the operation. Felix Prior and James Carroll were at work n an excavation about seven feet deep; but about 9.30 o'clock, Carroll went away for something, leaving Prior in the excavation alone, and while the latter was at work the banks caved in, completely covering him up. The dogs happened to be near by, and all four of them, taking in the unfortunate man's situation, at once began to seratch away the dirt from over his head vigorously, at the same time yelping to attract the attention of the neighbors. M. Conly, who was the first to arrive upon the scene, drove his dogs away, but they returned and began to dig and yelp again. He then began to dig also, as did some of the neighbors who had been attracted to the spot by the eries of the hounds, and it was not long before the head of the buried man, who was standing up, was reached, and he was permitted once more to breathe the air, which, had he been deprived of it a few moments longer, he never would have breathed again. He was taken from the sewer unharmed, rescued from a horrible fate through the sagacity of a quartette of dogs.—East Greenwich (R. I.) Letter.

For "The Friend."

First-day Schools.

The fears that have been and that are still entertained by many well concerned Friends in regard to the effect of "First-day Schools," is in part well expressed in the following language used in a meeting of the "Presbyterian Ministerial Association," held in Philadelphia on the 11th inst. These views are, in a spirit of kindness, submitted to the eonsideration of those readers of "The Friend" who are favorable to these institutions, and with no desire to hurt or mar any really useful work, but under the impression that in the way in whieh many are eonducted, harm may result to parents, teachers and pupils. To parents, in that it releases them from a duty whieh properly belongs to them; to teachers, in undertaking to instruct children in sacred things without having any immediate call to the labor, and in many instanees it is feared without the proper needful qualifications; and to the pupils, in settling them at ease in a mere outward knowledge of the Scriptures.

"Dr. Boardman was afraid that a misapprehension existed in thinking that the pulpit did all the work, when in faet it did but very little. He considered the method of thirty or forty years ago mueh the best, when the parents were deemed the first and most important teachers of the young. He thought one of the most threatening of the acts of the ehureh was that it had laid the axe at the very root of the chureh, the ehristian home instruetion of the children; the teaching in the family whieh was the nurture of the ehureh when used in conneetion with the teaching in the sanctuary. The church required the families to be together in the morning, afternoon and evening, and where was the time for the christian parents to train the ehildren? The speaker then referred to remarks made to him by mothers during the previous week, and said it was an open question as to whether the whole Sunday sehool system was not upon an improper basis, and whether it was not better to go back to the old system, where parents taught their ehildren at home, and Sunday schools were only for those who had no parents. He knew ministers liked to preach to large evening congregations, whether eomposed of their own people or others, but as ministers themselves had unsettled the old system of home instruction when it was laid upon the consciences of the parents, by the grace of God, they eould go back to it. They had no more right to take what belongs to the houschold, than the household had to take what belonged to the church. Modern pulpit attainments, oratory and culture he did not oppose, but they had a tendeney to disparage what was really effective teaching."

Pure Water for Animals.—One reason why epidemics among eattle, hogs, and horses are so common and fatal, is because they do not have pure water. As the country grows older and is more extensively settled the streams are more likely to be polluted with excrement from decaying organisms; and this taken into the blood of animals, is sure to breed diseased conditions. Once such epidemics were common among men, and swept off a large part of the race. Now by wise hygiene most of them are avoided. The cattle and horse plague will some day be got rid of by hygiene —never by any other means.

When Dugan Clark's testimony of disownment was presented to him, for leaving the Society of Friends and marrying out of meeting, he said he was forcibly struck and felt like a poor outeast with the hedge taken away from around him. He put by all business for the remainder of that day, and walked alone in a forlorn state of mind, and as he afterward expressed, he never enjoyed a moment's satisfaetion until he was again received into membership.—An Extract.

THE FRIEND.

FIRST MONTH 23, 1875.

It was the testimony of one who had large experience "in afflietions, in neeessities, in distresses," that "we are saved by hope," and yet he adds, "but hope that is seen is not hope." To the outward vision of the living disciple of a crucified Lord, who has truly tasted that He is gracious, and longs that all may partieipate in the same rich feast, whose sight is anointed to discover the exceeding sinfulness of sin and the depths of that abyss which separates the rebellious from the favor and enjoyment of their Heavenly Father, there is much in the present aspeet of the ehurch militant to disappoint their natural expectations, that righteousness should cover the earth as the waters cover the sea, and that all things should ere this have been subdued under the feet of Him, "whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and all dominions shall serve and obey Him." There were those in the apostle Peter's day who scoffingly asked, "Where is the promise of His coming? for since the fathers fell asleep, all things continue as they were from the beginning of the creation." "But," says he, "beloved, be not ignorant of this one thing, that one day is with the Lord as a thousand years, and a thousand years as one day." Thus instructing us who still wait for the consolation of spiritual Israel after the lapse of eighteen centuries, that the final establishment of Christ's kingdom among men is none the less certain beeause His followers of that age then looked for its immediate inauguration, and we of this "see not yet all things put under Him."

The salvation and glory of the elders who obtained a good report, was their faith and hope. They endured as seeing Him who is invisible to mortal ken. "These all died in faith, not having received the promises but having seen them afar off, and were persuaded of them and embraced them, and confessed that they were strangers and pilgrims in the earth." May the exercised laborers in the church of this period recur to these shining examples of patient enduranee, and undying hope, and like them look for a city whieh hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God; and remember the deelaration made by a prophet of the Lord prior to the advent of Christ, and twice repeated after that event by the apostle to the Gentiles, "the just shall live by faith." How replete with holy hope and joy in the midst of the most depressing outward circumstances do we find this great apostle at the time of addressing his epistle to the Philippians. Then a prisoner in Rome, and in anticipation of his trial before the infamous Nero, he not only exhorts that they should be in nothing terrified by their adversaries, but adds, "Rejoice in the Lord always; and again I say, rejoice," and concludes with this precious assurance, "But my God shall supply all your need according to his riches, in glory by Christ Jesus." Isaac Penington, in a letter to Friends of his day, gives them this tender counsel. "Now Friends, in a sensible waiting and giving up to the Lord in the daily exercise by the daily cross to that which is not of the life, this work will daily go on; and ye will feel from the Lord that which will help, relieve, refresh, and satisfy, which neither tongue nor words can utter. And in that the Lord God breathe upon you, preserve, and fill you with his life and Holy Spirit, to the growth and rejoicing of your souls in Him, who is our blessed Father and merciful Redeemer; in the Lord Jesus Christ our head and king forever more. And then as to what may befall us outwardly in this confused state of things, shall we not trust our tender Father, and rest satisfied in his will! Are we not engraven in his heart, and on the palms of his hands, and can He forget us in anything He doth? Shall anything hurt us? Shall anything come between us and our life; between us and His love and tender care over us?" * * * "So my dear friends, let us retire and dwell in the peace which God breathes, and lie down in the Lamb's patience and stillness, night and day, which nothing can wear out or disturb; and so the preservation of the poor and needy shall be felt in His name, and glory sung to his name over all; which is a strong tower, a mighty impregnable rock of defence, against all assaults and dangers whatsoever, which they that have trusted therein, have already experienced it to be, and they that continue trusting therein shall always experience it so to be in all trials and dangers, whatever may happen, of what kind soever, even to the end. Amen."

SUMMARY OF EVENTS.

FOREIGN.—A Madrid dispatch of the 14th says:—"King Alfonso arrived in this capital to-day. Immense crowds witnessed his entrance and gave him an excellent reception."

The Protestant journals which were suspended have been permitted to resume publication.

On the 15th the king gave a dinner to the members of his cabinet and the diplomatic corps. A decree has been published reducing punishments in cases of violation of ordinary criminal laws. Alfonso has signed decrees relative to the salaries of the clergy, and declared that while giving respect and support to the Catholic clergy, he desires to firmly maintain religious liberty as it exists in the most civilized countries. He will assume the chief command of the army of the north, and proposes to go to its head-quarters without delay, accompanied by General Primo de Rivera and Jouvillar, Minister of War. A decree has been issued for the restoration to the Church of all ecclesiastical property not included in the redemption fund. Castelar will refuse to take his seat in the Cortes if he is required to swear allegiance to the monarchy. Serrano has gone to France, and Castelar intends to go to Switzerland.

A second election for a member of the French Assembly, in the Department of the Hautes Pyrenees, resulted in the choice of Cazeau, the Bonapartist candidate.

Elections to fill six vacant seats in other Departments have been ordered to be held on the 7th of next month.

A committee of the Assembly will report in favor of allowing the heirs of the late emperor 800,000 francs, the State retaining the museums at Pierriponds and Fontainebleau.

On the 14th inst. the directors of the Bank of England reduced the rate of discount from five to four per cent.

Information has been received from New Zealand that the cutter Lapwing was recently attacked by the natives of Santa Cruz Island, her crew overpowered and massacred, and the vessel burned. The natives afterwards attacked the British war-ship Sandfly, but were driven off.

Gladstone has withdrawn from the leadership of the Liberal party in the House of Commons, alleging that after forty-two years of laborious public life he thinks himself entitled to retire, and that he can see no public advantage in his continuing to act as leader.

Gladstone has written an article on the speeches of Pope Pius IX, which appears in the Quarterly Review. He sketches the history of the Pope's reign, points out the increased subserviency of the Roman Catholic clergy, and concludes that the mass of the British nation now repudiates the pretensions of Papacy more eagerly and resolutely than it has for many generations.

John H. Newman, the eminent Catholic divine, has written a long pamphlet in reply to Gladstone's famous expostulation on the Vatican decrees and civil allegiance. Newman asserts that there is only one oracle of God, the Holy Church, with the Pope as the head. Infallibility is declared a matter of faith in thought merely, not in actions. He secs no inconsistency in being a good Catholic and a good Englishman, and declares Gladstone's aspersions of English Catholics undeserved, his tone uncharitable, and his conclusions untrustworthy.

The steamer Bride, from Alexandria for Hull, has been lost, and twenty of the passengers and crew drowned. The steamer Faraday has arrived at Portland. She will refit and resume operations on the direct cable Liverpool, 1st mo. 18th.—Uplands cotton, 7⅝ a 7¾*d.*; Orleans, 7⅞ a 8*d.* Breadstuffs quiet.

The police have closed all the Socialist and Democratic workingmen's societies and trades unions in Frankfort, Germany.

A Constantinople dispatch says: The Committee of Relief for the famine stricken people of Asia Minor, urgently request the English and American press to let it be known that their funds are exhausted, while the distress is increasing. They state that it will be necessary to clothe, feed and give medical assistance to several hundred thousand persons until next June.

A Bombay dispatch says: The British authorities have arrested the Guicowar of Baroda, Hindoostan, on a charge of instigating attempts to poison Colonel Phayre, British political agent at that place. The city has been occupied by troops. The Viceroy of India has issued a proclamation announcing his temporary assumption of the administration of the Guicowar's dominions.

One of the chief exports of Egypt is cotton-seed; the amount sent out of the country, mainly to England, having risen from 1000 cwt. in 1860 to 3,490,080 cwt. in 1873.

Coal is beginning to attract attention in New South Wales, in some parts of which it is found in abundance. A seam seven feet thick has been opened at Boughton Creek, near the Shoalhaven River, and not far from the Moss Vale Railway station.

The Shah of Persia has granted a railway concession to the Russian General Falkenhagen, notwithstanding his existing concession to Baron Reuter. Reuter has lodged a protest at Teheran, and the British Minister to Persia has been instructed to support the protest officially.

The Prussian authorities have closed the Roman Catholic seminary at Fulda, expelled the head priest from German territory, and sequestered all the property of the bishop of that diocese.

UNITED STATES.—The President having approved the bill providing for the resumption of specie payments on the first of First month, 1879, it is now a law. President Grant accompanied the approval with a special message to Congress, in which he points out the necessity of increasing the national revenue in order to meet the several provisions of the bill. A restoration of the duties on tea and coffee is suggested as one means of increasing the receipts of the Treasury.

On the 13th the President sent a special message on Louisiana affairs, which was read in both Houses, and received the closest attention. It appeared to produce a favorable impression, being temperate and conciliatory in its tenor. The interference of the military is apologized for and excused rather than justified. The President insists that Congress shall assume its sha of responsibility for Louisiana, a duty which he h heretofore urged unsuccessfully, and now asks Congre for such proceedings as shall leave his duties perfect clear in dealing with the affairs of that State.

In New York last week there were 677 deaths, a 347 in Philadelphia.

The Commission of Engineers on the alluvial bas of the Mississippi, in their report, recommend an a propriation of $1,500,000 for Louisiana, and $500,0 each for Arkansas and Mississippi, to close the existi crevasses. The Commission says that the permane reclamation of these lands will require $46,000,000.

The travel on the Massachusetts railroads appears be remarkably well managed. Of the forty-two milli of passengers carried over the railroads of that State 1874, but a single man was killed, and only seven pe sons were injured.

The weather in Montana and adjacent territories h recently been extremely cold. At Virginia city a Helena, Montana, the mercury froze and spirit the mometers marked 45 and 44 degrees below zero. Th severe cold has caused much suffering, and a number persons have perished by freezing.

The amount received at the Philadelphia custo house for duties during 1874, were $8,392,159, which $694,921 greater than in 1873. The number of imm grants landed at this port was 5,188 more than in t previous year.

The Markets, &c.—The following were the quotatio on the 18th inst. New York.—American gold 11 U. S. sixes, 1881, 118½; do. 1868, 118½; new five p cents, 114. Superfine flour, $4 a $4.20; State ext $4.80 a $5.15; finer brands, $5.50 a $10.50. No. Chicago spring wheat, $1.07; red western, $1.24 a $1. white Michigan, $1.30. Oats, 67 a 70 cts. Weste mixed corn, 86 a 87½ cts.; yellow, 87 a 87½ cts.; whi 88 a 89 cts. Carolina rice, 7½ a 8 cts.; Louisiana, 6 6¾ cts. Philadelphia—Uplands and New Orleans o ton, 15½ a 16 cts. Superfine flour, $4 a $4.25; extr $4.50 a $4.75; finer brands, $5 a $7.50. Red whe $1.20 a $1.22; amber, $1.23 a $1.24; white, $1.28 $1.30. Rye, 90 a 95 cts. New yellow corn, 80 a 83 ct mixed, 82 a 84 cts. Oats, 65 a 68 cts. Lard, 14 c Sales of 2,400 beef cattle at from 4½ to 8 cts. per l gross, mostly from 6 to 7½ cts. Sheep 5½ a 7½ cts. lb. gross, and hogs $9.50 a $10.50 per 100 lbs. n Baltimore.—Western red wheat, $1.22; No. 2 do., $1. White corn, 79 a 82 cts.; yellow, 80 a 83 cts. Oats, a 66 cts. Chicago.—Spring extra flour, $4.25. No spring wheat, 91 cts.; No. 2 do., 88½ cts. No. 3, 83½ No. 2 mixed corn, 66½ cts. No. 2 oats, 52½ cts. La $13.30 per 100 lbs. St. Louis.—No. 2 winter red whe $1.06. No. 2 corn, 65 a 66½ cts. No. 2 oats, 56½ a cts. Milwaukie.—No. 1 spring wheat, 93 cts.; No. do., 88½ cts. No. 2 oats, 51½ cts. New corn, 63 cts.

WANTED

A Friend to have care of Friends' Western Buri ground, Sixteenth and Race streets. Dwelling ho there rent free. For terms apply, with reference, to William Kinsey, S. W. cor. Third and Vine S Israel H. Johnson, No. 16 N. 7th St., Philada

WANTED.

A Governess for Westtown Boarding School, to ent on her duties at the opening of the next Session.

Apply to

Elizabeth C. Scattergood, West Chester, Pa.
Hannah Richardson, Wilmington, Del.
Hannah Evans, No. 322 Union St., Philada
Lydia L. Walton, Moorestown, N. J.

FRIENDS' ASYLUM FOR THE INSANE.

Near Frankford, (Twenty-third Ward,) Philadelphi

Physician and Superintendent—JOSHUA H. WORTINGTON, M. D.

Applications for the Admission of Patients may made to the Superintendent, or to any of the Board Managers.

DIED, at her residence in London Britain, Chest Co., Pa., on the 5th of 12th mo. 1874, ELLEN C., w of Lewis Passmore, in the 45th year of her age, a me ber of New Garden Monthly Meeting. She was dee concerned at times for the immortal part, desiring portion of the Scriptures read to her daily. A few da prior to her decease she was enabled to say, "All r earnest prayers have been answered."

WILLIAM H. PILE, PRINTER,
No. 422 Walnut Street.

THE FRIEND.

A RELIGIOUS AND LITERARY JOURNAL.

VOL. XLVIII. SEVENTH-DAY, FIRST MONTH 30, 1875. NO. 24.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY.

Price Two Dollars per annum, if paid in advance. Two dollars and fifty cents, if not paid in advance.

Subscriptions and Payments received by

JOHN S. STOKES,

AT NO. 116 NORTH FOURTH STREET, UP STAIRS.

PHILADELPHIA.

Postage, when paid quarterly in advance, five cents.

For "The Friend."

John Griffith.

(Continued from page 181.)

It was while on the before-mentioned visit to New England, that the following conversation of J. Griffith with a landlady where he stopped, had place; which gave him the opportunity of opening an important testimony of our Society respecting baptism. It was on this wise: "The landlady coming into our room in a pleasant manner, said, 'I suppose you are travelling Friends?' My answer was, We are travellers, and we are Friends; therefore we are travelling Friends. 'But I suppose,' said she, 'you are preachers;' and added, 'I like your way very well, as you come up to the command of Christ, in travelling about as you do, more fully than our ministers: but there is something lacking with you.' What is that, said I? 'Why,' said she, 'you should baptize as well as preach.' I then asked her what we should baptize withal. She replied, 'With water, to be sure; for it is not in the power of man to baptize with any thing else.' Upon which, I showed her from the Holy Scriptures, that the primitive ministers of Christ were so gifted, as to be able to baptize believers into the name or power, of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost; instancing, in particular, that passage of Peter at the house of Cornelius, Acts xi. 15, 16. 'And as I began to speak, the Holy Ghost fell on them, as on us at the beginning. Then remembered I the word of the Lord, how that he said, John indeed baptized with water; but ye shall be baptized with the Holy Ghost.' It is evident from this account, that by the effectual preaching of Peter, the Gentiles were baptized with the Holy Ghost; and as the dispensation of God to man is the same now it was then, and He has graciously promised to be with his ministers always to the end of the world, and man, by nature in a fallen, degenerate state, is as much involved in sin and a stranger to God as he was then; no good reason can be given, why the same powerful, efficacious means are not as necessary for his recovery, by a reconciliation with his Maker, as they were at that time. The woman was very attentive to what was said on the occasion, and seemed affected, being quite silenced as to that subject. We invited her to our meeting; she told us, it was what she intended, and also to prevail with her husband to go too, if she could, but doubted being successful therein. However, she and her husband were both at the meeting, and the Lord was graciously pleased to give us a precious opportunity together, wherein I am persuaded she was made in some degree sensible of that baptizing power which, in a comfortable degree, accompanied the ministry that day. She was tendered, and, at parting, with tears desired us to remember her and pray for her."

Upon J. G.'s return home after this visit, he makes the following note: "It is very necessary to avoid both extremes in travelling on Truth's account; neither to be over hasty, nor too dilatory: yet I have always found great satisfaction and peace, in being as diligent and expeditious therein, as sits easy on the mind, and the constitution of body will bear; that all may have cause to be fully convinced, we travel not for outward pleasure, but from a necessity laid upon us; which will certainly add considerable weight to our service; and greatly tend, in the eyes of mankind, to maintain the credit of that truly disinterested gospel ministry, the Lord hath been pleased to raise up amongst us as a people."

Being out on a visit to some other meetings he writes: "The Lord enabled me, either to do or suffer, in this little journey, as the same appeared to be my duty. At one place I was quite shut up as to words, yet had peace, believing it was my business that day, as it hath been many times since, in order (as I apprehend) to lead others into silence by example; as being the most profitable state they or I can possibly arrive at in mutability, in order to attain a right understanding of all religious duties."

After another religious visit his journal states: "Soon after my return home, great and inexpressible afflictions were permitted to befall me and my afflicted family, most of whom were seized with the dysentery; of which distemper I buried a daughter between four and five years old, and was taken very ill myself of the same disorder. In this time my dear wife being taken with the beforementioned disease, was in a short time removed by death, leaving me three small children, the youngest about two weeks and three days old. I found the Lord near to support my drooping spirit under this great affliction. I well remember, when my dear wife lay with symptoms of death upon her, having also sometimes, as I thought, intervals of being better, my mind was in a painful suspense between hope and fear. It seemed to me then impossible to give her up, and to be wholly separated from so valuable a companion; but the Lord, who formerly rebuked the winds and allayed the raging of the sea, was pleased, as in an instant, to bring a holy calmness over my mind, in which there was an entire resignation to his divine will; so that I could say with Job of old, 'the Lord giveth and the Lord taketh away, blessed be his name.' I did not, from that time, look upon her as any more mine, but gave her up into His hands who had kindly bestowed her upon me. I write this by way of encouragement to others, that they may live in the fear of God, and give up in steady obedience to his requirings; and then, I am well assured, they may lean upon him in all their afflictions, and will find to their comfort, that those things which appear impossible with men, are possible with God; who will make hard things easy and bitter things sweet to his humble followers. She departed this life the 22d of the Seventh month, 1746; we having lived together nearly nine years."

"I have this short testimony to give concerning her; that she made it her early care to lead a sober and virtuous life; and a godly concern remained upon her mind, to keep a conscience void of offence, both towards God and man; being engaged, according to the ability received, for the promotion of the blessed Truth, and gladly entertained the Lord's faithful laborers; esteeming it a blessing to be favored with their company. When I found a concern to travel abroad in the service of Truth, she freely gave me up thereto; having, with great satisfaction to acknowledge the Lord's goodness, in favoring her with true peace and contentment in my absence; and also in a steady trust and dependence on his providence, for our support every way in a faithful discharge of duty.

"In her last illness, she was favored with great calmness and resignation to the Divine will, either to live or die; signifying, that she did not find any thing in the way; and that, if it pleased the Lord to remove her out of this world, she hoped it would be a glorious change, and that she should go to her innocent babes, who were gone before her; often confessing the Lord's goodness in giving her so much ease both of body and mind. She was very loving to those who visited her in her illness, and said she had nothing but love and goodwill to all. She took leave of our children in a very tender and affectionate manner, committing them to Divine Providence, and expressing her belief that his watchful care would be over them when she was gone. The apprentice and servant boys were called at her request; she took them by the hand, and in a loving tender manner, gave them good advice; an heavenly sweetness accompanying her words, which much affected those present. She discovered great nearness of affection for me, almost to the last, and departed this life in sweet peace, of which I was favored, after her removal, with a certain evidence, to my unspeakable satisfaction; whereby I plainly saw my great loss was her everlasting gain, and was enabled to bow in humble acquiescence to the Divine will, who knows what is best, and orders all things in perfect wisdom.

(To be continued.)

For "The Friend."

The German Arctic Expedition of 1869—70.

(Continued from page 178.)

"The next few days we set zealously to work to make our black house somewhat more habitable. The increased heat of the house caused the sail-cloth roof to leak, from the quantity of snow lying upon it, and we therefore passed a bad night. We rectified that, however, by a plank roofing covered with more sail-cloth. In order to satisfy our urgent need for light and air, we made a dormer-window in the roof, and later on a second. In spite of all this, we could not do without the light of the lamp for the greater part of the day. Along the whole length on both sides of the room, we raised a bed of boards to sleep upon, and laid the sacks of straw upon it. It was six inches above the floor, and we then put boards down the middle. To prevent the pillows from freezing to the wall, we had to make a wooden lining along that part. The cooking stove had its place behind, a smaller one stood more forward. Along the walls, which were covered with sail-cloth, shelves were placed, on which we laid our books, instruments, and cooking vessels. The ship's chests at the foot of the sleeping places along the passage, served both as tables and stools. The gilt-framed looking-glass from the cabin adorned the back wall, underneath which hung a costly barometer, and the accustomed ticking of the clock was to be heard. By all these orderly arrangements, the comfort of our stay in the coal-house would be greatly enhanced. A healthy sleep refreshed us more than anything else; and, thanks to our excellent preserves, we could strengthen ourselves with the meat soup which the cook prepared. The dread of immediate danger to life had departed; we breathed more freely, we felt once more at liberty, and even remembered many comical scenes from our experiences on the 19th, with laughter and joking.

Slowly but steadily our ice-field drifted to the south. By the 3rd of November we had passed the Liverpool coast, and had reached Scoresby's Sound, sometimes being near the firm land ice, and sometimes far from it, a movement which would no doubt originate in the ebb and flow off this large, deep sound. We could distinctly see the picturesque formation of the rocky coast; and in two plains lying between two rugged mountain-tops we thought we could distinguish glaciers covered with snow. Since the ship had sunk fourteen days before, the ice had closed in upon us, and even the blocks which had broken away from our field had frozen to it again. Our eyes often rested with sorrow on the spot where the Hansa went down. Now there was room enough for her between the field and the land-ice!

At the end of October the sun rose at half-past nine A. M., and set behind the rocky coast at three P. M. In the coal-house we could only see to read and write under the dormer-windows for a few hours each day. We grew more and more accustomed to the daily round of things, which so much resembled that on board. The last night-watch woke us at seven. We rose, threw on our woollen clothing, washed in melted snow, and enjoyed our morning coffee with hard bread. Then we all betook ourselves to the ever-plentiful stock of work; the finishing of all sorts of useful and still wanting furniture, sail-sewing, wood-chopping, replacing clothes from the clothes-store, keeping the diaries, and study. In clear weather astronomical observations were taken, and all necessary calculations recorded. At one we dined. Strong meat soup formed the substantial part of this meal; and as we were in no want of preserved vegetables, we had plenty of changes prepared for us. Of salt meat and bacon we ate little. Of all spirits we had to be very sparing, only allowing ourselves one glass of strengthening port-wine on Sundays. Our state of health all through the winter was good. Except the sailor Schmidt's attack of fever when the ship went down, which was soon over, and a frost-bitten toe of the sailor Büttner, we had no sickness or other bodily discomfort. We were always actively employed, and daily order and regularity were rigidly kept up."

But little of especial interest occurred till the second day of the year 1870, when, in a violent storm, they were alarmed by the crushing and jarring sound of the ice. The next day they found the floe had been reduced to half its former size. On the 11th another storm came on, from the north-east, which split up their ice raft until they had only a piece of about 150 feet in diameter remaining of the extensive field on which they had originally taken refuge. A few nights after, a fissure about 6 inches wide opened in this, running through their house, and compelling them all to turn out in the storm. Some of them took refuge in one of the boats, and the others, finding the fissure did not increase, returned to the house. A new building was erected, half the size of the former one.

As the warmer season approached, and their southward drifting continued, the gradual melting of the snow brought many things to light which had been lost sight of. On the morning of the 7th of the 5th month, they were agreeably surprised to see open water in the direction of the land. "A stiff south-easter had cleared the sky during the night, and in the grey morning the watch heard through the fog a rushing and roaring sound, which could be nothing but the sea. The thought had now to be seriously entertained as to whether the time had not come for our release from the floe. And it had come. Wind and weather remained favorable. The strip of water in the south-west came nearer and nearer, the wind separating masses of small floes and driving them northwards. At half-past twelve the captain, after having uninterruptedly observed the ice and the weather for some time, decided, with the agreement of all the officers, that according to his opinion, the moment had come when they should leave the floe and try to save themselve by reaching the coast in the boats. After a hasty mid-day meal we at once began to clear the boats. This was troublesome work. First we took out all the provisions, clothing, sails, masts, oars, instruments, and so forth, so that the boats might be hauled empty over three floes; and the whole of the contents were carried after them, partly on sledges and partly on the back, and they were again reladen. In feverish haste and impatience this work was accomplished, and in three hours all was ready. We took one last thankful look at our faithful floe; through numerous dangers and calamities, from the region of terror and death, it had borne us here in 200 days, into a more hospitable latitude; and now filled with fresh courage we might hope for a speedy release."

On the 13th of Sixth month, they reached in safety the Moravian missionary settlement at Friedrichsthal, in the south of Greenland. Here they were hospitably received, and their wants supplied, and after some dely a passage to Europe was obtained in the Danish missionary vessel.

(To be continued.)

For "The Friend."

Papal Infallibility.

(Continued from page 179.)

Chapter III.

On the Power and Nature of the Primacy of the Roman Pontiff.

Wherefore, resting on plain testimonies of the Sacred Writings, and adhering to the plain and express decrees both of our predecessors, the Roman Pontiffs, and of the General Councils, we renew the definition of the œcumenical Council of Florence, in virtue of which all the faithful of Christ must believe that the holy Apostolic See and the Roman Pontiff possesses the primacy over the whole world, and that the Roman Pontiff is the successor of blessed Peter, Prince of the Apostles, and is true vicar of Christ, and head of the whole Church, and father and teacher of all Christians; and that full power was given to him the blessed Peter to rule, feed, and govern the universal Church by Jesus Christ our Lord; as is also contained in the acts of the General Councils and in the sacred Canons.

Hence we teach and declare that by the appointment of our Lord the Roman Church possesses a superiority of ordinary power over all other churches, and that this power of jurisdiction of the Roman Pontiff, which is truly episcopal, is immediate; to which all, of whatever rite and dignity, both pastors and faithful, both individually and collectively, are bound, by their duty of hierarchical subordination and true obedience, to submit not only in matters which belong to faith and morals, but also in those that appertain to the discipline and government of the Church throughout the world, so that the Church of Christ may be one flock under one supreme pastor through the preservation of unity both of communion and of profession of the same faith with the Roman Pontiff. This is the teaching of Catholic truth, from which no one can deviate without loss of faith and of salvation.

But so far is this power of the Supreme Pontiff from being any prejudice to the ordinary and immediate power of episcopal jurisdiction, by which Bishops, who have been set by the Holy Ghost to succeed and hold the place of the Apostles, feed and govern, each his own flock, as true pastors, that this their episcopal authority is really asserted, strengthened, and protected by the supreme and universal Pastor; in accordance with the words of St. Gregory the Great: 'My honor is the honor of the whole Church. My honor is the firm strength of my brethren. I am truly honored when the honor due to each and all is not withheld.'

Further, from this supreme power possessed by the Roman Pontiff of governing the universal Church, it follows that he has the right of free communication with the pastors of the whole Church, and with their flocks, that these may be taught and ruled by him in the way of salvation. Wherefore we condemn and reject the opinions of those who hold that the communication between this supreme head and the pastors and their flocks can lawfully be impeded; or who make this communication subject to the will of the secular power, so as to maintain that whatever is done by the Apostolic See, or by its authority, for the government of the Church, can not have force or value unless it be confirmed by the assent of the secular power.

And since by the divine right of Apostolic primacy the Roman Pontiff is placed over the universal Church, we further teach and declare that he is the supreme judge of the faithful, and that in all causes, the decision of which belongs to the Church, recourse may be had to his tribunal, and that none may re-open the judgment of the Apostolic See, than whose authority there is no greater, nor can any lawfully review its judgment. Wherefore they err from the right course who assert that it is lawful to appeal from the judgments of the Roman Pontiffs to an œcumenical Council, as to an authority higher than that of the Roman Pontiff.

If, then, any shall say that the Roman Pontiff has the office merely of inspection or direction, and not full and supreme power of jurisdiction over the universal Church, not only in things which belong to faith and morals, but also in those which relate to the discipline and government of the Church spread throughout the world; or assert that he possesses merely the principal part, and not all the fullness of this supreme power; or that this power which he enjoys is not ordinary and immediate, both over each and all the churches, and over each and all the pastors and the faithful: let him be anathema.

Chapter IV.

Concerning the Infallible Teaching of the Roman Pontiff.

Moreover, that the supreme power of teaching is also included in the Apostolic primacy, which the Roman Pontiff, as the successor of Peter, Prince of the Apostles, possesses over the whole Church, this Holy See has always held, the perpetual practice of the Church confirms, and œcumenical Councils also have declared, especially those in which the East with the West met in the union of faith and charity.

* * * * * *

This gift, then, of truth and never-failing faith was conferred by heaven upon Peter and his successors in this chair, that they might perform their high office for the salvation of all; that the whole flock of Christ, kept away by them from the poisonous food of error, might be nourished with the pasture of heavenly doctrine; that the occasion of schism being removed, the whole Church might be kept one, and, resting on its foundation, might stand firm against the gates of hell.

But since in this very age, in which the salutary efficacy of the Apostolic office is most of all required, not a few are found who take away from its authority, we judge it altogether necessary solemnly to assert the prerogative which the only-begotten Son of God vouchsafed to join with the supreme pastoral office.

Therefore faithfully adhering to the tradition received from the beginning of the Christian faith, for the glory of God our Saviour, the exaltation of the Catholic religion, and the salvation of Christian people, the sacred Council approving, we teach and define that it is a dogma divinely revealed; that the Roman Pontiff, when he speaks ex cathedra, that is, when in discharge of the office of pastor and doctor of all Christians, by virtue of his supreme Apostolic authority, he defines a doctrine regarding faith or morals to be held by the universal Church, by the divine assistance promised to him in blessed Peter, is possessed of that infallibility with which the divine Redeemer willed that his Church should be endowed for defining doctrine regarding faith or morals; and that therefore such definitions of the Roman Pontiff are irreformable of themselves, and not from the consent of the Church.

But if any one—which may God avert—presume to contradict this our definition: let him be anathema.

Given at Rome in public Session solemnly held in the Vatican Basilica in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and seventy, on the eighteenth day of July, in the twenty-fifth year of our Pontificate.

(To be continued.)

For "The Friend"

Sleeping in Meetings.

In the editorial column of the 22nd No. of the present volume, is an extract from Thomas Story's Journal, in which he speaks of attending a meeting, where his testimony was directed against "a sleepy state in some, and a wandering spirit in others."

These two subjects are more closely connected than many suppose. Where an individual is favored to maintain a true religious exercise, it will preserve his mind from being carried away by the vain or unseasonable thoughts that present themselves; and will also counteract any tendency to drowsiness, that may exist. But if the holy watch is not maintained, the imagination may become excited by the ideas that are suggested to it, and while there is no tendency to sleep, the mental occupations may be altogether foreign from the purpose for which the assembly is convened. If, however, there is a constitutional tendency to sleep, or if the physical condition of any such unwatchful person, from previous exhaustion or other cause, is such as to predispose him to slumber, he will probably be overtaken with drowsiness. He that is thus ensnared, and the one occupied with irrelevant thoughts, though to the outward eye, in different conditions, are yet alike as to their failure in performing the solemn duty for which they met together. The real difference between them, may be simply one of constitutional tendencies, or of physical condition; and not of religious sensibility, or devotion to God. This consideration should teach some to be charitable in their judgment of those who may be overtaken with sleepiness in a religious meeting. If they are conscious that they themselves have not kept to that patient waiting on the Lord, to which the promise is annexed of a renewal of strength, they should remember the caution of our Saviour, "First cast the beam out of thine own eye," before they criticise too severely their brother who is overtaken with a similar fault, though manifested in a different way.

Those who have been tried with sleepiness in meetings, especially, if such an experience was theirs, after their minds had become awakened to serious thoughtfulness, and fervent desires had been implanted to walk in the light of the Lord, can truly sympathize with those whom they may see to be similarly afflicted. They can recall their own bitter experience; and remember how the concern lived in their minds from one meeting-day to another, to seek for Divine help to strengthen them against their weakness; and to so regulate their diet, their hours of rest, and their habits of life, that they might avoid all that would promote untimely slumber. They can bring to remembrance the fear with which they entered the place of worship, the effort to combat the first approach of drowsiness, and the insidious manner in which at times it would steal over and benumb the faculties, so that on arousing from it, it was almost impossible to decide whether it had been a waking reverie, or an incipient slumber; as well as the sense of comfort and satisfaction which was enjoyed, when a meeting time was passed through without encountering this fight of affliction. The feelings of those who have passed through such a dispensation, towards those who are similarly affected, may well be marked with a degree of tenderness and pity, that can scarcely be expected of others who have never been so tried.

He who is careless or lukewarm, who courts sleep by indulging in a lounging posture, and makes little effort to feel after that Divine help which may enable him to perform acceptable worship, is not likely to overcome this tendency while he continues in this easy, self-satisfied condition. He needs first of all to be aroused to a sense of his own dangerous state, and to have the earnest cry awakened in his soul, "God be merciful to me a sinner." But the sincere hearted one, who is honestly struggling against the weaknesses of flesh and spirit, may look with hope to that Power that never deserts His obedient children, trusting that He will enable them to overcome all that hinders access to the living Fountain. Such will find it needful to watch over their bodies as well as minds, so that they may not be hindered from sharing in blessings that they otherwise might partake of. To such, the remarks of that deeply experienced minister of the Gospel, John Griffith, may convey a useful caution, when he says: "We often find afternoon meetings are heavy and painful, occasioned, no doubt, in part at least, by answering the cravings of nature to the full; whereas they should be denied a full gratification, as little sustenance would, for that short space of time, answer much better, and be no injury to the constitution. If any think this hint impertinent, there is reason to fear that they are yet too much strangers to the nature of true worship, and the many impediments in the way of its due performance."

The caution contained in this extract as to undue indulgence in eating, should suggest to thoughtful and earnest minds a corresponding watchfulness over whatever may affect our physical condition; so that when we assemble with our brethren for the purpose of Divine worship, we may not feel any degree of incapacity arising from imprudence or indulgence as to outward and physical matters.

In Alpine county, California, there was recently found a piece of a red fir plank, two feet in length, one inch in thickness, and ten inches in width, perfectly silicified. It is described as being smoothly dressed on one side, with the knot marks apparent in the shiny surface, exactly as if it had been planed by a carpenter. These facts indicate, to the satisfaction of persons who have examined it, that it was fashioned by human agency, and probably since the advent of civilized men at the time of opening the mines in that section. One side of the specimen is entirely encrusted with a substance resembling decomposed chalcedony, which shimmers in the light like a sheet of beautiful frostwork. As an evidence that the natural silicifying process has not ceased in that part of the country where it was found, this bit of board is considered by geologists a very important discovery.

A Christian's Death-bed.—John Camm was a devoted and zealous minister of Christ, his Lord and Master, whose leadings he endeavored faithfully to follow. After a time of declining health the time of his release came in the year 1656, when he was about 52 years of age. The following extract from the short memorial of him, preserved in "Piety Promoted," shows the heavenly state of mind into which he had been brought by the effectual operation of Divine Grace, so that he could look with joy beyond all visible things to the unseen and eternal.

"He would often call his children together, and exhort them to fear the Lord; and would wonderfully praise God for his goodness, counting his bodily weakness a happiness, being sanctified unto him by that word which had sanctified his soul; under the sense of which he would say, 'How great a benefit do I enjoy beyond many. I have such a large time of preparation for death, being daily dying, that I may live forever with my God in that kingdom which is unspeakably full of glory. My outward man daily wastes and moulders down, and draws towards its place and centre; but my inward man revives and mounts upwards towards its place and habitation in the heavens.'

"The morning he departed this life, he called his wife, children and family, and gave them seasonable instruction to love the Lord, and his way and truth, and to walk in the same, saying, his glass was run, the time of his departure was come; he was to enter into everlasting ease, joy and rest; charging them all to be patient and content in parting with him. So, presently fainting, he passed quietly away as into a sweet sleep, whereupon some about him did weep aloud; at which he was awakened as out of a sleep, and desired to be helped a little upon his bed, saying, 'My dear hearts you have wronged me, and disturbed me, for I was at sweet rest. You should not passionately sorrow for my departure. This house of clay must go to its place, but this soul and spirit is to be gathered up to the Lord, to live with him for ever where we shall meet with everlasting joy.' Again taking his leave of every one of them, charging them to be content with his departure, he lay down, and in a little time departed this life."

Port Wine.—The British Secretary of Legation at Lisbon gives the following account of the manufacture of Port Wine in Portugal:

"All port wine hitherto exported for the English market is largely mixed with brandy, and is composed as much of elderberries as of grapes. The way in which what in England is called port wine has hitherto been manufactured for the London market is this: The Paiz de Vanhaterio abounds in elder trees; the berries of these trees are dried in the sun or in kilns. The wine is then thrown on them, and the berries are trodden (as previously the grapes) till it is thoroughly saturated with the coloring matter of the berries. Brandy is then added in the proportion of from three to sixteen gallons to every pipe of 115 gallons. This is the composition of all the port wine hitherto drank in England. No pure wine, no wine not thus specially adulterated for the English taste, was allowed by the government committee of tasters to pass the bar of Douro before the year of 1865."

Selected.

PEACE IN GOD.

Peace, be still:
In this night of sorrow bow,
O my heart! contend not thou:
What befalls thee is God's will:
Peace, be still.

Peace, be still:
All thy murmuring words are vain;
God will make the riddle plain;
Wait His word, and bear His will;
Peace, be still.

Hold thee still:
Though the Father scourge thee sore,
Cling thou to Him all the more;
Let Him mercy's work fulfil:
Hold thee still.

Hold thee still:
Though the good Physician's knife
Seems to touch thy very life,
Death alone, He means to kill.
Hold thee still.

Lord, my God,
Give me grace that I may be
Thy true child, and silently
Own Thy sceptre and Thy rod,
Lord, my God!

Shepherd mine,
From Thy fulness give me still,
Faith to do and bear Thy will,
Till the morning light shall shine,
Shepherd mine!

—From the German.

Selected.

"OUR OWN."

If I had known in the morning
How wearily all the day,
The words unkind would trouble my mind
That I said when you went away,
I had been more careful, darling,
Nor given you needless pain;
But we vex our own with look and tone
We may never take back again.

For though in the quiet evening
You may give me the kiss of peace,
Yet it well might be that never for me
The pain of the heart should cease!
How many go forth at morning
Who never come home at night!
And hearts have broken for harsh words spoken,
That sorrow can ne'er set right.

We have careful thought for the stranger,
And smiles for the sometime guest,
But oft for our own the bitter tone,
Though we love our own the best.
Ah! lips with the curve impatient,
Ah! brow with the shade of scorn,
'T were a cruel fate were the night too late
To undo the work of morn.

—The Parish Visitor.

Mennonites in Kansas.

One of the largest bona fide land sales ever made in Kansas, perhaps in America, has just been concluded by the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railroad Company with a community of Russian Mennonites, who landed in New York during the month of September. Exploring parties had been sent to the United States and Canada about a year ago. A few single families of considerable wealth followed the advice of their delegates, who had examined the entire West, and selected several sections of land in the vicinity of Marion Centre, where they made substantial improvements at once. The initial step was followed about the close of last year by the purchase from the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railroad Company of 43,000 acres of land in Harvey and McPherson counties on the part of members of the Mennonite community at Summerfield, St. Clair county, Ill., who also took a controlling interest in the town of Halstead, which will no doubt become the trade centre of the Mennonite colonies in Kansas. Parties of from five to forty families have since arrived from Russia, mostly from the Crimean peninsula, some coming first to Kansas, but most of them not until they had examined other States. All the mammoth communities in this country are becoming interested in the settlement of this people in Kansas, and the movement is rapidly gaining in magnitude. Missouri, Iowa, Illinois, Indiana, Pennsylvania and Canada have already furnished large numbers of land purchasers and settlers. The party which has arrived in Topeka in the last thirty days, and who have now left for their future homes, numbers about 250 families, the majority of whom have belonged to the celebrated Molotschnoi (Milk river) colony in the Government district of Taurida, of which the Crimea is a part. The colony comprises sixty-five villages, and is considered the wealthiest of the German settlements of South Russia. Emigration from that place has but just set in, and, as fast as the people can obtain their passports from the Government, so fast will they leave that country for America.

One of the most powerful inducements to bring the Mennonites to Kansas has been the passage of an act, during the last winter's session of the Legislature, amending the militia law of 1868, so that all persons who, on or before the first day of May in each year, file with the clerk of their county an affidavit that they are members of a religious organization whose articles of faith prohibit the bearing of arms, shall be exempt from militia duty.

Next summer will show wonderful changes in the region between the Cottonwood and Little Arkansas rivers, till now almost devoid of habitations. Even now the busy hum has begun. Long lines of wagons with lumber, household goods and farm implements are passing out from the railroad stations. The carpenters are busy putting up the first temporary shelter. The Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railroad is erecting five immense emigrant houses at convenient places for the reception of new comers. The mowers that had been laid by for the season are brought into requisition again to cut the waving grass for the thousands of work horses, oxen and milch cows to subsist on during the short winter season; car after car load of breaking ploughs and other implements are sent down the road, and it seems as if the working season for the farmer had just begun.—Topeka Commercial.

How immeasurably blessed the apostle was to exclaim, "I have kept the faith." When the work is done, when the world is receding, material things are dimly seen, and the realities of an eternal world beyond, press themselves upon our sensitive spirits, may we also say, "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith."

For "The Friend."

Wayside Notes.

How much would human happiness be augmented, if it were the thoughtful study of all classes to weigh men by their motives, rather than by the glitter and splendor of their achievements; when true courage would be counted for living faith, and all taught to look for heroes in the spiritual warfare of an earnest life, among those who are contending against error, and holding up the standard of universal Truth. If the world would but esteem men by the worth of their actions, what an incentive to virtue and uprightness in all our intercourse with others, would this be; and under a measure of Divine direction, which is not withheld from any soul, which spirit and power can alone prompt us to labor after a holy life, how anxiously careful all, in their various allotments and associations, would be, to contribute each his just and appointed share to the mass of human good. The glory to be earned upon a bloody field will then have lost its power to ensnare, for there could be no reconciliation thereafter between the end to be gained, and the means; or in those unholy passions always awakened when force is arrayed against force.

Spirituality would brighten, vitalize, and attain pre-eminence in the moral world, as nature's laws wisely govern in the physical. All envyings and bitterness would be cast out in the overruling love of principle. We should be more one brotherhood; and our humanity would be so ample, as to leave no space in the heart for the spirit of persecution to enter. Acknowledging that we are all children of wrath, and equal in the sight of our Heavenly Father; having felt in time past our own alienation, and that the partition wall was broken down wholly by His Grace, shed abroad in our hearts, we would be concerned to direct all mankind to the same universal teaching.

Liberty of conscience would not need to be guarded then in any selfish, or defensive spirit, that no class, or profession of religion might possess undue privileges; but all should regard it as a Divine right, an inheritance coexisting with the first breathings of spiritual life, and every limitation upon its free exercise, as an unholy attempt to abridge our Divine Law-giver in the use of the means He hath appointed for gathering souls into His family and household. There could be no cordial compact between the solid religious element of society, and the civil authority instituted for the government of all, and adapted as far as imperfect minds can make it, to the varying conditions of men, unless we were to imagine a religion that did not associate us with the unending future, and which would be as ephemeral as the institutions erected by our own hands.

In the life of the one, we must constantly recognize the guidance of God by His Spirit, applicable to such as have embraced Christ in them the hope of salvation. In the life of the other, is too often presented the history of human frailty and imperfection; of folly and even madness. The two cannot assimilate, until in the progress of His spiritual government, all men shall bow in willing obedience to His law in their hearts. In short, as we become loyal subjects of this Teacher, whose domain is the heart, will not all our faculties be enlisted, and brought into cheerful and healthful exercise, that every soul thus prepared may be a light unto others less enlightened; that the light of the Lord's Holy Spirit might bear fruit more abundantly, and this work of reconciliation go on, until all shall become redeemed. And this submission to the law of life inwardly revealed, which while it prepares the heart for service, and the mind and body to endure, will enable us to obtain complete victory over ourselves, by coming to the foot of the cross, as did those noble men and women whose faithfulness is written in the blood of New England persecution; nor would we fail to offer our wills and lusts, in the obedience of faith, a willing sacrifice, to be nailed thereon. A willingness will be experienced to go down into suffering, and to yield the body as a peace offering if required, even as they did, passively, but not actively resisting, even as our Lord held up on high His gospel message, and in great submission gave Himself into the hands of His accusers.

To be enabled to follow the pointings of duty through suffering and unto death, is indeed to be girded with a measure of the mind of Christ; and to feel His arms underneath, when the world is bearing down with crushing weight; is to have found a place, lifted far above the head of the worldling, or he who in the spirit of Paul before his conversion, would deprive any of that religious freedom which is the birthright of every rational soul. We had need to be watchful, as the common enemy of mankind is presenting at every step in our journey, many devices to ensnare us. And not the least among these is the temptation to take hold of His work unprepared; or having made some progress, assume that we are qualified to point out to others the path assigned to them, when we have not been careful to "tarry at Jeruselem" ourselves. Another unguarded step might find us in danger of resting in our own strength, and ready even to criminate; or to arraign our brethren, because their eyes have not seen things as we claim to have seen them. There can be no religion made effectual, I fully believe, if not grounded in the liberty which is unfolded to us in the Gospel. Christ came to call, that is to persuade sinners. The whole bearing of His personal teaching was addressed to the hearts, the consciences, and the understanding of men. It was His mission to pour in a flood of light upon the world; to bring the soul into nearer and sweeter communion; to unbind the heavy hearted, to loose the bonds of all who are under the power and slavery of sin; and finally to present to mankind a full pardon, as well as a complete salvation, by repentance toward God, and obedient faith in our Lord Jesus Christ. "If the Son shall make you free," that is, released from the shackles of sin, "then are ye free indeed," by which, the divinity of the soul, in its spiritual, and imperishable nature, co-operating without restraint with its Creator through the medium of the Holy Spirit, is fully acknowledged. "It is the goodness of God that leads us to repentance." Here again is this seed of life in the soul pointed to; the new birth taking place, after that it has become quickened and brought forth into newness of life by the power of the Eternal Spirit, pleading to be heard; and having gained a place in our affections, then to lead us, as a tender parent would lead his trusting child.

Are not these views plainly upheld in the example of the great Captain of the New Covenant Dispensation, and by the teaching of His immediate followers. The provision made for the restoration of man from the consequences of the fall, must needs be universal, that it might be impartial, and absolutely just. All were to be embraced; all were to know the Lord, because all were to be taught by the self-same Spirit; "a measure and manifestation of which is given to every man to profit withal." And 600 years before its advent Jeremiah presents in the language of prophecy a touching view of its fulfilment—of the promise made to Abraham, "that in his posterity should all the nations of the earth be blessed." Its universality is described, and the blotting out of transgression through obedience and faith.

"Behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that I will make a new covenant with the house of Israel, and with the house of Judah; not according to the covenant that I made with their fathers, in the day that I took them by the hand, to bring them out of the land of Egypt. But this shall be the covenant that I will make with the house of Israel; after those days, saith the Lord, I will put my law in their inward parts, and write it in their hearts; and they shall teach no more every man his neighbor, and every man his brother, for they shall all know me, from the least of them unto the greatest of them, saith the Lord, for I will forgive their iniquity, and I will remember their sin no more." Jer. 31 chapter, 31 to 34 verse. In the provision made for the redemption of man, through Christ, the great atonement for sin, what an encouraging testimony is here presented, to its perfection, and fulness, and of the unbounded love of our Father in Heaven. In His spotless life, wonderful works, sufferings, death, resurrection, glorious ascension, and mediation, we possess a most instructive record of Him who knew no sin, and therefore inconceivably precious.

Among all the marvellous evidences of wisdom, adaptation, and power, to be seen in the outward creation of God, there is nothing presented which can be at all compared in beauty or perfection to the means appointed through the Saviour of the world, by His miraculous coming in the flesh, for the reconciliation and restoration of man under the fall. Truly the shepherds in announcing from the angel, the incoming glory of the Messiah's reign, heralded the ushering in of a better covenant, and a brighter hope; when types and shadows, and all that had prefigured the Lamb of God, would be swept away, in the light of His own blessed appearing.

And now in conclusion, I would ask, is it not marvellous that men cling so tenaciously to their lusts, which bring only sorrow and shame, and embrace a religious walk so reluctantly; that christianity should have had a life in the world of nearly 1900 years, and number so few who can be called the Lord's consistent, cross-bearing disciples. Well, perhaps we should not think it strange, knowing the power of temptation, and the weakness of the flesh, and that so many hold the Truth in unrighteousness, and are openly, or secretly unfaithful, the effect of whose example must be to mar the work greatly. And then when we consider how irreconcilable are many of the plain precepts of our Lord, with the practice of christian nations, and the views of a large proportion of professing christians with regard to war, and other subjects bearing upon the need of simplicity in life and conversation, and the care all should evince to show forth in their own conduct the peaceable nature of the gospel under which we live, need we wonder the spread of vital christianity has been marked with so many hindrances and besetments. The cause has suffered more from within, than from without. Its professed friends have done it even greater injury and injustice, than those who have been regarded its enemies. Who can count the wrong inflicted upon humanity, or measure the obstructions placed in the way of christian progress, by persecution alone; committed, not only in the name of christianity but upon those who were christian believers also! We have seen in New England the dark spirit that was awakened there in behalf of a church, assuming to exercise absolute power over the religious convictions and scruples of a considerable number, whose walk was a living exemplification of their high profession. Who shall estimate the extent of this crime upon the christian civilization, and true religious welfare of that, and after generations. P. B.

Philada., 1st mo. 14th, 1875.

For "The Friend"

William Law, A. M.

(Continued from page 166.)

"If it be asked, what is meant by taking away all our sins, the whole is fully told in these words: To as many as believed, to them he gave power to become sons of God. This is the true taking away, or forgiveness of sins; not a strong imagination, or brain-fancy, that on such an hour, on such a day, or in such a place, you felt and knew assuredly that all your sins were forgiven you. By such a forgiveness of sins, that which made you a sinner is not destroyed, but you will have every day the same necessity of confessing yourself a miserable sinner, as you had that morning, when your sins were not forgiven you till the afternoon. The true forgiveness of sins is only then, where that which sinned in us is done away, or become powerless in us; but nothing can do this, but that Power by which we become sons of God. A blind man has then only a deliverance from his blindness, when he is put in full possession of seeing eyes; this is the only doing away of his darkness. Just so, and no otherwise, are our sins forgiven us, or done away, when the power by which we become sons of God, or the new creature, is so given to us, so possessed by us, as seeing eyes are given to, and possessed by the man who before that was all blindness. And as our old man can only then be said to be truly put off, when the new man in Christ, is raised to life in his stead, so our sins are only then truly blotted out, or done away, when an unsinning nature, or a birth of God, that sinneth not, is come to be the ruling life in us.

Many are the marks which the learned have given us of the true Church; but be that as it will, no man, whether learned or unlearned, can have any mark or proof of his own true church-membership, but his being dead unto all sin, and alive unto all righteousness. This cannot be more plainly told us than in these words of our Lord: He that committeth sin is the servant of sin; but surely that servant of sin cannot at the same time be a living member of Christ's body, or that new creature who dwelleth in Christ, and Christ in him. To suppose a man born again from above, yet under a necessity of continuing to sin, is as absurd as to suppose that the true Christian is only to have so much of the nature of Christ born in him, as is consistent with as real a power of Satan still dwelling in him. If the Son, saith Christ, shall make you free, then ye shall be free indeed. What is this but saying, if Christ be come to life in you, then a true freedom from all necessity of sinning is given to you. Now if this is hindered, and cannot come to pass in the faithful follower of Christ, it must be because both the willing and working of Christ in man, is too weak to overcome that which the Devil willeth and worketh in him. All this absurdity, and even blasphemy, is necessarily implied in that common doctrine of books and pulpits, which teaches that the Christian can never have done sinning, as long as he lives. Well therefore may christendom sleep as securely as it does, under the power of sin, without any thought, hope, or desire of doing God's will on earth, as it is done in Heaven; without any concern at their not being pure, as He who hath called them is pure, or walking as he walked.

The Scripture knows no Christians, but saints, who in all things act as becometh saints. But now if the Scripture saint did not mean a man that eschewed all evil, and was holy in all his conversation, saint and no saint, would have only such difference as one carnal man will always have from another. Preachers and writers comfort the half Christians with telling them, that God requireth not a perfect, sinless obedience, but accepteth the sincerity of our weak endeavors instead of it. Here, if ever, the blind lead the blind. For St. Paul, comparing the way of salvation to a race, saith, In a race all run, but ONE obtaineth the prize: So run that ye may obtain. Now if Paul had seeing eyes, must not they be blind who teach, that God accepteth of all that run in the religious race, and requireth not that any should obtain the prize. How easy was it to see that the sincerity of our weak endeavors was quite a different thing from that, which alone is, and can be the required perfection of our lives. The first God accepteth, that is, beareth with. But why or how? Not because he seeketh or requireth no more, but he beareth with them, because though at a great distance from, they are, or may be making towards that perfection or new creature which he absolutely requires, which is the fulness of the stature of Christ, and is that which Paul saith, is the ONE that obtaineth the prize.

The same which Paul saith is said by Christ in other words, strive, saith he, to enter in at the straight gate. Here our best endeavors are called for, and therefore accepted by God, and yet at the same time he addeth, that many shall strive to enter, but shall not be able.

Why so, whence comes this? It is because Christ himself is the one door into life. Here the strivers mentioned by Christ, and those which St. Paul calls runners in a race, are the very same persons; and Christ calling himself the one door of entrance, is the same thing as when Paul saith that one only receiveth the prize, and that one which alone obtaineth the prize, or that entereth through the right door, is that new creature in whom Christ is truly born. For whether you consider things natural or supernatural, nothing but Christ in us, can be our hope of glory.

The pleader for imperfection farther supports himself by saying, no man in the world, Christ excepted, was ever without sin. And so say I too; and with the Apostle I also add, that if we say we have not sinned we make him a liar. But then it is as true to say that we make him a liar, if we deny the possibility of our being freed from a necessity of sinning, for the same [Apostle] saith: If we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness.

But surely he that is left under a necessity of sinning, as long as he lives, can no more be said to be cleansed from all unrighteousness, than a man who must be a cripple to his dying day, can be said to be cured of all his lameness. What weaker conclusion can well be made, than to infer that because Christ was the only man that was born and lived free from sin, therefore no man on earth can be raised to a freedom from sinning; no better than concluding, that because the old man is every ones birth from Adam, therefore there can be no such thing as a new man, created unto righteousness, through Christ Jesus, living and being all in all in him; no better sense or logic than to say, that because our Redeemer could not find us any thing else but sinners, therefore he must of all necessity leave us to be sinners. Of Christ it only can be said, that he is in himself the true Vine; but of every branch that is his, and groweth in him, it must be as truly said that the Life and Spirit of the true Vine, is the life and spirit of its branches; and that as is the vine, so are the branches. And here let it be well noted, that if the branch hath not the life and goodness of the vine in it, it can only be because it is broken off from the vine, and therefore a withered branch, fit for the fire. But if the branches abide in the vine, then Christ saith this glorious thing of them, Ye shall ask what ye will, and it shall be done unto you. John xv. 7. The very same glorious thing, which he had before said of himself, 'Father, I thank thee that thou hast heard me, and I know that thou hearest me always.' John xi. 41. Now say that this new creature who is in such union, communion and power with God, because Christ is in him, and he in Christ, as really as the vine is in the branches, and the branches in the vine; say that he must be a servant of sin as long as he lives in this world, and then your absurdity will be as great as if you had said that Christ in us must partake of our corruption.

The sober divine, who abhors the pride of enthusiasts for the sake of humility, saith of himself and all men, We are poor, blind, imperfect creatures, all our natural faculties are perverted, corrupted, and out of their right state, and therefore nothing that is perfect can come from us, or be done by us. Truth enough! And the very same truth as when the Apostle saith, The natural man knoweth not the things that be of God, he cannot know them, they are foolishness to him. This is the man that we all are by nature. But what Scripture ever spoke of or required any perfect works from this man, any more than it requires the Ethiopian to change his skin? Or what an instructed divine must he be who considers this old natural man, as the Christian, and therefore rejects Christian perfection because this old man cannot attain to it? What greater blindness than to appeal to our fallen state as a proof of a weakness and corruption which we must have when we are redeemed from it? Is this any wiser than saying, that sin and corruption must be where Christ is, because it is there where he is not? Our Lord hath said this absolute truth, that unless we be born again from above, there is no possible entrance into the kingdom of God.

What this new birth is in us, and what we get by it, is as expressly told us by his beloved Apostle, saying, That which is born of God sinneth not. This is as true and unalterable as to say, that which is born of the Devil can do nothing else but add sin to sin. To what end do we pray that this day we may fall into no sin, if no such day can be had? But if sinning can be made to cease in us for one day, what can do this for us but that which can do the same to-morrow? What benefit in praying that God's will may be done on earth as it is in heaven, if the earth, as long as it lasts, must have as many sinners as it has men upon it? How vainly does the church pray for the baptized person, that he may have power and strength to have victory and to triumph against the devil, the world, and the flesh, if this victorious triumph can never be obtained? if notwithstanding this baptism and prayer, he must continue committing sin, and so be a servant of sin as long as he lives? What sense can there be in making a communion of saints to be an article of our Creed, if at the same time we are to believe that Christians, as long as they live, must in some degree or other follow and be led by the lusts of the flesh, the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life?

Whence now comes all this folly of doctrines? It is because the church is no longer that spiritual house of God, in which nothing is intended and sought after but spiritual power and spiritual life, but is become a mere human building, made up of worldly power, worldly learning, and worldly prosperity in gospel matters. And therefore all the frailties, follies and imperfections of human nature must have as much life in the church, as in any other human society. And the best sons of such a church must be forced to plead such imperfections in the members of it, as must be, where the old fallen human nature is still alive. And alive it there must be, and its life defended, where the being continually moved and led by the Spirit of God, is rejected as gross enthusiasm. For nothing but a full birth, and continual breathing and inspiration of the Holy Spirit in the new-born creature, can be a deliverance from all that which is earthly, sensual, and devilish in our fallen nature.

The British Arctic Expedition.

A correspondent of the London Daily Telegraph prints in that journal an interesting account of an interview with Captain Adams, a very successful whaling master, in relation to the approaching Arctic expedition. In the course of his remarks, Captain Adams said: "As regards the possible climate next year, I am inclined to think it will be an open season. We have had fine years since 1869, and the last two have been exceptionally good—so good, in fact, that an expedition might have gone right up to the top of Smith's sound without difficulty. And I certainly have seen nothing this year to make me think that the next will be bad. My feeling was that the expedition ought to have consisted of a large vessel like the Arctic, which is a new ship, scarcely yet constructed, and quite sweet and clean—a great thing when you have to winter in the Polar seas—and two or three smaller steamers, the smaller the better, so long as they were properly built for ice navigation. The larger one could have broken the ice for the others along the straits and the bay, and then put into a harbor at about eighty degrees of latitude. Then the little vessels, being short and handy, could have pushed up Smith's sound without difficulty. A short vessel in such narrow waters would be much the best. You can run behind a bight of land, or a piece of strong ground ice, and so get out of the way of a "nip," where a large vessel would get fixed and destroyed. Just look at how I was seized in Melville bay when I lost the Alexander in 1869. Our prospects were capital; we had done well; had been to the north of Cary's Island, which is within thirty miles of the mouth of Smith's sound, and were coming home, when I saw the ice round me, in the shape of a pair of shears, slowly closing together, and my ship at the end already joined. You may fancy that I got up steam as hard as I could, and did my best to get out. I could see water, and was in great hope that all would be well; had got the bow of the vessel clear and was nearly safe, when the ice came together with tremendous force and seized the stern of the vessel. All effort was useless; I was too late. The fog had kept me from seeing my danger till it was upon me, and all I could do would not rescue the ship from the clutches of the ice. Crash went the timbers, upraised into the air was the ship, the ice actually remaining quite level, although the tremendous weight of craft and cargo were upon it; then it took us down again, and "churned" the steamer up into pieces the size of your hand. Fortunately we were all safe on the ice, with our boats, clothes, and provisions, and all got away, though two men afterward died from the cold and privation we endured. Then in Home bay, on the west of Davis' straits, I lost the Advice in a similar manner—a thick fog, no warning, a terrific nip, and then utter destruction. Now, a short vessel may sometimes escape and just get clear when a long one would be nipped even in two places, and that's why I think you should have very small vessels for the narrow waters of Smith's sound. You see you cannot possibly guard against a nip. We got one this year in the Esquimaux (the ship the gallant captain commands), and if you look you will find that we got off safely, for she's a very strong vessel, and the ice fortunately eased just in time. But you cannot reckon upon that. As for the sledging expedition, it would be most necessary to have both Esquimaux and dogs. The natives can live where Englishmen cannot, and they can find plenty of provisions where we should die. They can always kill animals, too, if they see them, even when we with our rifles would fail to a certainty. One of their favorite sayings with regard to us when we have lost our ship is, "The English know how to die, but not how to live;" and they are just right. Forty-eight hours' exposure and privation would kill the strongest of us, while nothing kills them. They just pull their arms out of their sleeves and then hide their hands in their bosoms, pull their hoods a little over their faces, and then lie down comfortably to sleep on the ice or snow or the hard ground, just as they may find themselves obliged. Nothing comes amiss to them, and as for endurance, I have known them to go over 500 miles on ice ground in their sledges in three days. One man, I recollect, went 300 miles without rest of any kind, and then had a few hours sleep, and then returned the same distance without resting again. I am speaking, of course, of the Esquimaux on the west coast of Davis' straits—they are more nomadic than those on the eastern side, and consequently much stronger and more enduring. Then, again, their powers of deceiving the animals they want to kill for food, so as to get close to them and spear them, are simply perfect, and cannot be too highly valued in a country where everything flies directly it sees a man. They will make a seal so confident that they too are seals, that it will actually "talk" to them, they making a noise so exactly similar to the sound it emits that even a seal itself cannot detect the difference, and then they can go close enough to take hold of the seal's neck, and spear him before he recognizes an enemy in the skin-clad savage that has got him. The expedition must certainly have some of these people; they will readily go with anybody they can trust, and will do anything in their power. I certainly agree with the idea that a good ice master should accompany the expedition, as well as some experienced harpooners. I found coal, as you say, in Eclipse sound in 1871, and, also, large quantities of salmon. With a net sixty feet by twenty I caught hundreds of splendid fish in a few hours, and there were many thousands leaped over the net besides; there was any quantity, in fact. But salmon fishing did not pay, for the reason that you could not always be sure of getting on to the ground, for the ice. So far as loss of life is concerned, I don't think the expedition need fear that. The crew of a vessel "nipped" can always escape on the ice, and if one vessel remains behind the other it will afford a home for the shipwrecked men if the foremost vessel comes to grief. But the expedition must be out in good time, and in that case they would also have the benefit of the whalers' assistance in case of need. It is pretty certain that any way the exploring party would be away not more than two winters for the purpose of making scientific observations, and there is no need to fear their being engulfed like Sir John Franklin's ill-fated crew.

For "The Friend."

In reading the interesting observations of Juan Valdez, in the 21st No. of "The Friend," it occurred to me that they might not be sufficiently intelligible to those who read the Scriptures only in our authorized version, inasmuch as that version does not accurately distinguish between an instrumental light and immediate Divine illumination. The word translated light in that text is not a term for light in general, but for an artificial light as lamp, candle, or torch. The clause should therefore read "Unto which ye do well that ye take heed as unto a lamp that shineth in a dark place until the day dawn and the day-star arise in your hearts."

Exception may be also taken to the rendering of this verse in another point. In the original of the first clause the apostle simply says, "and we have more sure the prophetic word." That he intended by this expression to say that any thing was more sure than the voice which came from heaven at the time of the transfiguration is, I think, inadmissible. Either of two other constructions may be allowed. Taking more in the sense of very, which the Greek idiom allows, the reading would be "and we have the very sure word of prophecy." Or we may take the sense to be, "and we have the word of prophecy made more sure, i. e. confirmed, by the miracle of the transfiguration."

In the 20th and 21st verses, the intention of the apostle evidently was, to set forth the Divine origin and authority of the Holy Scriptures, but his meaning is obscured by the use of the word interpretation. The primary signification of the original word should, I think, have been adhered to, which is setting loose, equivalent there to setting forth or origin. Knowing this first, that no propheey of Scripture is of private origin, &c.

The distribution of plants by human ageney is diseussed by Dr. Robert Brown in a late number of the Geographieal Magazine. He ealls particular attention to the transportation of seeds in wool. The presenee of foreign plants in wool-drying grounds was notieed many years ago by the eminent botanist De Candolle, near Montpellier, in the south of Franee. An aeeount has been kept of the foreign plants whieh have appeared in that vicinity sinee his observations, and it now includes 438 species, prineipally natives of the Mediterranean countries whenee the wool eomes. Similarly, in the neighborhood of the extensive wool-washing and drying works at Galashiels, are found forty species of plants foreign to Scotland, some of whieh have never previously been met with in any part of Great Britain. To show how slight an aeeident may determine the introduetion of a plant, the author states that the Canada thistle is said to have sprung up in Europe from a seed dropped two hundred years ago, from the stuffed skin of a bird.

THE FRIEND.

FIRST MONTH 30, 1875.

SUMMARY OF EVENTS.

FOREIGN.—An autograph letter from Alfonso was delivered to the Queen of England on the 23d, formally advising her of his accession to the throne, and giving assurances that he intended to rule over Spain on constitutional principles. A similar notification has been received by the government of France.

Prince Leopold has been dangerously ill with hemorrhage of the lungs, but the latest dispatches speak of his probable recovery.

Charles Kingsley, Canon of Westminister, and a distinguished member of the established church, died on the 25th inst. from inflammation of the lungs.

The London Times says that the officers of the ship of war Basilisk, which has just returned to England after a commission of nearly four years, have surveyed about 1,200 miles of coast line, added at least twelve first-class harbors, several navigable rivers, and more than one hundred islands, large and small, to the chart; and, lastly, have been able to announce the existence of a new and shorter route between Australia and China. Two lofty mountajns, each about 11,000 feet high, facing each other on the north-east coast of New Guinea, have been named "Mount Gladstone" and "Mount Disraeli."

The steamer Faraday will be sent to a Scottish port for repairs, and will probably not renew the attempt to recover the lost cable until the settled weather of next spring or early summer.

A terrific gale, with storms of rain, prevailed on the British coasts the 24th and 25th inst., causing many disasters to vessels.

Liverpool, 1st mo. 25th.—Uplands cotton, 7⅝*d.*; Orleans, 7¾*d.*

The debate in the French Assembly on the constitutional bills commenced the 21st inst. De Ventavon's bill was first taken up. It confirms President MacMahon's powers; establishes ministerial responsibility; creates a second chamber; invests the President with powers to dissolve the Assembly, and provides that on a lapse of the Presidential power a Congress of the two Chambers shall decide upon the future government of France.

De Ventavon urged that as the provisional alone was possible, it was necessary that it should be immediately organized.

Members of the Left objected to the exclusion of republican principles from the measure when the republic was the existing form of government.

Carayon Latour, Legitimist, opposed all constitutional bills; attacked the republic and the empire; urged the restoration of the monarchy, and declared his party would vote in favor of granting Marshal MacMahon only the means necessary to preserve order.

Jules Favre argued that it was impossible to maintain the present status. He pointed out the impotence of the Legitimists; demanded the definite establishment of the Republic; warmly praised ex-President Thiers, and made a violent attack on the Bonapartists, for which he was called to order.

After a violent and acrimonious debate Chabaud-Latour moved that the House proceed to the second reading of De Ventavon's bill. The motion was adopted—557 to 146. The bill for the creation of a Senate was taken up the 25th inst., and passed its first reading 512 yeas to 188 nays.

It is announced that Russia, Austria and Germany, have agreed to recognize the new king of Spain at once without waiting for a proclamation by the Cortes.

Alfonso has gone to the army in the north of Spain. A large number of Carlist officers have given in their adhesion to Alfonso. He has issued a proclamation, addressed to the inhabitants of the Basque provinces and Navarre, in which he says that he is the representative of a dynasty which their fathers swore to obey; that he is a Catholic, and will see that justice is again done to the church, and that if they will lay down their arms they will regain the freedom they enjoyed under Queen Isabella. He offers full amnesty to all who comply with his terms.

According to a Madrid dispatch a preliminary parley has been held between the Carlists and Alfonsists, and the basis of an agreement formed the ratification of which on both sides is probable.

In Germany the contest between the government and the Romish hierarchy continues. A Berlin dispatch says, that the Bishop of Paderborn has been committed to the fortress of Wesel, where he is to be imprisoned.

The dispute between Turkey and Montenegro, which threatened a warlike outbreak, will probably be settled amicably. The Porte has withdrawn its demand that the Montenegrins implicated in the Padgoritza outrage be surrendered in order that they may be tried by Turkish tribunals. The Powers have advised the Porte to send delegates to attend the trial at Cettigine. Montenegro is a very small State, but it relies on the support of Russia in cases of difficulty.

The Swedish Parliament has passed a bill enabling women by a marriage contract to retain the possession and management of their property. The bill encountered much opposition from a large portion of the orthodox clergy, who maintained that, as Christ is the head of the Church, the man is the head of the household, and equality between man and wife is abnormal. The king has given his sanction to the measure.

Italy now exports silks to the extent of $35,000,000 a year, and spirits and oils to the extent of $20,000,000, being one-third more than in 1867.

Garibaldi has arrived at Rome to attend the meeting of the Chamber of Deputies. He met with a most enthusiastic reception.

A dispatch from Montevideo says: "The Uruguayan government has fallen, and the rebels are in power. There is a general alarm and business is suspended. The British squadron is in the harbor. Pedro Varela, President of the Senate, has been elected by the rebels Provisional President of the Republic."

A Havana dispatch of the 23d says: One hundred and fifty-eight Sisters of Charity, who were expelled from Mexico, arrived here yesterday on their way to France.

A London dispatch of the 26th says, John Bright addressed an audience of 15,000 persons at Birmingham last night. In his address he spoke especially of the connection of State and Church in England, and referred to some of its evils; condemned excessive church revenues; the appointment of clergymen by private patronage, and the sale of livings. The Church of England alone, among Protestant denominations, furnished numerous converts to Rome. He declined to enter upon agitation to hasten disestablishment, but that would be a great day for freedom, Protestantism and Christianity which would see the full, free disestablishment of the Church.

UNITED STATES.—During the year 1874, 1,925 miles of new railroads were constructed in the United States, which is the smallest mileage since 1866. In 1871 the number of miles built was 7,222, in 1872, 7,340, in 1873, 3,883. At the beginning of the present year there was a total of 72,576 miles of railroad.

There were 604 deaths in New York city last week. The total number of teachers in the New York public schools is 3,039, of whom 2,839 are women; with an average attendance of 42 pupils to each teacher.

There were 373 deaths in Philadelphia last week. The total city expenditures for the year 1874 were $16,449,000, of which $10,248,033 was from taxes, and $2,135,950 from loans. The funded debt amounts to $55,272,132, against which the city holds property to a much larger nominal sum.

The following States have chosen U. S. Senators within the past few days, viz: Michigan, Isaac P. Christiancy; Nebraska, A. S. Paddock; Pennsylvania, W. A. Wallace; Massachusetts, Henry L. Dawes; New York, Francis Kernan; Delaware, Thomas F. Bayard; Indiana, James E. McDonald; Missouri, F. M. Cockrell. Of the eight Senators elected only two were Republicans.

Terrible snow storms have occurred in Utah and Nevada. Fifty Chinese woodcutters were buried by a snow slide in the mountains of Nevada, near Genoa, recently 28 of whom were killed. By a snow slide in Utah twelve men were buried under the snow. Six of these were dug out severely injured, but the others perished.

The Markets, &c.—The following were the quotations on the 25th inst. New York.—American gold 112¾; U. S. sixes, 1881, registered, 119; do. coupons, 119½; do. 1868, 119¼ a 119½; U. S. five per cents, 114 a 115¼. Superfine flour, $4 a $4.25; State extra, $4.75 a $5.10; finer brands, $5.50 a $10.50. No. 2 Chicago spring wheat, $1.10½; red western, $1.25 a $1.26; white Michigan, $1.29. Oats, 67 a 71½ cts. State rye, 95 cts. Yellow corn, 85 a 86 cts.; white, 87 a 90 cts. Philadelphia—Uplands and New Orleans cotton, 15½ a 16 cts. Superfine flour, $3.75 a $4.00; extras, $4.25 a $4.75; finer grades, $5 a $7.50. Red wheat, $1.20 a $1.22; amber, $1.23 a $1.25; white, $1.28 a $1.30. Rye, 9[illegible] a 95 cts. Yellow corn, 79 a 80 cts.; mixed, 81 a 81½ cts. Oats, 65 a 68 cts. Lard, 13⅞ a 14 cts. Sales of 3,30[illegible] beef cattle at from 4 to 7¼ cts. per lb. gross. A few extra brought 7½ a 8 cts. Sheep sold at 5¾ a 7¼ cts. per lb. gross. Receipts 10,000 head. Corn fed hogs $9 [illegible] $10.25 per 100 lbs. net. Receipts 5,000 head. Chicago—Spring extra flour, $4.25 a $4.62 No. 1 spring wheat, 90½ cts.; No. 2 do., 88 cts.; No. 3, 82½ cts. No. 2 mixed corn, 64¼ cts. No. 2 oats, 52 cts. Lard $13.35 per 100 lbs. Baltimore.—No. 1 western red wheat, $1.20; No. 2 do., $1.16; No. 3 do., $1.10; amber Maryland, $1.25 a $1.30. Yellow and white corn, 7[illegible] a 81 cts. Oats, 66 a 70 cts. St. Louis.—No. 2 winter red wheat, $1.05½ a $1.06½. Mixed corn, 62 a 64 cts. Oats, 55 a 55½ cts.

WANTED

A Friend to have care of Friends' Western Burial ground, Sixteenth and Race streets. Dwelling house there rent free. For terms apply, with reference, to William Kinsey, S. W. cor. Third and Vine Sts.

Israel H. Johnson, No. 16 N. 7th St., Philada.

WANTED.

A Governess for Westtown Boarding School, to enter on her duties at the opening of the next Session.

Apply to

Elizabeth C. Scattergood, West Chester, Pa.
Hannah Richardson, Wilmington, Del.
Hannah Evans, No. 322 Union St., Philada.
Lydia L. Walton, Moorestown, N. J.

FRIENDS' ASYLUM FOR THE INSANE.

Near Frankford, (Twenty-third Ward,) Philadelphia.

Physician and Superintendent—JOSHUA H. WORTHINGTON, M. D.

Applications for the Admission of Patients may be made to the Superintendent, or to any of the Board of Managers.

DIED, at his residence near Haddonfield, N. J., on the 21st of 11th mo. 1874, JOSEPH ENGLE, in the 35th year of his age, a member of Haddonfield Monthly Meeting.

——, on the 24th of 12th mo. 1874, MARY STEVENS, wife of Elam Stevens, aged 54 years and 9 months. A minister of the gospel about seventeen years. A member of Newberry Monthly Meeting, Tennessee. "Blessed are the dead that die in the Lord; for henceforth they cease from their labors, and their works do follow them."

WILLIAM H. PILE, PRINTER,
No. 422 Walnut Street.

THE FRIEND.

A RELIGIOUS AND LITERARY JOURNAL.

VOL. XLVIII. SEVENTH-DAY, SECOND MONTH 6, 1875. NO. 25.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY.

Price Two Dollars per annum, if paid in advance. Two dollars and fifty cents, if not paid in advance.

Subscriptions and Payments received by

JOHN S. STOKES,

AT NO. 116 NORTH FOURTH STREET, UP STAIRS.

PHILADELPHIA.

Postage, when paid quarterly in advance, five cents.

For "The Friend."

The German Arctic Expedition of 1869—70.

(Concluded from page 186.)

We now turn to the adventures of the Germania, which was the principal vessel of the expedition, and furnished with steam power.

After losing sight of the Hansa, she gradually worked her way through the belt of floating ice, being aided by steam, and reached the Greenland coast, near Sabine Island, in latitude about 74½° North, on the 5th of the Eighth month, 1869. Taking advantage of the more open water, which is generally found between the moving ice and that fast to the shores, the captain pushed on to the northward, but in latitude 75½° he met a barrier of solid ice, which he could not penetrate, and therefore decided to go into winter quarters in a convenient harbor on the south side of Sabine Island, where the ship would be protected from pressure by the drifting flocs, and be liberated from its icy chains on the coming of warm weather in the following season.

This was successfully accomplished. Scientific observations were made, the adjacent islands and coasts were explored and partially surveyed, and a sledge journey to the north reached a point in 77° N. latitude. This is the highest point of land on the East coast of Greenland known to have been visited, though the Western coast has been found more accessible. After passing the winter safely, the Germania renewed her labors in the following summer, but with no greater success, being stopped in her northward course by solid ice, at the same place where her efforts were baffled in 1867. The available time of the warm season remaining was spent in exploring the coast southward, and on the approach of severe weather, she returned in safety to Germany.

Among the matters which were of especial interest to the inmates of the vessel, during her long sojourn at Sabine Island, were the visits of the white bears. These were first met with many miles from land, on the floating ice, in pursuit of seals on which they feed. The ship appears to have been an object of curiosity to them, and the numerous visits to its vicinity paid by these primeval inhabitants were not without danger—one adventure is thus described:

"On the morning of the 13th, Theodor Klentzer, during the time the men were busied without, or were obliged to take their daily walk, climbed the Germaniaberg to view the landscape in the increasing mid-day light. Reaching the top, he seated himself on a rock, and sang a song in the still air. As he looked behind him, however, he saw, not many steps off, a huge bear, which with great gravity was watching the stranger. Now to our 'Theodor,' who was as quiet and decided a man as he was powerful, this would, under other circumstances, have been nothing; for the bear stood wonderfully well for a shot, and could not easily be missed, but Klentzer was totally unarmed, not having even a knife! Incredible! is it not? But as Lieut. Payer writes, 'the bears always come when one has forgotten all about them.'

"Thus Klentzer saw himself unarmed and alone, far from his companions, and close to the bear. Flight is the only, though a doubtful, chance of safety, and the audacious thought struck him of plunging down the steep side of the glacier; but he chose the softer side-slope, and began to hurry down the mountain. Upon looking back, after a time, he perceived the great bear trotting behind him at a little distance, like a great dog. Thus they descended the mountain for some time. If Klentzer halted, so did the bear; when he went on, the bear followed slowly; if he began to run, the bear did the same. Thus the two had gone some distance, and Klentzer thought seriously of saving himself, as the bear, finding the chase somewhat wearisome, might press close upon his heels. He therefore uttered a loud shout, but the bear, only disconcerted for a moment, seemed to get more angry and approached quicker, so that he seemed to feel the hot breath of the monster. At this dreadful moment—and it was most likely his preservation—he remembered the stories he had heard, and, while running, pulled off his jacket, throwing it behind him. And see! the trick answers: the bear stops and begins to examine the jacket. Klentzer gains courage, rushes on down the mountain, sending out a shout for help, which resounds through the silent region. But soon the bear is again at his heels, and he must throw away cap and waistcoat, by which he gains a little. Now Klentzer sees help approaching — several friends hurrying over the ice. Collecting his last strength, he shouts and runs on. But help seems in vain, for the pursuer hurries too, and he is obliged to take the last thing he has, his shawl, which he throws exactly over the monster's snout, who, more excited still by renewed shouting, throws it back again contemptuously with a toss of the head, and presses forward upon the defenceless man, who feels his cold black snout touch his hand. Klentzer now gave himself up for lost; he could do no more; but the wonderful thought struck him of fastening up the bear's throat with the leathern belt which he wore round his body. Fixedly he stared into the merciless eyes of the beast—one short moment of doubt—the bear was startled, his attention seemed drawn aside, and the next moment he was off at a gallop. The shouts of the many hurrying to the rescue had evidently frightened him. Klentzer was saved by a miracle. We had all hurried out just as we sat below, without coats or caps—indeed, some were in their stockings. The terrified creature fled on to the ice, where he received a cross-fire, then turned hither and thither, and made for Cairn Point. Some of the bullets must have struck him, for he collapsed, and we thought it was all over. But he rallied the next moment, and climbed the steep bank with huge strides, and, leaving traces of blood on the open ice, hurried to the sea. Glad and thankful, our full number were soon seated at the mid-day meal, praising a good Providence who had saved our brave companion from death. From the effects of this day several suffered slightly from pains in the chest, and Mr. Sengstacke and P. Iversen had large frost-blisters on their feet. No wonder, when they had run about in stockinged feet for a whole hour and a half!"

Dr. Borgen was in a situation of still greater peril. He says: "About a quarter before nine P. M. I had gone out to observe the occultation of a star, which was to take place about that time, and also to take the meteorological readings. As I was in the act of getting on shore, Capt. Koldewey came on to the ice. We spoke for a few moments, when I went on shore, while he returned to the cabin. On my return from the observatory, about fifty steps from the vessel, I heard a rustling noise to the left, and became aware of the proximity of a bear. There was no time to think, or use my gun. The grip was so sudden and rapid, that I am unable to say how it was done; whether the bear rose and struck me down with his fore-paws, or whether he ran me down. But from the character of the injuries I have sustained (contusions and a deep cut on the left ear), I conclude that the former must have been the case. The next thing I felt was the tearing of my scalp, which was only protected by a skull-cap. This is their mode of attacking seals, but, owing to the slipperiness of their skulls, the teeth glide off. The cry for help which I uttered frightened the animal for a moment; but he turned again and bit me several times on the head. The alarm had meanwhile been heard by the captain, who had not yet reached the cabin. He hurried on deck, convinced himself that it was really an alarm, roused up the crew and hastened on to the ice, bringing assistance to his struggling comrade. The noise evidently frightened the bear, and he trotted off with his prey, which he dragged by the head. A shot fired to frighten the creature effected its purpose, inasmuch as he dropped me, and sprang a few steps aside; but he immediately seized me by the arm, and, his hold proving insufficient, he seized me by the right hand, on which was a fur glove, and this gave the pursuers time to come up with the brute, which had by its great speed left them far behind. He was now making for the shore, and would certainly have escaped with his prey, had he succeeded in climbing the bank. However, as he came to the edge of the ice, he turned along the coast side, continuing on the rough and broken ice, which greatly retarded his speed, and thus allowed his pursuers upon the ice to gain rapidly upon him. After being dragged in this way for about 300 paces, almost strangled by my shawl, which the bear had seized at the same time, he dropped me, and immediately afterwards Koldewey was bending over me with the words, 'Thank God! he is still alive!' The bear stood a few paces on one side, evidently undecided what course to pursue, until a bullet gave him a hint that it was high time to take himself off.

"No one thought of pursuing him, for their first care was to carry the wounded man on board, whither the doctor and Herr Tramnitz had gone in order to prepare the requisites for binding up the wounds. The main injuries were in the head, where, amongst numerous other wounds from the bites, two especially from four to six inches long ran along the scalp, the edges of which hung loose, leaving the skull bare for one-third to two-fifths of an inch. The other wounds, about twenty in number, were in part caused by striking against the fragments and rough broken edges of the ice. It is worth while mentioning that, neither during the act of receiving the wounds nor during the process of healing, which progressed favorably, did I experience the smallest pain."

In addition to bears, and the seal and walrus, the travellers met with reindeer, musk ox, and the arctic hare and white fox.

For "The Friend."

The Soldier Disarmed.

The following interesting anecdote is related by Martha Routh, who may still be remembered by some of the older members of our religious Society, as a devoted laborer for the promotion of truth and righteousness, about the end of the last century.

"The back part of our house looked into the yard of a large inn, that was in great reputation, which Friends as well as others usually preferred. The landlord and his wife were very kind neighbors to us, the latter would often come and ask advice of my mother. An officer of distinction happened to be taking up his quarters there; one evening having got too much liquor, he began to quarrel with some of the company, and after some time concluded to go into the yard to decide the fray. The landlord was not at home, and the landlady, seeing the officer draw his sword, fainted; one of the servants exceedingly alarmed, came to acquaint us with the circumstance, fearing murder might ensue. My father was from home, but my mother quickly slipped out, passed through those who surrounded the officer; and as he was holding up his glittering sword, took it out of his hand and brought it into our house. The act so surprised him and the rest of the company, that they soon separated, and the family thereby were greatly relieved.

